"Allah 3311," "Olana of the South Seas" and "Kate Waters of the Secret Service" will stir your blood and appeal to your imagination.

"The Sultan's Garden," the first Mary Pickford re-issue, will show Little Mary in her exquisite youth and beauty.

"Lucille Love," Series 15, gives a smashing climax to a great serial.
Romance and tender charm are embodied in "By the Sun's Rays," "An Awkward Cinderella" and "At the Foot of the Stairs."

"Value Received," "The Gateway of Regret" and "When Death Rode the Engine" are stirring dramas of real life that will live long in your memory.

For General Interest You Can Not Match the Universal Program.

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

YOU'LL BURN UP WITH ENTHUSIASM WHEN YOU SEE

THE TREY O'HEARTS

by LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Author of

The Fortune Hunter, The Black Bag, The Brass Bowl Etc.

From the Standpoint of Sensationalism---From the Standpoint of Punch---From the Standpoint of Suspense and Drawing Power---You MUST Book this Phenomenal Serial AT ONCE.

Better than anything produced heretofore, it will prove a revelation in drawing power and concentrated action.

It is the serial of serials---and yet each and every installment will be a complete story in itself. If you once see one, you must see them all.

EVERY LEADING PAPER IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, large, small and intermediate, will carry the story---every man, woman and child will demand it.

"USE THE BRAINS GOD GAVE YOU" and use them quick.

Produced by the MOVING PICTURES

UNIVERSAL

We are just completing our first picture — a 5 reel feature entitled "The Patchwork Girl of Oz"; which is good enough to place us at once in the front rank of film makers.

As yet we have made no definite arrangements for releasing this remarkable picture but the best features Exhibitors will be able to secure it at an early date. Meantime all correspondence will receive our prompt consideration.

OZ FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

Studio and Laboratories
SANTA MONICA BOULEVARD
from Gower to Lodi Sts.
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

Coming "The Scales of Justice," with a notable cast

DANIEL FROHMAN
Presents

The Famous Romance of Official Life in Washington,

"THE LITTLE GRAY LADY"

By Channing Pollock

With the Noted Actress

JANE GREY

In 4 Reels of Motion Pictures.
Released July 10th.

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

FAMOUS PLAYERS

EXECUTIVE OFFICES
213-229 W. 26th STREET
NEW YORK

"The Better Man" with William Courtleigh

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

A Strong, Earnest Drama of the Everyday Life of Everyday People

PERRY REFUSES THE SOUTH AMERICAN POSITION OFFERED BY GRAHAM

PERRY'S CARD GIVES THE DETECTIVE A CLUE.

THE LITTLE GRAY LADY CONCEALS PERRY FROM THE POLICE

PERRY'S RECKLESS EXTRAVAGANCE IS NOTED BY THE DETECTIVE

A drama laid in the Redemption Department of the United States Treasury, with a tender love story ingeniously interwoven. The Little Gray Lady is a strong, sweet woman who wins the salvation of the weak man she loves. The characters are real people, not stage puppets, who relate a tale of love and intrigue that gets down under the skin.

FILM COMPANY

ADOLPH ZUKOR, President

DANIEL FROHMAN, Managing Director EDWIN S. PORTER, Technical Director

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

THOS. H. INCE

Presents

The Wrath of the Gods

OR, THE DESTRUCTION OF SAKURA-JIMA

6 PARTS

NOTHING LIKE IT HAS EVER BEEN SEEN

Pandemonium, thrilling and superb! Lava flowing! Houses crumbling! Villages burning! The typhoon at sea.

The Most Wonderful Picture Ever Made in America

ENLARGEMENTS FROM THE FILM

RELEASED THROUGH MUTUAL AND CONTINENTAL EXCHANGES

New York Motion Picture Corp., LONGACRE BLDG., 42nd St. and B'way, New York

KAY-BEE

KAY-BEE FEATURES

The City - - - - - - 2 parts, Friday, July 17th
The Sheriff of Bisbee - - 2 parts, Friday, July 24th
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

KAY-BEE

DOMINO

DOMINO WINNERS

The Star of the North, 2 parts, Thursday, July 16th
The Defaulter - - - 2 parts, Thursday, July 23rd
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

DOMINO

BRONCHO

BRONCHO HEADLINERS

Shorty Turns Judge, 2 parts, Wednesday, July 15th
Shorty and the Aridville Terror, 2 parts, Wed., July 22d
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

BRONCHO

KEYSTONE

KEYSTONE COMEDIES

Three comedies a week

Monday, Wednesday and Saturday release days

MACK SENNETT, Director-General

KEYSTONE COMEDIES

KEYSTONE

Photos 8 by 10 Photos of players mentioned below can be had by sending to the Publicity Dept. 15 cents for one; 50 cents for sets of four; $1.00 for sets of eight.

MACK SENNETT
MABEL NORMAND
CHARLES CHAPLIN
ROSCOE ARBUCKLE
HARRY G. KEENAN
"BARNEY" SHERRY
RICHARD STANTON

THOS. H. INCE
GRETCHEN LEDERER
MARGARET THOMPSON
TSURU AOKI
ROY LAIDLAW
CLARA WILLIAMS
JAY HUNT
JOHN KELLER

MILDRED HARRIS
"SHORTY" HAMILTON
CHARLES RAY
WALTER BELASCO
FRANK BORZAGE
THOS. CHATTERTON
LEONA HUTTON
RHEA MITCHELL

A set of 8 by 10 Photos of Keystone Mabel, in four different poses, 50 cents

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORP.
LONG ACRE BLDG., 42nd STREET and BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Mr. Lasky is in the mountains, Mr. Goldfish in Europe, our advertising man is at Dayton, "nobody home" the papers want an ad, so I've got to write one. Please forgive the punctuations, but read the Ad.

Signed—JOSEPH ROTHMAN, Esq.
Asst. Press Agent and Office Boy

(our regular start)

JESSE L. LASKY

PRESENTS

(We always start with Mr. Lasky's name because it means so much in the way of fine shows and things)

Harold MacGrath's Great Novel

THE MAN ON THE BOX

with the great actor and actresss

MAX FIGMAN AND LOLITA ROBERTSON

A Rollicking Military Romance in Five Parts

(I copped this out of the press book)

A Magnificent Photo-play production replete with thrilling episodes, vivid climaxes and potent situations, and possessing a glorious vein of majestic romance. And a different finish.

(our advertising man was going to use the above next week, but I found it on his desk and beat him to it)

Released July 13 As soon as the folks get back

BOOK NOW—There's a Distributor in every State

(Regular line in all our ads)

The still pictures from the coast look great. Mr. Figman is a great actor and Miss Robertson is wonderful. The story is attractive, full of thrills and from all reports is a wonderfully reelistic photo-play. Messrs. DeMille and Apfel staged "The Man on the Box" so you can imagine how good it is.

The whole world will want to give it the "once over"

(I got this from Tad in the Cartoons)

JESSE L. LASKY FEATURE PLAY COMPANY

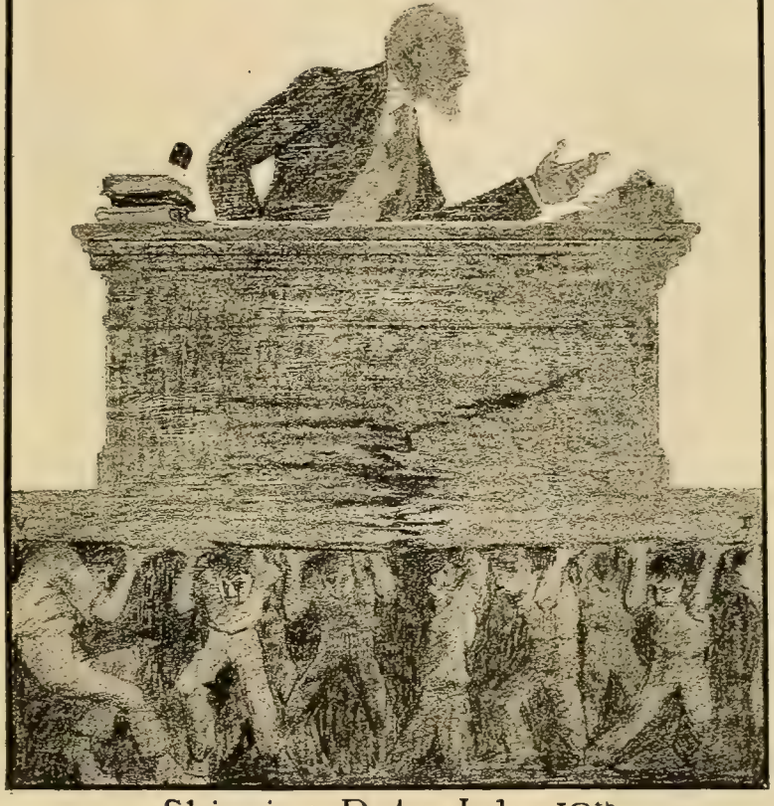
LONG ACRE THEATRE — W. 48TH STREET

JESSE L. LASKY, PRESIDENT — N. Y. C. — SAMUEL GOLDFISH, TREAS. & GEN'L MANAGER

CECIL B DEMILLE, DIRECTOR GENERAL

FANTOMAS No5

"THE FALSE MAGISTRATE"



Shipping Date July 10th

GAUMONT COMPANY

110 West 40th St. NEW YORK.

Mexican War Pictures

Photographed under Fire by the

Mutual Film Corporation

under special contract with

GENERAL VILLA

3-Sheet Poster in Full Color.

Seven Exciting Reels. Direct from its only showing at the Lyric Theatre, 42nd Street and Broadway, New York.

Crowd Pulling Posters, Still Pictures of Absorbing Interest for Lobby Display.

FOR months the newspapers of the whole world, and especially those of the United States, have been full of accounts of the photographing of battles in the Mexican war, under special contract with General Francisco Villa, the great rebel commander—probably the most talked-of man in the world to-day. In every city, town and village there is absorbing interest not alone in the fighting, but in the life story of the man himself. Since early in January daring camera men have carried Mutual cameras into the thick of every fight and have made thousands of feet of film amid the roar of artillery, the deadly hum of machine guns and the vicious crackle of rifle fire. The brilliant sunlight of the tropics has made marvelous pictures—pictures thrilling with nearness and the reality of actual sordid warfare. You can almost hear the whistle of bullets as you see the spatters of dust in the picture, and the shriek of the shells as rapid-fire guns on armored trains leap back in the recoil.

Much of this film had to be cut out because it was too realistically horrible to be publicly shown.

Some because it was obscured by the smoke and dust of battle.

Some was lost entirely by the shattering of cameras by bullets.

TWO THOUSAND FEET OF ACTUAL BATTLE SCENES HAVE BEEN SELECTED.

These form the last two reels of the seven we offer.

Of perhaps even greater interest are the five reels made in the very districts where the fighting was fiercest, showing by a series of exciting scenes the TRAGIC EARLY LIFE OF GENERAL VILLA.

It would be impossible to tell the scenes of actual battle from those posed to show the story, were they not separated and shown frankly by themselves, to avoid the smallest suspicion of misrepresentation.

Here then is a story vastly more exciting, more absorbing, more thrilling than the most exciting of fiction, where woe and murder and intrigue weave a tale of tragic reality—with vast educational interest beside. Every man and woman and schoolchild ought to see and, what is more to the point, WANTS to see these pictures.

The task of distribution of such a film is not the business of a company with other interests.

Every picture house in the country—no matter what programme it shows, no matter what its usual feature arrangements—should show these seven reels.

Just now, with hundreds of theaters closed for the summer months, the possibilities of theater showings are enormous. The man who buys state rights on this series, and then WORKS HIS TERRITORY TO CAPACITY, has profit chances almost undreamed of—even in the moving picture business. BUT—You must speak QUICKLY.

MEXICAN WAR FILM COMPANY

Room 1208, 71 W. 23rd Street, NEW YORK CITY

STATE RIGHTS FOR SALE TO THIS WONDERFUL SERIES.

6 Wonderful Reels of ACTION 6

6,000 feet of film without a single superfluous inch—An uninterrupted marvel of incessant, throbbing, vital GRIFFITH big scenes!

SUCH IS

Home, Sweet Home

The Veritable Master-work of the Master

D. W. GRIFFITH

A PHOTODRAMA of appealing, world-wide sentiment rendered into a series of soul-stirring incidents—First, the romantic, tragic and adventurous life of John Howard Payne, author of "Home, Sweet Home"—Then, three thrilling episodes, showing how the magic thought of home is the dominant force in moments of extreme temptation, anguish and heart-rending calamity—A heart drama of mighty, profound struggles for love and life.

Now being released by the Continental Feature Film Corp.

29 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK AND ALL MUTUAL EXCHANGES

Other Pulling Continental Features Are:

"The Battle of Gettysburg" 5 Reels
"Joseph in the Land of Egypt" 4 Reels
"The Great Leap" 4 Reels
"Gangsters" 4 Reels
"Frou Frou" 4 Reels
"Moths" 4 Reels
"Ruy Blas" 3 Reels
"Legend of Provence" 4 Reels
"Sapho" 6 Reels
"Seeing South America with Colonel Roosevelt" 3 Reels
"Robin Hood" 4 Reels
"Zu, Zu, The Band Leader" 2 Reels
"The Floor Above" 4 Reels
"The Battle of the Sexes" 5 Reels
"The Dishonored Medal" 4 Reels
"The Mountain Rat" 4 Reels
"Dope" 6 Reels
"Cardinal Richelieu's Ward" 4 Reels
"Wrath of the Gods" 6 Reels

BOSWORTH'S
NEXT RELEASE

John Barleycorn—

Some Experiences of Jack London's Life

—Written by Himself

The Saloon Always Offers a Warm Welcome to the Workingman

The Liquor Bill of the American Nation is $1,500,000,000 annually.

What per cent. of this does the Wage Earner Pay?

John Barleycorn Gives Tragic, Realistic Answer.

A Compelling Plea for Temperance

Don't Fail to Book This Picture

—it will surely bring crowds to your theatre

Make Application Immediately to American Feature Film Co., 162 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.—New England States: Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Wm. L. Sherry Feature Film Co., Inc., 126 West 46th Street, New York City—Greater New York and New York State.

Famous Players Film Service, Inc., 404 Ferry Street, Pittsburgh, Pa., and 37 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.—Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky.

Famous Players Exchange, 1331 Vine Street, Philadelphia, Pa., and 71 West 23rd Street, New York City—New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania.

Famous Players Feature Co., 28 West Lexington Street, Baltimore, Md.—Delaware, Maryland, Washington, D.C., and Virginia.

Casino Feature Film Co., Detroit, Mich.—Michigan.

Kansas City Feature Film Co., Kansas City, Mo.—Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa.

Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, Temple Court Building, Minneapolis, Minn.—North and South Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Notable Feature Film Co., Salt Lake City, Utah—Utah, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming and Idaho.

Progressive Motion Picture Co., three offices—Head office: 642 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal.; Central Building, Seattle, Wash.; Marsh-Strong Building, Los Angeles, Cal.—California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona and New Mexico.

BOSWORTH, Inc., 648 Olive Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

William W. Hodkinson, Distributor, 110 W. 40th St., New York City

After September 1st All Bosworth Releases Handled Through Paramount Program

Almost As Quick As the Telegraph

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS

THE SAME DAY the Daily Papers are running telegraphic reports of great world events and happenings, THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS is showing on the screen these events and showing them in a way impossible for the newspapers. THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS is the most important — most interesting—most truthful—most prompt distributor of "News When It IS News" yet thought of and used. Daily papers at best give one man's opinion (each paper running a different story).

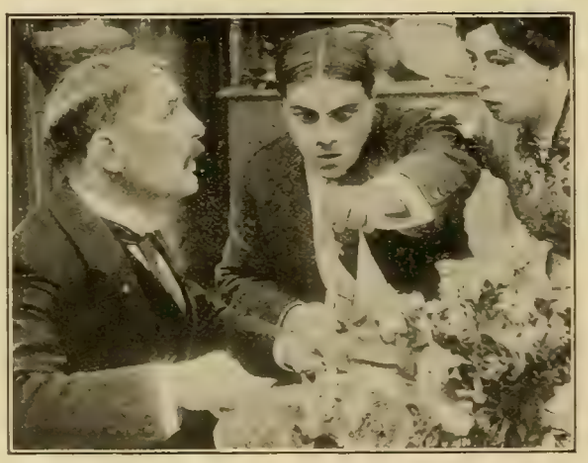
THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS Shows Events As They Actually Happen, When They Happen

For Further Particulars Address

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS 1 CONGRESS ST. JERSEY CITY, N.J.

A ROYAL IMPOSTER

(5 Parts)



A Strong Drama in NATURAL COLORS, of royal life in a small principality. Rich in action and with a thrilling story.

The Phantom Thief

(3 Parts)

Introducing Nick Winter, the greatest of all comedy detectives. He meets with some of the most interesting and extraordinary adventures.

Book Eclectic Features for Big Profits

ECLECTIC FEATURE FILM EXCHANGES FOR YOUR USE.

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.	BOSTON 3 Tremont Row	CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.	DALLAS Andrews Bldg.	LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.	MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts.
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.	PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.	SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.	ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.	SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.	CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.
SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.	CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av.,S.E.	PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.	PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.	WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.	NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.
SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.	OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.			DENVER Nassau Bldg.	KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

We Promised to Put Out the Greatest Serial Film Ever Produced—WE DID IT

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Still continues its unprecedented success. Pauline is making more friends daily. In fact so great has become the demand for this serial that many of the exhibitors who had at first booked for only one day of each episode are now demanding the film for two and sometimes three days, so they can take care of all the patrons who are Pauline fans. There is such an intensely interesting quality combined with some of the most unusual, almost superhuman achievements in this serial, that it makes new friends of every one who sees it. And it is getting better every episode. There is a reason.

PAULINE PULLS PEOPLE * * * SHE'S A GOLD MINE

COMING! COMING!! COMING!!!

Some of the Greatest Sidesplitting, Riproaring, Laugh Creating One-Reel Comedies You Ever Saw—Eclectic Quality—Nuff Said.

ECLECTIC FEATURE FILM EXCHANGES FOR YOUR USE.

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.	BOSTON 3 Tremont Row	CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.	DALLAS Andrews Bldg.	LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.	MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts.
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.	PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.	SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.	ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.	SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.	CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.
SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.	CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av., S.E.	PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.	PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.	WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.	NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.
SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.	OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.			DENVER Nassau Bldg.	KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

WORLD'S LARGEST

SAWYER INC.

FILM MART
1600 BROADWAY-NEW YORK

YOU CAN'T BEAT

Sawyer's System

DUSTIN FARNUM in THE LIGHTNING CONDUCTOR
6 Parts

THE BATTLE OF VERA CRUZ
2 Parts

THE QUEEN OF THE SMUGGLERS
Parts

"Big Time" Features

for "Big Time" Houses.—The "top notch" productions of motion photography, fit for the screen of the ultra fashionable theatre, and for "Small Time" Houses.—Real "good features," good enough for the "high class" bon-ton theatre, and not too good for any theatre.

Small Time Features

Your Theatre

Fits Sawyer's System—Can't help it. "Big Time" Features when you want 'em—Credit to you—your theatre—to Sawyer. "Small Time" Features for the "off seasons." All clean—all new—you get away with it—Sawyer gets away with it—Audience eat it up, and

SIR HENRY IRVING'S "THE BELLS"
4 Parts

SAVED BY THE BOYS IN BLUE
3 Parts

A. BALDWIN SLOANE AND GRACE FIELD
In the Latest Modern Dances
One-Reel Novelty

Everybody Satisfied

WORLD'S LARGEST
SAWYER INC.
FILM MART
1600 BROADWAY-NEW YORK

GET "IN" ON

Sawyer's System

Book Direct With Sawyer

JOSEPH AND HIS COAT OF MANY COLORS
6 Parts

LAMBS' ALL STAR GAMBOL
3 Parts

NELL GWYNNE
5 Parts

WHITE DOVE'S SACRIFICE
3 Parts

THE CONVICT HERO
3 Parts

THE BUSHRANGER'S BRIDE
3 Parts

Hook up with Sawyer now—AT ONCE. If your state is not sold Sawyer will book you direct, and the Middleman's profit —(the State-right buyer). Sawyer is the producer — You are the consumer — Sawyer deals with you direct. You reap the benefit. No theatre too big to fit Sawyer's Features— No theatre too small for Sawyer's Features to fit, and

SAVE YOU

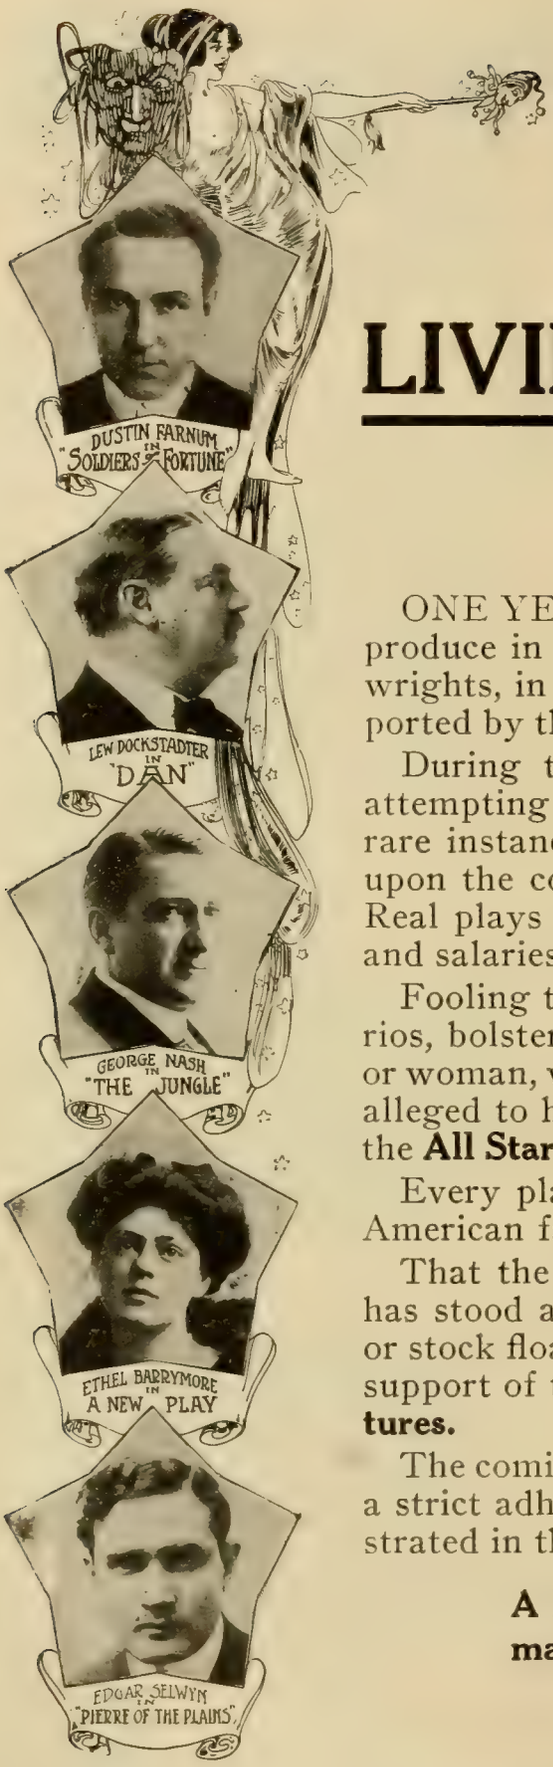
Everybody Satisfied



LIVING UP TO THE LETTER

ONE YEAR AGO the All Star Feature Corp. began to produce in Motion Pictures the writings of noted Playwrights, in each of which a Famous Star appeared, supported by the best available talent of the American stage.

During the year past others have come and gone, attempting a similar policy with indifferent success. In rare instances these have met with response depending upon the courage and ability of the producers to select Real plays and stars and to pay the enormous royalties and salaries demanded.

Fooling the public by the substitution of cheap scenarios, bolstered up by a star, or the use of a leading man or woman, who never really starred, in a low-royalty play alleged to have been famous, are the very pitfalls which the All Star has religiously avoided.

Every play has been a worthy one and every star an American favorite of the public.

That the All Star has been eminently successful and has stood alone, unsupported by factions, combinations or stock floating schemes has been due to the tremendous support of the Exhibitor and the Public of All Star Features.

The coming year will witness even greater results from a strict adherence to the All Star policy so ably demonstrated in the past.

A Handsome Souvenir Booklet will be mailed to any Exhibitor on request.

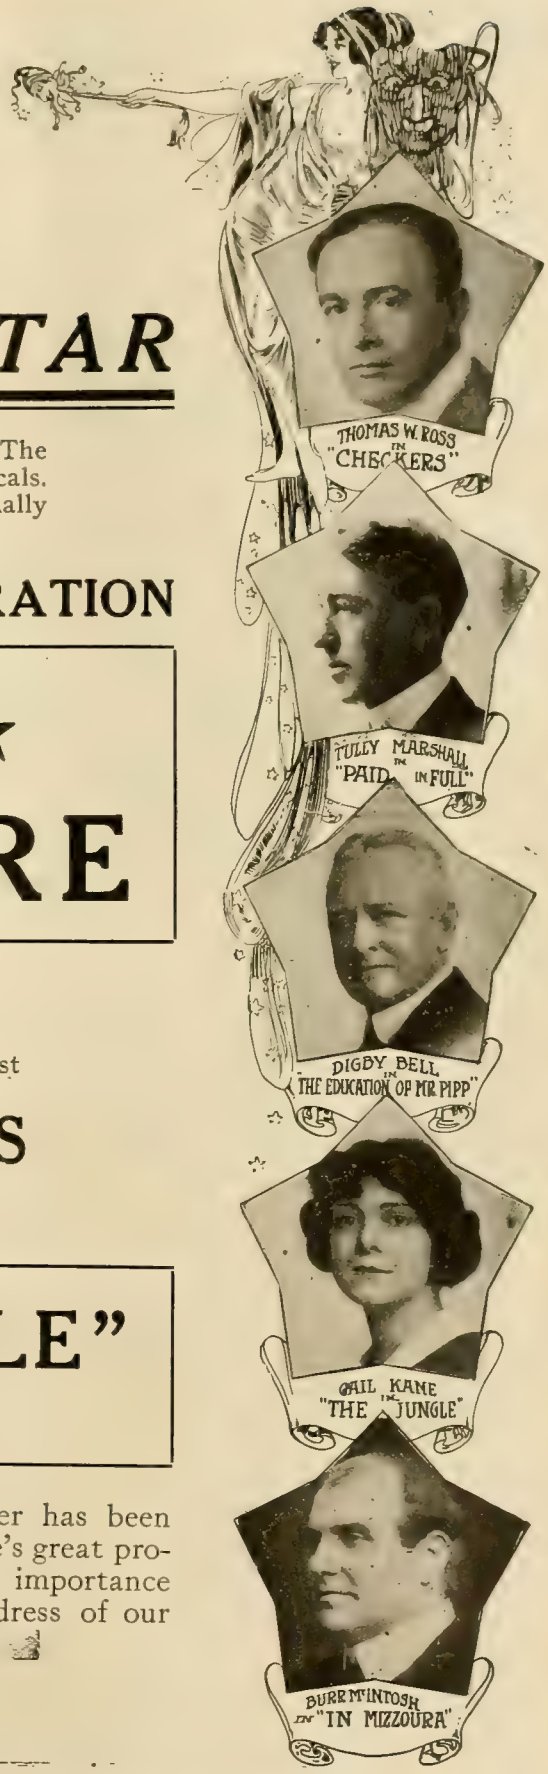
ALL·STAR·FEATURE·CORPORATION

HARRY R. RAVER
PRESIDENT

EXECUTIVE OFFICES
220 W. 42nd ST., NEW YORK

AUGUSTUS THOMAS
DIRECTOR GENERAL OF PRODUCTIONS

EXCLUSIVE AGENTS IN PRINCIPAL CITIES OF THE WORLD



THOMAS W. ROSS IN "CHECKERS"
TULLY MARSHALL IN "PAID IN FULL"
DIGBY BELL IN "THE EDUCATION OF MR. PIPP"
GAIL KANE IN "THE JUNGLE"
BURR McINTOSH IN "IN MIZZOURA"

NOW COMES A STAR

The greatest box office magnet in all America. The highest salaried leading lady in two dollar theatricals. Sought after by film makers for many months, but finally secured at a staggering outlay by the

ALL STAR FEATURE CORPORATION

★ETHEL★ BARRYMORE

WILL POSITIVELY APPEAR IN AN

ORIGINAL PRODUCTION

Written Specially by America's Greatest Dramatist

AUGUSTUS THOMAS

Supported by a Splendid, Selected Cast

"The NIGHTINGALE"

WILL BE SHOWN IN FIVE ACTS

IMPORTANT Elaborate advertising matter has been prepared for Miss Barrymore's great production — thoroughly in keeping with the dignity and importance of the Star. Send for handsome booklet and the address of our agent nearest your theatre.

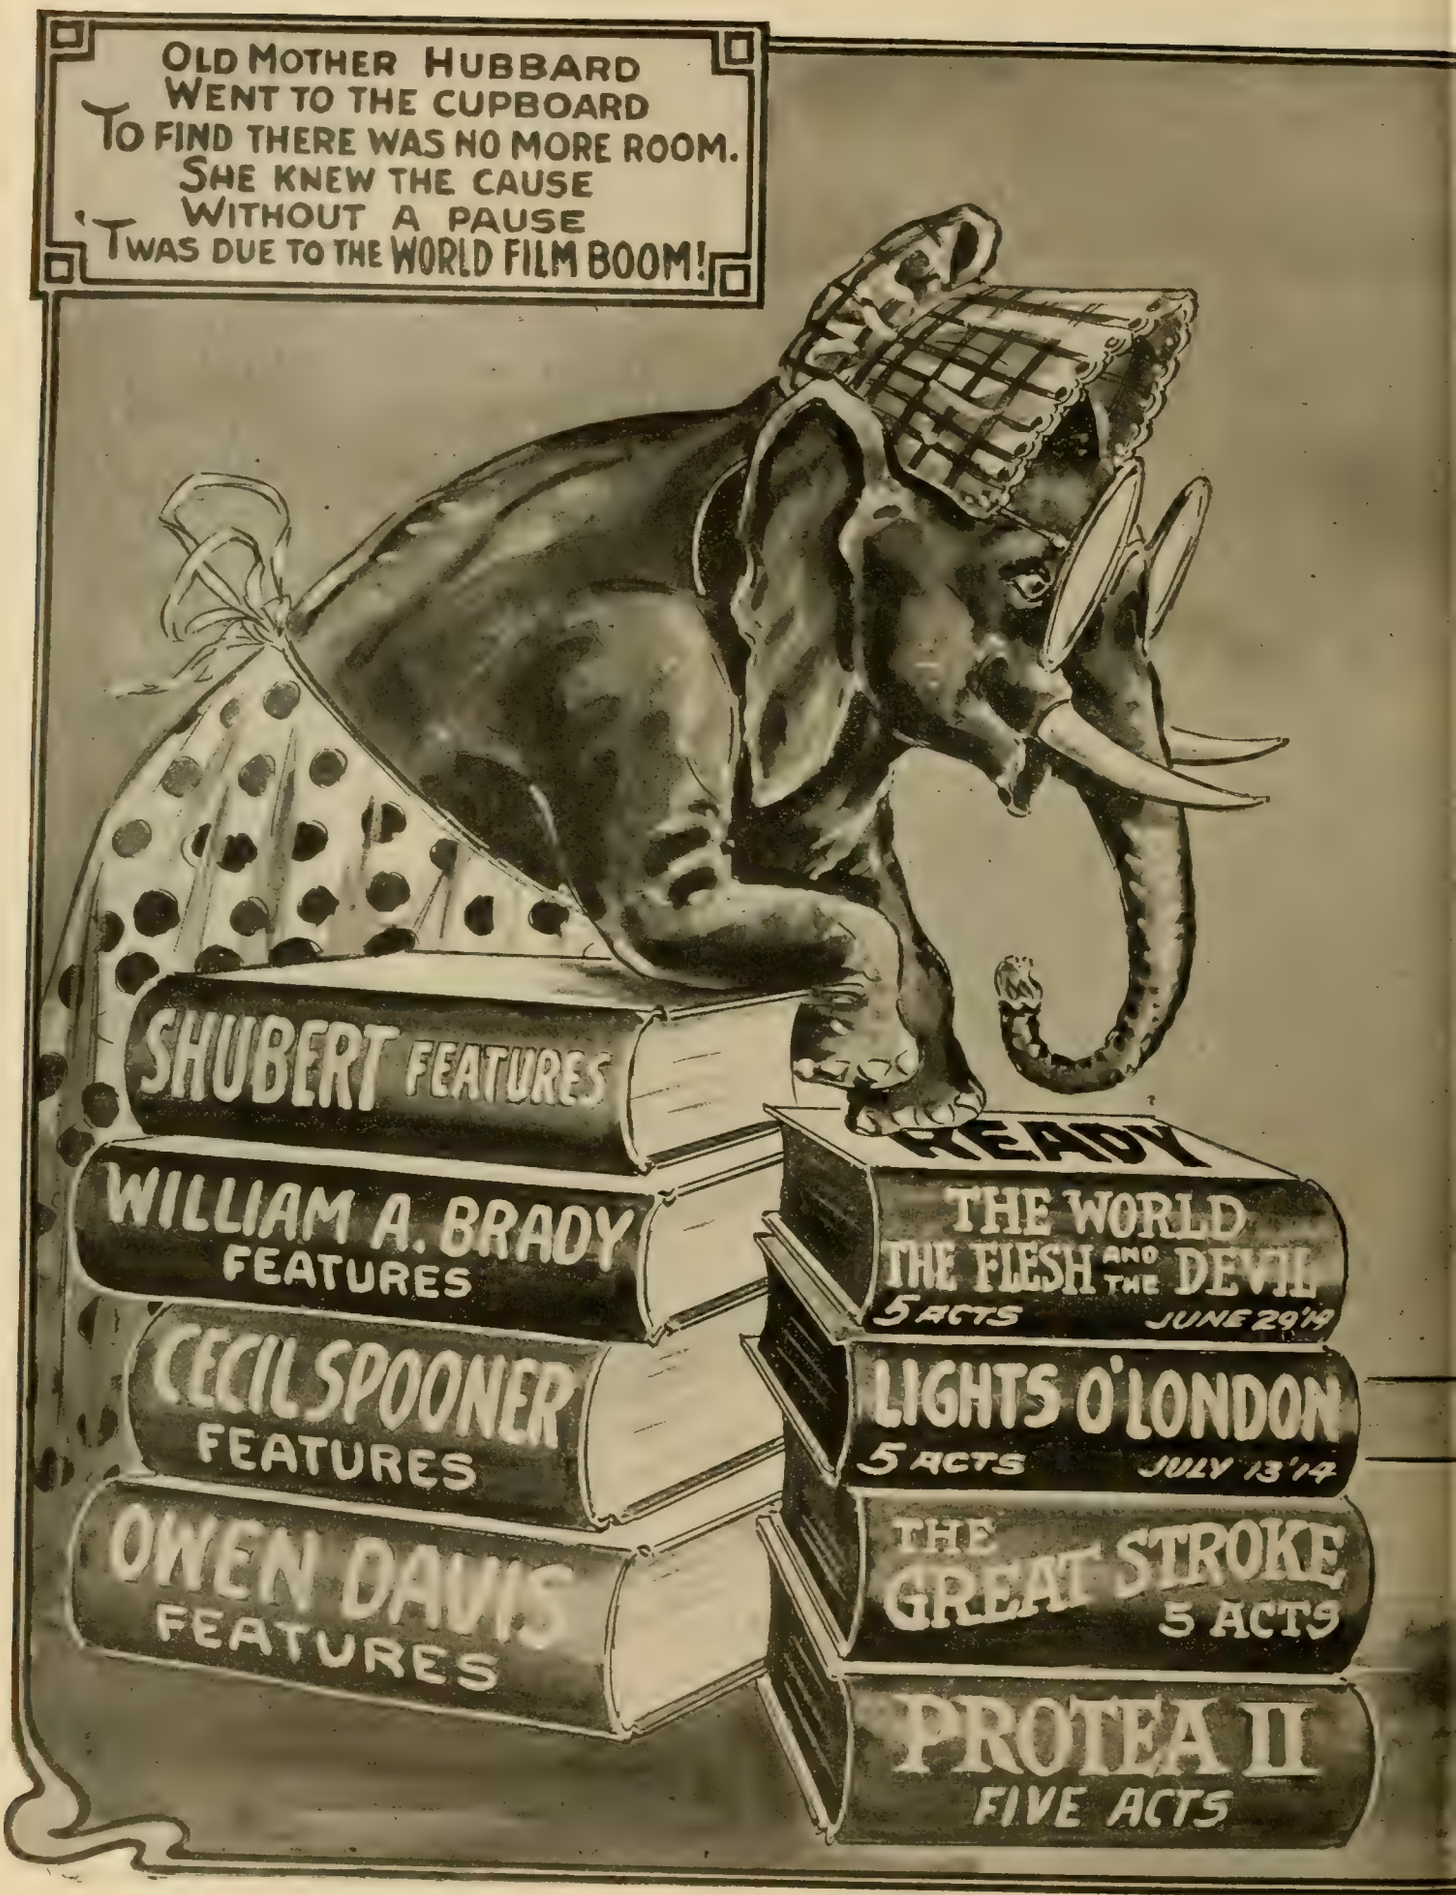
ALL-STAR-FEATURE-CORPORATION

HARRY R. RAVER, PRESIDENT

EXECUTIVE OFFICES 220 W. 42nd ST., NEW YORK

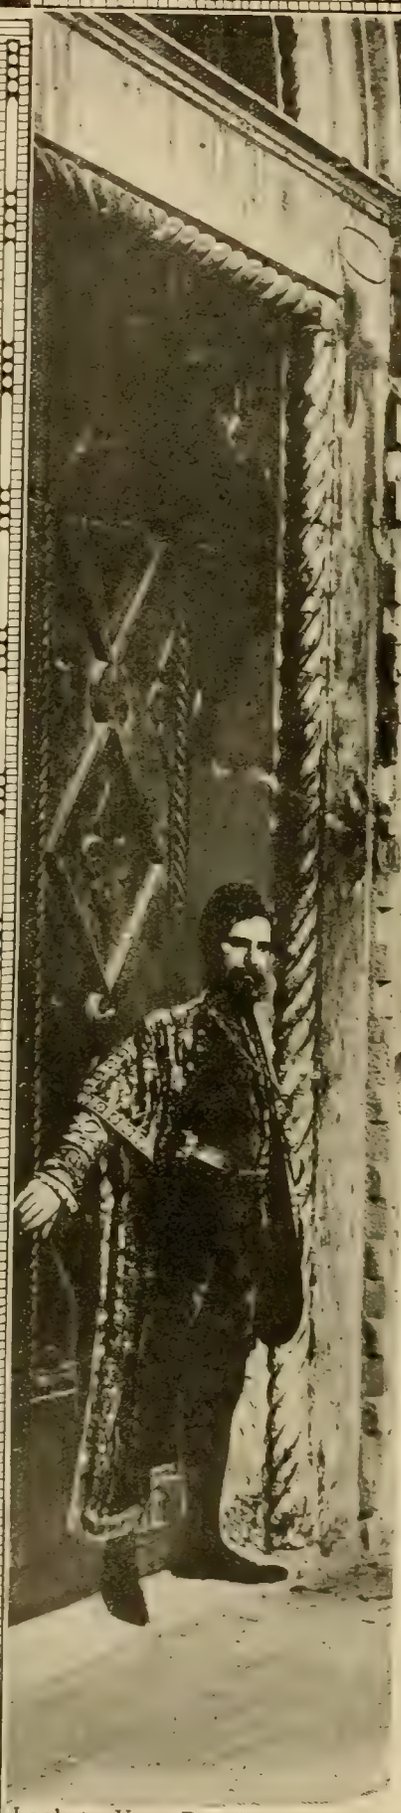
AUGUSTUS THOMAS, DIRECTOR GENERAL OF PRODUCTIONS

EXCLUSIVE AGENTS IN PRINCIPAL CITIES OF THE WORLD



OLD MOTHER HUBBARD
WENT TO THE CUPBOARD
TO FIND THERE WAS NO MORE ROOM.
SHE KNEW THE CAUSE
WITHOUT A PAUSE
'TWAS DUE TO THE WORLD FILM BOOM!
SHUBERT FEATURES
WILLIAM A. BRADY FEATURES
CECIL SPOONER FEATURES
OWEN DAVIS FEATURES
READY
THE WORLD THE FLESH AND THE DEVIL
5 ACTS JUNE 29'14
LIGHTS O' LONDON
5 ACTS JULY 13'14
THE GREAT STROKE
5 ACTS
PROTEA II
FIVE ACTS

WORLD FILM CORPORATION
SAPPHO
THE RAG-PICKER OF PARIS
THE TWO SERGEANTS
THE GOLDEN CROSS
PROTEA
THE BLIND SCULPTOR
THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII
THE ROMANCE OF AN OUTCAST
WHAT THE GODS DECREE
THE HEART OF A POLICE OFFICER
JOAN OF ARC
THE CONSPIRACY
THE TRIUMPH OF AN EMPEROR
THE PRICE OF TREACHERY
THE MASTER CRIMINAL
THE OUTLAW REFORMS
THE BRASS BOTTLE
IN SEARCH OF THE CASTAWAYS
THE KANGAROO
OLD GLORY
PROTEA II
LIGHTS O' LONDON
THE WORLD THE FLESH AND THE DEVIL
THE GREAT STROKE
OFFICES
ATLANTA
BUFFALO
BOSTON
CINCINNATI
CLEVELAND
CHICAGO
DENVER
DALLAS
DETROIT
INDIANAPOLIS
KANSAS CITY
LOS ANGELES
MINNEAPOLIS
NEW YORK
NEW ORLEANS
PITTSBURG
PHILADELPHIA
SAN FRANCISCO
ST LOUIS
SEATTLE
TORONTO
WASHINGTON
130 WEST 46TH ST., N.Y.C.



"Look to Your Daughter," cries Iago

Othello

RELEASED
THROUGH SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

or, THE MOOR OF VENICE

FIVE PARTS

THE DIVINE SHAKESPEAREAN DRAMA

Made at Venice, Italy!!!

By the Photo Drama Company. THE SUPER FILM—By All Odds the Most Pretentious, Beautiful and Accurately-Screened Version of Shakespearean Stories!

MADE AT VENICE, ITALY. That's a Tremendous advertising Feature in itself! VENICE, rendezvous of the modern tourist—A very fountain-head of Romance and Adventure! The waterways of Historic Venice with its tales, ten centuries old, of Passionate Loves and Fierce Vendettas—the indolent, dreamy sweep of these Gondola-ridden highways are scenes of the quaintest stories in any language!

FOR THE MAKING OF OTHELLO the City Fathers declared a half-holiday—canals were closed to modern commerce, leaving only the aged palaces, the gayly-costumed players and the clicking cameras of the Photo Drama Company.

In OTHELLO, we offer a real masterpiece. It is the first of Shakespeare's stories filmed in its proper environment, as the Master would have wished.

For Release Through

SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

General Film Company

WEEK OF JULY 6th

Complete Line of Lithographs, Press Stories, etc.

GEORGE KLEINE

166 N. State St., Chicago

COMEDIES ?

ORDER MELIES

AMERICAN COMEDIES EVERY TUESDAY

as part of our regular five a week output

'NEATH THE LION'S PAW

TRY

THE CURSE OF GREED

THE THUMB PRINT

ONE OF THESE THREE BIG

SPECIAL FEATURES

RELEASED THROUGH THE GENERAL FILM CO.

MELIES G FILMS

KALEM MASTERPIECE FILMS

SHANNON OF THE SIXTH

A stupendous five-part production of Edward E. Kidder's famous play based upon the Sepoy Rebellion in India.

More realistic conflicts than are waged between the frenzied Sepoys and the English troops have never been filmed. The destruction of the arsenal in which the English women and children have sought safety, and the assault upon the walls of Meerut are among the awe-inspiring features.

Two 1-sheet, two 3-sheet, two 8-sheet, and one 24-sheet posters showing the most stirring incidents.

THE BOER WAR.

A spectacular five-part story of the conflict between the British and the Boers.

"Many of my patrons consider 'THE BOER WAR' the finest war drama they have ever seen," writes the owner of the Theatre De Luxe, Dublin. Your patrons will be of the same opinion after they have seen the Battles of Elandslaagte, Wagon Hill, Botha's Pass and Almond's Nek.

Two 1-sheet, two 3-sheet, two 8-sheet, and one 24-sheet posters depicting exciting scenes.

WOLFE, OR THE CONQUEST OF QUEBEC.

A five-part historical production produced at authentic locations.

The attempt to destroy the English fleet by means of fire boats, the battles at Montmorenci Falls and on the Plains of Abraham, and the death of Wolfe and Montcalm, are among the historic events depicted.

The two 1-sheet, two 3-sheet, two 8-sheet, and one 24-sheet posters instantly catch the eye.

Francis Marion, "The Swamp Fox"

A Three-Part Story of the Revolution and Marion's battles with the British. 1, 3 and 6-Sheet Posters.

The Death Sign at High Noon

Marin Sais, Jane Wolfe, W. H. West and Paul Hurst in a Three-Part Drama showing one of the most exciting Indian fights ever filmed. 1, 3 and 6-Sheet Posters.

The Other Half of the Note

Featuring Irene Boyle in a Three-Part Secret Service Story. 1, 3 and 6-Sheet Posters.

A Celebrated Case

A Four-Part Production of the famous old drama. Alice Joyce, Guy Coombs, Marguerite Courtot and Alice Hollister in strong roles. 1, 3 and 6-Sheet Posters.

Released through General Film's Masterpiece Service

EDISON

LADDIE

A new version of the celebrated Edison drama

In Two Parts. 2,000 Feet

THE great tragedy in a mother's life is when her children grow up and leave her. Some fifteen years had elapsed since "Laddie" had left the old home for city life. Then, when the dear old mother was to be turned out of house and home to let a railroad have right of way through the property, she decided to surprise "Laddie" with her trip to his city office. "Laddie" appeared to be glad to see her, but the dear old mother felt his cold formality and went her way. Evidently "Laddie" was ashamed of his poor old mother. At length remorse for his conduct comes over him and he seeks her only to find her at last frail and dying in a hospital, but barely in time to impress a kiss on her dying lips and receive a mother's farewell smile. To be released Friday, July 24th

COMING EDISON RELEASES

The Adventures of the Absent Minded Professor.
Seventh "Octavius-Amateur Detective" story
Comedy—1000 feet
To be released Monday, July 20th

A Matter of Minutes
Eighth "The Man Who Disappeared" story
Drama—1000 feet
To be released Tuesday, July 21st

A Deal in Statuary
Comedy—500 feet

His Wife's Burglar
Comedy—500 feet
To be released Wednesday, July 22nd

The Last Assignment
Twelfth of the "Dolly of the Dailies" series
Drama—1000 feet
To be released Saturday, July 25th

A Canine Rival
Eighth of the "Wood B. Wedd" sentimental experiences
Comedy—1000 feet
To be released Monday, July 27th

WATCH FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF "MY FRIEND FROM INDIA"
H. A. Du Souchet's famous comedy-drama with Walter E. Perkins in the title role. To be released on August 15th through the masterpiece service of the General Film Company.

Order Edison posters of the MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO., Cleveland, Ohio, direct.

TRADE MARK Thomas A Edison

Thomas A. Edison, Inc.
239 Lakeside Ave., Orange, N. J.
Makers of the Edison Kinetoscope, Model "D."

LUBIN

LUBIN MASTERPIECES

Now Ready and About to Be Released

"THE WOLF" 6 Reels. By Eugene Walter

"THE HOUSE NEXT DOOR" 5 Reels. By J. Hartley Manners

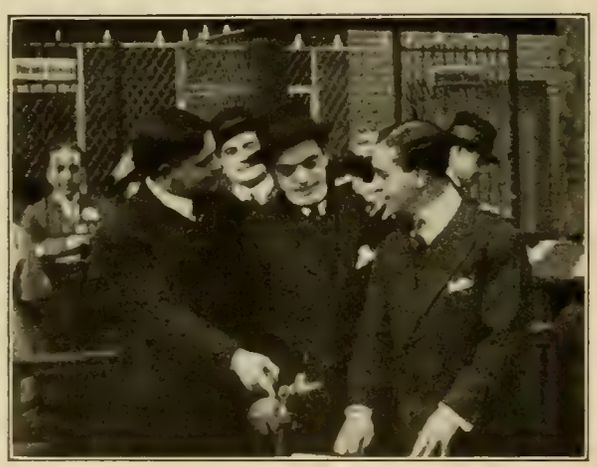
In Preparation at Great Expense

"EAGLE'S NEST" 5 Reels. Now being produced in Colorado, with Edwin Arden, the author, in the leading role.

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER" 5 Reels. By Winchell Smith, with William Elliott, late star of the "Madame X" production, in the leading role.



"Codes of Honor"—2 Reel. Wed., July 15th

"The Cross of Crime"—2 Reel. Thurs., July 16th

FIVE RELEASES EACH WEEK

"HE WAS BAD"

Comedy Split Reel.....Tuesday, July 14th

Sam Johnson is very unfortunate and getting the worst of it all round, but he gets a job sharpening razors. Armed with about a score of the colored man's favorite playthings he runs amuck and quickly cleans up the town.

"TOUGH LUCK"

Comedy Split Reel.....Tuesday, July 14th

Boggs is certainly in tough luck; everything goes wrong, but the climax comes when it is found that the cook has smallpox. The home is quarantined and no one can get in or out for weeks.

"CODES OF HONOR"

Two Reel Drama.....Wednesday, July 15th

A very powerful Drama, in which the Codes of Honor prevail against a terrible temptation.

"THE CROSS OF CRIME"

Two Reel Drama.....Thursday, July 16th

Sad consequences of adversity, temptation and the wages of sin. Retribution and compensation.

"THE LIE"

Drama.....Friday, July 17th

A good trapper story with excellent moral lesson sustaining truth. Backwoods atmosphere.

"SHE WANTED TO KNOW"

Comedy Split Reel.....Saturday, July 18th

Great Comedy picture with funny situation caused by family jars.

"ALL FOR LOVE"

Comedy Split Reel.....Saturday, July 18th

A Romance of the Rockies much burlesqued. Will induce roars of laughter.

A Comedy Every Tuesday and Saturday

A TWO-REEL FEATURE Every Wednesday and Thursday

A Drama Every Friday

LUBIN POSTERS

By Our Own Staff of Artists—One and Three Sheets with Single and Split Reels. One, Three and Six Sheets with all Multiple Reels.

Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Chicago Office - - - 154 West Lake Street

VITAGRAPH

"THE SOUL OF LUIGI" Drama
Monday, July 13.

His wife's desertion turns his love to hate and avarice. His soul is awakened and love revived by the child of his wife's renunciation. DOROTHY KELLY, JAMES MORRISON, GEORGE COOPER and ANDERS RANDOLPH are the cast.

"FOGG'S MILLIONS" Two Part Drama
Tuesday, July 14

Old Fogg marries a young adventuress who hopes to inherit his millions at his death. She is convicted of bigamy and the rightful heirs come into their possession. VAN DYKE BROOKE and an all star cast.

"THE ARRIVAL OF JOSIE" Comedy
Wednesday, July 15

A stranger in a strange land, she falls into good hands. Her dream of happiness is soon realized. Her joy is unconfined in her good nature. JOSIE SADLER and BILLY QUIRK are the leads.

"THE LITTLE CAPTAIN" Comedy-Drama
Thursday, July 16

He follows the general code of military discipline. He follows it too literally. It is happily rectified and everybody pleased. BOBBY CONNELLY in the title role.

"PIGS IS PIGS" Comedy
Friday, July 17

They become too many for BUNNY to handle. He is glad to get rid of them at any price. Two of them increase to one thousand in a shorter time than it takes to tell it.

"THE SONG OF THE GHETTO" Two Part Drama
Saturday, July 18

Calucci rejects Rosa, his old country sweetheart. He gains success in America. His sweetheart follows him. Seeking vengeance, her benefactor receives the thrust intended for Calucci. Calucci's love is reawakened, and he and Rosa are reconciled. WILLIAM HUMPHREY, ANTONIO MORENO, CAROLYN BIRCH and EULALIE JENSEN are the cast.

SIX A WEEK

"LOVE, THE CLAIRVOYANT" Drama ..... MONDAY, JULY 20	"THE APPLE" Drama ..... THURSDAY, JULY 23
"BREAD UPON THE WATERS" Two Part Drama ..... TUESDAY, JULY 21	"THE WINNING TRICK" Comedy ..... FRIDAY, JULY 24
"BUDDY'S DOWNFALL" Comedy ..... WEDNESDAY, JULY 22	"ROMANTIC JOSIE" Two Part Comedy ..... SATURDAY, JULY 25

VITAGRAPH ONE, THREE AND SIX SHEET POSTERS

The Vitagraph Co. of America, E. 15th St. and Locust Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

ARE OTHERS GRASPING YOUR OPPORTUNITY?

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES

Produced by the VITAGRAPH Company of America

A Million Bid
5 Part Classic

Goodness Gracious
3 Part Comedy

RELEASES

Mr. Barnes of N. Y.
6 Part Masterpiece

Love, Luck and Gasoline
3 Part Speed Comedy

6 Part Drama of Thrills

CAPTAIN ALVAREZ

A War Time Story of Love and Adventure

COMING
The Most Realistic 3 Part Drama in Filmdom

SHADOWS OF THE PAST

COMING
The Sensation of Broadway for Four Solid Weeks

As Presented at the
VITAGRAPH THEATRE
New York City

For Terms and Particulars Apply
GENERAL FILM CO.'S SPECIAL SERVICE
By Arrangement with Broadway Star Features Co.

STATE RIGHTS
VALUABLE TERRITORY STILL OPEN

FOR THE TREMENDOUS SCENIC MARVEL
THE CHRISTIAN
3000 People in 500 Scenes.

For Terms Apply
VITAGRAPH-LIEBLER FEATURE FILM CO.
116 Nassau St., N. Y.

Five Releases Each Week

THE IDENTIFICATION

FEATURING HELEN HOLMES AND J. P. McGOWAN IN A TWO-PART DRAMA.

Just as the drug fiend's plot to marry an heiress is about to succeed, an auto explosion—without a doubt, the most realistic ever filmed—frustrates his designs.

Released Monday, July 27th. Attention-attracting scenes on 1, 3 and 6-Sheets.

The Man With the Glove

FEATURING GUY COOMBS AND ANNA NILSSON

Because his nerve gives way during a hazing ordeal at college, the word "coward" is branded upon Penfield's hand. He vows vengeance upon the man who has humiliated him. His chance comes—but the course he pursues gives the lie to the word burnt into his flesh.

Released Tuesday, July 28th. Business-bringing 1 and 3-Sheets.

The Deadly Battle at Hicksville

FEATURING RUTH ROLAND IN A MARSHAL NIELAN COMEDY.

The lemon bombardment, the burlesque cannon duel and the explosion of the powder magazine are some of the incidents which fill this farce with merriment.

Released Friday, July 31st.

The Indian Agent

FEATURING PRINCESS MONA DARKFEATHER IN A STIRRING TWO-PART DRAMA.

Filled with gratitude toward the Indian Agent who has saved her brave's life, Anahka swears to repay his kindness. Her opportunity comes when her hunger-maddened people attack the whites.

Released Wednesday, July 29th. Striking 1, 3 and 6-Sheets.

The Lad from Old Ireland

This drama—produced in Ireland—will be remembered by exhibitors who ran it several years ago as one of the strongest single reels Kalem has ever released. The Irish lad's return in time to save his sweetheart from eviction makes this a story of rare interest.

Released Saturday, August 1st. Superb 1 and 3-Sheets.

KALEM

KALEM COMPANY, 235-9 West 23d St., NEW YORK

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
THE FILM INDEX
EXHIBITORS' GUIDE

J. P. Chalmers, Founder.
Published Weekly by the

CHALMERS PUBLISHING COMPANY
17 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY.
(Telephone, 3510 Madison Square.)

J. P. Chalmers, Sr.....President
E. J. Chalmers.....Secretary and Treasurer
John Wylie.....Vice-President and General Manager
The office of the company is the address of the officers.
WESTERN OFFICE—Suite 917-919 Schiller Building, 64 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill. Telephone, Central 5099.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and Philippine Islands.....$3.00 per year
Canada.....3.50 per year
Foreign Countries (Postpaid).....4.00 per year

ADVERTISING RATES.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING—no display—three cents per word; minimum charge, 50c.
DISPLAY ADVERTISING RATES made known on application.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

All changes of address should give both old and new addresses in full and clearly written.

NOTE.—Address all correspondence, remittances and subscriptions to MOVING PICTURE WORLD, P. O. Box 226, Madison Square Station, New York, and not to individuals.

(The Index for this issue will be found on page 352)

Entered at the General Post Office, New York City, as Second Class Matter.

Saturday, July 18, 1914.

Facts and Comments

AN old friend and reader out on the Jersey coast wants us to castigate all producers who insist on displaying drinking scenes. "It seems a shame," says our esteemed friend, "that film producers cannot give the public an interior setting without a bottle of rum on the table, and every entrance of a player means a glass of wine, etc. They even have little U—— I—— drinking at the bar. I am not advocating temperance, but think it's wrong." It may be quite true that there is too much drinking on the films, but we really think our friend is a little bit too severe and general in his language. No film ought to advertise drinking places, but it is difficult to see how all drinking scenes can be omitted. Is the banquet in Macbeth a drinking scene? The whole story of the wedding at Canaan hinges on the wine and the drinking of wine. No miracle could have been wrought without the diminished supply of wine.

*

Whatever our own personal views may be in the matter, no sane man will deny that men have since time immemorial made feasting the occasion for drink, and a true portrayal of life cannot absolutely ignore so patent and obvious a fact. Where the offering of a drink is part of the hospitable rites of a nation or an individual it is difficult to suppress it entirely if a complete story is to be told. Such scenes are found in the literature of every country and of every age from Homer to the last best seller. Where drinking scenes are introduced needlessly, and do not form a logical part of the story itself, they are, of course, absolute waste and indeed worse than waste. We have more than one film which shows the follies of intemperance, such as "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," or "John Barleycorn."

* * *

IT is a notorious fact that in the midst of an unprecedented overproduction of multiple reels there is a painful dearth of good features which would help the exhibitor to make money. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has received more than one letter from exhibitors who wonder what has become of the supply of quality features. One correspondent writes to us enumerating a long list of good features with which he has made money and then deploring the fact that the supply of this kind of films is giving out. He says he is only looking for the best and wants to steer clear of "the cheap stuff."

It is not easy to understand or explain the situation. The prevailing opinion seems to be that there must be an awful shrinkage in the production of cheap stuff before we can look for a successful revival of long films of quality. The season is, of course, responsible for much of the poor business, but old film men say that they have never known a worse season than this. There is an unsettled condition which has now continued for some time, but it looks from the efforts which are being made in many quarters as if the coming of the fall might bring the hoped-for improvement.

* * *

ONE of our esteemed correspondents writing from a Western state says in his letter to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD that he anticipates hostile action by the legislature of his state, owing to the epidemic of "white-slave" and "drug-terror" films which recently swept over his territory. After congratulating THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD on its stand in regard to such films our correspondent fears that the legislators "will be glad of an opportunity to pounce on the moving picture business, and if there is anything in the world that will offer them an excuse it is that kind of pictures." We have done what we could to fight such films, but the fate of all these bad features ultimately rests with the exhibitors. It seems to us that the organized exhibitors might have done something to aid in the fight, but if they have done anything it has escaped our attention.

* * *

ANOTHER complaint in this week's exhibitors' mail deals with the unreasonably hostile attitude of the church people against the motion picture. The trouble is a local one and our exhibitor says that in spite of all he has been able to do the ministers in the town are warning their congregations against attending motion picture entertainments. The ministers probably fear a diminution of the profits of their own entertainments. This is a narrow attitude, to be sure, and the exhibitor who must contend with it has no other hope than patient waiting. Eventually we have always found the good, clean and entertaining picture is bound to win. The wait, of course, is hard and unprofitable for the time being, but, on the whole, much better than surrender.

What Constitutes a "Punch"?

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

AS in the ring, the "punch" is felt rather than seen. We may have a plot and characterization, striking types, charming treatment, splendid scientific work, and even sensational episodes for billboard use, and the audience will vaguely recognize that there is something lacking. A Prussian spy of fierce beard and glittering eyes may engage an adventuress-with-a-soft-spot-in-her-heart to steal the "papes" from the hero, either a trusted soldier or an ambassadorial attache, and we may be treated to an hour or so of dreadful suspense, machinations of mystery, gorgeous balls, lovely gardens, and the "papes" are finally restored by the adventuress in a fit of remorse. If she does not die, she flops into the hero's arms and we ask ourselves, "What of it?"

As one of the audience, I sit down to watch the screen in good faith, trusting to those who have undertaken to entertain me, hoping that they will. When I am guided through a labyrinth of difficulties, step by step, I wait patiently, not for something to happen, but for some reason for all that is happening. Moment after moment passes: men and women chase up and down and across the screen; some gasp, "My God!" Others look furtively out of their eye corners; some fight; others weep; then the leading lady is taken into the arms of the leading gent, and all is over.

A gentleman of Marblehead recently claimed that I wrote sensational dramas and against sensationalism. He could not distinguish between the means and the end. A dramatist may use exciting incidents of any kind to obtain a hold on the unstable interest of a mixed audience; he can use his imagination with the utmost freedom in devising schemes to grip and hold that interest; he can be interesting at the expense of truth if he chooses; he must never be truthful at the expense of interest; but all forms of development are but means to an end. What I complain of is that they constitute elaborate preparation for little or nothing whatever in the end. There is no punch delivered in the average protodrama but it can be put into any form from farce to tragedy.

Let us consider a certain adaptation from melodrama recently shown at the Strand. A married woman of sweet nature, designed for normal existence, is driven to a state of mental dissolution by the pressure of outward circumstances, extreme poverty, a thieving husband of refined cruelty and the loss of her baby. She is on the edge of self-destruction—having nothing to live for, her hold on existence is frail. Along comes a true friend. He sustains and strengthens her with manly delicacy, while driving straight at a gang of degenerates led by her husband. He is their Nemesis, working silently and determinedly to thwart their schemes and punish them according to their deserts, while restoring her to that form of life for which she was intended and equipped. That she inadvertently aids in retributive justice detracts nothing from interest, but the punch is felt to be the power exerted in behalf of a gentle and unfortunate woman by the activities of one true friend.

And of us who have known bitter experience realize that there are periods when our individual efforts seem unavailing, when at the last moment some kind heart gives us encouragement and support needed to tide us over to where we can once more take care of ourselves. Those of us who have not tasted the bitter waters of complete failure, who, nevertheless, observe and think, can easily grasp the value of true friendship in a moment of extreme peril. So there was a punch to the screen version which brought a success, whereas the weak stage play may have failed from lack of it. The punch was not seen—it was not so intended—but it was delivered and made a hit. To make it obvious is to lose half of the effect.

Ambitious directors sometimes create an effective play out of poor raw material, but they occasionally give so much attention to this or that delight of treatment, valuable as a means to an end, that they lose sight of the end and are really responsible for destroying what they sincerely desire to improve. The audience enjoys skillful interpretation and beauty of structure—people often applaud the treatment—but the after effect in a successful play is too subtle for immediate analysis, and it is that which brings men and women back again to the picture show. The punch counts in the long run.

The author of screen dramas rarely sees in advance all that may be made of his product—the director and actors may greatly improve it—but that author must have a quality above mere craftsmanship, the ability to think out clearly outlined conclusions of value, such as have a bearing on modern existence. He must use incident and characterization to entertain, to enlist both emotional and intellectual interest, but his finest achievement is to use his art and that of all participating in the composite work of production as a delightful means to some well-defined end. Without that end in view, it is difficult for him to construct with sincerity, and without initial sincerity of tone there may easily be false notes from the best of starts to the inevitable conclusion.

We will eventually come to our own in photodrama, whether or not it is sensational or elaborately ornamented with beauty, and the plays will be quite as easily understood by those of small pretense as they are delightful to people of critical tastes. Their simplicity will be an art to conceal, or their vigor an art to enforce, a meaning. When these plays come, eminently human, with a significance in their humanity, they will sweep like a refreshing breeze through poster pretense, stale intrigues, costume inanities and threadbare themes, with a vigor and freshness that will make them welcome to all classes. It takes a soul to quicken a soul.

The soulless photodrama, the one having no especial significance, may be pleasing in a small way, especially to those directors who delight in embellishing scenarios with cunning little devices of their own, but the biggest interest of the audience is not in contemplating the director's cleverness but in getting something from the photodrama. That something is what lasts in memory.

The subtle effect that causes us to remember one picture, one statue, one book among many, is different than our immediate pleasure. The latter is purely a question of first impression, the impression that is made through the eye for the pleasure of the moment, the flitting impression of a passing crowd. What results from that impression is quite another matter.

"Success," says Richard Burton, "must rest upon strong convictions. Along with the indispensable skill in handling the form there must be that sympathy in life which flowers in some proof that the playmaker has really been living, and therefore has something to say about the great, confusing, inspiring life play from which he makes his own little drama." Here is a great natural school, unsurpassed in power and opportunity."

No Quarter and No Compromise

By W. Stephen Bush.

WHILE we are on the question of censorship let us take a glance at some foreign dispatches sent to this side of the water by the representative of the Associated Press in Berlin. The dispatches tell of protests against the growing tax on films levied in the name and under the pretense of censorship. American, French and Italian firms have appealed to their respective ambassadors and threaten to quit Germany unless some relief is afforded. The tax now amounts to about half a cent a foot which, allowing for the difference in the value of money, is near the point of confiscation. The source, or rather the pretense, for all this taxation is the alleged need of censorship.

With censorship a legal fact and taxation under claim of censorship a stern reality in Ohio and in Pennsylvania, as well as in other localities, the political appetite will soon grow by what it feeds on. The tax imposed on films in the name of censorship is severe now; what will it be a year or two years from now? If we have censorship in only one-fourth of the States with a growing rate of taxation the toll taken from the motion picture industry will feed a large horde of politicians and make the production of motion pictures more costly and more uncertain.

Here is an aspect of the censorship problem which is well worthy of careful consideration. Let the right of the state to exercise a previous legal restraint over the publication of films be granted and you cannot fix a limit for the cost of enforcing such a previous legal restraint. Supposing the States raise the tax of censorship to ten dollars for a thousand feet for every copy that goes through the limits of their jurisdiction. It is difficult to see what can be done to stop it. The courts are open, of course, but litigation is notoriously expensive and long drawn out.

The organized exhibitors of Pennsylvania have set the first example of active and practical resistance to censorship as the special enemy of the exhibitor. We earnestly hope that every other organization of exhibitors will at last rise to the enormity of the danger involved in legal censorship and will attack the evil where it has found concrete shape in legislation. Happily legal censorship is still in its infancy. So far there is no legal censorship in the overwhelming majority of the States.

Now let the exhibitors in every state which is as yet free from legal censorship with all its ruinous consequences get together without delay and enter upon a vigorous anti-censorship campaign. It would be well to start a National as well as a state campaign, but the state campaign is needed immediately wherever legislators talk of censorship. The Moving Picture World has from the first opposed all kinds of censorship. It has given practical and concrete evidence of its opposition and of its ability to expose the fallacies of censorship where exposure was likely to do the most good. Wherever a bureau of education is started with the object of enlightening and influencing public opinion in the matter of censorship the files of The Moving Picture World will be found full of useful information. It is well known throughout the industry, and especially well known among exhibitors, that this paper is ready and always has been ready to provide its readers with good materials in the fight against censorship wherever it may be waged. On more than one occasion this paper has sent its representatives before committees and legislatures to plead the cause of the freedom of the screen which means the freedom of the exhibitor. We are ready to do our share at all times, but the exhibitor must take the initiative in his own territory. He must digest the full meaning of the words, "that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

It may seem impossible that a medieval institution, repugnant both to the letter and the spirit of our laws, can be resurrected in the twentieth century and in the most progressive country in the world. We say it may seem impossible, but facts show that the attempt has been made in two states of the Union, one of them justly accounted a leader in modern ideas. If we stand by supinely the unholy union between the fanatic and the politician will be responsible for more abortive changelings. The fanatic, often well-intentioned and always reaching out for the impossible, sets up the public clamor and creates a false public sentiment and an artificial demand. The politician, wholly unconscious of and indifferent to any moral influences or considerations, is quick to see the chances of creating new revenues for the state and for himself, especially for himself. Using the false public sentiment he forces the obnoxious but to him and his highly profitable law upon the statute books and the exhibitor begins to suffer.

The Fifth Avenue Board of Voluntary Censorship has recently sent out a circular in which it lays down this strange principle: "Some form of local censorship is inevitable." This is another one of those loose, careless and mischievous statements which one meets constantly in the dialectics of censorship. It is a mere conclusion and cannot be accepted as evidence merely because our friends on Fifth Avenue choose to stand sponsors for it. The contention that there will always be local censorship is not supported by any facts which we have been able to discover in the circular. It is a naked assumption and an unwarranted fear. Even if such were the case, however, it has yet to be demonstrated how an added state or National censorship is going to improve matters. Let us hold fast to this self-evident principle: All censorship is bad and unjustifiable. The battle must be fought out on these lines no matter how long it will take. Whatever is vicious in principle cannot be made the subject-matter of compromise. We might debate on the amount of the tax which the state exacts for the privilege of showing motion pictures to the public, but there can be no discussion or arbitration of the viciousness of censorship. The experience of mankind extending over many centuries and especially the experiences of the English-speaking races have demonstrated beyond all doubt both the folly and the ineffectiveness of subjecting any medium of public expression to a previous legal restraint.

We cannot lose in this fight if we are willing to persevere. Reason and experience are fighting with us. The press will be with us if we know how to make the right sort of appeal through its columns. More important than all else: Public opinion will be with us if we present our side as it ought to be presented.

There are many ways of doing this, but we know of none that is better than the establishment of a special bureau in charge of competent men, thoroughly familiar not only with every phase of the censorship question, but also conversant with the avenues which lead to the best and widest publicity. We must make our side known, which is but another way of saying that we must advertise. We cannot begin too soon.

"John Barleycorn"

A Filmed Adaptation of Jack London's Story, Bosworth, Inc., Six Reels.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

WHEN it comes to delineating the struggles of the soul Jack London writes with an X-ray concealed in his pen. The psychological details of the ancient fight between Reason in Man and The Evil Spirit in Alcohol have never been portrayed with greater pathos and with greater truthfulness than in his famous story of "John Barleycorn." All the stages of the struggle from aversion and reluctance to half-hearted acceptance and to final slavery are described with unrivaled fidelity to truth and fact.

That such a story has lost nothing in its convincing power when told on the screen will easily be believed. The settings are with perhaps two or three exceptions taken from Nature directly. This is one of the greatest charms of this feature. The tale is one of the sea in great measure, and we can almost smell the salt air and hear the murmurs of the waves—so much is there of realistic atmosphere all through the six parts. The underworld of sea-faring men is brought before us in most faithful depiction; not always a pleasant spectacle by any means, but well justified by the scope of the story, which aims to show the dehumanizing effects of strong drink on the frame and the soul of man. I cannot bestow enough praise on the selection of the types; even in these improved days we rarely see such fine and subtle characterization. Such figures as "Scratch Nelson," or as the old saloonkeeper or the parents of the man who struggles with John Barleycorn or the old colored nurse are absolutely convincing. The same fine characterization, no doubt in large measure the result of thoughtful and painstaking direction, will be found in every one of the minor parts in the films.

Scene from "John Barleycorn" (Bosworth, Inc.).

Scene from "John Barleycorn" (Bosworth, Inc.).

The leading part was taken by Elmer Clifton. His was no easy task, but he proved fully equal to what was asked of him. He enlists our sympathy from the first and skillfully sustains and stimulates it, ending with a strong and impressive climax. The work of the children, notably that of little Matty Roubert, was faultless. Viola Barry was a trifle cold and seemed to lack sympathy.

John Barleycorn is not a drama, unless we choose to see a drama in the lonely heart struggle of the individual. John Barleycorn is a biography, roughly and somewhat loosely scattered through the leaves of a diary. It is a record of personal experiences, profoundly interesting and pathetic, but lacking dramatic construction and not overrich in dramatic elements. It is the most powerful moral lesson ever conveyed in films. Viewed as a graphic description it cannot be blamed for a certain diffuseness and a most minute elaboration of details. In the drama proper such diffuseness and such protracted lingering over details would be inexcusable.

Scene from "John Barleycorn" (Bosworth, Inc.).

Of Mr. Bosworth and his superb head and figure we get but a fleeting glimpse in the last scene, more's the pity.

The photography shows the advantages of the California light. These advantages, however, are sometimes balanced by the difficulty in handling such rich light.

MACDONALD JOINS OZ FORCES.

J. FARRELL MACDONALD, whose most recent picture was Samson, has joined the forces of the Oz Film Company at Hollywood, Cal., as producing director. Mr. Macdonald has made a name for himself during his years of producing in which he has directed some of the best-known film stars. Some of his best-known works are: "The Bolted Door," "Sealed Orders," "Pagliacci," "Francisca da Rimini" and others. Among the stars he has directed are Paul Panzer, Glen White, Fritzi Brunette, Florence Barker, J. Warren Kerrigan, Edith Bostwick and Arthur Maude.

J. Farrell Macdonald.

Mr. Macdonald's first work with the new company will be the direction of the "Patchwork Girl of Oz," from a scenario by L. Frank Baum, the well-known fairy tale author. The Oz company's new studios at Hollywood are rapidly being completed, and because of their modern equipment will provide facilities second to none in the country for the turning out of high-class work. It is the company's intention to specialize in the production of favorite fairy tales, and "The Wizard of Oz" and "The Tik Tok Man" are among the photoplays which have already been announced for early presentation.

"The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel."

Two-Part Hepworth Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A PHOTODRAMA of exceptional photography and beautiful settings, "The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel" tells the story of a simple country girl suddenly injected into the fast environment of London society, as it was done some generations ago, and more or less as it is reputed to be today. The types are perfect; the characters well differentiated by the author; the exteriors chosen with good taste; the costumes and furnishings are both suitable and refined, and the story has a fine basic idea behind it. But the whole play suffers from faulty technique, probably that of the director. Not only is the presentation too "stagey," but the skeleton on which it was reared was worthy and capable of development considerably beyond that achieved.

With the same fine cast for interpreters, with the same admirably chosen settings, with the same artistic photography, the same story could be made to hold an audience in closer sympathy for two reels or with equal interest over one or two more reels. The action is hurried along as if so much had to be crowded into a certain space of time, with a result that the actors are automatic rather than spontaneous; they give us very little revelation of their hearts and minds. Then the reason for action of characters is not always properly clarified.

Scene from "The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel" (Hepworth).

CAST.

Nan, a country girl.....Alma Taylor
Her Blind Mother.....Marie DeSolla
Jasper, village blacksmith.....Stewart Rome
Black Meg, in love with Jasper.....Alice DeWinton

Meg, a female roughneck, loves Jasper; Jasper loves Nan; Nan loves her blind mother, an affection naturally reciprocated. Mother and daughter have apparently lived in serene happiness together, the blind woman depending entirely upon her child for companionship and guidance, and their circumstances are good. Suddenly comes a grand lady on horse—who she is, where she has come from, and why she has paid this visit are left entirely to the spectator to puzzle out for himself. To all appearances, she is an utter stranger; yet Nan leaves her comfortable home and the mother she loves to go with the fine lady, who might easily have been announced in subtitle as Nan's town cousin. However this situation was conceived, it is not conducted in accordance with the admitted laws of life, and it loses value accordingly.

We next see Nan in high society, at a function. A gentleman kisses her without provocation, and Nan runs away. Another utter stranger, a gentleman who feels sorry for the country girl, offers her the shelter of his house, and she is there received and given magnificent clothes to wear. Jasper has the blind mother write a note to Nan, and he delivers it in person, though gossips have led him to suspect that she has paid a price of personal dishonor for her fine raiment. Nan then concludes to go home, and does so. She whirrs her spinning wheel, that her mother may know that she is home, and so the play ends—it ends in a blind alley, for we have been led all along to think that there was to be some sort of a solution to the relations of Nan and the blacksmith. In less than a dozen words the story is "Nan goes away, tries high life and comes back home." It is quite apparent that the author infused a punch in this story which was overlooked or disregarded by the director.

It is always interesting to note the effect on character of a change of environment. Clyde Fitch had a happy way of delineating the changes to be expected when a simple and sincere girl is suddenly thrust into the company of the well-to-do class of pleasure-loving idlers, her effect on them and their effect on her. With genuine observation and sympathetic understanding of both types, an interesting clash and contrast might easily have been set up in "The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel." Therein, quite possibly, lay hidden the author's purpose, the real punch of the otherwise pretty story.

Scene from "The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel" (Hepworth).

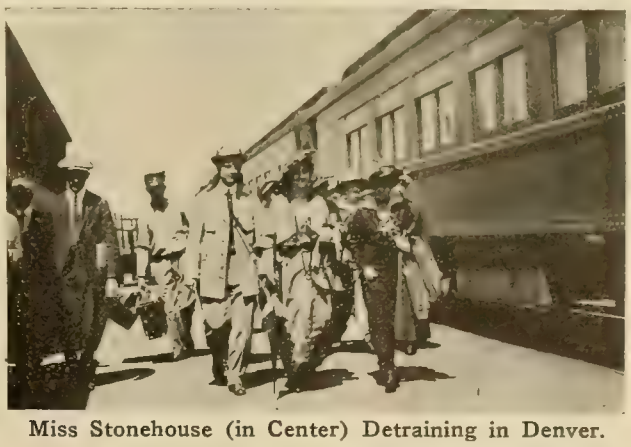
RUTH STONEHOUSE IN DENVER.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse, "The Colorado Girl," star of the Essanay Company and graceful dancer, was the attraction extraordinary at the opening of the new theatre de luxe, The Plaza, in Denver, her home city, last week. Miss Stonehouse's appearance in person in this theatre created no little stir, inasmuch as it was the first appearance of a screen star in dramatic work in the "real" in the West; and the signal honor of having the charming artiste's return to the city of her birth to launch this new theatre which embodies the higher ideals of the silent art was accorded this most successful of Colorado's people of the screen.



Miss Stonehouse (in Center) Detraining in Denver.

Miss Stonehouse arrived in Denver on the afternoon of her opening day and was met by hundreds of her admirers and former friends, who welcomed her triumphant return to the city of her birth. The newspapers pictured her arrival and were generous in their praise of the exquisite charm of her personality and dancing which was the crowning triumph for the new theatre.

In appreciation of her splendid welcome and in honor of her home State, Miss Stonehouse presented on the opening day her own original dance conception, "The Colorado Waltz," and followed it during the rest of her engagement with selections from her extensive repertoire.

"In Tune With the Wild."

A Remarkable Selig Photoplay in Three Reels, Emphasizing the Close Bond Existing Between Wild Animal Life and that of Man.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IN "Thor, Lord of the Jungle," an animal story released by Selig some time ago, I was especially impressed by the upward trend of pictures treating of wild animal life, because of the sympathy shown for animals in captivity. In the fine three-reel, filmed story of "In Tune with the Wild," another long step forward has been taken, because the lesson is distinctly taught that the killing of wild animals, for the mere sport of killing, is a crime that civilization should frown upon. The great superiority of man over other forms of animal life and the consequent license, supposed to be his right, to dispose of their existence as he deems fit are gradually being changed as the anthropocentric idea is being modified by a clearer understanding of the bond that exists between all forms of animal life that dwells upon this small earth of ours.

It was only the other day that I read a report of a lecture delivered before the faculty of the University of Chicago by the president of the University of Utah, in which the speaker declared that the difference between man's understanding and that of animals was only one of degree, and that the soul of man, which we are so much concerned about, has no real place in a truly scientific analysis of man's make-up—the anthropocentric idea that the sun, moon and stars, heaven, the earth and its teeming subordinate life was all made for man, notwithstanding.

And, strange to say, in the last two issues of the Metropolitan Magazine, wonderful accounts of the intelligence of the famous Elberfelt horses are given by no less an authority than Maeterlinck, the celebrated dramatist and author. There we read that these animals have actually been taught so as to express their thoughts in intelligible speech. Are we not close on the wonderful borderland that will disclose sacred and binding ties between man and the lower forms of animal life, ties that will prevent the indiscriminate slaughter of creatures that think and suffer and enjoy, only in a much less degree than we do, ourselves.

In the pictured subject under review two lions are killed, and to escape the charge of inconsistency an explanation is necessary. These lions were old, refractory and dangerous. They had to be killed, and no one can bring the charge of cruelty, as their taking off is swift and painless.

"In Tune with the Wild" was written and directed by E. A. Martin, of the Selig western forces. The story holds one with the thrill of one of Captain Mayne Reid's romances, as experienced in boyhood. It has strong dramatic interest, and the animals, while most essential, by no means command chief attention. Moreover, the filmed story is well connected and clearly told.

Miss Kathlyn Williams and Edwin Wallock share honors in the principal roles. It is rather surprising to the spectator at first to see Miss Williams afraid of wild animals, one has become so accustomed to witness her daring in the presence of lions, leopards and even of tigers. But the story wills it so, and the missionary, Robert Wayne (Edwin Wallock), mentally deranged, and a wild man of the jungles, is seen living among the wild brutes fearless and unhurt. We see him pick up a leopard and carry it off, its body encircling his neck, and at other times act in the midst of a large company of jungle beasts as if he were one of them. It is really remarkable.

The Captain Jones of William Stowell will be pleasing to everyone who views these pictures, and "Baby" Lillian Wade will charm by her childish artlessness and beauty.

The atmosphere of the story has been well preserved throughout. Scenes of jungle life in Central Africa are realistically reproduced. The attack on the missionary's camp by savage natives and the rescue by a friendly tribe are exciting incidents. So also is the scene showing the casting of the missionary and his daughter into the pit among the wild animals.

Robert Wayne, an English missionary in Central Africa, receives a letter that he has been left a legacy of £50,000. He immediately sets out for the Coast accompanied by his wife and child. On the way he is ambushed by hostile natives and severely wounded in the head, the wound causing mental derangement. His wife and child are rescued by a friendly tribe and return to England, the wife believing that her husband has been killed. Wayne, however, without reason and without fear wanders far into the jungle and lives with the wild beasts.

Scene from One of Selig's Notable Wild Animal Productions, Entitled "In Tune with the Wild."

Seventeen years elapse. The baby child has grown to young womanhood. The mother still mourns over the fate of her husband. About this time Captain Jones, a noted hunter, returns from one of his expeditions in Africa. He meets pretty Edith Wayne at a party and is smitten by her charms. He calls on her next day and brings with him several photographs taken during his trip. One of these is that of a wild man encountered in the jungle. Edith is struck by the similarity of the features of the strange creature to those of her father, as shown in a photograph taken 18 or 20 years before. Her mother, when shown the photograph taken by Captain Jones, recognizes the supposed wild man as her husband.

Scene from "In Tune with the Wild" (Selig).

Captain Jones, accompanied by Edith and his company of men immediately set out to Africa. After hairbreadth escapes by Edith, the wild man is found and proves to be the missionary, Robert Wayne. At the sight of Edith he recovers his memory and shortly after joins his wife in England.

These films will be released in the near future, the date not being fixed at the time of writing.

Englishmen Pleasantly Hoaxed.

Men and Women Prominent in Artistic and Social World of London Appear in Barrie Revue.

ACCORDING to a long special London dispatch in the New York Times, a "colossal but brilliant hoax" has been put over on prominent Londoners by Sir James Barrie, Granville Barker and George Bernard Shaw. Among the party were Premier and Mrs. Asquith, and with them were 150 men and women well known in the artistic and social life of the English metropolis. The note from Messrs. Barrie and Barker was in the form of an invitation to a "kinematograph supper in two acts" at the Savoy theater; the hour was to be midnight.

As the guests entered the foyer of the theater at 11.30 a motion picture camera was clicking, and as the party sat down to supper, which was served at small tables on the stage, a battery of cameras was trained on the diners. This was described as the first act.

The second act consisted of a revue arranged by Frank Finney. Well-known actors and actresses appeared in a number of playlets. The cameras were focused alternately on the stage and on the guests, now seated in the auditorium.

The action was interrupted on various occasions by gags from members in the audience who took up their cues from the dialogue on the stage, to quote from the Times' story. The last of these carefully placed interruptions came from George Bernard Shaw, who rose in his seat in the audience. The camera was carefully trained on Shaw, who, after rattling off a series of smart sayings, explained that he was doing this merely to keep things going while the operators were filming him and the audience. Shaw then went on to give an explanation of Barrie's supper party.

"You understand, a Scotsman doesn't give you a supper for nothing," he said. "You are all supers in a revue which Barrie is writing for Granville Barker. You'll have the pleasure of seeing yourselves—and me—on the film, for I'm working tonight for a greater dramatist than myself."

Seizing a property sword, Shaw brandished it, crying, "Who'll follow me?" Chesterton and Barker cried, "I will follow!" and charged the stage. Then the curtain fell and the machine stopped. The guests filed out, laughing at the realization that they had been "caught." Whether Barrie and Barker will be able to carry out their plan of incorporating the film in their Autumn revue remains to be seen.

Mere Fiberboard Case Tabooed.

New Regulations Call for Film Shipping Cases of Wood and Metal or Metal and Fiberboard—Effective October 1.

After October 1, 1914, the shipment of moving picture films by express in anything other than tightly closed metal cases enclosed in strong, spark-proof wooden boxes or in spark-proof cases made of sheet iron not less than .02 inch thick and lined throughout with fiberboard one-eighth inch thick, or some other equivalent insulating material will be prohibited by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Notice to this effect has been sent out by the Bureau of Explosives maintained by the various railroad and express companies and empowered to enforce the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the various federal commissions which regulate express shipments by public carriers.

This new ruling will be far reaching in its effect upon motion picture shippers throughout the country in that it will eliminate the fiberboard shipping case which has been in such general use for a long time.

The regulations under which film shipments have been made heretofore were in two sections. The drastic change which has been made has resulted from an amendment of Section A, which formerly read: "In spark-proof metal cases enclosed in strong and tight wooden or fiberboard boxes, or fiberboard boxes or pails." This section now reads: "In tightly closed metal cases enclosed in a strong, spark-proof wooden box." Section B of the original regulations remains unchanged and is as follows: "In spark-proof cases made of sheet iron not less than 0.02-inch thick (No. 25 U. S. standard gauge) and lined throughout with fiberboard at least one-eighth inch thick, or some other equivalent insulating material. The covers of these cases must fit tightly and must lap over the body at least five-eighth inch on the sides, forming a tight joint."

At the Bureau of Explosives it was said that the new regulations were not the result of any particular accident which had occurred recently in the handling or shipment of motion picture films; they had been decided upon after a careful investigation of numerous complaints registered by the express companies following disastrous fires and explosions. One of these accidents of record was the burning of an express car with its contents at Belvue, Kan., March 13, 1909, causing a loss of $4,250, the blame for which was laid at the door of two small shipments of films, one in a leather case and the other in an unprotected wooden box. A $41,000 fire near Wilmer, Tex., in which motion picture films being transported by the Wells & Fargo Express figured, was also considered, it is understood.

In announcing the new regulations, the Bureau of Explosives is also calling attention to alleged violations of the rules regarding the use of the prescribed yellow danger labels on film shipments. It is claimed that there have been many instances in which reshipments made by exhibitors, exchanges, etc., have been made without the formality of placing new danger labels, properly stamped, on the packages. Another violation of the Federal law mentioned is the shipment of small quantities of liquid cement, an inflammable liquid, in the same package with films. The law requires that such shipments be marked with a regulation red caution certificate label and, to avoid complications and questions, the Bureau recommends that cement be packed and shipped separately.

"MUTUAL GIRL WEEKLY" NOT DISCONTINUED.

"Our Mutual Girl Weekly," published by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation, and edited by Arthur James, is now in its eighth issue. The circulation has increased in the last two weeks to approximately 150,000 copies.

The report published in the Moving Picture World in its issue of last week, to the effect that "Our Mutual Girl Weekly" would be discontinued because of the resignation of Mr. Philip Mindil from the Mutual corporation, was incorrect.

It was also stated at that time that the Mutual would discontinue its fillers service to newspapers. This, too, is a mistake.

Preparations are being made to increase the size of "Our Mutual Girl Weekly" to from 16 to 24 pages and place it on a basis where it can compete with the best of the magazines for women. The corps of writers and artists is being reorganized, and the make-up of the weekly is being changed to meet higher class magazine requirements.

The Oubliette

A New Serial, Depicting Life in the Middle Ages, and by Bison 101 Company—It's as Convincing as a Modern Picture.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE CAMERA becomes a vertable magic mirror to us in this delightful picture of the days of Francois Villon, vagabond poet and scholar, who, between prison terms for theft was wont at rare times to sit at the tables of royal dukes and the like. Louis XI, a somewhat crazy monarch whom Scott has described so vividly in one of his novels, was king and appears in the picture which is more vivid than even that master novelist's words. Indeed, it is remarkable how convincing and like real human life these scenes from the long dead past are. Here we have men in armor behaving like real flesh and blood people, and we quite forget that we are not contemporaneous with them. The scenario is by George Bronson Howard, and is appearing in The Century Magazine as a serial. The picture (a three reel installment of which is to be released each month till it is complete) follows the story as a sort of super-illustration. This gives to students of literature a chance to compare the screen portrayal with a novelist's word pictures of the tale and times.

Scene from "The Oubliette" (Bison 101).

Scene from "The Oubliette" (Bison 101).

Among the good things found in this first installment are the backgrounds and scenes which seem not made but found; indeed, some of them were necessarily found. There are village streets with the look of actuality and interiors full of naturalness that to most will accurately reflect the times. Chimneys were not invented at that time and so there were hardly fire-places of the kind shown, but this is a very small matter and only cranks will kick about it. There is one scene in which the royal castle appears. Perhaps the producer took his people to Europe for that scene; it looks so. One can see that one or two of the village scenes were made; but they are good enough for the purpose and carry the action vigorously enough. The costumes and armor—the nondescript of Medieval romance in general—are perfectly serviceable. We can safely say that there is no obtrusive note of anachronism in the whole first installment. It has been produced in a reasonably scholarly way.

Perhaps better than the staging even is the humanity of the characters. The role of Francois Villon is taken by Murdock MacQuarrie, who has made himself look like a possible poet of the old days. Villon's face has been described as crossed this way and that way with little lines and as marred with cold, starvation, exposure and prison straw. He was a great roisterer and admirer of the sex, as was counted proper in a poet of those days, and MacQuarrie has put all this clearly, yet pleasingly, that is with a touch of refinement, in his portrayal of the poet. Then, the picture of the old king will also please. He was a comical old individual and had queer ways. Most of his subjects feared and perhaps hated him, but the spectator will take kindly to him in the picture, rest assured of that. The beautiful damsel of the poet's adventure in the inn is taken by Pauline Bush, and she has capabilities that are well recognized and is sure to win other friends by her work here. The photographs are clear and life-like.

To sum up, we find the first installment of this picture a very entertaining romantic story, full of lively and naturally produced action, well-drawn characters, clear photographs and fairly scholarly staging. We commend it highly as a first-class offering and think that it will prove a door, as it were, to better work of this kind than we have had before as a general thing. There have been other offerings dealing with these old-time, romantic days and some of them have been excellent offerings. But this seems more natural to us than any of the others we have seen. It is likely to please the many and the critical as well. Certainly, Charles Giblyn, the producer, deserves credit. May all of its reels be as good as the first three.

VERSATILE MISS BILLINGTON.

FRANCELIA BILLINGTON, who plays leads in the Reliance Mutual Movies, has attained considerable versatility in her nineteen years. In addition to her ability to portray comedy as well as emotional roles she can take her place at the camera, focus it and turn the crank with the skill and precision of an old operator.

Miss Francelia Billington.

Her interest in photography, which takes up most of her spare time and considerable of her money, was responsible for her learning to operate a motion picture camera. She not only handles the camera but she has a darkroom in her home where she develops her negatives and makes her own prints. It was a natural step from the still camera to the motion picture machine.

Miss Billington began her career as a movie actress as the result of a joke. She appeared in minor roles with a small concern in California, where she chanced to be seen by a representative of the Thanhouser Company, who caused her to be engaged. After a stay with the Thanhouser she was transferred to the Majestic and later to the Reliance.

Nature was kind to Miss Billington and she was apparently intended to play romantic roles. She is tall and lithe and her personal charms have caused her to be known as "The Beauty of the Screen." If the silent drama ever loses her it will be because she decides to use her fine lyric soprano voice. Her mother is one of the leading musicians in Los Angeles and the daughter has been trained in music by her mother.

The President's Special.

Two-Reel Edison Revival of Melodrama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Edison Company has always excelled in melodramas founded on incidents connected with the train service of our railroads, and has excelled itself in "The President's Special," especially in the exciting race between a train crowded with children and an automobile driven by Gertrude McCoy in dashing style, even if she did not make the seventy miles an hour claimed by the amiable and able-bodied publicity manager of the Edison Company. She drove her own car in this spirited chase with a skill and display of nerve that carried her into the front ranks of girls who dare and do more than the average man would attempt or accomplish under the same circumstances. If President Wilson saw this picture, and Miss McCoy called upon him immediately thereafter in person to sue for political recognition of American womanhood, our political structure might soon receive at woman's hands the housecleaning it has long needed.

Scene from "The President's Special" (Edison).

Director Charles Brabin visualized the story with the following cast:

Railroad President.....Robert Brower
Head Switchman.....Charles Ogle
His Wife.....Gertrude McCoy

Several other characters and numerous pretty children.

Scene from "The President's Special" (Edison).

Even the researchful Brower need not have been mentioned—the work falls entirely upon Brabin, Ogle and dashing Gertie. Brabin has provided a realistic scene of wreck, in double exposure, a vision of Ogle after he went to sleep at the switch and permitted the picnic train to pass on a single track, headed straight for the President's Special, coming the other way. Ogle goes mad with visions of what is about to occur, his mind picturing the wreck in all its possible horrors, to the extent that spirits of the victims arise from the wreck and denounce him. This looks like a triple exposure from in front—at any rate, it is admirably done.

Meanwhile, we are in a terrible state of suspense, until Gertie realizes that a catastrophe is impending and starts on her trusty steed, her swift little motor car, to overhaul the picnic train. She rides with such a reckless disregard for consequences that one becomes almost as anxious about the brave girl as about the children in one train and the well-fed President in another. An actual screen view is given from in front of the picnic train, speeding on to its doom and Gertie driving her car at a terrific pace on a road that parallels the track. She gains slowly, while telegraph posts flash by, and puts on a magnificent spurt just before reaching a grade crossing. She stops her car where it crosses the track in front of the approaching picnic train, and it is halted only a few paces away from her. She backs off, climbs aboard the engine and implores the engineer to back at full speed. It is she who leaps off at the switch, where Ogle has gone mad, and sidetracks the cars full of children an instant before the President's special flashes by. Miss McCoy has made a stirring melodrama—Brabin and Ogle assisting—and a brand new reputation for herself at the same time.

Comique Theater, Lynn, Mass.

IN the year 1907 Moe Mark of the Mark-Brock Amusement Enterprises with headquarters in Buffalo, N. Y., owners of the big Strand theater in Broadway, New York City, and a string of other big picture houses throughout the country and Canada, built the Comique theater in Munroe street, Lynn, Mass. This house has a seating capacity of nine hundred, and is open from 12 noon to 11 p. m. The admission prices are five and ten cents.

Mark-Comique Theater, Lynn, Mass.

A. Newhall, the man standing directly in front of the entrance to the theater in the accompanying illustration, is the manager. The Comique has been in Mr. Newhall's hands ever since it was opened and has always been a profitable investment for Mr. Mark. This house was the first moving picture theater to be started in Lynn.

According to information from Mr. Newhall, Mr. Mark is building a big picture house in Lynn to be known as the Strand. It will have a seating capacity of 2,500. He will also build in the near future, another big picture theater in Worcester, Mass., which will also be known as the Strand. This, too, will have seating accommodation for 2,500 persons. Both of these big new picture theaters will be run the same as the Strand in New York City.

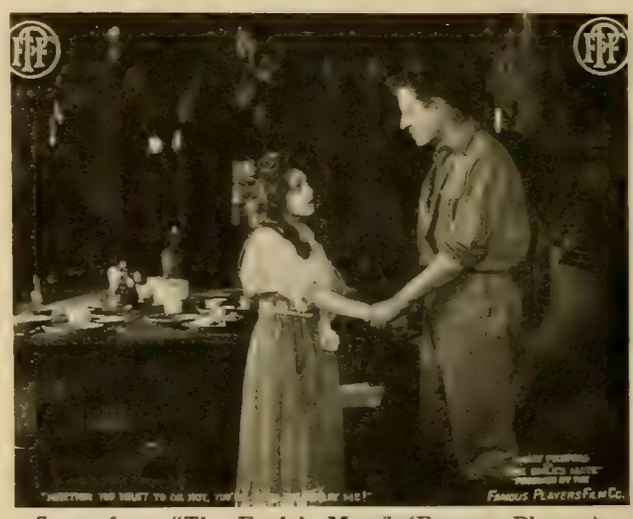
"The Eagle's Mate."

Miss Pickford Appears in a Strong Five-Part Famous Players Subject, Directed by James Kirkwood.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE first of the Famous Players productions to be shown in the Strand theater is "The Eagle's Mate," which began a week's run at the big Broadway theater on July 5. Practically every seat was filled on the afternoon of Monday, the second day of the showing, and a silent house it was throughout the five reels. It was the silence significant of close attention and deep interest. The occasion marked the release of the first "Little Mary" subject since "Tess of the Storm Country," that story of wonderful appeal. Difficult indeed was the task assigned to Producer Kirkwood that his initial picture in his new engagement should also be the immediate successor of one of Miss Pickford's greatest successes. Mr. Kirkwood has done well. He has made much of a story remarkable more for steadily maintained interest than for its ability deeply to stir the emotions; there are numbers of situations that rouse the blood and a few that reach the heart.

Scene from "The Eagle's Mate" (Famous Players).



Scene from "The Eagle's Mate" (Famous Players).

"The Eagle's Mate" is a tale of the hills, of men who make their living outside of the law; primitive men in whom rebellion at restraint seems the concomitant of the rarefied air they breathe—men inclined to make love in the same direct—and brutal—manner as that in which they make war, either on revenue officers or on their unneighborly neighbors.

Miss Pickford has the role of a gently reared girl who is taken from her home in the valley and thrown in with the moonshiners. We see her surrounded by luxury and by penury, or at least the outward evidences of it; she is equally at home in both. Miss Pickford knows how to wear clothes, but her success as an actress in nowise depends on that not negligible attribute. As Anemone Breckenridge, the niece of Sally Breckenridge, she is the center of interest throughout a story which travels rapidly. There are no subsidiary actions to suspend or divert the attention. The period of the play, aside from a brief prologue, is of a few weeks at most.

Anemone is a most lovable character. Small wonder the rough men of the hills fight over her, heedless of her assurance that such a combat is utterly pointless, as she would marry neither. It happens that later on she does accept one of them, which, of course, means only that she changes her mind. She is as strong in her affection for the young eagle which she fondles, for the dogs with which she romps, and for the horse she rides as she is in her aversion for the men by whom she is carried away to the hills.

Mr. Kirkwood as Lancer Morne, the youngster pulled out of college by his immediate family when the head of the clan is jailed, is a virile figure. He typifies the clansman who automatically cracks through the veneer of textbook civilization when the sight of his loaded rifle bears on a feudal enemy. Ida Waterman as Sally Breckinridge, the aunt and guardian of Anemone and also the aunt and benefactor of Lancer—although her neighbors are ignorant of her relation to the Mornes—finely plays her part. Robert Broderick, as the venerable head of the Mornes, is strongly cast, and so, too, is Harry C. Browne as Fisher Morne, the "heavy." There is unusual realism in the stand-up and knock-down fight between Lancer and Fisher, when the former learns of the carrying away of Anemone by his brutal cousin. The veteran Russell Bassett has the role of the Rev. Mr. Hotchkiss.

Of good situations there are many. Among these are the carefully and widely staged battles between the moonshiners and the revenue men; the scenes in the home of Sally when Fisher is brought in wounded and she is compelled to provide for him; the dialogues between Lancer and Anemone, in one of which she unexpectedly reveals a capacity for doing some fighting on her own account; the wounding of Lancer by Fisher and the denunciation by Anemone of the man who later is frustrated by the little woman in his attempt to deliver the Mornes into the hands of the law. There are lighter touches, too, as when Anemone withdraws the tray of food from the convalescent Fisher until such time as he promises to "be good"; or when Anemone, imprisoned in the Morne garret, refuses to eat the food until she sees rats going after it, and her unexpected removal of the dish from the floor and the division of its contents with the rodents.

There are many charming backgrounds, of mountain and valley. Mr. Kirkwood plainly has given much attention to the artistic side of the production, to the camera work as well as to the selection of settings.

EXCELSIOR COMPANY CELEBRATES THE 4TH.

The members of the Excelsior Company got together at their studio in Lake Placid on the evening of July 4th and provided a little comedy for some two hundred of their friends—that is, for all but about a dozen of them. The latter had been invited to attend what had been described as a "badger fight," and were among those who left the studio for a barn in an out-of-the-way place. While rules were being adopted for the combat between the badger, supposed to be caged in a barrel in the center of the floor, and a most ferocious bulldog, there was lively betting. The "pigeons" were among the most eager to get down their money. When all the currency was on the table a real officer of the law, so the story goes, swooped down and "arrested" the party. By a bit of legerdemain revolvers were located in the pockets of those detained. The chilly officials were very unsympathetic when the victims insisted they knew nothing of the weapons. It was a bad quarter of an hour for some of them before the situation was cleared up.

CONTEMPTIBLE BUSINESS ETHICS.

We are in receipt of particulars from the manager of the Alhambra Theater in Perry, New York, in regard to a "pretty raw deal" he received from a film exchange in Chicago, who are booking a "Hagenbeck-Wallace Spectacular" film. After confirming the booking in writing and advising that advertising matter was being shipped, the date was canceled by wire and three days later another house in the same town put out paper for the film. It is needless to add that no reputable exchange would be guilty of such absolutely inexcusable business practice and this case is only another proof of the advisability of doing business only with well-known exchanges of established reputation.

"The Reign of Terror."

Six Parts. Eclectic.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS six-reel feature of the Eclectic Company deals with the dreadful days of the French revolution. At the time of the opening scene the King has suffered on the scaffold, while Marie Antoinette and her children were undergoing the cruelties of imprisonment in the Conciergerie. The plot, legendary rather than historic, and therefore more pliable in the hands of the playwright, concerns itself with an attempt to liberate the unfortunate Queen. The legend itself was furnished by Alexander Dumas in his story "Le Chevalier de Maison Rouge." The story opens with the Queen in prison. The Chevalier de Maison Rouge visits his brother-in-law Dixmer, and though Dixmer is supposed to be strong for the Revolution, enlists his help in a desperate attempt to free the Queen. They gather together several of the loyalists left in Paris and dig a tunnel to the prison. The Queen in prison is subjected to the most gross insults. Her privacy is invaded by the roughest of the rough characters who are her guards and, in spite of the efforts of the gentlemanly officers in charge of the prison, she has no peace whatever. A young officer of the revolutionists is persuaded by the wife of Dixmer to get certain concessions for the Queen. One of these enables her to take a little exercise in the courtyard of the prison. On one of these walks she is presented with some flowers, one of which contains a note telling of the plans of the conspirators. This note is found by the guards and the attempt to rescue her is a failure. Not to be disappointed, the Chevalier makes a second attempt. The authorities fearing this, have the Queen moved to another prison. Dixmer and the Chevalier by a ruse overpower the warden and Dixmer's wife takes the place of the Queen in the cell. The plot seems to be going to be successful, but is spoiled by the arrival of one of the Queen's former guards. To prevent any further attempts, the tribunal orders the Queen executed. This is carried out, although the Chevalier and Dixmer make another attempt to rescue her which results in their death. The wife of Dixmer is placed in the common prison with the other prisoners. The officer who helped her to get to the Queen has fallen under suspicion and is in the same plight—under sentence of death. A friend of this officer, who has received a mortal wound and who is high in the councils of the Revolution, comes to her aid, but the plans for the flight are discovered and the unfortunate daughter of the House of Austria is sent to her doom, despite all that these loyal subjects could do for her.

Scene from "The Reign of Terror" (Eclectic).

Scene from "The Reign of Terror" (Eclectic).

The photography is fully up to the splendid standard of the Eclectic. The principal characters are well rendered, the settings are historically correct as are the costumes. Some of the senes, notably the arraignment of the Queen before the Revolutionary Tribunal, were impressive.

M. O. Penn.

DISTINGUISHED not alone as an actor of unusual dramatic ability, M. O. Penn, Pathe leading man, is a sculptor, painter and singer of very exceptional talent. While he excels, perhaps, with the brush and pallette —his landscapes and portraits being now on exhibition both in America and abroad—it is in sculpturing, his hobby, that he finds his greatest delight. Particularly striking samples of his marked genius are two splendid casts which he has just completed of the officers of the American Pathe—Mr. A. Roussel and Paul Bonvillain. Prior to these he made casts of the Pathe star, Crane Wilbur, and the well-known Pathe directors, Louis Gasnier and Frank Powell. But it was in Paris, where many of his casts are now on exhibition, that he achieved his success as a sculptor.

M. O. Penn.

He was born in the United States in the year 1870, and at the age of ten years he was sent to Paris to get his elementary schooling and commence his studies in painting. Under the tutorship of Trupheme and Besnard at the Julian Academy he progressed rapidly, and later took up sculpturing.

At the age of twenty he found it necessary to provide his own livelihood, and having an opportunity to do cabaret work at the Chat-Noir, spent his evenings there, while his days he applied to the more sober pursuit of his studies. It was not long before frequenters of the celebrated restaurant, noting the rapidly developing dramatic possibilities of the handsome young cabaret singer, began to call for him continually. At the end of the winter, Penn, longing for excitement, which he could not find in Paris, joined the French army and spent the next three years in Africa.

When he came back to the French capital, he at once took up dramatic studies in the Paris Conservatory under Sylvain, and returned to the bright lights and music of the Chat-Noir, where he made the acquaintance of Bruant, the great revolutionary singer. Thus it happened that Oscar Metenier discovered him, and appreciating his dramatic and artistic possibilities asked him to take part in a new political play which he, Metenier, was producing at the Grand Guignol. It was the beginning of Penn's dramatic career. At the end of two years he had become so accomplished that he organized a touring company, and with such headlines as "Courtline" and "Severin Mars" traveled through France, Belgium and Germany for about twelve years.

Returning to Paris, he played in the Theaters Athenee, Geinier, Sarah Bernhardt, Apollo and Olympia. During this time moving pictures had been pushing farther and farther to the front, and with the demand increasing for first-class talent Penn took up work in the silent drama, at the same time carrying his regular legitimate roles. The French house of Pathe saw in him a screen artist of unusual ability, and so it came about that he played with them for several years, taking leads in such prominent photo dramas as "Saul," "Bourgeois de Calais," "Lecollier de La Reine," "Paillasse," "L'Or," "Mort de Lincoln," and others. At his own request he was transferred to the American branch of Pathe in Jersey City.

Neff Withdraws—Pearce Elected

GREAT SURPRISE IN THE CONVENTION HALL AT DAYTON, O., WHEN THE FOUNDER OF THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION VOLUNTARILY STEPS ASIDE IN THE INTEREST OF HARMONY—M. A. PEARCE OF BALTIMORE ELECTED PRESIDENT OF M. P. E. L. OF A.

CONVENTION OPENS AUSPICIOUSLY—OVERTURES BY I. M. P. A. REPRESENTATIVES AMICABLY RECEIVED BY THE PARENT LEAGUE—NEGOTIATIONS UNDER WAY.

By JAMES S. McQUADE.

MONDAY, July 6, the first day of the fourth national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and of the second national exposition of the organization, was merely a day of preliminaries at Dayton, O. The vanguard of the visiting members of the League only had arrived, among them being the officers of the Ohio state branch and the members of the national Executive Committee.

Owing to the fact that July 4 fell on the preceding Saturday, much work remained to be done to get the exposition in opening shape. By 2:30 p. m., however, Memorial Hall, where the exposition is housed, was in readiness for the formal opening. National Secretary George H. Wiley, of Missouri, introduced Mayor Shroyer, of Dayton, who tendered the keys of the city to the exhibitors. National President M. A. Neff thanked the Mayor on behalf of the League.

The forenoon was occupied by the registration of those who had arrived and in the executive meeting of the National Committee, consisting of M. A. Neff, Orene Parker, Covington, Ky.; R. L. Macnabb, of New York; Geo. H. Wiley, of Missouri; M. E. Corey, San Francisco; W. R. Wilson, Columbus, O., and T. P. Finnegan, of Texas. The chief business of the committee during the session was the passing of a resolution made by Mr. Wiley that the National Committee should meet in executive session the seven members of the Committee of Mediation appointed by the International Motion Picture Association, at the recent convention in New York City. The time was fixed at 7:30 p.m. George H. Wiley also moved that the members of the Missouri state branch be expelled and their charter revoked, because of non-payment of dues. The motion was carried.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.

Tuesday's morning session convened at 10:30 o'clock. Divine blessing was invoked by the Rev. M. E. Wilson, of Dayton. Owing to the inability of Mayor Shroyer to attend, J. M. Schweitzer, one of Dayton's city commission, took his place. In his speech he referred to the splendid opportunities given exhibitors to form right and lasting impressions on the minds of all the people. He marveled at the fact that in a few years a big, powerful organization had been built up by exhibitors. He congratulated exhibitors on the fact that the people of the United States recognized that they are endeavoring to educate and uplift as well as to entertain, and he also accentuated the fact that exhibitors have the power to help solve vital problems of the nation.

President Neff congratulated Mr. Schweitzer on his telling remarks and asserted that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America deserves hearty recognition for what it has accomplished in the interest of the moving picture business. He spoke glowingly of Dayton's fine spirit and enterprise in recovering so rapidly from the recent flood, and conveyed the thanks of the League to the Mayor, the City Commission, officials and people of Dayton for their hearty welcome and courtesies extended.

After a roll call of officers of the National League these members were invited to the platform, as was also J. J. Rieder, former National treasurer of Jackson, Mich. The appointment of committees was next in order.

Committee on Resolutions: A. J. Diebold, Iowa; O. G. Murray, Indiana; John Ek, Wisconsin; M. E. Corey, California; William Fait, Maryland.

Committee on Credentials: T. P. Finnegan, Texas; W. C. Hubbard, New York; W. R. Wilson, Ohio; Orene Parker, Kentucky, and Dee Robinson, Illinois.

Auditing Committee: Ed Kohl, Ohio; W. W. Watts, Illinois; Mr. Goddard, California; J. J. Rieder, Michigan, and M. A. Pearce, Maryland.

Committee on Good and Welfare: John Despinet, Louisiana; August Kleist, Michigan; L. W. Brophy, Oklahoma; E. C. Glamann, Kansas, and J. M. O'Dowd, South Carolina.

Committee on Ways and Means: L. H. Ramsey, Kentucky; Tobias Keppler, New York; G. M. Luttrell, Illinois; John J. Huss, Ohio, and M. A. Sybert, West Virginia.

Press Committee: J. A. Maddox, Ohio; C. W. Gates, Minnesota; A. A. Wall, Alabama; Peter Jeup, Michigan, and Dr. William Herbst, District of Columbia.

The Convention Committee, which will recommend the place for the next national convention, was not named owing to the non-arrival of many delegates who are expected later. The reports of officers and the reading of the minutes of the last convention were postponed until the afternoon session, at the suggestion of Secretary Wiley. T. P. Finnegan then moved that a recess should be taken until the Credential Committee could make its report to the convention. On an amendment by Mr. Jeup the convention adjourned until 1:30 o'clock, as per program.

The afternoon session was opened by the calling of the names of delegates by states, as per registration with the Credential Committee. At this session it was found that sixty delegates in all were qualified to vote and that the representation from twenty states was disqualified because of non-payment of per capita tax. Much discussion was raised over the admittance of the delegation from Minnesota, only two of which were present, on the ground of the non-payment of per capita tax. The matter was finally disposed of by permitting the national vice-president of Minnesota, C. W. Gates, to participate in the deliberations.

The national secretary, George H. Wiley, then moved that it be put into the record that all national officers, meaning the president, first and second vice-presidents, secretary and treasurer, two members of the executive committee and national vice-presidents for the states, should be given the right to vote. An amendment was made that this should be done providing that membership dues had been paid up to date. The amendment was lost and the original motion was carried.

The reports of President Neff on moneys received and disbursed for the past year and of his work as president and organizer of the League were then read. After concluding his written report Mr. Neff exclaimed with much feeling: "If I got twenty thousand dollars a year I could have done no better than I have done. I have given you all that God gave me; I have given you the best I've got." Great applause greeted him at the conclusion of his remarks.

The reading of the reports of National Secretary Wiley and National Treasurer Orene Parker followed, and these, together with the president's report, were referred by motion to the auditing committee.

President Neff then asked permission to read the following telegram:

New York, July 7, 1914.

M. A. Neff, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League,
Dayton, Ohio.

Statement that you are or were at any time on pay roll of the Universal, or received any moneys or gratuities from them in any shape or manner whatsoever is unwarranted and a malicious falsehood. You can use this telegram in any manner you see fit. Wrote letter to Brandt yesterday.

CARL LAEMMLE,
President Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

The reading of the telegram was followed by general applause.

National Secretary Wiley next read some of the communications received from members of the League throughout the country on various matters. It was moved and carried that they be referred to the resolutions committee.

In this connection Mr. Wiley informed the convention that the Executive Committee of the League had met the mediation committee, appointed by the International Motion Picture Association in New York, in Memorial Hall, on Monday evening, at 7:30 o'clock. Before reading the communication received from Sam Bullock, secretary of the I. M. P. A. committee referred to, Mr. Wiley specially informed the convention that the meeting was strictly informal and not an official meeting. The communication from Mr. Bullock, bearing the date of July 6, and read to the convention, was as follows:

Report of Amalgamation Committees.

A preliminary meeting of the committee on amalgamation of the I. M. P. A. elected at the New York convention on Friday, June 12, 1914, and a similar committee representing the M. P. E. L. of A. was held at Memorial Hall on the above date.

Those present were: Messrs. M. A. Neff, Ohio; O. Parker, Kentucky; George H. Wiley, Missouri; T. P. Finnegan, Texas; R. L. Macnabb, New York; M. E. Corey, California, and Peter Jeup, Michigan. Also S. H. Trigger, New York; Sam Bullock, Ohio; F. J. Rembusch, Indiana; F. J. Herrington, Pennsylvania; W. J. Sweeny, Illinois; Judge Tugwell, California, and President Charles H. Phillips, ex-officio member of committee. Thomas Furniss of Minnesota was absent, being delayed en route.

After a general discussion of the method to be devised in order to bring the two organizations together it was decided that the I. M. P. A. members should withdraw for a conference to enable them to present some concrete propositions to work upon. An adjournment was taken for that purpose.

After a recess of thirty minutes the I. M. P. A. committee reappeared and the joint meeting then reconvened, at which time the following propositions were submitted to the joint meeting, with a recommendation that the M. P. E. L. of A. submit the propositions to the convention body for action. This was agreed to unanimously.

President M. A. Neff presided and George H. Wiley acted as secretary of the joint meeting. The resolutions submitted by Sam Bullock of Ohio were as follows:

Resolved: That this committee cannot amalgamate with any organization under the terms of the resolution by which we were elected, unless the said organization is opposed in toto to all forms of legalized censorship.

By F. J. Herrington, of Pennsylvania:

Resolved: That it be to the best interests of all concerned, that the committee of the International Motion Picture Association recommend the only method of amalgamation that can be made possible will be by the elimination of the officers of both organizations and the control of the amalgamated forces vested in a National Executive Board comprising the membership of the executive boards of both organizations.

After the reading of the communication W. R. Wilson, treasurer of the Ohio state branch of the league, moved that it be laid on the table, as it meant the elimination of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and that suspended members of the National League be admitted in the usual way. M. A. Sybert, of West Virginia, seconded the motion. After an extended discussion, which displayed a marked amicable spirit toward the suspended members of the League, in which Messrs. Phillips of Texas, Hubbard of New York, Corey of California, Rieder of Michigan, Wiley of Missouri and others engaged, Mr. Brylawski, of Washington, D. C., moved that the original motion and all the amendments thereto be laid on the table. This motion was carried. Then Mr. Brylawski moved that a committee consisting of the National Executive Committee and three delegates from the floor should form the committee empowered to meet the mediation committee of the I. M. P. A. in further conference. The motion was carried and President Neff named Messrs. Pearce, of Maryland; Brophy, of Oklahoma, and Rieder, of Michigan, as the additional members of the committee.

At this point the convention adjourned until 10 o'clock Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 8.

M. A. Neff Pulls the Big Surprise—Pearce Elected.

Before the election of national officers was taken up according to program at Wednesday's morning session, President Neff fairly stunned the convention with the announcement that he was not a candidate for re-election. Nothing more unexpected could have happened and the intense surprise it created throughout the ranks of his friends and opponents brought a hush throughout the convention hall that lasted for several minutes. His speech will afford unusual interest to readers. It is given verbatim.

Address of President M. A. Neff.

"Gentlemen: There have been a great many articles published; there have been a great many people who have talked along the line of harmony, peace and good fellowship, and there have been a great many things done within the last year to destroy the confidence of the motion picture exhibitors of the country in any organization. There have been a great many things said, kind and unkind, and it has been done in the heat of passion probably, and men more or less are given to those things when they are wrought up to a state of anger, but there is good in every man and more good in every woman, and this world was not built for people to wrangle and fuss over little things. I believe that the people of this world were created to harmonize. I don't believe that any man or men should stand in the way of any body of people or any organization. I believe that if a man is a man and holds respect for the human race and the uplift and the advancement of civilization and that he really holds at heart the things which he advocates he will never hold ambition over love for that for which he is working and laboring.

"We have never told a man, with the exception of one or two, what I expected to do here this morning and what I expect to say to you. I have served you faithfully for four years. I have done the best I could. If I have made mistakes, some of them I might be proud of and others I am not ashamed of. Because if there was a mistake made, it was made from the heart and in your interest, not in mine. Now, gentlemen, we are about to elect our officers for the coming year. Last year when the bolt came at New York, no man knows the sentiment that was in some of our souls; we did everything we could. I even called some of the boys back and asked if they had not better reconsider. And to-day some of those same people have come here hundreds of miles. Why? Because the love of the organization, I believe, is in their souls. I believe they still want to join this league and come back and be one of us. Those men must have the sentiment somewhere in their makeup or they would not travel all this distance for that co-operation or amalgamation, or whatever you may call it.

"It has been said that if certain conditions; in plain words they have said that if Mr. Neff was not elected at this convention that they would make application and come back in thirty days. I am going to test the sincerity of their remarks and leave it not only to the exhibitors of this country but to the people throughout this country. We have had a hard struggle, gentlemen; it has been no easy task, and this morning, as I see and know, you are intensely in earnest, and you are, as they say, on your toes. I have figured over this delegation. I think I have every man placed right, because when I am in doubt I take the safe side and never count on the doubt. Now, ladies and gentlemen, as I said before, I have served you and did the best I could for you. I want to see peace; I want to see harmony and good-fellowship, and I hope that we will get together in a manner and way that will bring peace, harmony and good-fellowship to every exhibitor in this country. (Loud applause.) First, I want to thank the states that were so kind as to instruct their delegations for me, and right here I release them from every instruction, and you are free in this convention to vote for any man that you desire and for whom you desire.

"And I say again that I will come before this convention, for the sake of harmony, for the sake of peace and good-fellowship, and I will decline any nomination and my name will not be presented. (Loud cheering.) If in the future, gentlemen, you find that you need my services you will find Ohio standing as solid as the rock of Gibraltar, and M. A. Neff will be at your service, and I will do everything possible that I can to advance your interest in the future as I have in the past. I want to say in conclusion that I appreciate the friendship of all of you and especially my Ohio brethren; they have stood stolidly behind me in every contest. They have traveled thousands of miles to support me, and only last night they indorsed me unanimously, and there is not a man in the delegation from Ohio that knew what I was going to say when I got up here because I have been studying. I studied long last night and studied this matter over and thrashed it out myself, and I have come to the conclusion that, as one gentleman said yesterday, if new blood will add strength and bring harmony to this organization, I stand for the new blood. I stand for anything that is honest and will advance the interests of the motion picture exhibitor and the entire industry, and if I have created any enemies in this line of business, if there has anything been done, it has been, ladies and gentlemen, in the defense of the motion picture exhibitor, and probably I have offended those whose interests were not yours.

"Now, gentlemen, I think I have explained it thoroughly. I will not be a candidate for re-election and there is no

(Continued on page 446.)

Honor the Pioneers.

A Brief Sketch of One of Them—Harry Schwalbe Looms Large in the Film World of the Quaker City—Intelligent Aid to the Exhibitor One of the Secrets of His Success.

By W. Stephen Bush.

MANY, perhaps most of the veterans of the motion picture industry, are distinctly young. The great and celebrated Trinity of "Pops" even are fatherly in manners and experience rather than in years. Harry Schwalbe, than whom no man is better known in the exchange business, was comfortably on the right side of thirty when the motion picture attracted him. He clearly perceived its possibilities when the rest of his native city of Philadelphia indulged in its historic somnolence.

Harry Schwalbe had inherited a love of music and the skill and talent generally coincident thereto. If these alone had been his natural gifts he might today be the distinguished leader of a band, but his name would not be a household word among film men in that large and populous section of our country which is in commerce and travel and in the newspaper zones more or less tributary to the ancient city of William Penn. Harry Schwalbe had a keen eye for what is commercially important and profitable in human amusements generally. He had the ability, strangely rare among renters and dealers in films, of telling a good picture from a bad one. Rarest of all he knew how to detach himself from his own views and tastes and judge of the picture from the viewpoint of the ordinary motion picture audience. Few men appreciate more soundly than he does what is beautiful in a picture or in a painting or in a piece of statuary, but he never sought to make the general public share his views; he was always willing to let the public do its own picking and choosing and to cater to the public taste rather than attempt to mold it. All this sounds like the definition of a real showman and that is exactly what Harry Schwalbe is; practical to the core, a single-minded believer in facts and figures and realities only; thoroughly familiar with the actual needs of the exhibitors and brimful of knowledge how to help the exhibitor.

Harry Schwalbe.

He learned the exhibitor's end of the motion picture industry away back in 1905 and 1906 when he ran a little show out in the industrial section of Kensington. His little theater, if theater it could be called, seated about five dozen people and the show consisted of a thousand feet or less, generally less. The show was continuous and so was the attendance. The admission was five cents and a crowded house meant three dollars. As the show only lasted about fifteen minutes and ran from early morn to late at night it was nothing unusual to take in more than a hundred dollars per day. The little place in Kensington was soon enlarged and it is still running at this hour, though now holding fifteen times as many patrons as it held in the beginning. Other places, all of them of the store room variety, were acquired by Mr. Schwalbe, who shortly after his entrance into the exhibiting ranks associated with him in business Mr. James McCaffrey, a musician of recognized talent and like himself a practical showman of experience. Schwalbe and McCaffrey soon realized that the renting of films to exhibitors would be the next big development in the industry and having but moderate means at their disposal they started a cooperative plan for the purchase and distribution of films inviting exhibitors to come in and share in the benefits. They received scant encouragement. People whom they approached thought the pictures were but a fad doomed to pass away sooner or later like any other popular craze. Everybody was willing to come in but anxious to wait. Straining their own resources to the utmost and giving their days and nights to the proposition in which they had unshakable faith, the two young men ceased looking for other help and won out. If ever success was achieved by hard work and conscientious service without any admixture of luck whatever it was this same success of Schwalbe and McCaffrey. The new concern called itself the Electric Theater Supply Company and opened an office first in Twelfth street and then in a little basement at 47 North 10th street. They soon established an enviable reputation for fair dealing and expert knowledge. Lubin, Edison and Pathe, but Pathe more than all the others combined, furnished the greatest share of films in the days of 1907 and 1908 and the Electric Theater Supply Company bought the entire output. Exchanges sprang up in Philadelphia and in Baltimore and Pittsburgh, but the Electric Theater Supply Company had the advantage of the start and they never relinquished their lead. Schwalbe and McCaffrey were active and influential members of the old Film Service Association at a time when the exchanges and not the manufacturers dominated the market. Then came the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company, causing a profound change in conditions, which is felt even at this day. The formation of the M. P. P. Co. found the Electric Supply Company at the flood-tide of its prosperity; the old cramped quarters in the basement had been changed for the whole building across the street, at 44 North 10th street. A three-story modern building scarcely sufficed to accommodate the wonderfully growing business of the Electric Theater Supply Company. The company was licensed by the M. P. P. C. and now spread over new territory going as far south as Tennessee, as far north as Trenton, as far west as the gates of Pittsburgh. It supplied Eastern and Central Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia, Virginia, and West Virginia and had numerous patrons in all portions of the South.

It is difficult to induce Mr. Schwalbe to speak. He is strictly a man of deeds. Very thorough and painstaking in the collection of his facts, with an easy grasp of figures and conditions, he delights in action and rejoices in achievement. The secret of his success and his popularity is not as well known as it should be. A man who builds up a business from the humblest beginning into a concern of immense size and corresponding prosperity is well worthy of attention. His methods are not only interesting but must be useful and instructive to others engaged in the same line of endeavor. When the General Film Company was formed and began to absorb the exchanges of the country the Electric Theater Supply Company shared the fate of the other exchanges, but Mr. Schwalbe remained not only in charge of the old exchange, but as the manager of the General Film Company in the Philadelphia district he entered upon an enlarged field and greater activities. He held this position for about four years and only resigned recently to take a long-needed rest and to embark in a new venture, which intends to exploit feature films of quality. To this new venture he has given the old corporate name Electric Theater Supply Company, an indication of the stability of his business methods, which deserves more than passing notice.

Not from his statements but from my own observations as a daily visitor at the famous "44 North 10th" I know the secret of Mr. Schwalbe's success. From the very beginning he made the exhibitor depend on him for counsel and co-operation. The exhibitor's troubles were Mr. Schwalbe's troubles. Long before he left the employ of the General Film Company Mr. Schwalbe had become far more than a mere manager and distributor of films. He knew not only every inch of the territory which he served, but he knew about 95 per cent. of the exhibitors and he was thoroughly familiar with the industrial conditions of the various localities, with theaters and their histories and managements. He knew what the exhibitor in a certain mining town needed and what the exhibitor in the summer resort had to have. In many cases he knew the needs of the exhibitor far more accurately than the exhibitor himself. Of course his sympathy with the exhibitor and his willingness and ability to help practically soon became known in the exhibiting ranks. As a result Harry Schwalbe was besieged by exhibitors with problems and troubles. His office in the General Film headquarters on Vine street often looked like the consultation room of a lawyer or doctor with a vast practice. He acted as if his time and his knowledge belonged entirely to the men whom he served with films. Intensely loyal to his employer's interests he always proceeded on the theory that the interests of the exhibitor were likewise the interests of his company and that the two ought to be harmonized in an intelligent practical way. As a result the business in Philadelphia grew apace and showed pleasant profits even in times of general depression. I have seen scores upon scores of exhibitors from all points in his territory walk into the office of Mr. Schwalbe perplexed and worried and come out with new faith and new courage. One might truly say that Atlas-like he carried the film burdens of his whole district on his shoulders.

Neither he nor any man could have sustained such a task very long but for a remarkable ability to "play while you play." The thousands who have known him will testify that "he worked while he worked." His friends will testify to the ease with which he can shake off all cares and thoughts of business and enter into his play with all the happy exuberance of a boy. He loves the water and as commander of the good ship "The Buster" he and his crew have achieved fame along the Chesapeake Bay and all its tributary waters.

British Notes.

(Special Correspondence to the World.)

Samuel S. Hutchison, the president of the Flying A Company of Chicago, has arrived in this country and will proceed from London to the Continent before returning to the States.

* * *

Charles Urban is making a valiant attempt to reform the company which recently held the Kinemacolor rights. It will be remembered that this concern has figured heavily in the law courts during the past year upon matters of vital importance to its patent rights.

* * *

The newest idea, and one which has incidentally proved popular for newspaper competitors in this country, has been exploited by an illustrated daily. A prize of $100 was offered for the best criticism of the film entitled "The Midnight Marriage." Most of the competitors resided in industrial districts and extracts from their contributions give a good idea of the type of film still popular in working-class neighborhoods. "Comedy is out of place in film melodrama," argues one amateur critic, while another avers that "good plays are always an education and should be brought within the reach of the poorest by being filmed." Several of them held that cowboy stories and animal pictures were still liked best.

* * *

Commencing in the autumn the English office of the Kalem Company is to market a series of self-contained pictures revolving around the adventures of one Nina, with Miss Alice Joyce in the lead. Arrangements have been made with a weekly paper to accompany each release with the plot of the picture in story form.

* * *

Herbert Ponting's pictures of the Capt. Scott Antarctic expedition attracted Mr. Roosevelt during his recent flying visit to London. After seeing the pictures Mr. Roosevelt communicated to Mr. Pouting that he did not know when he had seen any exhibition which impressed him more, and he would not, on any account, have missed seeing them.

* * *

The newest recruit to filmdom from the variety stage is Geo. Robey. He has written a comedy entitled "The Amateur Anarchist," in which he takes the leading role.

* * *

Horace G. Plimpton, manager of negative production of the Edison Company, sailed for New York last week.

* * *

It is announced this week that the J. L. Lasky Company will in future place the selling and renting of its productions in Great Britain entirely in the hands of J. D. Walker.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

HOLLAND BUYS SAN DIEGO THEATERS.

Charles A. de Lisle Holland has recently bought the Queen and Exposition theaters in San Diego, Cal., and has changed the names to the Parisian and the Illusion. It is understood the houses will hereafter use the Mutual program.

David Horsley to do One-Reel Comedies.

Manufacturer and Producer Will Return to Active Studio Work at Bayonne and Picturize Drawings of Popular Cartoonists.

David Horsley announces that he will produce seven one-reel comedies each week and distribute them through twenty-nine especially organized offices, covering the United States, Canada, Europe and South America.

"I have been working on this plan for the last six months," said Mr. Horsley when interviewed at his big glass and concrete studio in Bayonne, N. J. "The big feature as a steady diet was bound to go. Even if the grand army of 'regular' 5 and 10 cent exhibitors had been able to stand the expense, the falling off of public patronage would have forced the long film out. The very good—the unusual—feature will always find a profitable market with this class, and with these principles in mind I shall release from time to time a multiple which I hope will live up to that much hackneyed and high-sounding phrase, 'A Film Masterpiece.'

David Horsley.

"My new plans are already completed and the work of production and office organization is well under way, and the first releases will be made in the early fall.

"I have many original comedies, secured from especially engaged writers, but the basis of my plan is the famous comic series which have been running in the great daily newspapers. I have placed under contract the pick of the celebrated newspaper humorists and comic artists—as many as I can possibly use—for the seven comedies a week. I have also under contract several directors who are 'specialists' and whose names and demonstrated ability will insure the successful working out of the scenarios. The actors are being picked from the ranks of the trained 'screen' comedians, and from a certain class of theatrical entertainers whose line of work fits them peculiarly for broad, yet artistic motion picture comedies.

"The distribution of these comedies will be made through twenty-six especially equipped offices in the principal cities of the United States and Canada, and three in Europe. I am also going after the South American trade in a serious manner and on a scale of magnitude which has never before been attempted.

"I am after the best of the big exchange managers and have a scheme of operation which will make their work more than usually profitable. All of the work of production will be made in the Centaur Film Company's studio in Bayonne."

Mr. Horsley was the founder of the Centaur Film Company, the oldest in the Independent ranks.

"The Devil's Eye."

Apex Four-Part Thriller Is Filled With Astonishing "Stunts"—Would Give Ringlets to Wooden Indian.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IN this kind of picture there is apt to be a long and exciting chase. The producer can use up more stunts in a chase than by any other method. In this particular picture, "The Devil's Eye," there is one of the most startling series of death-defying, hair-curling, make-you-jump-from-the-seat kind of performances that this reviewer has yet seen. They are so new and so absolutely unexpected that, with all their ears-pricked-up and mouth-agape compulsion, they have a quality so like comedy that they make you laugh. This makes them all the better; it's high praise of them.

If you were watching a man suspected of a crime and chased by a group of soldiers on horses and saw him drive, horse, harness and wagon, over a high bridge; saw the frantic beast kicking the wagon to splinters in the deep water and apparently kicking the man and then saw a derrick send down its hook and catching on the harness, draw both horse and his rider out and set them safely on the bank, you would have to laugh, we think.

Scene from "The Devil's Eye" (Apex).

The hero of this picture, after going though this incident, is riding on and still pursued. His horse stumbles or something and the rider goes off head first and lands right down under the galloping horse's feet. We see him trampled and he lies still. "He's badly hurt," we say and think that he has taken one too many chances. The leading pursuer comes up and dismounting bends down over the prostrate form. Quick as a wink it comes to life and with a bound is seated on the soldier's mount and is off again. We have seen this done before and done well, but not quite so unexpectedly done as in this instance. The laugh that follows it is half astonishment and half relief at the evidence that the player who took the chance is whole of wind and limb. How he managed it is wholly beyond this reviewer.

At the end, and by way of last climax, we see a man climbing out on a rope strung high up between two brick towers. His object is to get the priceless diamond, "The Devil's Eye." The villain has handcuffs on, but has been left in his tower where all of his electric apparatus is. He works over to one side and pulls down "the fatal switch." Then, as though earth trembled, the towers bend in that stiff way that towers have when falling and the bricks and dust are spread around their bases. The hero has now proved that he did not steal the fabulously valuable diamond. The pretty countess who loves him and who has been of so much assistance to him in clearing himself of suspicion can now marry him and they begin the happy ending.

There are two rather startling X-ray dresses in the picture's early scenes that some may disapprove of. There is nothing else at all objectionable in it. The photographs are clear and we count the picture as a very desirable offering for most places.

ITALA WINS CABIRIA CASE.

Mr. Justice Greenbaum on Wednesday, July 1, 1914, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, in New York County, denied plaintiff's motion for an injunction to prohibit the exhibition of the motion picture, "Cabiria," within the States of New York and Northern New Jersey.

The motion was made in an action in which Morris Brodkin is plaintiff, and Harry R. Raver, Carlo Sciamengo, and Itala Film Co. of America are defendants.

Graham & Stevenson appeared for the defendants and Lewis Werner for plaintiff. The decision:

By MR. JUSTICE GREENBAUM.

Brodkin v. Itala Film Co of Am. et al.—The insertion of the word "regular" before the word "releases" and the omission of the words describing the size and number of reels intended to be covered from the form of the contract originally tendered to the plaintiff create an ambiguity in the agreement and permit the introduction of parol evidence as to the sense in which the word "regular" was used by the parties. The negotiations leading up to the execution of the contract, as sworn to in the affidavits presented by the respective parties, present a serious conflict upon the scope of the words "regular releases." The contention of the defendants is strongly fortified by numerous affidavits of persons of extensive experience in the motion picture business and by the character of the business conducted by the plaintiff at the time that the contract was entered into. The plaintiff admits that "the composition 'Cabiria' is one of the most expensive and remarkable compositions for motion pictures ever produced." It is thus fairly arguable that such a production was not intended by the parties to come within the designation of "regular releases." Indeed, no force can be given to such words if it were held to include such a presentation as "Cabiria" is admited to be. Without intending by the foregoing to indicate any view upon the ultimate merits of the controversy, I am of opinion that, upon the papers presented, the right of the plaintiff to the relief sought is not sufficiently clear to justify the granting of an injunction. Motion for injunction denied.

JOHN W. GREY.

ONE of the factors in keeping the public posted on the merits of Universal productions is John W. Grey. It will be a year in August since Mr. Grey took up his work at 1600 Broadway, and in that time he has made rapid progress. His departments are, among others, that of special features, the big U's big stuff, for one thing. Among the subjects he has booked are "Traffic in Souls," the powerful melodrama which made a bundle of money and started in its wake such a mob of impossible would-be imitators. Other features marketed under the supervision of Mr. Grey were "Samson," "War in the Clouds," "The Spy," "Lucille Love," "Trey o' Hearts," "Sky Monster" and "Washington at Valley Forge." He also directs the department of newspaper publicity, which includes syndicates and special stories.

John W. Grey.

Mr. Grey has had wide experience in publicity work. Among his earlier connections were the Palmer & Singer Motor Car Company as sales manager, the E. R. Thomas Motor Car Company as advertising manager of the eastern district, the Evening Mail as motor truck editor, the Frank Seaman Advertising Agency, and he has also had his own agency. He is one of the few film men who can afford to live in New Rochelle, but this does not detract from his even-tempered democratic geniality. He is always pleasant to meet, and has a personality that is forceful without being overpushful.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

SOME of the "movie boys" gathered at a well-known rendezvous frequented by players and representatives of other branches of business were discussing the good and ill fortunes in the field the other night when one of them made particular reference to an expert in the mechanical branch of the producing line, remarking that the advancement the expert had made from the salary standpoint was little less than phenomenal. In spite of his recognized ability, his most ardent admirers were surprised that he should attain such a high position on a salary list. The "boys" were trying to reach some satisfactory conclusion as to why and how some people are so highly favored. Some said it was influence; others thought it unusual recognition of merit; "it's their luck," others declared. To the surprise of all in the party the expert made his appearance. "Why," exclaimed one, "I though you were in ——. What brings you back? Nothing wrong, I hope?"

* * *

What the expert told them is worth repeating here. It brought up a discussion of the subject of contract between employer and employee and enlightened them as to how easily contracts may be broken if they become obnoxious to the employer, regardless of the legal skill behind the framing on either side. Let the expert tell it. "Well," said he, "I am here because written contracts are just as reliable as civil service rules. I never took much stock in what I used to hear of how people could be ousted from government positions if their scalps were wanted, whether or not they were under civil service appointment, but I have changed my mind.

* * *

"Before I would give up my former job and go with the people who were making overtures to me I insisted upon a contract for a certain term. They were offering me double what I was getting and it made me suspicious. I wanted an iron-clad, double-riveted affair, and when they readily agreed, I must confess, I sought the secrecy of my boudoir and proudly viewed my chest expansion. In due time I left New York for my new job and had carefully stowed away in my pocket a contract which my lawyer said was as good as a government bond. 'You've got 'em bound and gagged,' he said. 'Keep the work up to your standard and you will be good for the full four years. If they break it you will have no trouble collecting.' Boys, if I had the full salary for the term in my hands before starting I could not have left here with more confidence.

* * *

"Well, things went along fine for several weeks. There was no complaint on either side. But when receiving my salary one Saturday an officer of the company informed me that business conditions did not warrant the expenses they were under and asked if I would consent to a reduction in salary. Naturally I was disagreeably surprised and called attention to the fact that I did not seek the position and they had readily agreed to all the conditions I had imposed, and the amount of salary was fixed upon their own initiative. It was finally agreed that a week's consideration be taken.

* * *

"Up to that time the relations between us had been of a most cordial character, but there was a sudden change. It seemed that every conceivable word and action was put forward to make my position as unpleasant as possible. Nothing more was said about a decrease in salary. I saw the plan was to let the contract run, but to make it as hard as possible for me to keep my end up. I decided to stick. There was no two-week clause in the contract and my work was above reproach, so I made up my mind that any change should come from them with full payment for the term. All this time I was under legal advice and knew what I was doing. I had them beaten to a frazzle. Compromise! not a bit of it. Didn't my lawyer say I had as good as a government bond?

* * *

"Ha, ha! say, boys, its rough lines; but I have to laugh when I think of what followed. There were about three weeks of high-grade persecution when suddenly the demeanor of everybody toward me changed. Compliments on the work I was turning out flowed in from all sides. I was the best that ever happened and everybody was so pleased that the little hitch over salary had not led to my indignant resignation. My conservatism and manly spirit in standing for my rights had won general admiration.

* * *

"One night I went out and made arrangements for a supper so I could have the heads of all the departments present and tell them how much I appreciated their kindness to me and how earnestly I would work so that I might continue to enjoy their co-operation and good will. It was a great event, and I spared no expense to make it one of the most enjoyable in my career.

* * *

"All during the following week I was a hero with my fellow-workers and members of the company were delightfully pleasant when I met them. What a proud and happy man I was!

* * *

"On the succeeding Saturday I was most agreeably surprised at finding a ten dollar increase in my salary. Boys, my heart was touched and I could not get to an officer of the company too quick to express my gratitude. The money was a mere trifle. It was the compliment paid to me.

* * *

"Hold on, boys! Don't cheer and applaud. You feel as I felt, but not as I feel now. Upon the close of the following week I received my regular salary, the ten dollar increase and—notice that as I had broken my contract, my services were no longer required. Can you beat it?

* * *

"Yes, they gave me the raise voluntarily, but my lawyer told me I consummated the breach of contract by retaining the additional money. I should have returned it at once with the statement that my contract only called for so much and I was satisfied with that amount. But they jollied me along so well after they found they could not drive me out that they completely disarmed me of all suspicion, and that is why I am here.

* * *

"And now, my good fellow 'movie boys,'" continued the expert, "let me tell you I have given my experience as a warning to all of you to beware of the tempter. The next time I get a good job with a salary within reason a steam derrick will not raise me out of it. If I had remained where I was I would still be on velvet and the good (?) fellows who made me a king for a week would still be looking for what they got from me. No, I was not twenty dollars ahead on the last two weeks. The supper cost me more than that. Now, laugh. Funny, isn't it?"

* * *

With the approach of the Fourth of July out-door exhibitors looked for a change of weather conditions that would materially increase their receipts, but unfortunately there has been bitter disappointment. Motion picture exhibitors are not the sole sufferers. Bitter complaints come in from all quarters, particularly park owners and others with out-door amusements at the seaside. It is said to be the worst season in years. One man at Coney Island who has always been liberal in expenditure upon meals between shows was observed standing at a bar one evening with a sandwich in one hand and a glass of beer in the other. A friend jokingly asked if he was cutting down expenses. "You bet," he replied. "With seventeen hundred dollars to the bad thus far, and July not here, I have to cut down." While the deficit may have been somewhat exaggerated, it cannot be denied that out-door amusements have been hit hard up to date. It is said Coney Island was visited by 250,000 people on the Fourth of July, but they kept moving to keep warm.

* * *

The airdome season in this vicinity has not sufficiently developed to warrant a prediction as to what degree of success will attend the places this year. For the same period last year that the parks and other out-door places have been open this year the business was much better. This has, in a great measure, been due to the unusually low temperature in the evenings. During one day this month the thermometer registered the lowest in over thirty-four years, and on another day the twenty-eight year record was broken. Still the business has been pretty fair. None of the managers report a big balance on the business for the month, but nearly all of them are very confident of results during July and August. All agree that the pictures are not to blame and the places that have not been making money can charge the deficit to the weather alone.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

Moving Pictures First Came from an American University.

THE Leland Stanford University claims to be the first to in any way see the possibility of the moving picture. Leland Stanford spent over $50,000 in its development and was the pioneer of the present movement, according to the curator of the Stanford museum, Mr. Harry C. Peterson, in an address before the California Library Association in San Diego recently, among other things he said: "The first motion pictures were taken to show the actions of a horse's legs when running or trotting, over thirty years ago. Twenty-four cameras were set in a row and strings attached to the shutters were stretched across the track. As the horse ran over the track he broke each string, causing the shutter of each camera to open and close. It was from that beginning that the great motion picture industry of today started. It is interesting to note that the same shutter used long ago is still used on motion picture cameras. After all experiments of later days, a better one has not been found."

After describing the great growth of the moving picture industry, with which every reader is familiar, he proceeded to speak of the importance of filming all the famous and historical missions of California; he said "Missions are an asset to all California; they are the first points that Easterners and Europeans want to see. We are trying to get motion picture producers to bring out more plays in which the missions figure as a background. The makers are willing but find suitable plays hard to obtain, if they are to be worked out to contain a certain amount of historical interest. I have made a careful study of the subject and I find that tourists want to see the missions in photoplays, while we also want support for the preservation in pictures at least of these important crumbling buildings." No one will deny that the above claim to the pioneer work of Leland Stanford is well founded, and while many will be glad of this American beginning, others will be also glad that this beginning was in connection with an educational institution.

Widespread Preparations for Educational Work.

The work of educational kinematography is moving along new lines in a way which insures more promising results. For some time it seemed that the production of educational pictures might become extremely limited; indeed, some of the big makers had already curtailed their efforts in that direction. Everyone interested knew that this was because the right kind of appreciative efforts had not been accorded the work already done, and this in turn again was because the great work of the universal adoption of the moving picture as an educative force was one which would have to be taken up in a serious manner, with deliberate preparation by existing authorities, and with other authorities which would have to be brought into existence for that express purpose; all this is now forthcoming.

It would almost seem that in all parts of the educational world at once the spirit of the educational picture was animating the proper and necessary efforts for the desired results. The great number of organizations of good and strong men which are gathering together in this country and in Europe for the very purpose of exploiting the educational pictures in all the various branches is almost perplexing on account of their number and the nature of their individual ideas and purposes. Leading men in all the higher walks of life are joining these organizations for the furtherance of that educative purpose with which they are most nearly and naturally associated with, such as schools, churches, social, economic and commercial and scientific. Perhaps one of the best indications of assured success is found in the fact that in many of these organizations, men of wealth, title, scholarship and legislative associations are among the most interested; men who have nothing to gain in either a scholastic or commercial sense, showing that their one object is the underlying value which they are convinced lies with the educational picture. Again, these organizations are not founded upon a commercial but an educative basis, so that their success is to be measured by results and not profits, and educational results are the only ones sought for.

All Along the Line.

A structure referred to by educators of note as a school building without an equal, in the state of California, in the careful manner in which it has been designed, and the completeness of its equipment has just been dedicated to the cause of education in San Jose, Cal. The "safety first" idea prevailed, and then the moving-picture equipment with associate advantages make this imposing building one of those on the highest plane of educational advancement in America. These advantages are also to be used in making the building a great civic center and lecture bureau which will be of benefit to the whole community, making what used to be a simple school house the very heart of the highest possible educational advancement for the benefit of all ages and classes; any community is not only richly provided for under such conditions, but it seems to possess everything that present-day advances has to give.

"A Boy and the Law."

This photoplay, the scenario for which was written by Judge Willis Brown, of the Parental Court of Salt Lake City, is the result of a challenge by moving picture people of the East. It was maintained that the kind of pictures Judge Brown advocated could not be produced with enough of a "punch" to them to escape being classed purely and simply as "Sunday-school pictures," and would fail of interest to many people. Judge Brown is the founder of "Boyville," a school community for boys in Salt Lake City, together with another in Michigan.

The laudable object of preventing the making of criminals out of boys is the noble desire of Judge Brown and his work. The play he has written covers five films and is drawn from actual experiences. Willie Eckstein, the leading character, is a very real person, and the story is woven around him. He was driven from Russia after having been jailed there for connection with an anarchist society which he had joined after his father had been killed by the drunken Cossacks. He came to America with the idea that the law is an oppressor and, as a newsboy very soon got into Judge Brown's court. It was to prevent the making of criminals of just such boys that the judge induced some women to purchase the farm which became "Boyville" and over which this same Willie Eckstein became the first—mayor; the prosperity and honesty of the boys together with the inculcation of true ideas of law in place of the perverted ones is shown in the working out of the story. The inbred hatred of law through a misinterpretation by means of oppression is changed to that respect which Judge Brown successfully teaches that true liberty is right when it does not interfere with the rights of others. The film is highly commended by those Jews who were acquainted with the boy's parents and circumstances in Russia, and the censors, who were all persons in high positions, regarded the objects and results of the pictures very highly.

Vocational Education with Pictures.

The question of vocational education is one which is now being of necessity considered by those who are compelled to take up the question of juvenile control. The Bureau of Commercial Economics, with headquarters in Philadelphia, is looking to the moving picture to solve one of the problems of practical and technical education. In commendation of the work of the bureau Dr. Eliot, President emeritus of Harvard, says it reminds him of what Benjamin Franklin's father did for his son who was deciding upon the choice of a trade. The father took the boy about Boston and showed him work going on in as many trades as were then represented in the little town; and it was only after seeing all of them that the son decided to be a printer. This is the idea involved in the bureau's plan of practical education and vocational suggestion. The work is maintained by endowment funds and annuities and will be carried on through schools, public institutions, settlement-houses, missions, parks, play grounds and similar public centers; in no instance will there be any charge for the service.

Doings at Los Angeles.

JOHN BRENNAN is again at Santa Monica, having made arrangements with the main office to open the little beach studio as a comedy plant. He will turn out only comedies, and some good work may be expected from the versatile John E.

* * *

Horkheimer Brothers, makers of Balboa features, are negotiating now for the purchase of acreage near their present studio. They contemplate spending $200,000 in building an elegant new plant which will be larger and more permanent than the already large studio and plant that they now are using.

* * *

Director Hunt is putting on a unique play at the Broncho studio in the canyon. "The Village 'Neath the Sea" is the title, and it is a pretty story of Indian love and legend. Tsura Aoki, the pretty Japanese leading woman and Sessue Hayakawa, also a native of Nippon, play the leading parts, being made up as Indians, and they are good in this. Some clever trick photography shows an Indian village under the sea.

* * *

Wilfred Lucas and his company have gone up into the mountains to get some high pictures for a series. There were three machines and a motor truck loaded with players. At the Universal studio Murdock MacQuarrie and Pauline Bush are working hard in "Francois Villon," a new series. The former is seen in the part of Villon, which is a good one.

* * *

One of the finest theater buildings in the residential district is the Empire theater at Pico and Hoover streets. The building is all of brick, with ornamental and fancy front. It will be open about the 15th of July.

* * *

Kenneth Baum, son of the head of the Oz Film Co., took unto himself a bride, Miss Dorothy Duce, of Chicago. The ceremony was performed at the Baum home on Cherokee avenue. The charming bride is the daughter of Herbert Duce, editor of the Billboard. Both fathers are well-known writers.

* * *

Director West, of the Broncho camp, has been working in Los Angeles this month and has finished some good animal pictures. Gladys Brockwell played the leading part, she being the only woman in the picture.

* * *

The Oz Co. has started work in earnest. The other day it did some big exteriors in a forest, and Louis Gottschalk, who composes music as the film is made, had his piano moved out into the woods, and played with the camera turning near him. Here were thirty dancing girls who kept time to his music. There was a large castle, rocks, and other props used in the real forest scene. This is a part of the first production of the fairy tales.

* * *

Tom Nash has just completed his first three reel animal feature at Bairdstown. It is entitled "The Mysterious Man of the Jungle" and is a real thriller. He is to start another multiple reeler in the well-equipped new studios.

* * *

There is hardly anyone left around the Albuquerque studios, as everyone has gone to Catalina Island to be in a three reel sea picture. The film is to show many scenes of real typical sea life.

* * *

"Lucille Love" is completed. The last of the reels has been shipped and Francis Ford has departed for a visit with his folks back in Maine. Grace Cunard has left for Ohio and New York to see her people also.

* * *

Saturday night (at the Photoplayers' Club) was laid aside for the ladies and they certainly were there, and the evening was voted a huge success. The star entertainer of the evening was Myrtle Stedman of Bosworth's, who sang some good songs. The newly organized glee club also gave a few numbers which were appreciated.

* * *

W. C. Cabanne is putting on "Down by the Sounding Sea," a real old ocean story featuring Robert Harron, Wallace Reid, and Mae Gaston. The story is a romantic one, and in it is a realistic shipwreck which puts in thrills. The Mutual is always getting away with some big stuff anyway. "The Mystery of the Hindu Image" from the machine of Frank Woods, is being produced by Jack O'Brien. It is a baffling murder story with plenty of detectives and thrills.

* * *

J. P. MacGowan and Helen Holmes have completed an oil picture for Kalem. They went to Fullerton, where the oil derricks are located, and the dainty Helen is seen in overalls. One of the large gushers is seen spouting many hundred barrels of oil. The picture is a sort of new one, and is good.

* * *

Director Barker, W. S. Hart, and the rest of the company of Broncho players who are working in "The Two Gun Men" have gone to the Grand Canyon to do some scenes in the big western picture featuring Mr. Hart. About twenty in all went to the Arizona scenic canyon.

* * *

Lloyd Ingraham is now directing Edna Maison at the Universal. Ray Gallagher is playing opposite her. They will do some high-class comedies.

* * *

The Cafe Nat Goodwin, run by the famous actor, Nat C. Goodwin, is planning to inaugurate a special Photoplayers' night to be held once a month. The cafe is a beautiful one, on a pier over the sea. Many local companies have used the gorgeous rooms as settings for society films.

* * *

Thomas H. Ince, famous as general manager of the N. Y. M. P. Co., is having built a complete Japanese village and garden at his large home in Hollywood. He expects to use it for scenes in pictures supposed to be laid in the flowery kingdom.

* * *

Leo Carrillo, a famous Orpheum entertainer who was here on his vacation, rescued one of the Indians at the Broncho camp and forthwith was taken into the tribe with all pomp and ceremony attending the initiation. A barbecue followed and the new paleface brave was the honored guest. He left recently for a tour of the Orpheum circuit abroad.

* * *

"Vengeance of Gold" is the name of a real western film being made at the Mutual studios. A panic-stricken burro and a maddened rattler are used to good advantage in the picture, touching off the western atmosphere.

* * *

The Feature Film Co. opened its studio on the Venice pier the evening of the 26th. Many invitations were sent out and a large number of people were present to see the pictures made. A film was exposed in the night, the scenes being lighted by electric lamps. They have already made several pictures in and around this city.

* * *

David Hartford, who directed for the Albuquerque and Robbins companies, has rejoined the legitimate stage and is with the Morosco forces here.

* * *

Every Friday night the Ocean Park band has a special concert, and the Vitagraph people directed the musicians last week. George Kunkle played two good numbers. He was followed by Anne Schaefer, Margaret Gibson, Jane Novak, Stephen Smith, Jr., and several other members of the western studio. The crowds are nearly doubled when the moving picture people get up and lead the band.

* * *

The second number of the Script, the official paper of the Photoplay Authors' League is out, and it is a good number, being full of interesting articles from the typewriters of many local writers. The league is certainly doing a lot of good, and many more members are signing up and more are expected to send in for particulars. The person who has had produced one script is eligible for membership in the league.

* * *

Again old Sol has favored Southern California with his warm rays, and everyone is happy and busy grinding out film. Many actor folks are moving down to the beaches so they can go swimming in the surf. It is great, and most everyone around here goes in daily.

CLARKE IRVINE.

DAUGHTER BORN TO WALTER LEWIS.

The stork visited the home of Walter P. Lewis, of the Biograph players, on Sunday, June 21st, and left a 7½-pound girl. Both mother and daughter are doing fine. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have been in California all winter, returning east on June 14.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

A RECENT RELEASE of the Mutual Film Corporation is "Home, Sweet Home." For this the producers have had a prominent musician suggest music—both instrumental and vocal—which will add greatly to the effect in the presentation of the picture. A copy of these suggestions has been sent to the Moving Picture World and is here given:

Music Cues for "Home, Sweet Home."

Particular care must be taken that music in this picture should be played pianissimo; played to the picture, not against it, except in instance as below noted.

Part One. (Prologue.)

(1.) (At opening.) "Love and Passion," by Messina. First movement only, to scene where Payne leaves to bid good-bye to his sweetheart.
(2.) (Song by female voice.) "Then You'll Remember Me." All through scenes with his sweetheart until sub-title: "It Will Be Happiness to Wait for Him."
(3.) "Love and Passion" movement repeated after sub-title: "The Religious Mother Shocked at Her Boy's Calling."
(4.) (In Payne's apartments.) "We Won't Go Home Until Morning" at entrance of revellers; played softly until their exit.
(5.) "Love and Passion" repeated at mother's entrance to finish of scene.
(6.) "Then You'll Remember Me" (orchestra) very soft—after sub-title: "I Will Await Thee Dear—My Boy." (Through Payne's scenes with sweetheart and scenes with worldly woman until finish of said scenes.
(7.) "Home, Sweet Home" (string quartette), when Payne composes.

First Episode.
Apple-Pie-Mary.

(9.) Any light air played lightly until old man is on with accordeon.
(10.) Accordeon solo "Home, Sweet Home," from time accordeon is first seen playing on the screen until Bob leaves restaurant to go away.
(11.) "The Interrupted Rendezvous" Intermezzo by Gamblier until accordeon.
(12.) Accordeon solo "Home, Sweet Home," as accordeon players start at road side inn, continued until Bob leaves on horse.

Second Episode.

(This can be played forte all through latter half of episode.)
(13.) "Stradella Overture" (beginning at insert of brother's eye through bushes, continued until just before discovery of man singing and playing guitar during fight of brothers).
(14.) "Home, Sweet Home" sung by male voice and accompanied by guitar whenever he appears on screen. Discontinued at shooting of brothers and heard again when singer is seen again on screen, when mother raises knife to slay herself, then continue to finish of episode.

Third Episode.

(15.) Waltz, "The Wedding of the Roses," at opening until sub-title: "The Homesick Boy's Rendering of the Old Ballad."
(16.) Violin solo, "Home, Sweet Home," until scene breaks.
(17.) "Narcissus" by Nevin until title: "The Old Ballad—Yes?"
(18.) "Home, Sweet Home" (violin solo) again after title: "The Old Ballad—Yes?" and continued until reuniting of husband and wife.
(19.) "Home, Sweet Home," by orchestra (strings and reeds) in home scenes.
(20.) "Home, Sweet Home" (by female voice) after title: "Ten Years Later."
(21.) "Kamennor Ostrow" (Cloister scene), by Rubenstein, after title: "Allegorical." (Second movement and ending only) played until finish of picture.

Special Notice.

For First Reel—Sixteen minutes.
For Second Reel—Fourteen to fifteen minutes.
For the remaining reels—Thirteen to fourteen minutes.
The last reel, however, should be run quite slowly from the beginning of the allegorical part until the finish of the picture. In any case, it should not run over one hour and twenty-five minutes in all.

The producers have been at considerable pains to adapt the musical accompaniment as given above, and it will repay the exhibitor to follow the directions as closely as possible. I will take it upon myself to suggest that in such theaters where the orchestra is unavailable an organ be used for numbers 10, 12, (accordeon solo) 16 and 18 (violin solo) and 21. Numbers 7 and 19 can be played in quartette style on either piano or organ. Theaters using a pipe organ but no orchestra will find this a fine subject for that instrument. Where piano alone is used, it will be worth while to get an ordinary reed organ if only for the sound effects mentioned in 10, 12, 16 and 18. Play melody only (no accompaniment) for violin solos. Use the singers by all means. If no guitar is to be had for numbers included in 14, the accompaniment can be simulated on the piano.

"Wanted—Geographical Music."

Indianapolis, Ind., wants to get a complete list of songs (names only) referring to the different States in the Union. She says:

> There are a number of these songs now half forgotten, but which might be resurrected for moving picture music purposes. It might be that some of the younger element would not recognize them, but in the neighborhood theatres such as the one in which I am playing there would probably be enough old friends of the songs who would introduce them to the strangers. Aside from the fact that these melodies come in handy for pictures—especially of the rural variety—many of them are well worth preserving, and the picture musician is as able to help keep alive old songs as well as to popularize the new. Here are a few as I recall them:
> (Indiana.) "On the Banks of the Wabash."
> (Kentucky.) "My Old Kentucky Home," and "She Was Bred in Old Kentucky."
> (Tennessee.) "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee."
> (Virginia.) "The Green Fields of Virginia," also "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia."
> (Maryland.) "My Maryland."
> (Maine.) "'Way Down in Maine."
>
> I have a dim recollection of a "New Hampshire" ballad, popular about twenty years ago. Also something about Colorado—"Where the Colorado Flows," if I am not mistaken, though I do not recall the music of either song. "Marching Through Georgia" is not appropriate for that State, it being a Northern war song and not a Southern song. There may be others whose names I have forgotten, and I would appreciate it if some one would help me to complete my list of old and new songs and melodies which refer to the different States."

Still On Earth.

A letter from Will H. Bryant, musical manager of the Varieties Theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., assures me that he is neither out of business nor out of the world, but has been "too busy to write." He promises to let us hear from him this summer, as his house contemplates running multiple reel features, and Mr. Bryant thinks they will offer better opportunities musically than the single reel subjects.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Giving Up.

SOMETIMES we get a shock and one was contributed last week when one of the department regulars sent in this letter:

The writer is still in business, but I must confess to being utterly worthless to that business just now. Haven't done a thing worth while in some time, and my laziness is costing a nice little sum of money, which fact I am beginning to realize.

Certainly outdoor amusements these hot days and nights make a form of competition hard to overcome by the indoor show, but I wonder if the average exhibitor like myself doesn't fail to do his best?

As soon as trade diminished sharply I curtailed my feature bookings. As it continued to fall off I reduced them further. Now I find myself in the predicament of having to work harder than ever to bring the people back again.

Had I kept things going as they were I feel confident that my patronage would have more than compensated the expense of the extras.

I have taken too much for granted, I feel sure, and in letting the "pep" and "ginger" run out of my system why I naturally aided dull business. My theater is cool, comfortable, pleasant, and if there is any reason why I shouldn't be doing well it can be charged largely to my own shortcomings.

Have taken on a nice lot of feature bookings and I am going to commence stirring things up. Will let you know how I come out. In the meantime suppose you tell Mr. Picture Show Man to beware of "lazing" about just because it's hot weather.

The one saving grace of all this is that our correspondent is honest. He knows what's the matter, and he is going to reform, but how many of you lack the energy to reform?

Keep Going.

It used to be said of the late B. F. Keith that he would spend twenty-three cents, if need be, to get a quarter into his house, and while it was seldom that his quarters cost him that much money, it was that spirit that brought him his millions.

When Summer came down came the heavy hangings, out came the linen covers to the plush cushioned seats, the electric fans started in, and "cooler than outdoors" meant something.

As a matter of fact an indoor house, properly looked after, is cooler than an airdrome that has baked in the sun through a long Summer day. The only thing is to make the people realize that fact. This is a matter of explanatory advertising, fans and real, and not merely theoretical, ventilation. And it is not really necessary to spend more money for program. When it starts to heat up, start your campaign of advertising and at the same time, for a few weeks, run an occasional extra feature that will bring people in to realize that the house is cool, but put more of your extra expense in current for fans than in extra program and run the winter shows.

It is too late now for this advice to be heeded this year, but remember it for next time and meanwhile use a little trick stuff to get them back. Get the house fixed up right and then advertise that you've just made the interesting discovery that your house really is cooler than an airdome.

If you have a house where there is much traffic, sacrifice a couple of rows of seats to move the ticket taker inside. Leave room for people and hang a big thermometer up inside the house and outside put a sign that reads:

> It's cooler inside than out;
> Come in free, and judge for yourself.

Throw open the doors and let them come in. Few will want to hang around and graft off the show. Most of them will go outside again, buy a ticket and come in to stay, if only you see to it that the interior of the house keeps the promise you make. The very novelty of the idea will bring many people in. It's up to you to hold them.

Very Bad.

We are not going to tell where the following comes from, but we hope it comes to the eye of the guilty person. Just read this:

> This program is presented by a theater that pays a manager real money. Could you imagine such programming! Samson, Schweitzer and Limburger. The World's Strongest Trio. Don't fail to see the greatest of all features, "Samson," in six acts with Warren Kerrigan, and "The Adventures of Limburger and Schweitzer," a Powers two-reel comedy.

Can you beat it? Champagne and castor oil is nothing to it. A strong biblical story and—a slice of cheese. The comedy is all right in a mixed program, but the man who would wear a checked jumper with a dress coat and waistcoat is a model of good form alongside this combination—and yet some managers wonder why they make no money. This clipping does not come from a rival manager, but from a patron who has a sense of the fitness of the thing. Perhaps a strong comedy might help to send the audience out in good humor, but it is not the point to send them out laughing their heads off at managerial stupidity.

When you have something like "Samson," build up on it with a heart interest story or something in keeping, or perhaps a light comedy, but do not search the files for a rough comedy like this with which to make your appeal to many persons in your audience who might be making their first visit to the theatre. Don't let them think that all your bills are a combination of "Samson" and cheese.

Abroad, Too.

It did not take B. Nichols long to pick up the newspaper end of the new publicity ideas. The London Mail carries a column advertisement of the Klaw & Erlanger Biograph features with a list of the leading houses where these features may be seen. It will not be long before such information will be printed as a matter of news.

Helping Wilson.

We are sorry that we cannot give space in full to a recent advertisement by Frank Montgomery. He had been swinging around the circle in the interests of his string of houses and then he came back and wrote an advertisement for the Metropolis that is a gem. It is across four columns front page of one of the Saturday sections and drops the full eighteen and a half inches. And less than eight inches are taken up in an advertisement for his house. He tells of his trip and explains how he found Atlanta happy and the people talking prosperity. Birmingham and Memphis were deep in gloom, but Kansas City was hustling and the people pleased. Then he came back to Jacksonville to find the hard times talkers and he suggests that if they talked good times they would be more apt to have them; the "psychological prosperity" of President Wilson. Then he modestly remarks that times are good in Jax, nowhere more so than at his theatre, and explains why. But long before he comes to the house he has every resident of the Florida town thinking and thinking hard and this talk of civic pride with a stinger in the tail for the theater will have a more lasting effect than would eight pages of straight puffery for the Grand theatre. It is stuff that sets the reader thinking, it is "our town" talk, and that is admired in a place where they have no "sunstroke," but an alarming increase in fits and things when the thermometer goes above a hundred in the shade. They breathe civic pride, and Montgomery makes a strong appeal to that side of their natures.

It's all right to tell about your show and what a fine show it is, but it is a lot better to first get the interest and attention of the reader and be sure that what you have to say will be read. It is in this that some of these Montgomery advertisements stand unique.

Facts and Figures.

J. P. Gruwell, of the Monroe theater, Monroe, Wisconsin, writes that he changed over from the newspaper to the motion picture business and naturally stuck to the newspaper advertising. But he finds that his advertising appropriation takes about ten per cent. of the receipts where he thinks that five per cent. should be sufficient, and he wants to know if it is possible to get outside advertising in a country town for a circulation of one thousand, and if there is any other distribution than the mails or small boys.

There is no reason why a guaranteed circulation of one thousand should not appeal to the local advertiser. It frequently happens that the local paper offers no more. It may have a larger circulation, but much of this will be out of town, a fact which must be figured. In a town of less than ten thousand, an actual circulation of one thousand copies should be a good talking proposition, provided that the house organ is something more than a dreary recapitulation of the weekly program. Even then it has some value, but if the editor makes it readable, it possesses more than double the value, and surely an old time newspaper man can make his sheet readable. Whether or not he can sell, and at what price he can sell it, depends largely on what he offers, but that the house organ possesses a good advertising value for local tradesmen has been established beyond question.

As to distribution, there seems to be but three methods—through the mail, from house to house, and the door or box office distribution. The first two or the last two may be used in combination, but the first or second alone is better than the third alone. The trouble with the mailing list is that it does not cover the entire section. The trouble with the house distribution is the possibility that many may not read what is left at their doors. The theater distribution is dependent on the house patronage. Just what the local situation is is the important factor. If the sheet is made sufficiently attractive and readable, the people will take it in and ask for it when they do not get it, and in time a nearby mail circulation may also be achieved. The advertising space should be made worth at least fifty cents an inch. It may be made worth much more.

Mr. Gruwell sends in some of his local advertising. One advertisement is five inches across two columns. It merely announces the story and adds "a beautiful four-part story of a woman's unconquerable faith." We think we could have said more than that about "Tess of the Storm Country." More is said in a larger advertisement, but much should be said in every advertisement, if the advertisement is to possess any value at all.

Good Inside.

The Best theater, Hillsboro, Tex., sends in a bulletin that is all right inside, but the only thing that gives a hint on the outside is that the name of the house and 5c.—Bulletin—10c.

is done in red ink. This is the title, but it falls in the middle section of a three division first page, where it should have risen to the top and have been more smartly set. Inside is the weekly program, most of it well written and displayed, and a white paper four sheet is bound in, the cover being card. The latest issue promises to give more reading matter, and so it will possess a stronger pull. A herald of a feature is also sent in loose. It would be well to use paper instead of card for the cover and give it more the appearance of a publication than a frank advertisement, and have the title rise to the top of the first page.

A Vitagraph Sheet.

The Vitagraph got out a very attractive press sheet for "Capt. Alvarez" with four advertisements of varying size and enough press matter to supply any house. A sheet like that is a big help to the busy exhibitor and lets him get full value out of the subject.

Makes a Choice.

The Plaza Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., makes a choice of four subjects from eight reels, taking two services. This paragraph is self explanatory:

> In order to give our patrons an incomparable program—a program of par excellence, we are buying each and every day 7 reels of pictures and some days 8 reels (4 from the Licensed Producers and 3 or 4 from the Mutual).
>
> The pictures set out in this program are the ones chosen from both programs which have received the most favorable criticisms, and pronounced by those who are in position to know, to be the best. If, however, in our judgment, after we have run all of the pictures, we come to the conclusion that some of the others are better than some of the ones here listed, we will not hesitate to substitute and give our patrons the better pictures.
>
> We will continue to run all of the pictures, 7 or 8 reels each day, from 10 o'clock in the morning until 3 in the afternoon, when our music and singing goes on.

They use a couple of singers. On the current bill, an eight page railroad folder style, they have Jimmie Hodges, but none of the pictures in which he played while with the Lubin comedy company. It would have paid them to have featured some of these. The folder is nicely printed on better than usual stock and looks important, thereby making the offerings seem important. The proofreading is a trifle careless, as is evidenced in the duplication of a line for June 5th. The general layout is excellent, the program running two days to the page and being cut off by an ornament, which more distinctly marks the break than a rule would do. There is room for more "house stuff," but only four lines are used.

Same Old Trouble.

Ten minutes ago we wrote that the compositor looks at a job as a job where the advertising man should look at his copy as an advertisement, and now comes J. W. Williams, of the Comet Theatre, Chicago, to write that "I find a majority of job printers look at copy from a mechanical point of view, where a man writing an ad looks at it from a commercial point of view," and as a result the printer will not follow copy.

Precisely, and the first man to yell for the printer's immediate death if he followed some copy would be the man who prepared it. Before the copy is prepared, get in touch with a practical printer and the result will be a lot better.

The program itself, running over part of two pages, with a thirteen em column of gossip on either side, is well set, the day and date being given proper display and the arrangement of type being right, but the outside pages do not look so well. It would be better to use all one face, in roman and italic, and even an occasional full face line to gain especial emphasis. The reading matter is good. All that remains is the choice of type, and the printing office foreman can do more to help there than we can, because he knows what is in the cases and in the linotype magazines, which we do not.

That Mr. Williams does not need an alarm clock to wake him up in the mornings is shown by his handling of Lucille Love, number five. The six sheets show the lady in a cellar with a lot of monkeys. He got a cage of real monkeys in front of the house to help along the idea, and it brought in the people just as any appropriate moving advertisement will. We wonder if he thought to make the six sheet the back of the cage. It would have helped. We will be glad to see more issues of the Comet.' We have a hunch it is going to get better.

Anti-Suicide.

George J. Forham, of the Griffin's Theatre, St. Catherines, Ont., sends in a clipping from a Toronto paper that tells of a man who attempted suicide, and when arrested murmured there was nothing left in life but the pictures. He thinks that this is an example of how well the Canadian theatres have their audiences trained, but we submit that a proper training would prevent them from attempting to commit suicide at all. Seems to be something wrong with that argument if they tumble into the water when there are only the pictures left. They should live for the pictures instead of dying for them. No profit whatever in an audience of suicides. We appreciate Mr. Forhan's interest more than we do his logic.

Cartoons.

The Cameraphone publications now use a front page cartoon to fit the coming attractions. We have seen better art work, but few more effective advertisements. This should interest the Spotlight.

Wants Some Help.

H. S. Ford, of the Olympic Opera House, Tulia, Texas, admits that he is not very strong on advertising and asks help. This is his letter:

> I have been a constant reader of your valuable paper ever since I went into the moving picture business, and I now run two theatres, one here and the other in Plainview, Texas, and it's my desire to improve each week, and the Advertising Department to Exhibitors always appeals to me, as I am a poor Ad writer, I am ashamed to inclose a copy of my first house program, but as stated above I want to improve, so I know of no better way, and I want you to give it all the criticism coming, and I assure you that I will derive benefit from each one. And above all I want to request through your columns that as many of the fellow exhibitors that will to please send me a copy of their programs. I trust that I will receive a goodly number, for I know I will gain some real good ideas from them.
>
> Thanking you in advance for your criticism, and especially as to size type I should use, and the arrangement in general.

Coming right down to it, a man who starts the game and presently is running two houses must be some sort of a manager, even if he wants help on advertising. He needs, though, to study the value lines. Each man to his own trade, and the printer is a printer first of all. Give him a job and his first thought is to turn out a good looking job. That's what he gets money on Saturday for. The manager, on the other hand, wants to play up his strong lines. Now on the front of this program is a box that says

Every Friday
Famous Players
No advance in prices
Features with class.

The first two lines are twenty-four point, the third twelve point and the last eighteen point. It looks all right, but the fact that there is no advence in prices is of greater interest to the public than the fact that these are features of class. A transposition of the two lines would not only have played up the no advance line but would more directly have connected the "Features with class" with the Famous Players line. Turning to the back page we find "A Good Little Devil."

The chief aim of the whole page is to advertise the film of this title. Breaking one of the important words makes it look like the last word, only. There was plenty of space to have done it thus:

A Good Little Devil.

The eye will not take in the hyphenated word as quickly, and in an advertisement the aim of the writer should be to get the line quickly assimilated. Suppose that the proof had come from the printer in the first form. Draw a circle around "A Good" and write "one line." Do the same with "Little Devil," and the complete job will show the second form.

The printer is not there to do the thinking for the advertiser. He is there to stick type. But tell the printer you don't know a lot and he'll help you to think, and a cigar and a couple of passes a week will help him to think to help you to think. We are strong for the printer chaps because we have met so many good fellows across the stone.

Take, too, a line "attend the matinees." That's all right, but tell them why. Tell them it cannot help but be the same show and they'll get a better seat. Then the advice means something.

Apart from this, things look pretty good, and with the suggestions to be had from the programs that undoubtedly will come in, there should be further improvement. We will be glad to get the programs regularly for a time and sit in on the job, too.

Limited Censorship.

The Sunset theater, Fowler, California, has a new scheme in a limited censorship. The programs for Tuesday and Friday nights are passed upon by a committee, one member of which is appointed by the church and another by the Ladies' Club, a third being appointed by somebody not clearly stated. This trio passes on the stories of the films for those evenings. There has been some opposition from the churches on the theater propositon, and this idea was used to counteract the opposition. So long as they hold to two off nights, the scheme is not a bad one, but it is seldom safe to recognize the need for censorship.

Just by way of contrast we note that the Church of St. James Aquinas in Brooklyn is running an airdome, not as a religous scheme, but as a money proposition. There is a vacant lot just back of the church, which is used, and two shows are given nightly. This assuredly is the more liberal and broad-minded point of view.

The Sunset is running a skydome just now. It is one of the few we have seen that advertises the house and not the film. It is good for a change. It runs:

THE SKYDOME.

A galaxy of Living Pictures.

————Not a Theater————

Where the ups and downs, the trials and tragedies of life, the scenery and achievements of the world at large pass silently in review.

OPEN EVERY NIGHT

Except Sunday. Come and enjoy a quiet, contemplative hour beneath the stars in this cool retreat and you will go home with a better knowledge of the ways of the world and the life and scenery of other lands.

Admisson 5 and 10c every night except Sunday.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

No. Change.

SEVERAL recent paragraphs in other publications to the effect that we contemplated spending next winter in Jacksonville seem to have created the impression that this department is to be abandoned. This is not the case. We expect to keep right on with this work.

Another Prize Contest.

Personally we do not like prize contests, but most people differ with us, so here are the rules of the latest contest. This time the comedy writers get their innings. Most contests are for the best play without any restriction, and comedy has been ignored in favor of the more telling dramatic story. This is for comedies only, two or three reel stuff, and the prizes are one thousand dollars for the best script, five hundred for the second and two hundred and fifty for the third, the contest being conducted jointly by the New York Morning Telegraph and the Chartered Theatres Corporation. These are the fully explanatory conditions governing the contest:

The comedies must be American in theme, scenes and character. The term "comedy" will be broadly construed to include comedies, dramatic comedies, farce comedies and even farce not of the "slap-stick" variety.

The contest is an open one. Only the principals and employees of The Morning Telegraph, Chartered Theatres Corporation and the judges are barred from participation.

Originality, pure and wholesome fun, clever situations (unusual but not impossible), rapid action, clever and sustained plots—all and each will have an important influence upon decisions of the judges. "Adaptations" and the "unconscious assimilation" of the work of other authors, whether copyrighted or not copyrighted, are not wanted, and if submitted will be rejected at the first reading.

The two-part comedies should contain from 60 to 90 scenes. The three-part comedies should embrace from 90 to 135 scenes.

All scripts submitted must be typewritten, on one side of the paper. Size of paper should be 8½ by 11 inches. The title of the play, but not the name of the author, must appear at the top of the first page. In the envelope containing the script must be inclosed another securely sealed envelope covering, first, a slip containing the title of the play and the name and full address of the author; second, a stamped and self-addressed envelope large enough to contain the manuscript in case it is to be returned to the writer. The sealed envelopes will be placed in the safes of The Morning Telegraph and will not be opened until after the judges have rendered their verdict.

The scenarios submitted must be "full scripts" arranged as follows:

First, the title.

Second, the synopsis—Not more than 500 words for the two-part nor more than 700 words for the three-part scripts.

Third, "Explanatory notes," if any, and brief as possible.

Fourth, the cast.

Fifth, scene plot.

Sixth, action plot.

Full ownership of the three prize scenarios to be given the Chartered Theatres Corporation upon payment of the prizes named.

For other than the prize-winning scenarios, and which may be considered available, the Chartered Theatres Corporation will make liberal offers to the authors, which they may accept or reject.

All scripts and communications relating to the contest must be addressed as follows: Comedy scenario contest, 301 Putnam Building, 1493 Broadway, New York City.

All communications requiring replies must be accompanied by self-addressed stamped envelopes.

Kinemacolor Not Buying.

Perry N. Vekroff, editor for Kinemacolor, asks authors to take notice that his company is not in the market for scripts at present. Due notice will be given when the company recommences buying.

Wright's Second.

William Lord Wright is the author of the first book on photoplay writing to come from the press. This was about four and a half years ago. His second book, "The Motion Picture Story," has just been presented. There are two factors that enter in the judgment of a book on photoplay writing, what is said and what has been omitted. Mr. Wright not only offers sound advice, but he avoids the erroneous information that mars some otherwise helpful publications. He writes fluently and understandingly and with a comprehensive knowledge of his subject. The Cloud Company, Chicago, publishes the book.

In Retirement.

E. M. Wickes, who has been doing the song and photoplay writing departments for the Writers' Magazine, has retired from that publication owing to the abolition of all department writers. He has not, at this writing, made a new connection, but it is to be expected that he will. He writes sound and helpful stuff and is one of those who write with authority.

Spec Writes.

Ever since widespread publication was given to an interview with Frank E. Woods, editor for the Mutual Film Corporation, in which he stated that but ten stories were accepted in a batch of about ten thousand submissions, the statement has been mauled and tortured. Now comes "Spec" to explain just what was meant. He writes:

> I have read so many comments on the statement attributed to me last winter, that our office found only ten photoplays worth buying out of ten thousand submitted, that I think perhaps a word in explanation may be permitted.
>
> First, the reported statement was slightly inaccurate. It should have been that we bought only ten out of ten thousand—not that there were only ten worth buying. There may have been many more worth buying that we did not buy. I'll bet one of those big black cigars you smoke that there are a lot of the writers of the rejected 9,990 who will agree with me on this point.
>
> Another important item to consider is this: We had just opened this bureau and had advertised for scripts. I remember that you told me with a twinkle in that roguish eye of yours, that we would be swamped with stories. We were. I think that every writer in the country bundled up all the old, rejected scripts he could find and sent them in. I remember one bundle of twenty-five from one author, all neatly typed and each inclosed in a nice blue cover. Do you think you could identify the chap? Then there was another lot of two hundred from an agency and numerous lots of ten or more from single writers. So you may perceive it is not quite fair to base a percentage statement that there is only one good story in a thousand, on my experience. On the whole, I don't think there is very much more worthless stuff, proportionately, in a thousand submitted photoplays than in a like number of submitted short stories or stage plays.
>
> But I am going to take issue with you on another point, and that is in the matter of submitting by synopses. No editor that I ever heard of reads all or any considerable part of the scripts submitted. He decides by synopses. You did yourself when you edited. If the synopsis was no good that settled it; you rejected. So why ask the poor devils to wear out their typewriters, use up countless reams of paper and pay out hard earned money for postage, when nobody reads anything but the synopses? Ah! but you say, in the one or two cases in a hundred where the synopsis interests the editor he follows by reading the script. Well, supposing he does—couldn't he just as easily write to the author, as we all do with Roy McCardell, and ask him for the script? He would then stand some chance of receiving a script written in the style he desires. Every producing company has its own notions of construction. A script that would suit Edison or Vitagraph wouldn't suit us, and the one that would suit us wouldn't suit them. For the trained writer I think this is the only sensible course to pursue. He would then be forced to study the styles of the different producers and would become much more valuable as a writer. However, if the boobs want to keep on pounding their machines, I suppose it is their privilege, only I wish they would inclose stamps for return postage.
>
> For our part, we shall continue to read and decide only on synopses. We want stories with plots, and any plot that can't be put into a synopsis isn't worth buying. And also, any good plot is worth buying, no matter how badly the script may be constructed.
>
> I haven't written this with any hope of convincing you, but only to relieve my mind and to reduce, if possible, the weight of our mail, providing you are kind enough to print this. Personally, I hope you will continue to educate the aspiring and perspiring authors until they can write the perfect stories, exactly the kind we want, constructed in exactly the way we want. Then, indeed, would the editor's life be an easy one—so easy that his occupation would be gone.

Very shortly after the interview was first printed we took precisely the stand that Spec now takes—that he was swamped with the accumulated rejections of the great body of writers. The twenty-five blue covered scripts to which he alludes came from our own crape-draped morgue and were frankly offered by request as "seconds." Some in the lot might have even been "thirds" for that matter. But we are glad to have him confirm our theory and hope that the matter will now be set at rest.

As to synopses, we've got to differ with him in the suggestion that script writing will ever come to the point where the editor's occupation will be gone. But no real standard of merit will ever be achieved through the submission by synopsis only. In this we hold with McCloskey that even where the plot of action is hopeless, good has been done in that the author has at least indicated his ideas and has been made to realize the production possibilities and improbabilities in clean-cut fashion.

That Mutual wants synopses only will be good news to those too lazy to write out the full idea or too stupid to learn how, but plotting is but half of photoplay writing, and we hope that the scheme will not become general.

This is an age of specialism and there may come into the field the plot specialist and the technical specialist, but while synopses are more easily handled, synopsis writing does not make for the fullest development of the photoplay author nor of the photoplay as produced. All editors, as Mr. Woods does, read the synopsis only, but most want the plot of action in case the synopsis warrants investigation.

Anyhow Spec has downed the ghost of that one-tenth of one per cent. acceptance.

What Happened to Jones?

One of those persons with an unpleasantly long memory wants to know what become of Marc Edmund Jones' intention of becoming a second Kipling or some one. It was just about a year ago that Mr. Jones issued this modest defi:

> Just now the thing that worries me is the invasion of the photoplay field by literary writers of all kinds, who, with a literary reputation, get a price I cannot get, and, while they are responsible for some big pictures, yet sell a lot of stuff that I couldn't sell and wouldn't claim it if I wrote it. This gluts the market, and it looks as if the photoplay writer, trained in the work, is being sidetracked somewhat for the newcomers in the field. And so here's my latest stunt:
>
> I figure that photoplay writing is a better training for fiction writing than when things are the other way around. And so, if the literary writer is going to come in and "crab" the photoplay game, it is up to the photoplay writer to retaliate—whence enters little Willie! With unbecoming lack of modesty, and the rest of it, I hereby give notice that, as in one year I have entered the photoplay game as an amateur, and risen to a position with the leaders, so now, in my second year, I am going to sail into the fiction writing game and show up the gosh-dinged bunch of writers that have come in to help me eat my meal. A year from now I undertake to have as big a name as a fiction writer as has any fiction writer that has entered the photoplay game. And so that the humiliation may be the greater, I hope they will bear in mind that the man undertaking to do this cannot boast a high-school education, will have to write enough photoplays between to eat, and is one who has never written anything for publication, outside of the photoplay field and in non-payment amateur work. If I can scrape a little money together, I'll publish the challenge in the Mirror. In the meantime the fight is on! Let all photoplaywrights enter the fray.

The year is up, but the closest Jones has come to making a name as a fiction writer has been as the author of a couple of fictionized film stories in The Photoplay Magazine. Not meaning Jones alone, we admire the hen. She first lays her egg and then cackles.

Sporting Note.

The race is not always to the swift, but it helps a lot to be able to run.

Stamps.

Do not buy a lot of two cent stamps and consider yourself supplied. Get some fours and sixes and eights and tens. Then, if the editor sees the letter with the single stamp he may stop to argue that you must be a writer since you are prepared with the different denominations. Those little things count, and they do not cost much besides thought.

Write for Mary.

Sometime when you have no other idea write Mary had a Little Lamb, first as a comedy, then a drama, and without trying to follow the poem, but the idea. Then write Jack and Jill and a few more nursery rhymes, doing them both as serious and humorous stories. Don't argue it cannot be done. It can. What, for example, are Jack and Jill but a man and woman who marry. He fails, and in his failure drags the woman down to misery with him. Now do you get the idea?

Specials.

Special releases for certain days seem to be passing. Memorial Day was marked by no particular subject, though a few years ago these were considered essential. One reason for this is the growing importance of the world market as contrasted with the purely American market. No Fourth of July story ever sold largely on the other side, and it does not pay to make a film for only part of the market. Write the Christmas and the Thanksgiving stories if you must, but do not waste postage on them.

Holidays.

It is well to take a holiday now and then; not a very long one, but a few days rest to get the brain back in trim. You'll feel better when you come back and do better work once you get into the swing again, though it may be a little hard to buckle down again.

Values.

Give a child a box of paints and brushes and what he can do to a few sheets of white paper, to say nothing of his face and hands and clothes and anything else in reach is terrible to contemplate. Give the same materials to the real artist and the result is charming.

Give the same idea to the novice and the practiced man and the results are no more widely different. The beginner takes the idea and daubs it on paper. The practical man takes the idea and puts parts of it on paper in such a fashion that the commonplace idea becomes a delightfully original story. The idea is the same, but the technique is sadly different. Probably the artist as a child could only make meaningless daubs and probably he spoiled many good sheets of paper even after he started to study, but he kept on until practice made perfect and he could sell his product to the art dealer instead of the rag-and-bottle-man.

It is all practice plus ability.

The Reason.

"Why don't you tell us how to write and sell plays instead of telling us not to kick and to wait for the editor to act?" is the gist of a letter lately to hand, and the writer does not realize that the advice not to kick is as important to the sale of a story as an article on how to handle leader. There is no use in writing plays if you cannot eventually sell them, or some of them, and the way to market your product is to play the game fairly, which is the reason for these discussions.

Books on technique may be had that will give instruction in writing plays, but the conditions of the moment need to be discussed, and the periodical argument on playing the game fairly is just as important as the periodical article on how to plot ideas.

Inquiries

NOTE—No inquiries can be replied to by mail. Look for your answer here. No question can be replied to that necessitates the handling of the manuscript. Always give your name and address. It will not be published. A list of addresses, to which photoplays should be sent, will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND SELF-ADDRESSED ENVELOPE. The request should be made to the paper direct and not to this department, nor to the Answers Man.

SYNOPSES ONLY.—The Mutual Film Corporation and the Keystone company prefer synopses to fully developed scripts. Other companies will consider synopses if the author cannot write his idea in full. Will all readers please make note of this. This information will not be given again.

C. M. C.—See above. Editors do not keep lists of contributors. You have not read the paragraph you quote from understandingly. The idea is to send your best work to one company first, not to tell them that you are doing this.

J. F.—Sterling is in the market for scripts rather than synopses. See above.

NO NAME.—North American has not listed a release. The studio, we believe, is at Coney Island.

F. V. K.—Essanay is not buying because they are not in need of outside scripts. There is no "likely" market for kid scripts.

E. L. C.—You err in stating that Technique requires a scene plot. Read the second paragraph of Chapter Five and you will see that it is clearly stated that the scene plot is not an essential. Why not study the book and get the full value from it? The scene plot will at least help you to realize that at times you use too many different locations and interiors. A single ream of twenty pound bond will weigh five pounds. Your stationer should know that.

H. M. W.—Any firm that likes the idea will take your play. None makes a specialty of that work. A rejection applies only to one studio. Other studios may or may not have the same reason for rejection. Send an envelope to the department for the required address.

R. F.—No company is "apt" to take a play with many leaders. If the interest of the idea excuses the need of an excess of leaders any company might take it. No company would be likely to reject a play merely because a negro is used. If, as you state, he has a lovely character, we do not believe that the censorships would object. Crime must be punished to please the censors.

H. W. B.—No company is under the slightest obligation to explain why it does not accept a script and you will waste paper and ink asking.

C. C. H.—We know of no reliable person giving lessons in photoplay lessons. If an editor takes the trouble to tell you just what he wants, you are justified in supposing that he thinks you can eventually deliver what he wants.

F. G.—If your story is better told without a "spectacular thrill" then can the thrill and tell your story better. The thrill must be an integral part of the story to get a grip.

GEORGIA—You take your life in your fair hands when you ask how many scenes constitute a reel. No one knows any rule that applies. Editors take from two days to three months to give a decision, depending on the editor and the circumstances. A two reel play commands a better price than a one reel story, but not always twice as much.

F. J.—If you want your script read, it must be typed. It is not an unfair rule. No one ever asked you to write scripts or sought to compel you to buy a typewriter, but if you want to write you must follow the rules of the game. People who talk about unfairness seldom get ahead. They are too busy thinking over their wrongs. The rule of a 250 word synopsis is that it saves time and a competent writer can keep inside that limit. Amateurs write, but they seldom sell until they become sufficiently proficient to write plays. You have the wrong idea entirely.

J. M. S.—Shoot your story. It looks all right. But call your characters by their right names all through. You speak of Eugene seeing Eugene, which is not Norman by a lot.

D. W.—We do not know anything of the script you speak of. It is not possible to keep track of the thousands of scripts.

E. E. S.—Send out your script and leave it to the director to lay his footage. The number of scenes has nothing whatever to do with length.

A. C. B.—You have nothing to do with putting the cast on the screen. That is up to the director in those companies where it is done. In the same way you leave the sets to the director and the scene carpenter. That is no worry of yours. On the other hand, it is not probable that any such suggestion would help save a story with an excess of interior sets. Write the big set and them merely "close-ups" and the scene numbers of all such on the next line, without regard for the positions of the camera. Your suggestion has been passed on to the Lubin people. The point is well taken. Keep on hustling and you'll land.

J. W. H.—You would do well to send for a copy of Technique. Your question covers far too much ground.

S. S.—Get your local postmaster to take the matter up with the inspectors. It seems to be the only way to get action out of that firm.

E. L. H.—List of awards in a recent issue.

M. F. C.—Kinemacolor is out of the market.

MRS. R. S.—Change to a licensed company. Do not like the idea. Too much of a circulation scheme.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Address all Orders to

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE:—Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Local Union No. 330, Fort Worth, Texas.

President, Jos. H. M. Smith; vice-president, Mr. Palmer; treasurer, C. M. Fox; financial secretary, W. C. McFadden; recording secretary, W. S. Turnpaugh, P. O. Box 543.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of the Moving Picture World and of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until such articles have been demonstrated to a member of our staff. In case of apparatus pertaining to projection this means the editor of this department.

Question No. 41.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Permission to use the contributor's name must accompany each answer, otherwise only the name of the city will be used. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose the decision as to question 40 to be in the affirmative, and that there was available for fuel, gas, natural and artificial; gasoline and kerosene. What would you do to determine which would be best, from any and all points of view?

Note:—As matters now stand, any operator is likely to be confronted with precisely this proposition at any time. Are you preparing, or are you prepared to "deliver the goods" on such questions as this, or even make an intelligent stagger at it?

Roll of Honor.

The Roll of Honor on Question No. 35 consists of Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Canada; Harry Grant, Placerville, California; W. A. Burton, Trail, British Columbia, and Frank Willard, Jr., Marshallstown, Iowa.

I have selected brother Willard's reply as being best, everything considered, but am using two of the three very excellent drawings submitted by friend Burton. Incidentally the answer sent by Burton is very neatly gotten up and the drawings are excellent.

Answer to Question No. 35.

By Frank Willard, Jr., Marshalltown, Iowa.

The Question:

Suppose you were obliged to assemble the field coils of a motor generator. What test would you make to determine whether or not you had things connected right? How would you reverse the direction of rotation of the armature (make the motor run the other way) of a shunt-wound, d.c. motor? What effect would this have on the brushes, and what would you do to them? Would the motor be as efficient when reversed as it was before?

The Answer:

After connecting the field coils a reliable test may be made in the following manner. Get an ordinary pocket compass and bring it near the end of the poles in rotation. If the end of the needle which points north is attracted it is a south pole, if repelled it is a north pole. The poles of the field should be alternately north and south, and if any are not of the right polarity they may be reversed by interchanging leads; that is to say, by connecting the leads of one to the leads of the next, and the leads which were connected to the latter to the former. (It will, of course, be understood that in making this test the field must be excited. A good, strong battery will serve the purpose. Ed.). The direction of rotation of the armature of a d.c. shunt-wound motor may be reversed by interchanging either the field leads or the armature leads. It is preferable, however, to reverse the current in the armature. Reversal of rotation of the motor will throw the brushes out of commutating plane, and, as a result they will have to be located around the commutator at the new commutating plane, which will be in a decidedly different position. If the direction of rotation is reversed, and this is not done, the brushes will be at the point where the sparking is greatest. If it were not for self-induction and field distortion there would not be much of this effect through reversal of rotation. But as a matter of fact the brushes must be shifted the amount of the field distortion in one direction, plus an equal amount of distortion in the other direction. As the leads of the brushes vary in different motors and under different conditions it is impossible to give the exact position in which they should be set. In interpole motors they will be placed at the normal neutral plane; in multi-pole motors the brushes must be set with same relation to pole pieces. Reversal of rotation does not effect the efficiency of the d.c. shunt-wound motor.

I have not given all of brother Willard's answer because in the matter of brush shifting W. A. Burton, Trail, B. C., has much the best of it, therefore I use that portion of his reply dealing with brush changing. Burton says:

With regard to the effect of reversal on brushes, if the motor be a modern one equipped with "radial" brushes (Fig. 1) there will be no bad effect. All that needs be done in case of armature reversal is to rock the full set of brushes back against the direction of rotation by means of the rocker device, provided for that purpose, to the new neutral point which will be at the point of least sparking. However, should the brushes be of "tangential" pattern, as per Fig. 2, it requires no great wisdom to perceive what might happen, especially if the brushes be of copper. In this case if the construction of the brush holder permits, the brushes should be reversed also, and then rocked back as previously explained. (If the brushes cannot be reversed then the armature cannot be reversed either, because this kind of brush would not run with any degree of satisfaction when pointed against the direction of rotation. Ed.). For the sake of exactness let me say, however, that the brushes referred to as "tangential" are not true tangential brushes. The correct, true tangential brush is shown at A Fig. 2, and with that type of brush the change of direction would have no effect, except to require rocking them back to the new neutral position.

All of which is correct. Brothers Burton, Dobson and Grant all suggested the wiring of a D. P. D. T. switch, the same as Fig. 42, page 101, of the Handbook, so as to provide methods of quick reversal where it is desirable to reverse a motor occasionally. Brother Grant sent in a very neat drawing, and it was done on drawing paper with black ink, too. I am using a portion of it to illustrate the reversing switch proposition.

More Red Tape.

Brother L. C. La Grow, Albany, New York, shies his hat into the ring of the optical controversy, jumps up and down on it three times, waves his tightly clinched fists in the air, and delivers himself of the following, which we trust will hold Professor Wall for an indefinite period.

> After careful perusal of Professor Wall's criticism of W. S. James' excellent article on the M. P. optical system, I cannot see how he (Wall) is justified in his attack, or how he has substantiated his assertions. Perhaps he is justified, perhaps he has proven James in error, and I am merely deceived by my own ignorance; for certainly Professor Wall is a learned and careful man and would not proselyte. In the first place, it was not necessary, I think, for James to note the refractive index of various glass compositions in order to illustrate his meaning. For practical purposes, in the operators' measurement of condensers, the comparative angles of convexity and concavity are all it is necessary to know. James says: (first column, page 357, April 18th issue) "Positive lenses have a focusing point, while negative lenses have only a virtual focus." Yet Professor Wall asserts, in plain English, that James inferred that a negative (concave) lens has no focus. James did not use quite such excellent grammatical construction in describing the idea of conjugate foci as does the professor, but he expressed the same thought to our less analytical minds. I am sure that none of us operators who read James' article even imagined that he meant that any foci of a lens was on the surface of that lens. Why does Professor Wall change the fraction in his statement of the equation? Why not either adhere to the decimal or the common? This is positively confusing to us of the more or less unlettered mind. And, further, Wall says James is in error when he subtracts ⅜ from ⅞ and has a remainder of 4-8, or ½. And now, with all due deference to the professor, I must say that he is positively in error in his statement that all rear combinations have sharp foci, or will project a sharp image. Some will and some will not, as you or any other experienced operator very well knows. Why this is so I do not know. I have always supposed the convexity of the rear segment had something to do with it. Next, I would like to ask Professor Wall how achromatizing of lenses is effected? If not by the combining of segments of different refractive power, and, as James says, crown and flint glass, then most text books should be revised and corrected. As for the "objective ray," described by James and thrown out by Wall, I do not believe that either of them knew anything about "it." Something happens, that much is sure. If anyone can describe what takes place in the tube, and immediately in front of it better than James has, let him stand forth and describe his theory in detail. Until then I would advise all operators to work along the lines laid down by James. I do not like to see anyone tear down a tenable fabric unless he erects something just as good or better. James has established and described a system of measurement which any practical operator can use. It is the first we have ever had. It may be crude; there may be slight errors, but that will not prevent its use in practice, nor does the system become useless, because he has erred in his description of the chemistry of light. The James article reached the point. It is complete, and, in my humble opinion, will remain the best on M. P. optical system description for many a long day. And I, together with many another practical operator, thank Brother James and the Projection Department most sincerely for its promulgation.

I do not intend to make any comment, other than to say that I heartily agree with Brother La Grow when he says that James has established the first system of measurement evolved which the ordinary operator would be capable of using intelligently. I believe, as I have said before, that much good is going to come out of all this discussion. I think likely that Professor Wall himself made some assertions he would not have made if he had studied James 'article a little more closely; also I think some of his criticisms are well founded.

From the Big Boardwalk.

W. Carter, Atlantic City, New Jersey, writes:

> The Moving Picture World is the only paper for the boys. My home is in Wheeling, West Virginia, but I came here hoping to secure a summer position. What I found was to me surprising, and it is, I think, surprising to everyone else, too. Surely some of the Atlantic City theaters must be trying to put the picture business on the b-u-u-u-m, and do the job up brown. Some of the houses are running fourteen reels, and running them at a gallop. It's a case of now you see the picture and now you don't. So far I have visited sixteen Atlantic City theaters, and about half of them produce good screen results. Here are the names of some of the good ones: Virginia theater, Bijou Dream, Million-Dollar Pier, City Square, on Atlantic avenue; Colonial and Royal. However, how can it be expected that the operator will produce good results when the largest house in town, seating 1,800, operates from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. with two operators and one assistant, and the operating room is one of the old timers made of sheet iron with a trap-door in the floor?

Running a sixteen-reel program reminds me of a story. It happened on our glorious Independence Day. In one of the northern tier of Southern states a veteran of the Confederate army was addressing the assembled multitude.

"Gentlemen," said he, smiting his chest and swelling up like a pouter pigeon, "my record is a part of the history of this county. Why, gentlemen, I carried the last Confederate flag through this town."

From one of the rear benches a tall, be-whiskered individual up-ended himself and said: "Yes, boys, that's right, he carried the last Confederate flag through this town for I saw him do it."

"Ah, it is indeed gratifying that one of my fellow citizens can lay aside a feeling of envy and testify to the deeds of the past," declaimed the speaker as his vest buttons began to pop from the strain.

"Yep, boys. That is right. He carried the last Confederate flag through this town, and he carried it so doggone fast you could not have told whether it was the Union-jack or a small-pox warning."

And that's the way those eleven-reel five and ten cent shows are run. The films go through so fast you cannot tell whether it is a moving picture or a mighty poor imitation of a very bad joke. I am indeed sorry to hear that Atlantic City has anything of that sort.

Usher Criticised.

A. C. Stewart, Waitsburg, Washington, shakes his fist under Brother Usher's nose in the following:

> Replying to Question 29 L. S. Usher says: "If similar instruments are used, the errors will cancel themselves out." I believe Brother Usher's foot slipped when he made that statement, but if I am in error he is cordially invited to hang one on me, with the assurance that it will not only be taken in good part, but will be appreciated. For thusly do we learn. This is my understanding of the proposition. Simultaneous readings with voltmeter and ammeter on a d.c. to d.c. set would be correct, but with an a.c. to d.c. set the case would be different for this reason: The motor would constitute an inductive load with a power factor of say, perhaps 80 per cent. The load on the generator side would be non-inductive, therefore the power factor would be unity. Now supposing the outfit to have an efficiency of 100 per cent. If tested by the voltmeter-ammeter method it would only show an efficiency of 80 per cent, because, while the instruments on the generator side would be showing volt-amperes, which would represent the actual wattage output, those on the motor side would be showing volt-amperes 20 per cent in excess of the actual input wattage, which would not be fair either to the device or to its manufacturer. While either the voltmeter-ammeter or watt-meter method may be used to test the efficiency of a d.c. to d.c. set, only the watt-meter method can be used for an a.c. to d.c. set.

With all and sundry of which the editor is obliged to agree. I remember not so very long ago I slipped up on that proposition myself, though I know better. I simply did not think of it. I expected quite some few of the departmentites to gleefully bombard me with letters to the effect that I was in error, but it seems to have gotten by without being noticed by anybody except myself.

Gets His Goat.

Victor A. Welman, Seattle, Washington, writes:

> Was glad to see Professor Wall's criticism of James' article. It was the inaccuracies and misstatements in this article by one so high up in the profession which called forth my letter on the subject of lack of knowledge on projection optics some days ago. I am glad Professor Wall has taken up the subject, but what gets my goat is that he and James, or some others like them, have not gotten together their scientific and practical knowledge long ago, and dug out the answers to our questions. Fifteen years ago I was operating a MacIntosh all-metal dissolving stereopticon with lime light, the outfit being guaranteed to produce at least one burn per second, and it seems to me that we have little or no more definite information on the subject of projection optics now than we had then. Let the Professor and Mr. James go to it and fight it out; that is exactly what we need. You may wonder why if I saw something wrong with James' article I didn't explain what it was. The answer is easy; I am just well enough informed on geometrical optics to know when to keep still and hug my theories to my manly chest. The less a man talks, you know, the longer it takes the public to find out how little he knows.

Huh! You bet I do. And here am I stuck up on a pedestal and obliged to emit a voluminous flow of speech every week. That MacIntosh guaranteed-to-burn dissolving stero brought forth a wide, juicy smile, because I used to operate one of them myself. They were a sort of metal-barrel arrangement, with just one thickness of metal, and every time you touched the darned thing, well one touch, one blister, plus emphatic and voluminous remarks.

Yes, that is exactly my view of it. Wall has the scientific knowledge and James is well versed in the practical end and if those two can be induced to pull in double harness on this subject there is no doubt but that our knowledge of the optical system of the projector will be very largely increased in a hurry. But as it is we're learning fast.

Chance for an Operator.

Down in Georgia a gentleman who has one or two other businesses has been bitten by the motion picture-game bug. He has erected what he says is a very pretty little theater in a town of 1,300 with a surrounding territory of between five or six thousand to draw on. He finds that the theater is taking more time than he figured on and he has not the time to give. He is only running one show a week. He states that if some practical operator in a large city who has a little money laid aside ($500.00) and is something of a business man, could take this theater he could make money out of it, and have a nice business in a nice town. He says, to sum up: "I honestly believe that it is a chance which occurs about once in ten years, and that the right man behind it could have something unlike anything else he has ever seen." Now if some operator who has a $500.00 bank roll and is capable of running such a business, wants to tackle this, I will be very glad to supply him with the address on request.

From Professor Wall.

E. J. Wall, Professor of Photography, Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, writes as follows:

With reference to the editor's remarks as to point to point formation, and a projected image, I cannot understand his difficulty. You cannot look upon the film at the aperture as an original source of light which would emit rays in all directions; but you might look upon it as a secondary light source emitting convergent rays. The correct way to consider the subject is as follows: the primary light source is the crater of the positive carbon. The rays emitted by this are taken up by the condenser and projected as a convergent beam in the direction of the screen. This convergent beam we may, for the sake of argument, consider as a solid cone of light, a section of which at any point must necessarily be a uniform circle of light; but the base of the cone is the front condenser surface. This cone of light is taken up by the objective and projected on to the screen as a uniform circle of light. If you place any object across that circle of light you project that object. We use a silver image (photograph) and it is perfectly immaterial whether we place that picture in contact with the base of the light cone, as in the case of stereopticon projection, or whether we place it at any distance from the cone base, as at the machine aperture plate. The only purpose the film serves is to cut out the light, or portions of it, from some points of the circle of light. Now as every point in this circle of light, or object space as we call it, has a corresponding point in the image space (on the screen) you can get no light at the image space point corresponding to the opaque point in the silver of the picture being projected, and thus an image is formed. The objective essentially projects the uniform circle of light point by point, minus that which is stopped out by something, which in our case is the photograph on the film at the aperture.

I have, of course, ignored any question of aberrations, and assumed a solid cone of light, which, however, is actually not the case; but it is permissible to do this to clear up the point to point formation of an image, and to drive home the one essential fact that what is projected is essentially the illuminated surface of the condenser, or, theoretically, the nodal plane of emergence. The fact that a silver image or film is placed in the cone of light has absolutely nothing to do with the question. The only action of the film is to cut out portions of the light from the circle of light in a certain, definite way. But to get this sharp we focus our objective on that particular plane, or point in the length of the light cone at which the film cuts it. We are not practically concerned with the condenser surface, but merely with the picture, but all the same we are actually projecting the condenser surface, or a particular plane of the cone of light, which is an aerial image of the condenser surface. The question of scatter is not an easy one to explain without tables, charts and diagrams, but the editor has got hold of the right end of the stick. Scatter is the diffusion of part of a beam of light by minute particles, and the coarser the particle or the greater the number of fine particles, the greater the diffusion of the light in all directions. Ground glass diffuses light because the rough surface of the glass is composed of coarse particles closely compacted. Any direct ray is entirely scattered in all directions and it is impossible to see an image. But make your ground surface finer (very easy to do by photography) and you get less diffusion and therefore more and more of the direct ray passes through, till it is possible to see or form a strong clear image, although there is much diffusion. In the case of the silver image the actual particles are so minute that we get "scatter," and not general diffusion. To put it baldly: diffusion is complete dispersal of the direct rays in all directions; scatter is dispersal of only a minute fraction of the direct rays in all directions. The editor's statement of refraction is correct, except that he omits the angle of the prism. And his use of the word "density" is open to question, unless he means optical density. Density in ordinary language is synonymous with specific gravity, and in all optical glass catalogs the specific gravity or density is given. On the other hand we often talk loosely of optical density, as meaning refractive index, though it is as well to avoid this term, since it is liable to lead to confusion, as it is also often applied to the color absorptive power of a solution or glass.

Answering the professor's last comment first, with regard to optical versus specific gravity density, I should suppose, as a matter of plain language, that optical density is the relative clearness or transparency of glass, whereas specific gravity density would mean the relative density of the molecules composing the glass; in other words, the specific gravity of the glass, and it is this that I had supposed constituted the refractive index, but I am not sure. With regard to the point for point theory, I guess I will never get that matter squared around in my mind so that all the different points involved fit together. It seems to me now that each ray passing through the film just passes on through the objective lens and is shot out in a straight line to the film, and according to this theory there cannot then be any question of converging rays, it seems to me, except in-so-far as the condenser cone is concerned. But I am going to close up my countenance and button it up also, so far as this particular phase of the matter be concerned, until such time as someone can advance a theory which I am able to accept as being beyond any question of a doubt the precise action of the image in passing through and out of the objective. I realize that it is quite possible that Professor Wall understands the matter thoroughly, but is unable to explain it in a way that an ordinary layman can grasp. I know that is true in some other things, particularly with relation to light. I also know that even the highest authorities differ with regard to certain theories in connection with the light ray. For instance, there are those who stoutly maintain that light is propagated in straight lines, and there are those who just as stoutly maintain that it is not. However, for one thing I am thankful, and that is that I think we can arrive at a very substantial understanding of the practical workings of the lense system of a projector without having this particular piece of highly theoretical knowledge made clear. As to Professor Wall's remarks about the condenser surface being what we really project, why that idea I can readily grasp and assimilate; also it helps me to understand the whole proposition somewhat better, I think.

Another from Professor Wall.

Professor E. J. Wall, Syracuse University, Syracuse, New York, contributes the following:

I am afraid I can be of very little assistance too "Grafton" in his lens trouble, without first seeing the lens, because I do not recognize from his description what "leafed" means. I have grave doubts whether oil would actually impair the surface of glass, unless the oil was strongly acid or alkaline. There is one thing that will very soon spoil any lens, and that is the perspiration from a dirty finger. Under the action of heat this will etch the glass surface in an hour or two. The only possible suggestion that I can make is that the heat has softened the balsam used for cementing the front combination, and that it has run slightly. This gives rise to tree-like markings, which are very characteristic. (But that would hardly be Grafton's trouble since melted balsam would either be near the edges only or in easily discernible streaks.—Ed.).

His suggestion as to the separation of a metal is absurd. Optical glass is a mixture of the silicates of potash, soda, lime and arsenic; with the addition of lead, in the case of flint glass. No iron advisedly enters into it. If it did the glass would be deeply colored, like a common beer bottle. No amount of heat, met with in a projector, can possibly cause separation of any of the above metals, or cause devitrification, as we call it. To effect this, the glass would have to become semi-fluid and red hot and be kept at this temperature for hours. I shall be pleased, of course, to examine the lens in question, and report if it is sent on to me.

Mr. Wallace Clay's notes, page 1404, are excellent, except in one or two points. Mr. James is right about his concave prisms or lenses; no concave lens can produce a real image, or make convergent rays or any other rays cross at a point on the opposite side of a lens to that on which they are incident. Mr. Clay is also wrong about the crossing point of the objective. This is always outside the front lens of the projection objective, as now made.

With reference to the Editor's comment on the enormous absorption of light by glass, this is a little too sweeping, or else his conception of "enormous" differs from mine. The facts as regards the loss of light through a lens in transmission are as follows: the absorption of light by the glass is 2.4 per cent for every centimetre (= 0.39 inch) of axial glass thickness. The loss by reflection from every glass-air surface is 5.22 per cent, the refractive index of the glass being assumed to be 1.5 to 1.6. If we take a projection objective of 10 centimetre focus (=4.0 inches), with 6 glass-air surfaces the total loss by reflection and absorption is obviously $1-(.9478)^6-(2.4x.773)$, the axial thickness of glass being 0.773 cm. This equals 1-0.2936, or the total loss is 29.36 per cent. There are, of course, other factors which one ought to take into consideration, but as they merely affect the decimal units we can ignore them.

As to the absorption, according to Mr. Martin's photometric tests the absorption in the condenser lens was considerably more than 50 per cent—as I recollect it, something like 60. The matter was published in the department some time ago. This is doubtless to a considerable extent due to the poor quality of condenser lenses. Professor Wall should remember that my comment was aimed at the whole lens system—not merely the objective; also his statement as to the absorption makes no allowance for different grades of glass. It is possible, however, that he does not include that in his meaning of the term "absorption."

A Highly Technical Question.

The editor of one of the Munsey magazines writes as follows:

Will you kindly do me a favor by answering the following question? It is a request made by one of my readers. On the Edison moving picture machine there is a small toothed wheel which engages with the rack. Certain motion picture operators claim this is a gear, while others claim that, being a part of the racking movement it is not a gear, but a racking pinion. This gear, or racking pinion, is known as the framing device. Also please answer as to what is the correct definition of a gear when used in this connection.

I am of the opinion that any toothed wheel designed to mesh with the teeth on another toothed wheel, or rack, for the purpose of moving second wheel or rack, or being moved by the second wheel or rack, could properly be termed a gear. And I believe also that the term pinion could be properly applied to the toothed wheel in question. According to the best authorities on matters of this kind the term pinion is applied to a small wheel meshing with a larger gear wheel or a rack, though strictly speaking the term pinion would only apply when the teeth of the smaller gear are cut into an enlargement of the spindle, so that the gear and the spindle are actually one piece. The term gear by common practice is applied to nearly all toothed wheels designed to engage with other toothed wheels, while two or more toothed wheels meshing together are collectively termed gearing. There are many kinds of gears, such as spur gears, beveled gears, etc. However, in the case cited I am of the opinion either the term gear or pinion could be used with approximate correctness, and there would be little choice as between the two.

Excellent Work.

By courtesy of the management of the Knickerbocker theater, the editor recently viewed "Cabiria," by the Itala Film Company, of which Harry Raver is the American manager. There is only one word which could be justly used to describe this photoplay, and that is magnificent, and it was not magnificent in spots, but from start to finish. In places the dramatic interest carried the audience to a point of self-forgetfulness, and that is as far as the legitimate drama itself can possibly go. When the priest was about to throw the child into the fiery maw of the God, and Axilla and his slave Maciste seized the child, hurled the priest aside, and then the fanatics sought to seize them, the editor really forgot where he was and to himself was saying: "Go to it, old boy! More power to you!" It was all so exciting that he for the moment really stood in front of that Temple, just simply itching to take part in the scrap.

And now let me spoil all that by pointing a moral. This condition could not have been possible but for the excellence of the work of the operators, Jack Winick and Max Hollander, assisted by William Sweeney, who handles the arcs of the projectors. If the machines had not been in perfect adjustment, or if there had been a heavy flicker or shadows on the screen then the illusion would have been largely lost. But as it was, the light was brilliant, the picture steady as a rock, and the speed correct, so that these things, combined with the magnificent photography and acting made the whole thing actually reincarnate itself on the screen, as though it really held in itself the breath of life, instead of being only the shadow of that which had been.

The Knickerbocker theater has started an innovation. The idea of the management is that the operator cannot attend to his arc and at the same time have a sufficiently clear vision to properly project a picture. There is a lot in this, but under a scheme of this kind there should be a separate observation port to the left of the machine to be used by the light man. On two or three occasions there were slight shadows on the screen which, of course, was chargeable to Sweeney, the light-man; but he was not really to blame, since he was compelled to use the same observation port used by the operator, and therefore did not have a clear, unobstructed view of the screen. It is not practical to govern the light by the spot, but the man handling the light must have a constant uninterrupted view of the screen, and I would suggest to the Knickerbocker management that they provide a separate observation port for the light-man. Outside of this I have no criticism to make. The equipment consists of two Power's Six A projectors.

A Classic Wreck.

Harry Bowman, Boydton, Virginia, encloses a photograph of what was left of his outfit after the storm of May 13th. He says he started the following Saturday in a new tent and has opened his tent show for the season.

Well, brother Bowman, it is quite evident that the storm did things to you, but I see what apparently was the commissary tent still remained in good order, so "you should worry." The department wishes you a successful season, and I trust that the God of Winds will be more kind to you in the future.

Foolish.

Roanoke, Virginia, asks:

> What do you think of the operator who will resent the calling of his attention to a mis-frame in his picture? He said I was trying to start a rough house by tapping lightly on the wall of his operating room.

It is hardly necessary to comment or even express an opinion. The operator who allows a mis-frame to remain on the screen long enough to require his attention to be called to it certainly ought to be promptly discharged or at least have a good, hard calling down. He was the one who was starting the rough house by committing an outrage on the audience, always assuming, however, that he was not working for a manager who requires the operator to thread a second machine, and rewind a film while he is projecting one. If that be the case, there is then some excuse for him, and the fault lies with the manager. It is then the manager who ought to be discharged.

Some Formulas.

Brother John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, contributes the following to the fund of knowledge concerning the optical system of projectors:

> The equivalent focus of a condenser combination that will project a cone of light a certain distance varies with the distance of the arc from the center of the combination, hence it is necessary to decide on a definite fixed distance of the arc from the condenser, and to maintain that position. By reason of the fact that I have been getting excellent results with the arc 4½ inches from the center of the condenser combination, I have adopted that distance as best suited to the general run of work. and am enclosing formulas from which the attached table was compiled. I send both, to the end that the table may be revised to eliminate any errors it may contain. In anticipation that some will say: "Oh, well, I am getting fine results without using the combinations as shown in the table," I will remark: "Quite so!" The table merely shows the combination necessary when the arc is approximately 4½ inches from the center of the condenser combination. I shall be prepared to dodge bricks as soon as this is published.

FORMULAS.

Formula for finding length of cone: Multiply the e.f. of the objective lens by 4½.

Formula for finding distance between center of condenser combination and machine aperture: Multiply e.f. of the objective by 2½.

Formula for finding e.f. of required condenser combination: One divided by the distance of arc from center of condenser combination, plus one divided by length of cone, equals one divided by X, where X is the e.f. of the required condenser combination.

Equivalent Focus of Objective Lens	Distance from Aperture to Center of Combination of Condensers	Combination of Condensers With ⅛ Inch Space			Distance of Arc From Center of Combination of Condensers inches
3½	8¾ inches	6½	-	6½	4.13
3	9⅜ "	6½	-	7½	4.42
4	10 "	6½	-	7½	4.35
4¼	10⅝ "	6½	-	7½x	4.29
4½	11¼ "	6½	-	8½x	4.45
4¾	11⅞ "	6½	-	8½	4.48
5	12½ "	6½	-	8½	4.44
5¼	13⅛ "	7½	-	7½	4.5
5½	13¾ "	7½	-	7½	4.46
5¾	14⅜ "	7½	-	7½	4.42
6	15 "	7½	-	7½	4.49
6¼	15⅝ "	7½	-	7½	4.36
6½	16¼ "	6½	-	9½	4.55
6¾	16⅞ "	6½	-	9½	4.4
7	17½ "	6½	-	9½	4.45

Instructions for using the table. After placing the lamp house in position move the arc until the spot is approximately 2 inches in diameter. If it should be found that the distance of the arc does not agree with the distance of the last column of the table then the condensers are not what they are supposed to be. If the distance is greater than that in the table the condensers are of too long focal length, and if it is less their local length is too short.

Note: The table is complied on the assumption that the arc is 4½ inches from the center of the condenser combination which, I believe, is the best possible position. The different distances shown in the last column of the table is due to the limited number of sizes of condensers we have to choose from.

Upon all of which the editor refuses to be interv.ewed, except that he does not understand the last formula. Since, assuming a cone length of 20 inches, expressed as a fraction this would be $\frac{1}{4.5} + \frac{1}{20} = \frac{1}{x}$. Perhaps I am thick headed, but I do not make any sense out of that particular proposition. As to the balance of it I respectfully refer it to Professor Wall, brother James and the rest of the department fans, who will no doubt dissect the table, and limber up its joints if it needs any limbering.

Disturbed His Slumbers.

Madison, Missouri, writes:

> Enclosed find twenty-five cents, for which send me the question booklet. Have been in the business for three years, and if I knew as much as I thought I did when I began operating I would certainly be some operator. But the questions have disturbed my slumbers, and I believe every operator who wishes to succeed ought to study them. Keep up the good work. As for myself I am trying to deliver the goods on the screen to the best of my ability.

I am glad to know that the questions have stirred you up, Madison, and trust you won't allow yourself to re-enter slumberland, because in this swift day and age the slumberer is likely to awaken to see the dust of the procession disappearing in the dim distance, and himself camped along the road side with the other has-beens.

The Kindergarten Class.

A San Francisco correspondent in a letter to the editor says:

> I must compliment you on the department, which seems to have grown out of the kindergarten class, and to be proceeding along lines which make real operators sit up and look around a bit.

Yes, but you must remember that it is only of late that the profession of operating has advanced out of the "kindergarten" state, and it is not very far out of it even now. When I started the old "Operators' Column" February 19, 1910, the whole business of operating was very much kindergarten. There were very few, if any operators who had any accurate knowledge of any of the various things which go to make up projection, whereas the great mass of them knew just about enough to make a rather indifferent splice, thread a machine, and get a light of some sort, but the "sort" was usually decidedly rotten.

The editor has recently been really surprised, and most agreeably surprised, too. No longer than a year ago he could not name more than two or three houses in all New York City where he could confidently send a visitor. He can now name several times that number where the projection is excellent, and in many instances all that could be desired by the most exacting. He was surprised down in Philadelphia, because in the few theaters visited he found operators putting on very good work, even though badly hampered by totally unreasonably narrow observation ports. In the west, last summer, he found much to praise, and comparatively little to criticise, therefore, taking everything into consideration, he is prepared to say that operating as a whole has advanced out of the kindergarten class and naturally the projection department has advanced in proportion.

I firmly believe, however, that even now there is still room for much improvement in our very best work, or, in other words, in the work of our very best men. The actual result on the screen, as now put forth by some of the high-class men, cannot, I think, be largely improved upon, except that some plan be found through which we may secure a greater stereoscopic effect. But I think we will find ways and means to put on the same result at a considerable less expenditure of power and light; also I think the light tone will be greatly improved. I do not think the ideal screen has yet been found. The lens system of the projector is a miserable make-shift, particularly the condenser end, and that cannot be changed, or at least it will not be changed until a practical positive method of stopping breakage and discoloration is discovered. But the former, I believe, is very nearly accomplished and the latter is, I am sure, only a matter of cost which will amount to nothing once breakage is stopped, since the manager can well afford to pay even as much as ten dollars for a set of condenser lenses which will produce high class results if he can feel assured they will not break. I am also of the opinion that our projection carbons can and will be vastly improved by chemicalizing to improve the light tone.

And now, gentlemen, since we have advanced out of the kindergarten class, let me ask that some of you stop acting like children, climb into the band wagon and help us to place operating on a still higher plane; secure for the operator that remuneration which is due him, and advance the knowledge of our profession to a point where the tyro cannot enter into successful competition.

Kid Operator Injured.

Down in Fort Worth, Texas, the Elk's theater on North Main street had a fire recently. According to reports the machines in this theater were operated without fire shutters, and the operating room ceiling was so low that the operator could not stand upright. Early Eaton, a fourteen-year-old boy, son of A. W. Eaton, superintendent of the Cleveland Construction Company, was at the moment operating the machines. According to the report of a local paper young Eaton moved the machine aside and climbed out through the observation port, falling twelve feet down into the audience, sustaining probably fatal injuries. This boy was relieving the regular operator. The film became ignited, whereupon Eaton grabbed it from the machine and threw it on the floor behind him, where it fell upon three reels lying upon the floor. Naturally there were doings right then and there and escape through the door was cut off. There was, of course, a panic in the audience, but fortunately beyond the burning of 5,000 feet of film, and the serious injury to the child operator, the scare was the most serious direct result. It is to be hoped that the manager of this particular theater had to pay for the 5,000 feet of film, in which case he will probably awake to the fact that in the long run the employment of a cheap operator who will work in a little, narrow, contracted cracker box and be satisfied to have a fourteen-year-old boy for relief, does not pay very good dividends.

Enterprising.

Navasota, Texas, writes:

> Enclosed find $2.50 for the Handbook. Am never satisfied with my screen results as long as there is any possible chance for improvement. It is my desire to be above the grade of mediocrity displayed by the general run of country operators, meaning the operator in the small town where there is no examination required.

Assuming this man to be sincere, he is the kind I like to help. It is a very genuine pleasure to the editor to help those who help themselves. Navasota is taking precisely the right course to improve himself. He is preparing to combine practical experience in the operating room with theoretical knowledge taken from books, and that, as I have many times pointed out, is the quickest, surest road to excellence. The man who refuses to buy books and study, simply proclaims himself a laggard. He refuses to take advantage of the knowledge possessed by others who have specialized along certain lines, and he, more than anyone else, is the loser. My compliments to you Navasota, and may your wish become true in the fulness of time.

Springfield, Illinois, Fight.

Springfield, Illinois, orders a list of the questions and says:

> Will be glad at any time to give you any desired information with regard to conditions in Springfield. Local 323 is now engaged in a hard fight, but our men are loyal, and we have been able to win over four of the eight houses. We hope soon to be able to report more of them in line.

We are glad to know that the Springfield boys are winning out, because, from what little I know of the matter, their demands are just. I would suggest, however, that instead of offering to send details it would have been more to the purpose if Springfield had incorporated these aforesaid details in his letter.

For the reason that the Moving Picture World is purely and wholly a trade paper, which, to the best of its ability, serves all branches of the industry, it is obviously impractical for the projection department, which handles all matters pertaining to operators, to take sides in controversies as between different branches or divisions of the trade, meaning, of course, in this instance, labor disputes.

It is the design, however, of this department to serve the best interests of the business, and it can and will set forth facts in any case of this kind, and do what it can to induce one or both sides to listen to reason. It can and will favor the side of the operator when it shows that the operators' contention is right and just, but it cannot admit to its columns letters from either individual operators or operators' unions, or from individual managers, or managers' unions, which deal in abuse rather than argument. This department cannot and will not uphold the practice of violence by either side, but its columns are open to either side to present a fair and square argument as to the merits of the case. So far as I understand the difficulty in Springfield the contention of the operators' union is based in justice, and the managers are absolutely in error in fighting the men under the conditions. The men have asked nothing unreasonable; in fact, they might have asked considerably more, and still not have been unreasonable. It is, therefore to be hoped the managers of the four houses still holding out will soon realize the fact that in fighting a proposition of this kind they are simply standing in their own light, for they are fighting something which they ought to have voluntarily offered their operators long ago.

Unsigned Letter.

From Springfield, Ohio, comes a letter signed only with the initials of the writer. In this letter he charges the Springfield exhibitors, or some of them, with very bitterly opposing the formation of an operators' union in that city. He says that Springfield operators go on duty at 10 A. M. and work until 11 P. M., and that chief operators get from $11.00 to $14.00 a week. He also states that some of them have to run gas engines.

In the first place, letters, in order to receive attention, absolutely must be signed. The name of the writer will not be published if he requests the same withheld, but as an evidence of good faith we positively must have it.

I would have thrown this letter into the waste-paper basket very promptly, but, assuming the matter therein contained to be even approximately correct, it ought to receive publicity. I can hardly think that the Springfield managers, either as individuals or as a body, would be so foolish as to oppose the formation of a union or the raising of salaries, if they are at any such ridiculous plane as that named. It should scarcely be necessary to point out to the Springfield exhibitors that it is the height of absurdity to place their projection in the hands of fourteen-dollar-a-week men. A man can earn very nearly that much shoveling dirt in the street, or chopping cordwood. I am loath to believe Springfield exhibitors would make the income of their houses very largely dependent upon the efforts of so cheap a man. If they are doing so, then they stand in need of considerable education as to the possibilities of projection. If they will come to New York I will gladly show and demonstrate to them the difference between the work of the well paid, high-class man and the work of the cheaper variety.

Motiograph.

Moose Lake, Minnesota, writes:

> Am using a 1912 1A motiograph and having trouble with the machine pounding. This pounding all depends upon the position of the framing device. When set so that the ball shaft lies straight, it does not pound so much. Any operator having had a like experience will please let me know what is wrong.

That is not at all necessary, Moose Lake. I can tell you what the difficulty is with one hand tied behind by back. The bearings of the ball shaft are worn. The remedy is new bearings.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

The new second edition of the

MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK FOR MANAGERS AND OPERATORS

By F. H. Richardson

420 Pages Illustrated

$2.50 Each Postage Paid

will be the standard textbook on the subject for many years.

Address all orders and remittances to

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Comments on the Films

Licensed

MYSTERY OF THE FADELESS TINTS (Edison), June 30.—The eighth of the series of the "Chronicles of Cleek." In some respects this is a meritorious offering, but it contains inconsistencies; elements that are intended to be gripping and interesting seem to be devoid of conviction. A well produced picture photographically, but hardly up to the standard this series has maintained heretofore.

THE WIRE CHIEF'S REWARD (Kalem), June 30.—An exciting but somewhat incongruous offering which embraces many gripping scenes. The photography and acting are very commendable, but the action of the plot contains many inconsistencies.

THE DARING YOUNG PERSON (Essanay), June 30.—This is a very interesting pictureplay in which Ruth Stonehouse, in the character of a wealthy broker's daughter, convinces her father, who claims that chivalry is dead as regards young men of the twentieth century, that he is mistaken. Richard Travers essays the part of her suitor and qualifies in every respect. Well produced.

A FRENCH VILLAGE IN SENEGAL, WEST AFRICA (Pathe), June 30.—This is a travel picture which is very interesting and is on the same reel with Venomous Serpents.

VENOMOUS SERPENTS (Pathe), June 30.—On the same reel with "A French Village in Senegal, West Africa." This is zoological and educational in nature, but not very pleasant for the majority of spectators to view.

ONE SUIT OF CLOTHES (Melies), June 30.—This is not an original plot, as it has been used by authors in farces, sketches, etc., many times, but it is at least amusing. Imagine two impecunious young gentlemen who have literary aspirations, reduced to the condition of the possession of one decent suit of clothes. The finale has been cleverly handled and introduces many laughable complications.

HEARTS OF MEN (Selig), June 30.—A man who has been unjustly charged with crime flees to the desert, where he is relentlessly hunted by the sheriff. Many thrilling scenes occur, including a realistic sandstorm. During the action fate forces them to become friends, through thirst. Ten years later a beautiful ending occurs, involving the progeny of both the fathers who fought for their lives in the desert sands.

THE WALKO SISTERS (Lubin), June 30.—This is a Lubin comedy, somewhat better than usual. It gains many laughs and has been well directed and photographed. The pouring rain scenes are very realistic, with one or two exceptions. There is a vein of pathos blended in with the comedy scenes that adds greatly to the plot. A very good number.

BACK TO THE SIMPLE LIFE (Edison), July 1.—A comedy that will appeal to the picture going element forced to live in apartments. It is concluded to escape the noise and other objectionable features of flat life by going back to the quietness of the country. The experiences make good healtry comedy and the family is glad to get back to the old flat. Sally Crute and Richard Tucker make this a good, entertaining offering in all respects.

THE EMPTY SLEEVE (Selig), July 1).—This is a well produced and intensely interesting visualization, containing many heart interest scenes that are all consistent. There is an out-of-the-ordinary episode in the plot which is very gripping and intense. A wholesome and happy ending makes this picture a most pleasing one to view.

THE CIRCUS AND THE BOY (Vitagraph), July 1.—This is a delightful comedy; it takes one back to childhood's happy hours, when barefooted, in the early hours of the morn all the kids in town would start out to meet the circus which had been billed for days. Looking at this picture, any one who has had the experience, could feel the cool dust of the country road squash up between his toes. Elaine Sterne is the author of this beautiful picture, and Tefft Johnson has ably directed it. Sonny Jim (little Bobby Connelly) has done the rest. No one is too old heartily to enjoy this offering.

THE FABLE OF THE GOOD FAIRY (Essanay), July 1.—This is a comical story of a society woman who exploits her uplift ideas in her own sweet way. With the assistance of her chauffeur she tours through the districts monopolized by the poor and lowly. She is all hooked up and carries a fist full of good advice, but when she attempts to deliver it she meets up with many adventures and a good many other things she fails to appreciate. Mabel Eaton is Mrs. Peacock; Eddie Redway, Lillian Drew and Louise Willis make this offering most enjoyable.

TWO STEPCHILDREN (Vitagraph), July 2.—Written by W. A. Tremayne, and directed by Theodore Marston, it makes a very interesting visualization in which James Morrison and Dorothy Kelly play the parts of the two stepchildren. The plot is full of interesting incidents, which take place both in the city and country. The closing scenes are quite gripping, bordering on the tragic, but the ending is very satisfactory and pleasing. It will interest any audience.

HEARST-SELIG PICTORIAL, NO. 36 (Selig), July 2.—Many interesting scenes are shown, including the decorating of the New York firemen with badges for bravery, scenes in Mexico and California, Children's Carnival in Chicago, the route of the airship America, the first lap of which is 1,140 miles, the second being 665 miles to the main land.

WOMANLY CURIOSITY (Melies), July 2.—This is what might be termed a relief comedy—that is, it contains elements of real comedy—not slap dash. A wife whose bump of curiosity is abnormally developed is made to realize this fact by her husband, in an original manner. This is a well produced and acted offering in every resepct, and is somewhat of a lesson to the female of the species.

SOPHIE GETS STUNG (Essanay), July 2.—This is the third and last concerning the wooing of Sophie, of Snakeville. Margaret Joslin, Victor Potel, Harry Todd, Bud Jerome and True Boardman go through a heap of trouble, each attempting to outwit the other to marry Sophie. Many humorous situations pertain; disheartened they leave Sophie pining after them, and this is where Sophie gets stung.

THE GOAT (Biograph), July 2.—This is on the same reel with "The Fireman's Social," a burlesque comedy, which is certainly broad enough in every sense as regards rough and tumble in the action.

THE FIREMAN'S SOCIAL (Biograph), July 2.—On the same reel with "The Goat." This is another slap-stick comedy which is full of chases, bumps and tumbles. There is one real comedy scene which gets over in good shape.

A TRAIN OF INCIDENTS (Vitagraph), July 3.—There are many laughable situations in this comedy, written by Elaine Sterne, and produced by George D. Baker. John Bunny and Flora Finch have the leading parts. The plot is a splendid one for comedy purposes, most of the scenes taking place on a Pullman car and a diner on an overland train. Going, they start as strangers; returning, they are all married. See the picture and you will enjoy a good laugh.

MAKING GOOD WITH HER FAMILY (Selig), July 3.—On the same reel with "Doc Yak Wishes." Absurdities seem to be the main feature of this picture.

DOC YAK WISHES (Selig), July 3.—On the same reel with "Making Good with Her Family."

THE DOOM OF DUTY (Lubin), July 3.—A western military drama, written by Will M. Ritchey and produced by Tom Forman. This plot is located on the Mexican border. Velma Whitman essays the role of Rita Valdez, the daughter of a Mexican who lives on the American side. (H. S. Wilson), Tom Forman, is cast as Captain Barter, commander of a patrol. Many beautifully photographed scenes are embraced in this picture which are also very gripping in action.

FLEEING FROM THE FLEAS (Kalem), July 3.—On the same reel with "Trooping the Colors." A boisterous comedy the plot of which is quite original and which contains a love episode. The misadventures of the rivals' hired dress suits and a dog, not saying anything of a mess of fleas, furnish the comedy. The usual chase occurs, with police mounted on skates.

TROOPING THE COLORS (Kalem), July 3.—On the same reel with "Fleeing from the Fleas." A state occasion in England where the colors of the various regiments embraced in the life guards, no member of which is less than six feet tall, are trooped amid impressive ceremony before Buckingham Palace.

THE LITTLE HOBO (Selig), July 4.—This is a story written by Alfred H. Giebler and directed by Oscar Eagle. The little hobo (Leila Frost), averts a collison after she has been befriended by Jimmie Maxwell (Harold Vosburgh), telegraph operator of "The lonesomest station on the Western Division." The story is an interesting one and the parts are well acted, but the water tank scene where the little hobo stops the train is weak and unconvincing.

IT'S A SHAME (Lubin), July 4.—On the same reel with "The Kidnapped Bride." Good for laughs.

THE KIDNAPPED BRIDE (Lubin), July 4.—On the same reel with "It's a Shame." Burlesque in the broadest sense.

THE POLITICAL BOSS (Kalem), July 4.—A story of political intrigue which involves the editor of a country newspaper, "Owl" Jackson, a political boss; Nonpareil Jones, a tramp printer; Clara, the Judge's lovely daughter, and the remainder of the nine hundred inhabitants of Rayville. The newspaper office is destroyed by fire and several other things happen.

BRONCHO BILLY'S PUNISHMENT (Essanay), July 4.—This is advertised as a startling drama that teaches a moral and features G. M. Anderson. It requires and displays a wonderful amount of anguish and gruesomeness to arrive at the moral part, in the finale.

MOLLY, THE DRUMMER BOY (Edison), July 4.—An adaptation from the novel written by Harriet T. Comstock. It is directed by George A. Lessey. Viola Dana is Molly, the Drummer Boy. The cast is a large one and contains many prominent Edison actors. The story is a beautiful one in the novel form, but the adapter or director, or both, have left much to be desired. This story could have stood two reels; however, it is very edifying.

THE CRACKSMAN'S GRATITUDE (Biograph), July 4.—A very cleverly written and produced picture-drama, but with rather a sad ending. The story of the plot is somewhat improbable, but taken as a whole it is interesting to the spectator.

THE FALSE AND THE TRUE (Vitagraph), July 6.—The story is not very convincing, and while the staging and acting are fair the offering suffers some from lack of freshness and real life. Elizabeth R. Carpenter is the author and Theodore Marston put it on. The photography is not quite so good as the usual Vitagraph product.

EVA, THE CIGARETTE GIRL (Biograph), July 6.—A burlesque that appealed to many in the audience as funny and there is a good deal of astonishing work in it. For example, there is a big bunch of snakes that none dare to handle except the cry-baby hero and the double-dyed villain.

Licensed Specials.

THE POOR FOLK'S BOY (Vitagraph), June 30.—This two-part pictureplay is along the conventional lines of the mortgage on the farm order, but has been well produced and contains much that is of heart interest, particularly regarding the boy and his dog. The farm scenes, especially the barnyard where swine and poultry are shown, are very realistic. This is a well acted and clearly photographed production and should make good in any house.

THE LIVING FEAR (Lubin), July 1.—A psychological drama by Shannon Fife and produced by Joseph Smiley. It is in two reels. The leading part, Richard Wayne, is played by Clarence Elmer, who is obsessed with a monomania for appropriating diamonds. The plot is all very interesting, but in places seems to be padded considerably. The acting is splendidly done on the part of every one in the cast.

THE FATAL PORTRAIT (Kalem), July 1.—In this two-part picture the plot is filled with jealousy and love. Irene Boyle plays the leading part, assisted by a strong cast. There are conventional features, and although somewhat thrilling scenes occur the desired effect does not seem to be obtained. The acting and photography are both creditable. The finale is satisfactory.

THE SHADOW OF TRAGEDY (Lubin), July 2.—This is a two-reel pictureplay written by Emmett Campbell Hall and produced by Arthur Johnson, who plays the leading part in the last reel. It is very interesting in character and has been well produced. Twenty years elapse between the first and second reel. Raymond Hackett plays little Robert, supposed to be about ten years old. Lottie Briscoe and a splendid cast make this a most creditable offering.

THE PRESCRIPTION (Melies), July 2.—A dramatic photoplay in two parts. This is a superior production and so well acted that subtitles are scarcely necessary. It illustrates the carelessness and indifference to charity patients in some hospitals. A human life is almost sacrificed and a mother's mind almost bereft of reason by hurried diagnosis of the case. A harmless prescription is given her by one of the staff physicians who later receives a severe rebuke from the head physician, who accidentally discovers the neglect and saves the child. Beautiful scenes and light effects obtain in this production.

THE SHATTERED TREE (Edison), July 3.—A two-part pictureplay written by Ben Wilson, directed by Ben Wilson, who plays the leading part, one of the two brothers, the other being played by Harry Beaumont; Bliss Milford and Gertrude McCoy play the female roles. The remainder of the cast is made up of the leading Vitagraph players. It is a story of two brothers, one good but bad, and the other bad but good. It is well directed, acted and photographed. The ending scene contains a good "punch."

TRINKETS OF TRAGEDY (Essanay), July 3.—The plot of this two-part picture contains intrigue and love. The death sign of a black hand gang is introduced and causes much mystery until a detective gathers in enough evidence, through a plot, and finally accomplishes a solution. The photography in this picture is well done.

THE TOLL (Vitagraph), July 4.—Advertised as a special feature in two parts. Elizabeth R. Carpenter is responsible for this creation and Theodore Marston is the director. James Morrison, George Cooper, Dorothy Kelly, Marie Weirman and several others labor hard to make it interesting. Its main feature are stabbing, shooting and vengeance. The photography and scenic effects are adequate.

THE WEAKLING (Kalem), July 6.—For extended review of this picture, that has an unusually dramatic and interesting situation, see page 38 of July 4 issue of the Moving Picture World.

REPORTER JIMMIE INTERVENES (Selig), July 6.—This two-reel picture by W. E. Wing is not without the elements of popularity. It deals with a young reporter and how he gets evidence that a certain member of the City Council has sold himself to the railway trust. Yet, to tell the truth, the whole spirit of the picture is brutal, and only brutal people could wholly enjoy it. The councilman's stenographer betrays him to the reporter, who thereupon burglarizes the home of the railway president and eavesdrops till he hears what is going on. He then forcibly robs the president of the evidence of the bribe and there is a chase which is not quite convincing. The staging and the photography are fair.

Independent.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL NO. 24 (Reliance), June 29.—Light, breezy, fresh and interesting, this serial picture keeps up to the mark very well. A number of persons more or less well known are introduced this week. Staging and everything else as usual.

DID SHE RUN? (Royal), July 4.—Very little fun comes directly from the situations in this rough and tumble farce. It has a comedy force of cops and a lot of comedy neighbors, especially one woman who is made to put on trousers by her "skirt" friends. There is very little reason for this step, but from it there follows plenty of the usual farcical happenings, for she is chased by the cops and takes refuge in a house from which she pours water down upon them. It will make laughter in most places; but it is not the kind of picture that would make a reviewer laugh.

THE COOKED GOOSE (Thanhouser), July 5.—Two weary Willies and a cop furnish most of the fun in this farce, which is cleverly worked out, except that it hardly convinces us to see the tramps get the goose away from the cop, once his hands have fastened on it. It was stolen goods and he had found it on the tramps. His wife had cooked it and it was waiting for his copship to come home from the prison when they steal it again and get away. However, it is a farce and not a dissertation on sociology. It is meant to make laughter and will do so with a reasonable certainty; for it is cleverly acted, well put on and clearly photographed.

BILL NO. 1 (Komic), July 5.—A cleverly acted and diverting picture with laughable situations and good characters. This promises to be a desirable series. This first number is very good.

THE ONLY CLUE (Majestic), July 7.—This clearly constructed picture of human fates develops to a new punch that is likely to stick in the memory for some time. It gives us a yarn without any particular moral, but it is clean. The "only clue" is a scar on the wrist of a young blacksmith who is innocent, but thought to be guilty of murder. He is "making good" in another city when some busybody writes to the police about him and a detective comes to investigate. The smith is at work at his forge, to which his wife, not knowingly, directs the detective. When the man learns what is wanted he burns off the scar in the forge fires and the "only clue" is destroyed. It is well put on and the acting is substantial, so that we can safely commend it as a good offering.

HOW IZZY WAS SAVED (Reliance), July 8.—A fresh and laughable joke makes this lively farce a likely offering. It is worked-up well and has a number of freshly thought-out things that brighten its development. A safe and pleasing number.

THE OLD RAG DOLL (Imp), July 9.—A picture of tender sentiment that is pleasingly solemn and has the human quality that will make it an excellent offering in theaters and in any church at all. It is not religious; it's a human picture. The father of a family gets drunk and comes home discontented. There's a quarrel, from which the two children (the Lees and as fine a little actress and actor as one could find) hurry away upstairs and hide. The parents think that they have gone to the street and are lost. Leah Baird and William Shea play the leads and do excellent work in making it an exceptional offering. The camera work is of high order. Both script and staging are the work of Herbert Brenon and have the good quality that he is apt to put into his pictures.

SNOOKEE'S FLIRTATION (Sterling), July 9.—A rough and knockabout farce in the usual Sterling style. It is not so funny as the best of this brand; for the scheme calls for business a bit too rough for more discriminating patrons. It is a sort of "Merry Wives of Windsor" picture without the humanity and wit, but will make laughter.

THE FIGHT AT LONELY GULCH (Frontier), July 12.—A typical western elemental picture with a fight between outlaws and sheriff with his posse. The story is not strong enough to give much real life feeling to what takes place, and although the revolver fight is well handled, we are not so deeply interested as in some other films, where the same kind of action has been better bolstered. The camera work is of good quality and the scenes are well chosen.

THE LEAVEN OF GOOD (Thanhouser), July 12.—A picture of sentiment that will be likely to please the many, though it has no pretentions to greatness. It has a character, called "Harry the Rat," a gangster as evil as "they make them," but who shows that he has deep in his nature a humanity that can be appealed to. There is no truth in the story and it has not been put on in a way to hide its lack of logic. The photography is clear.

PLAIN MARY (Rex), July 12.—In this number Lois Weber plays the part of a college widow who decides to try the latest styles to relieve her excessive plainness. The story which develops is not entirely new, but it is put on attractively and is the kind that will please the average audience very much.

WILLY AND THE PARISIANS (Eclair), July 12.—This is a colored half-reel comedy, with a pretty French setting. It shows how some country people conspired to get rid of their city cousins, who came unexpectedly on a visit. A pleasing plot of the slight order.

LILY AS A LITTLE MOTHER (Eclair), July 12.—This, on same reel with above, is also colored. It shows how the little girl plays mother to her dog. This should please women and children particularly.

OUT OF THE VALLEY (Victor), July 13.—A Western offering quite out of the ordinary in plot. J. Warren Kerrigan plays the supposed outlaw. He saves the sheriff's life during a realistic attack by Indians on the wagon train. The settings are typical and the photography only fair, but the windup of the story is unusually pleasing. A good Western number.

VIVIAN'S FOUR BEAUS (Crystal), July 14.—This is a laughable but rather foolish picture and the plot is old enough to have more hair on it than the four beaus could boast of. The poor old toupee is the theme, as Vivian has vowed she will never marry a bald head. She finally captures a man that her little brother's fish-hook doesn't uncover.

WHAT PEARL'S PEARLS DID (Crystal), July 14.—On the same reel with "Vivian's Four Beaus." Pearl undertakes to treat her husband, who arrives home ill. She administers all the pills in the house to him and in her excitement accidentally breaks her pearl necklace and places the pearls in an empty pill box. The husband swallows them. The doctor is called and administers an emetic. Somewhat amusing, also otherwise.

UNIVERSAL IKE AND THE NEW COOK (Universal Ike), July 14.—A farce that will make laughter, for it is speedy and there is freshness in it. A fair offering.

HER GRAVE MISTAKE (Nestor), July 15.—A Mexican border line story, with Murdock MacQuarrie, Lon Chaney and Agnes Vernon in the cast. The chief interest centers about an attack on the pumping station, which is about to be blown up when the hero arrives. There is good suspense toward the close of this and the climax is exciting.

WILLIE WALRUS AND THE AWFUL CONFESSION (Joker), July 15.—A burlesque number with William Wolbert as the detective and Bess Meredyth as the hard-working novelist. The action is of the eccentric sort and carries no particular plot with it. Many of the situations are decidedly funny and the character work good. A pleasing number of its type.

THE UNIVERSAL BOY (Imp.), July 16.—Series No. 1.—One day in the life of little Matty Roubert is introduced in this picture from the time he arises in the morning until he goes back to his bed at night. King Baggot, William Shay and Frank Crane are shown at the rehearsals at the Imp studio. Later Matty goes to the ball grounds, where he meets John McGraw. Scenes are also shown at the Globe theater, where Matty sees himself on the screen.

PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION UP TO DATE (Victor), July 17.—Some interesting bits that show how the work on the mammoth exposition is progressing. The photography, without being artistic, is clear enough to give us a good idea of what is going go.

WHEN EDDIE WENT TO THE FRONT (Nestor), July 17.—This is a rather amusing comedy. Eddie is a cub society reporter and is sent to the front as war correspondent for his paper, on the Mexican border. He meets with all sorts of adventures, falls in love, falls out again and barely escapes with his life.

HIS WIFE'S FAMILY (Joker), July 18.—A domestic comedy number in which events are rather jumbled, at least the plot is so difficult to follow that the humor is confused and uncertain. An ordinary release.

Independent Specials.

THE ANGEL OF CONTENTION (Majestic), July 5.—With Lillian Gish as the Angel, this two-part picture works up a situation with sharp, bold strokes that lay the whole inner meaning of it all quite bare to us. But then in the development one feels a distinct lessening of clearness and truth of meaning. The building up is far more convincing than the development and the padding is almost all in the second reel. The people of the Western village call Lillian "the Angel," because she has tended them in their troubles like one, and later, when the stranger comes and takes her away from the sheriff, a fiance whom she really doesn't love, they refuse to take kindly to him. How this gets him into danger and how the magnanimous sheriff and the angel save him make an acceptable offering. The staging, acting and camera work are all good.

THE LADY OF THE ISLAND (Imp), July 6.—A romance in two reels, written by Stewart Peyton and put on by Frank Crane. The heroine is a poor, rich orphan left in the keeping of her villainous uncle. She owns the Isle of Romance, where her home is, and two young college men land there to camp out. In the working out of this situation many things happen that are full of romance and pleasing, but now and then the illusion runs a bit thin. Yet the story interests and has, as one of its features, a remarkably well trained dog seemingly endowed with intelligence. This dog is used to effect the rescue when the hero is shut up in the cellar and also to entrap the villain and his son. There are scenes on water and on land. The photography is good and the whole makes a very passable special offering.

THE BEGGAR PRINCE OF INDIA (Victor), July 10.—A three-reel romance in which the story slowly makes itself clear after obscurity. This lack of sharp definition at first hampers it in the same way that poor projection would hamper it as a picture. It never becomes what could accurately be termed a picture with a punch, but it never fails to interest; the quality of its story is not artistic or truthful. It is a pretty picture filled with scenes in which graceful acting, well-chosen or constructed backgrounds each add its part to a delightful whole. The script was written by Edward Warren and produced by Charles Beresford. The photography is clear.

THE SEVERED HAND (Powers), July 17.—A three-reel number of international intrigue, written by Bess Meredyth, with Cleo Madison and George Larkin in the leading roles. The first scenes are in England and possess good atmosphere. Later the story shifts to Washington, D. C. The story is rather ordinary, but manages to get hold of the interest and keep it. Miss Madison did some very pleasing work indeed in the part of the countess; we have never seen her to better advantage. The story closes with the usual round up of the gang and the reunion of the lovers.

DEBORAH (Thanhouser), July 7.—Clearly aimed to please the many, this two-reel offering in which is pictured the trials and sorrows of Deborah, a Jewish girl in Austria of about a hundred years ago, is "a good guess" from the exhibitor's standpoint. The story is likely to convince the heart, although the mind will, if in a critical mood, find much that is not strongly logical in it and a bit of mawkish sentimentality. It carries the clear earmarks of the stage melodramas of the last period and includes a fine scene in which a Catholic priest stands off a mob intent on lynching the Jewess and another big picture of the persecuted girl's forgiveness of the lover who had let himself be deceived about her. Maud Fealey takes the role of Deborah and is adequately supported by a large and well-trained cast. The photography is excellent.

LUCILLE LOVE, No. 14 (Gold Seal), July 14.—The remarkable adventures of this heroine are continued. The thieving butler and Hugo have another fight and it now looks as though the butler has been shot; however, we are left in doubt and may see him at his stealthy work again. It has the suspense that we have expected and it makes a very fair offering.

SHORTY TURNS JUDGE (Broncho), July 15.—A two-part picture, where Shorty plays a joke on the boys. He disguises himself as Judge Fulsom, who has been bitten by a rattlesnake, presents himself to the sheriff, who has been having trouble with some of the cowboys, and he puts them in jail. Later he finds the sheriff is guilty instead of the boys and sentences him to six months on the rock pile. The boys elect Shorty as sheriff.

THE SOB SISTER (Rex), July 16.—A two-reel number, written by Harry Car, with Herbert Rawlinson and Anna Little in the leading roles. This is a newspaper yarn and an entertaining one. The runaway girl, whom the sob sister has aided, is about to be given publicity of an undesirable sort when the managing editor learns she is his own daughter. The climax has in it an element of surprise and the views of the composing room and linotype machines should prove very interesting. A good newspaper yarn enacted by a pleasing cast.

STAR OF THE NORTH (Domino), July 16.—This is a two-part Indian drama and contains many beautiful scenes. The plot is laid among the Sioux and Cheyenne tribes and the parts in the cast are all well rendered. The inevitable renegade figures in the cast and causes much trouble. This is a creditable Indian drama.

THE CRUISE OF THE HELL SHIP (Balboa).—A three-part Box Office Attraction that is likely to please; for the story (it is one of Jack London's and was called "The Sea Wolf") is out of the ordinary. The staging is fair and the photography is clear. There are some startling scenes of a wreck at sea that are good specimens of what the camera can do in the illusion way when it is carefully manipulated. These sea pictures are apt to be popular, and in this there is good action and a fair brand of sentiment.

CHAINS OF THE PAST (Box Office Attractions).—An artistic picture in three parts. The story is not unusual, but has been made convincing by skillful acting and is full of subtilly registered points that make it an interesting and acceptable offering. Among its best assets is the leading woman, who is charmingly pretty and whose drawing of her role, that of a woman full of the "Old Nick" and married to an earnest professional man, is delightful. All of the characters seem individual and clear-cut personalities and this is also a great point in the picture's favor. On the whole, a very good offering.

THE CITY (Kay-Bee), July 17.—This two-reel production is by Tom H. Ince and William Clifford. Raymond B. West produced it. The cast is a good one and the plot is a peculiar and original one, wherein the son saves the father from financial loss.

Against Promiscuous Serials

W. C. Quimby, of Zanesville, O., Writes that "Roars of Disgust" Came from His Audience When Story was "Left in the Air."

W. C. Quimby, of Zanesville, O., is sole owner of Quimby's Amusement Enterprises, which, reading from the Quimby letterhead, include "Quimby's $50,000 Sunny South, Largest Floating Theater in the World—Musical Comedy"; Quimby's Casino, Vaudeville; "Quimby's Airdome, Summer Stock," and "Quimby's New $50,000 Palace, photoplays." The following letter to the Moving Picture World expresses in no obscure terms this prominent amusement man's opinions upon the subject of "continued interest" pictures which has come in for no little discussion within the past few months:

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir:—I wish to register through the columns of your paper a most vigorous protest against the release of pictures in serial form like the Kay Bee. We ran today "The Voice at the Telephone," which comes in two sections. We got the first installment today (two reels), and after getting the audience worked up to a degree of interest a title is flashed, "This story will be continued next week." If the makers of this subject could have sat in the audience and heard the roar of disgust and the words of protest as they passed out they would pass up this thing for good and all. I am under the impression that a good serial if run on a specified day every week like "Kathleen" or "Million Dollar Mystery" is all right, providing not more than one a week is used, but this indiscriminate sending out to us exhibitors of these unheralded two-part serials is very bad and is sure to work untold damage to the industry if it is continued. The chances are that 50 per cent. of those who were here today will not be here to see the second two reels, and there will be another 50 per cent. who will be here on the day that we get the second part that missed the first installment, and will not know what they are looking at. Too many serials are going to play havoc with those who run too many of them or I will miss my guess. With kindest regards I am, Yours truly, Zanesville, O., June 29. W. C. QUIMBY.

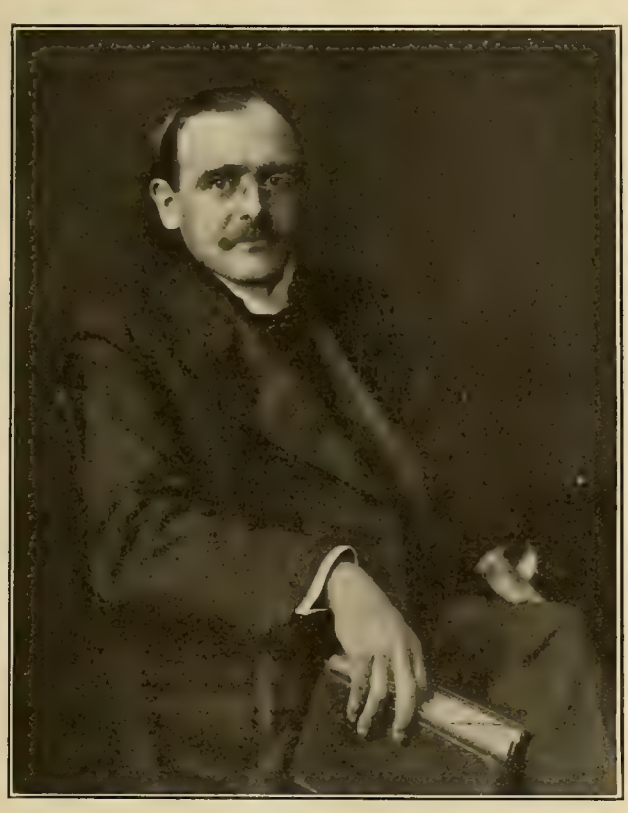
To Boom the Educational Film

Plans of the Affiliated Societies Which Will Specialize in Serving Churches and Schools—A Talk With the Rev. Dr. William Carter.

DR. WILLIAM CARTER, the well-known lecturer, who has for years been highly successful under the management of the J. B. Pond Lyceum Bureau, is the director of the Church, School and Social Welfare Film Company, in which the Duke of Manchester is actively interested.

Offices of the company have been opened at No. 18 East 41st street. They will occupy the entire twentieth floor. The company will be housed in the same offices with the International Educational League, which is another division of the same great project to make the kinematograph furnish education for both schools and adults.

Dr. Carter spends his entire time on working out the details of the plan and expects to have the companies ready for actual work by the early part of fall.



Dr. William Carter.

"We only organized three weeks ago," said Dr. Carter to a representative of The Moving Picture World as he sat behind a desk filled to overflowing. "These offices are only temporary. There is a good deal to be done before we can expect to get into working order. I want to say that there is one field which it seems to me has never been covered before and that is the production of religious pictures intended first and foremost for the churches. Religious films have been made, some of them quite good, but no one has ever attempted to supply the churches with special religious films, such as we will try to give them. I cannot say definitely when we will go into the producing of these films, but it will be soon. In the meantime we intend to supply not only churches but schools as well and social uplift organizations, such as temperance societies, social welfare settlements, playground associations, etc., with films specially suitable for them. We think that along these lines we will have good use for films dealing say, for instance, with the evils of child-labor, bad conditions in tenements, etc. We intend with these films to appeal not only to schools and societies but to the general public as well. The subjects for this department of our educational film service will be chosen with this end in view. Then we will have another department which will concern itself exclusively with technical needs of the schoolroom. We will make films teaching, for instance, geography, history and even arithmetic. From these studies we will go into the higher and highest branches. I believe that our connections will enable us to gather much valuable matter for the films. The Rockefeller Institute will aid us in the filming of surgical operations and the practice of surgery generally, and it will not be difficult to compile scientific and medical films which will be of great use to medical colleges. I have received assurances of support from the president of Princeton and of California University. The movement will have expert cooperation at every step. We hope to show the possibilities of the kinematograph as an educator in the most thorough and practical fashion."

Dr. Carter spoke in the earnest, convincing way which has made him famous as a platform orator. One could feel the energy and the promise of practical results behind all this splendid enthusiasm. He spoke of the profound interest which the Duke of Manchester has in the promotion of educational films.

"The Duke," said Mr. Carter, "will probably spend six months of the year collecting available subjects. His heart and soul are in this work. He will visit every part of the world and become the chief contributing editor to our kinematographic library. His knowledge of many interesting parts of the world, India, for instance, will be of great help in this work. His connections, too, will enable him to get rare opportunities for filming things which have never been seen or shown on films before."

"Do you propose to put out a regular service?" Dr. Carter was asked.

"Yes, indeed," Dr. Carter replied. "We have men engaged at present to offer our contracts for service to the churches in every part of the country. We expect to be able to furnish a dependable weekly service by the first of October. We will probably start with a weekly program of five reels. We will lease machines, screens and practically all the accessories to the churches for a nominal amount and churches will be privileged to use the machine and accessories while they take our service. Thus we expect to have circuits of churches just as there are circuits of theaters."

The International Education League is officered as follows: President, the Duke of Manchester; general manager, Blair Frasier; manager and director of the religious department, the Rev. William Carter, D.D. Ph.D.

JAMES YOUNG DENIES RUNNING AWAY.

James Young, the Vitagraph director, while driving his automobile recently accidentally struck down an eight-year-old boy. The following day, the New York City papers published a story, accusing Mr. Young of running away from the scene of the accident, without trying to render any assistance or even inquiring the extent of the boy's injuries. In fairness to Mr. Young, this assertion of cowardice should be contradicted, and the following letter from Mr. Young himself, will explain away the untrue assertions made regarding his conduct after the deplorable accident. Mr. Young's letter reads:

"I desire to state that the accounts published in the daily papers regarding the accident are just about as far from the truth as they could possibly be.

"I most emphatically assert that I did not run away. On the contrary, I went to the drug store, examined the boy, who deliberately ran in front of my car, as is so often done in this section, and offered to take the boy to the hospital. The druggist told me that he had sent for the ambulance. In the meantime, a crowd had collected around my car, when a man, Israel Luke by name, advised me to leave the neighborhood, because of the threatening attitude of the excited people. I gave him my card, yet hesitated to leave, but the crowd was so threatening that I decided to leave, inasmuch as there was no protection from the infuriated mob. I could not leave, however, until the man Luke, who seemed to have influence, assured them that he had my name and automobile number and could reach me at any time. Even then, they reluctantly made way for me to pass.

"I realize now that I should have notified the police, but after seeing the boy, who did not seem to be badly injured, and with the incidental excitement, I failed to advise the police.

"In conclusion, I wish to repeat, and most emphatically, that I did not run away in the cowardly manner stated by the papers. Very truly, JAMES YOUNG."

MR. MICHELL GOES TO EXCELSIOR.

A. Danson Michell has taken charge of the advertising and publicity department of the Excelsior Feature Film Company. Mr. Michell, who has had newspaper experience on daily and trade journals, will alternate between the executive offices at 110 West Fortieth street and the studio of the company at Lake Placid.

McRae's Bisons Back from Hawaii

THE Henry McRae 101 Bison Company has returned to the Hollywood (California) studios after a four months' trip in Hawaii. From the moment the steamer left San Pedro until it nosed again into the Los Angeles harbor, four months later, every moment was filled with interesting features.

Director McRae had promised to ship a two-reel picture every week when once established in the islands. Motion pictures taken in Hawaii had previously proved to be such a failure that there was not a bit of suitable equipment to be had on the islands. This necessitated building a studio and developing plant.

Actors are versatile folk. Therefore, though most of them had never before handled carpenter's tools, the McRae company, to a man, donned overalls and got busy. Arms and shoulders were sore, thumbs were pounded, but the grimy favorites didn't care. The work had to be done quickly so the promised schedule could be adhered to.

Everywhere in the islands the McRae company received flattering attention and made hosts of friends. Dinners, dances, automobile rides, yacht rides, picnics, etc., saw them as the guests of honor when there was not work to be done.

Every reel of the pictures turned out was filled with Bison punch. Besides these thrilling touches, the educational features, showing life of the natives in the present day and during the historic past, the many industries and customs of the country, and the carefulness of Uncle Sam's protection were all included.

The last feature picture made by the company on their trip was "Our Enemy's Spy." A parade of five thousand soldiers in the streets of Honolulu was used as one background, the whole five thousand being halted for several minutes while a scene was taken.

On the home trip the steamer was stopped in mid-ocean, supposedly for a derelict crash. Eight or ten passengers, including Bainbridge, Roselli and Marie Walcamp, jumped overboard, forty-four feet, a lifeboat being lowered to rescue them. In the story, Clifford is thrown overboard by his enemy. A life buoy, dropped over when the panic occurs, drifts within his reach and a day later he is picked up by a pleasure yacht. These scenes were taken about four miles from shore in water about five hundred feet deep.

All Universal employes and four hundred members of the Los Angeles Rotary Club were gathered at the Hollywood studios to greet the company on its return.

Harry McRae Directing a Scene in the Japanese Quarter of Honolulu.

Norbert A. Myles

THE handsome and curly-haired cowboy who is at present delighting the hearts of the feminine "movie" patrons throughout the country by his splendid characterizations and daring feats of riding in the western productions of the Eclair Film Company is Norbert A. Myles.

Mr. Myles has been appearing in motion pictures almost since their inception as a standard amusement, and has appeared in important roles with companies of such prominence as Pathe, Lubin and Kalem.

Born thirty years ago in Deadwood, S. D., he was brought up on a ranch until he reached the age of twenty. Mr. Myles has experienced every phase and condition of western life, and his present excellent horsemanship and wonderful handiness with a shooting-iron were only acquired after years of practice in herding cattle and driving off the various bands of rustlers who at one time infested the western grazing lands.

Joining a theatrical road company as one of its extras during its stay in Deadwood, Myles forced his way upward, until he was assigned the leading role in the show the second season. He has played with repertoire companies, worked in stock in various cities and left the road organization of "Down in Virginia" to play western leads with the Pathe Co., from which organization he shifted to Lubin. After an engagement of one year with Lubin he became affiliated with the Kalem players. He has been with the Eclair Western Company at Tucson, Arizona, for the past six months, and his work on the screen has been exceptionally good, especially in the story recently filmed from O. Henry's novel, entitled, "The Stirrup Brother," in which picture he played the lead.

Natives in a Battle Scene. The Background is Typical of the Hawaiian Islands.

"Forces of Evil"

Wife Under Spell of Hypnotism Becomes Prey of Evil Doctor in a Three-Part "Leading Players" Film.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PHOTOGRAPHED in the lively backgrounds of the Riviera and filled with the contrasts of light and darkness that bring out the inner quality of what any picture depicts, this three-reel "Leading Players" film, "The Forces of Evil, or The Dominant Will," makes an entertaining offering. The situation is simple enough. An evil but strong-willed doctor insinuates himself into the friendship of a man and wife, happy in their two children and in their mutual affection. There are some pretty home scenes, and then it is made clear that the doctor has fallen in love with the wife. She will have nothing to do with him at first; but he hypnotizes her and she loses her will and her knowledge of right and wrong. He forces her by the strength of his will to forsake her happy surroundings and her home and, after leaving a terrible note that makes her husband think she is willfully untrue, go away with him.

Scene from "The Forces of Evil" (Leading Players).

The husband, heartbroken, goes with his two children to live on the sea coast of the south of France as though to hide his sorrow amid lovely scenes of nature. The children one day see the mother, whom they are mourning as dead, and run to her. As though her mother love wakened the dormant soul in her from under the hypnotist's spell she remembers and holds out her hands to them. It is in vain. The stronger will of her captor renews his grip on her conscience and he leads her away. Now, through this chance meeting of her children, the father learns of her presence at the place and comes upon her on the beach. There is a struggle between him and the villainous doctor and he is left for dead, where later he is found by a coast guard and revived.

Now as though these two encounters had weakened the man's hold on the woman, she is not held down so completely as before and begins to struggle with her horrible fate. The villain makes her leave her husband's body lying among the rocks and climb up with him to the height; but he can no longer keep her from obeying him reluctantly. She turns to look once more. He attempts to restrain her and there is a struggle in which they both go over the cliff together and are discovered lying limp as death on the rocks. The husband, who has revived enough to sit up by the cabin of the coast guard, sees the two bodies taken past to the hospital and recognizes his one-time wife. Both are terribly injured. The woman is to recover and the man is to die. But he will not go without one more stab at the happiness of the woman whom he has so badly ill-treated already. When he learns that she has been forgiven and that he is to die, he writes to the authorities accusing the other man of throwing him over the cliff. This dastardly accusation is refuted by the testimony of the woman, and the closing scenes give several poetic pictures of happiness after tragic sorrows.

It is a picture that will please through its beauty of scenes and will hold with suspense those watching the development of the story. The acting is effective, and while all of it is natural, it has some particularly strong moments.

"The Lights o' London"

World Film Corporation Presents George R. Sims' Old-Time Melodrama in Five Reels.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THEATERGOERS of a generation ago will be interested in the five-part screen revival of George R. Sims' famous old melodrama, "The Lights of London," which is being shown by the World Film Corporation. Picturegoers of today will like it. They may notice the adoption of subterfuges, the use of convenient coincidences, the sort that help the construction over the fence, so to speak; the accidental dropping of a letter, the "meeting by chance" or the escape of a prisoner when muskets are discharged at him almost pointblank. There is a lot in "The Lights o' London" in the way of a story, much that appeals to the sympathy. It is of human interest. The rightful heir, a riotous young blood, is thrown out of his home by an irate father. When the son goes to London he takes with him the daughter of the lodgekeeper, and in town marries her. A nephew, Clifford, procures the theft of the family strong box; the father meets his death in trying to prevent the robbery. It is a long story before the accused and convicted son of the house is restored to his own and the guilty brought to justice, but it holds all the way.

Scene from "The Lights o' London" (World Film Corp.).

There are good scenes of rural England and of the city. We are shown the race over the turf on the issue of which Harold, the son, drops what little money he has brought to London with him. There are scenes of Regents Park, from the bridge of which the villainous cousin throws his former accomplice, now prosperous but still greedy, and sees Harold save the one-time gamekeeper from drowning. There is an exciting denouement in the courtroom, when the gamekeeper comes to court with a lawyer, bringing with him the will of the old squire, which in the commission of the theft had been abstracted from the strong box. It is this instrument which restores to Harold his father's estate, which unaccountably has been permitted to remain in the possession of the nephew. Clifford is denounced by his accomplice and all ends happily.

The story has been staged as a melodrama—that is, if acting may make it such. There is a tendency at times on the part of many of the cast to overact, an absence of the restraint which marks the work in the best English productions—and this is an English production—and in practically all of the American. No attempt has been made to set the story back to the period of its writing. "The Lights o' London" is plainly a tale of today, as is indicated by the garb of the characters and in the employment of automobiles and telephones. The unraveling of the plot is skillfully done—the story is clear.

BILLY FABLES WITH EDISON.

William Fables, for twenty-two years on the legitimate stage playing animal parts, is now with the Edison company as the "Goat" in the new series of "Buster Brown" comedies. Mr. Fables was the "Bear" in the "Alaskan," and the "Parrot" in "Humpty Dumpty." He is known as the master of animal parts and will prove a valuable factor in these comedies from the comic cartoons.

A Big New Enterprise.

The Liberty Motion Picture Company Has a Remarkably Compact and Complete Plant at Germantown, Pa.—They Have Begun to Make Pictures—Their Plans and Hopes.

By W. Stephen Bush.

IF THE BUILDING and furnishing of a most compact and complete motion picture plant is evidence of the optimism which still characterizes so many of our enterprises the Liberty Motion Picture Company may well serve as the best possible example.

You probably never heard of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, neither had I. That an undertaking of such magnitude was carried on in absolute quiet is, in itself, a most remarkable fact.

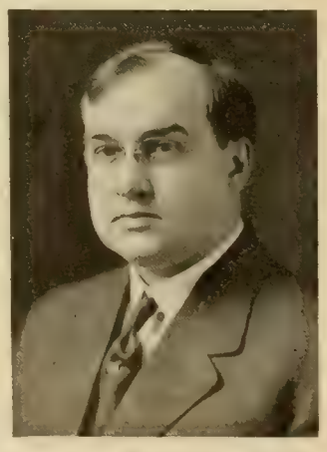
JOHN OXFORD,
President.

The Liberty Motion Picture Company is situated in quiet, old historic Germantown, just a few miles out of Philadelphia. An idea of its size may be gained by a statement of the dimensions of the plot upon which it has been built, 220x110. The building itself is nearly two hundred feet long and about fifty feet wide. From cellar to the roof the building and all its equipments speak of careful planning, aided by experience. The building and fitting of motion picture plants has progressed like every other branch of the industry. Improvements have been made in every phase of the mechanical preparation. Probably all studios both here and abroad have learned much by experience and have spent large sums of money in experimenting and in introducing improvements based upon these expensive tests and trials. The studio and plant of the Liberty Motion Picture Company seem to have benefited by all the lessons of the past, for every modern improvement is to be found there.

H. G. BOBB,
Vice-President and General Manager.

The Liberty Motion Picture Company, possessing this plant, which is nothing less than perfection in practical miniature, is ready to produce pictures. Indeed, it has started. It is always dangerous to prophesy, but it is safe to say that no company either here or abroad ever started out with better promise. In saying that the new company has taken advantage of every practical improvement discovered in the past I do not mean to say it has added no improvements of its own. It has not only shown remarkable skill and judgment in assembling the improvements in use in other plants, but they have displayed a mastery of detail and an almost inspired attention to details. I will mention but one example. Take the matter of dressing rooms for the artists. Artists are proverbially temperamental, they work under a severe strain; the slightest irritation and confusion often prevent them from doing their best. I have often wondered how under the system of keeping artists walking about the studio ready for the camera, but entirely uncertain about the hour of their appearance, any useful work can be expected of them. The Liberty Motion Picture Company has roomy, well-lighted and well-ventilated dressing rooms. Look out of the windows of any of them and no disillusioning sight meets the eye. Better still, there is a short stairs leading directly from the dressing rooms into the studios. It reminded me of the quiet passages in an old monastery, where the monks or nuns pass from church to cloister with nothing to disturb their peaceful contemplation. Inspiration and the fire of enthusiasm are very precious and really indispensable in the making of good pictures. Things are arranged in this plant in such a manner that inspiration and enthusiasm will be encouraged and kept alive as long as possible. All this may seem trifling and even incomprehensible to the directors and producers who turn out films as the butcher turns sausages, but in all real friends of the motion picture such thoughful attention to detail gives the hope of future quality.

C. D. GRUNNER,
Studio Manager.



J. E. OVERTON,
Factory Superintendent.

N. E. MILLIGAN,
Director-in-Chief.

JOSEPH SUTTON,
Secretary.

A. E. HINDLE,
Treasurer.

The printing room, 22x45, contains at present six machines, but there is easily room for sixty more machines, which may, of course, be put in at any time. The printing machines are arranged in such a way that repairs may be made without any change or the admission of any light and the work of making changes or repairs need not interfere with any of the printers who may be busy at the time. The printing room is connected directly with the developing room and the films need not be sealed up and carried over. The joining room, 18x60, is ample and contains a special polishing machine. This room will accommodate more than the necessary number of employees to run it. The developing room holds eight developing tanks, which are capable of holding two frames each. A circulating system has been introduced insuring an even temperature of the developers all the year around. The hypo room has a capacity of forty-eight frames at one time, the rinsing tanks are supplied with constant running water. In the wash room as many as one hundred and fifty frames can be handled at one time. The equipments of the toning room are similar in character and efficiency. The drying room has a capacity of 635 frames at one time. The drying room is operated in the most modern way: Provision is made for a supply of dry, warm air, and by the working of a system of fans the moist air is taken out as it settles. The same temperature is maintained all the time. The plant operates on the plan of one continuous wheel, which begins with the first step in the preparation of the film and ends with the shipping room. There is a projecting room 22x40. There is a complete heating plant, a most thorough and excellent system of ventilation. An elevator runs from the basement to the top.

The mixing tanks in the chemical laboratories, one of the most complete and workable I have ever seen, are run by gravity, which, of course, is far superior to pumping.

There is a floor devoted to the work of the stage carpenter and to the wardrobe. Here again I was struck with the characteristic of compactness and completeness.

There is one daylight studio and five stages supplied with artificial light.

It is necessary to add that the company has leased a very large farm within easy reach of Philadelphia, but with many of the characteristics of virgin nature. There are hills and rocks and lakes and rivers and, indeed, every variety of natural scenery which may be imagined.

The company will release as its first issues two multiple reels dealing with life in the Canadian Northwest.

The artistic director is Mr. N. E. Milligan, evidently a man of ideas and inspirations. He has been connected with the stage as a profession for fifteen years, and has had considerable moving picture experience.

"I knew," he said, "that this company was in the process of formation, and I knew that I would be called upon to be the director-in-chief. I have sought to prepare myself for this task with all the means at my command. I have directed and supervised many big productions in the past two years. I do not feel like saying anything very definite about our plans at this time; we propose to move slowly, our facilities are such that we can undertake any enterprise in films. Our first production will be portrayals of the Canadian Northwest in dramatic form. We will not be ready to make any plans for distribution until we have a sufficient number of negatives on hand, say a dozen or so. It may be that the educational and scientific film will receive our attention. I do not believe that single reels are profitable at this time. We will not make any single reels for the present, with the possible exception of comedies. I do not know that I can say more at this time. Our pictures must speak for themselves."

MOTION PICTURE TRAGEDY IN COLORADO.

Leading Lady and Cameraman of the Colorado M. P. Co. Drowned While Taking a Scene.

AN unfortunate and rather unnecessary undertaking by the California Motion Picture Company, at Canon City, Colo., July 1, resulted in the death by drowning of the company's leading woman, Miss Grace McHugh, and the cameraman, Owen Carter.

According to dispatches, Carter was operating on the bank of the Arkansas River where the current is very swift. A scene was being taken in which Miss McHugh was crossing the stream on horseback. The horse stumbled over a stone and threw the woman, who could not swim. Carter, who also could not swim, sprang in to save her and they were both swept away. At last reports the bodies had not been recovered. O. B. Thayer, manager and director of the company, was on hand at the time and an actor named Tom Hardcastle was also a witness of the tragedy.

Miss McHugh was a niece of former Judge McCall, of Denver. Carter's home was also in Denver. Miss McHugh had made her name prominent in the northwest and had been in theatrical work nearly all her life. She had recently gone in for aeronautics and had made some exceptional flights for a woman. The facts of Miss McHugh's death will not be used to further the sale of the picture in which she was appearing at the time.

SAWYER TO MARKET SANTA BARBARA PRODUCT.

Contracts were closed by Sawyer, Inc., the past week with the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company of California. This company was formed a few weeks ago and is financed by prominent business men on the coast. Studios have been equipped in Santa Barbara and the first production will be ready for showing before the end of July.

The officers of the new company include Dr. Elmer J. Boeseke, president; O. W. Boeseke, secretary; H. M. A. Postley, treasurer. C. Lorimer Johnston is the director-in-chief. He has taken with him to the new company several of the best of his former employees, including his best camera man.

The company will specialize on four-reel subjects, most of them pictures of well-known novels and stage successes. Sawyer, Inc., will handle the exclusive distribution of these films throughout the world.

The Crucible of Flame.

A Three-Part Features Ideal Picture Dealing with a Woman's Weakness and Designed to Please Women.

Reviewed by Hanford Judson.

THIS is one of those pictures dealing with an unwise marriage and, in its first part, there is a strong undercurrent of sex interest. This is, we feel—perhaps with not absolute conviction—to be harmless; for it is hidden. The object of the story is to get the heroine in disgrace and then to rehabilitate her by showing that she is self-forgetful when the school in which she is teaching is on fire—"the crucible of flame." Her disgrace came from the marriage in a hurry and, if this were wholly an ordinary marriage it would be a commendable situation. It is, we feel compelled to point out, made to seem as though it were not a marriage at all and suggests to a grown-up mind that in the original picture, intended for a Continental audience, she was baldly living with a man. Perhaps with young people of the age of sixteen this hiding of the truth will be more dangerous than any bold statement of the fact. There is a dilemma here; for if this supposition is wrong, the story makes the marriage which should have been a thing merely of pity, a thing of disgrace. The National Board of Censorship has passed it.

Scene from "The Crucible of Flame" (Features Ideal).

It is a well-staged story with beautiful photography and clear-cut, intelligent acting. There are two parts (three reels) to it. One deals with the woman, who contracts the foolish marriage and the other with the son that is born to her. This boy, the grandfather takes care of, though he refuses to see his daughter again. He becomes the center of interest of the latter half of the picture. For his evil father blackmails the good grandfather and gets money from him. Then the evil father's friends try to steal the boy and he has a hard time escaping from them. Both these parts give a very fair measure of suspense and, provided the audience is content with the peculiar tone of the story, it should make quite an acceptable offering.

KING BAGGOT, JR., COMES TO TOWN.

There are two King Baggots in town. The little ten-pounder who will be known as the junior of this combination arrived on Tuesday, July 7. The president of the Screeners and Mrs. Baggot have been deluged with congratulatory telegrams at their home, 517 West 113th street. There were twenty-three of these sent from the Screen Club in one batch. It is unnecessary to say that the members of the organization which Mr. Baggot founded are taking the liveliest interest in King Baggot, Jr. If his health responds to the multiplied efforts of the men of the Forty-seventh street clubhouse the newcomer will have a husky frame and a long life.

Mrs. Baggot and King, Jr., are reported to be doing nicely. Baggot senior is trying to look becomingly modest, but he is far from succeeding.

GENE GAUNTIER TAKES EUROPEAN VACATION.

Gene Gauntier is going abroad for a complete rest—no foreign pictures this trip. Her physician has ordered it so—she must not even write a scenario! So she will sail on the Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, for Lyckorna, Sweden, via Hamburg and Gottenburg. Marguerite Gauntier, her sister, has a summer home there, where she hopes to regain her old-time strength, which the past winter has weakened.

Wagner in Mexico.

Pathe Cameraman Relates Thrilling Story of His Experiences with Huerta's Army in Battle—Has Narrow Escape.

THE theater patron sitting in his seat in comfort and safety, in a temperature 10 degrees cooler than that of the street outside, little realizes as he watches in Pathe's Weekly the war pictures from Mexico, of the deadly perils undergone by the men who took them; of their suffering and torment on arid deserts under a merciless sun, of daily danger from men even more merciless, to whom the life of a fellow being is as little important as that of an insect. But the infrequent and laconic letters from such men as Fritz Wagner, of Pathe, tell stories that are stranger than fiction and make even the occupation of the war correspondent seem tame.

Fritz Wagner.

We have had occasion to give brief mention before in these columns of Wagner's experiences—of his arrest by the rebels, incarceration in jail and subsequent escape sans camera, sans outfit, sans money, sans everything save life and a garment or two to conceal his nakedness. Now come some details in a recent letter from him which fill in the gaps of the story and make it almost epic. Here are some extracts:

"When I left the City of Mexico for Torreon, I intended to be back in two or three weeks, but since then I have been learning that what a Mexican promises and what he fulfills are two different things. A letter fully detailing my experiences would be 30,000 words long and such a letter is, of course, impossible.

"For a couple of days I had nothing to eat and was forced to drink from the mud puddles of the road. The consequence was that when I reached Saltillo, when coming back, I was sick, deadly sick, and became little more than skin and bones. I am not afraid, whatever may happen, but I never thought I would come out alive from this trip.

"I have seen four big battles. On each occasion I was threatened with arrest from the Federal general if I took any pictures. He also threatened on one occasion when he caught me turning the crank to smash the camera. He would have done so, too, but for the fact that the rebels came pretty close just then and he had to take it on the run to save his hide.

"At Lagruna the battle became a rout and the disorganization of the Federal forces was complete. Napoleon's retreat from Moscow was but a disaster on a larger scale. It was every man for himself and the Devil (or the rebels) take the hindmost. I had saved my film and camera (60 lbs.) and went on foot with this load through the desert for 25 miles. I saw my end coming. Nobody would carry my stuff nor could I get a horse at any price. Finally I met a friendly Indian, who brought me to La Hipolita.

"For five nights I lay on the stones without a blanket, with my films for a pillow and my camera in my arm. I was afraid to take more than broken naps for fear my camera would be stolen. As it was, when I finally got back to Mexico after breaking jail I had left only a shirt, trousers, coat and a pair of shoes. All the rest the rebels got. I tried hard to save my films, but I guess I am lucky at that. Those that I brought with me I had in my pockets. The rest made fine kindling for the campfires of the rebels.

"When I arrived in the City of Mexico I got another camera from the Pathe agent there and got busy again. When Huerta heard I was back he sent two secret service men to the hotel, who confiscated all my papers and films. They did leave the camera. From then on I had the unpleasant experience of seeing myself constantly shadowed. Any time I would open the door of my room there would be a murderous looking individual standing near by. At the dining table would be another, who would scarce take his eyes from me. I became so nervous that the running of a mouse across the room at night would make me jump up in the bed in a cold sweat. I expected every moment to either be thrown into some dungeon or else knifed in the back. A man can stand an out and out fight—it is the deadly danger constantly impending that wears a man out.

"Finally one day Huerta sent for me and told me to develop the films (under supervision) and project them for him. He censored the films, had me cut out all the parts unfavorable to the Federals and then ordered the 'Salon Rojo' to show them as advertising for his troops. Huerta was much pleased with his show, otherwise I would have lost the films. I saw my chance and decided to beat it before another storm broke. I told the Chief of Police that Huerta had O. K.'d the films and that it was all right for me to go to Vera Cruz. The Chief was very decent and gave me his card, which I used as a passport. I hid myself in a freight car and finally got to Vera Cruz O. K.

"When Victor Miller, your cameraman, arrived with a new outfit for me, for the first time in weeks I was able to eat with an appetite and sleep as a man should sleep."

Who of us would care to go through what this young man, but little more than a boy, has gone through? Surely all adventure, peril and knight errantry have not vanished from the world, and the day of the dull, stale, flat and unprofitable has not yet come to take the tang from the lives of men.

Edna Payne.

THE YOUNG LADY with the bewitching smile, everlaughing eyes and wonderful ease of manner who has been captivating the hearts of photoplay fans by her ingenue characterizations in recent Eclair Western productions is the same Edna Payne, who five years ago was a prime favorite with the stock-going public of Brooklyn and New York. Miss Payne was the leading ingenue with the Corse Payton Stock Company, the Spooner and Gotham Companies of Brooklyn and later at the Academy of Music, New York City. After closing with the aggregation of stock players at the Academy of Music she entered vaudeville and played the big time circuit both East and West, both in single act and a comedy playlet, the latter of which was staged by the man who is at present directing the destinies of the Western Eclair organization.

A little over three years ago Miss Payne became deeply interested in the staging of motion pictures, and after a visit to the Lubin Film Company while playing a vaudeville sketch in Philadelphia she was granted a chance to play a small part in one of the productions being staged at the studio. Her natural charm of manner, freedom from self-consciousness and pretty features made her work an instant hit with the director and she commenced a stock engagement which lasted for two years as leading ingenue of the company. When the train load of Eclair players pulled out for Arizona, she was one of those aboard. A recent talk with Miss Payne disclosed that she immensely prefers the pictures to theatrical work for the simple reason that it gives her much more time for recreation, reading, sewing and the various other diversions which delight the hearts of women.

Her natural breeziness of manner, ability to ride horseback and the great love of outdoor sports have proven great assets in Miss Payne's Western picture work and although she was born in New York she is strong for that part of the country where the sun is always shining.

American Players in England

Miss Turner and Lawrence Trimble are Combining Work in the "Halls" and in Features.

THE departure, a little over a year ago from the American shore, of Miss Florence Turner occasioned considerable comment in moving picture circles, and since Miss Turner's has been unlike the visits of numerous other American photoplayers who have sojourned temporarily in Great Britain, it seems quite likely that many readers of the World will be interested to know exactly what is detaining the famous ex-Vitagraph star in the "old country."

I met Miss Turner and her energetic manager, Mr. Larry Trimble, also formerly with the Vitagraph Company, in Manchester recently. She was appearing at a local variety theater, but this was not the only object of her visit to the cotton country, as a few moments' conversation soon elicited that Miss Turner's company was at the moment engaged upon an ambitious dramatic production revolving in theme around Lancashire industrial strife.

Florence Turner.

"What brought you and Mr. Trimble to this country to produce films on your own account?" I asked Miss Turner.

"That question can be answered in the one word 'Individuality,'" she replied. "After six years strenuous work in the Vitagraph studios I felt a strong desire to get to work of my own. We came to England, Mr. Trimble and myself, about a year ago, and through a working arrangement with the Hepworth Company began to produce our own features. We have not a large company of players and we engage our supers as we require them from schools or agencies."

"Speaking of agencies," interjected Mr. Trimble, "only a few weeks ago when we were at work upon a drama 'Through the Valley of Shadows,' I had to select our supers from hundreds. Crowds of them came, but only a few of them were suitable for the vacant posts. It is often a very difficult thing to secure just the people you want despite the large number of players available. In this connection I had an agreeable surprise at Bary yesterday. We were taking some factory scenes at the Co-operative Wholesale Society's mill there and in the strike scene I had to get three or four hundred work people coming out of the mill at the time of a strike. A friend of mine had said previously that I should never be able to drill into these factory operatives the style of acting required for motion pictures. But I explained to them as well as I could what I wanted. I asked them to imagine that they were going to work and had been told their wages were to be reduced and that the mill was to be closed. That simple appeal to the imagination worked wonders. Instead of filing past the camera shouting and demonstrative, they walked past in a continuous melancholy procession realistically suggestive of a band of work people having just heard sad news. Their expressions were wonderful, and scarcely one looked at the camera. It will certainly make one of the best scenes in the film."

"How long does your tour with your stage sketches continue?" I asked.

"Only a fortnight. We are never away from the studios for many weeks at a time," said Miss Turner. "Then when we are away it does not interfere so much with our work as you would think. While we were appearing at a theater in South Wales, for instance, we took some of our scenes for 'Through the Valley of Shadows' in that district, and now while we are in Manchester we are making the best of the opportunity to complete most of the parts of our mill-girl picture."

"Which of the Turner Films do you consider best and why," I interrogated.

"That is somewhat difficult to say; both 'The Murdoch Trial' and 'The Harper Mystery' took exceedingly well in England and America," said Mr. Trimble. "Perhaps the preference might be given to the feature we are just completing, 'Through the Valley of Shadows.' It is an unusual story and the photography has turned out finely. The principal movements in the drama center 'round a moving picture studio and show the various processes of film taking. Our newest picture play, the one we are working upon at Bary, is one which I am convinced will be a success in the States. We shall shortly journey to Scotland again to make a few scenes in a Scottish historical picture in which Miss Turner will lead with Jean, her collie dog. We have also good plots in hand to work upon when we get back to London, but it is our intention to visit the Continent. In fact, we may go to Italy next winter."

"Don't you contemplate returning to the States again?"

"Not for some considerable time yet," said Miss Turner. "I shall probably return for a short visit to New York next Christmas if my vaudeville engagements will permit me to do so."

Lawrence Trimble.

Both Miss Turner and Mr. Trimble are of the opinion that the moving picture is rapidly coming into its own in England. "The theaters here are much more elaborate than those in America," says Mr. Trimble. "I visited one in Glasgow that I could not believe was a moving picture exhibition. To me it seemed more like a large hotel, and instead of watching pictures I felt I should have been asking for a cocktail." Mr. Trimble also thinks there is a growing dissatisfaction amongst manufacturers with the existing principle of censorship. "Let us have a censor," he added, "but not one with arbitrary powers."

As the result of her varied activities, Miss Turner has achieved an enviable position in the esteem of the British amusement-loving public. She is in great demand in the various music halls, where her sketches are always well received, and the photoplays in which she appears are invariably big drawing cards in the kinematograph theaters throughout the British Isles, as well as on the Continent. Attesting this popularity, it was announced not long ago that Miss Turner had polled the largest number of votes of any of the women candidates for honors in a prize contest recently conducted by "Pictures and Picture Goers," a popular British kinematograph publication.

In her early career as a photoplay acress, while a member of the Vitagraph Company of America forces, Miss Turner became quite popular in Great Britain, which has always shown a decided preference for American-made pictures, and it was therefore quite natural that she should be welcomed with open arms when she and Mr. Trimble arrived in England for the purpose of perpetuating on the kinematograph screen incidents and scenes of British life.

It is with considerable gratification, too, that the popular American star's English friends hear from the States that the Florence Turner comedies are doing so much toward raising the English photoplays to a position of prominence which is more in keeping with the importance of Great Britain than was the position occupied by English pictures made some years ago. This realization that Miss Turner and her associates are helping the standing of the English photoplay is, moreover, helping the popular American players in their work here, for the English public seem only too willing to co-operate when they are called upon to help in the production of the Turner pictures. Factories and homes are thrown open for the American players in order that the required touches of realism may be secured, and nothing seems too much trouble for the Britisher to do when the interests of Miss Turner—and incidentally of the kind of English photoplays she has been producing for some time—are at stake.—J. B. S.

What Are We Coming To?

By Frank E. Woods.

IF the amazing floods of feature pictures that are now being offered to the exhibiting market has occasioned alarm among many seasoned friends of motion picture art, it is not altogether to be wondered at. There appears to be no end to them. All that seems necessary to turn out a great "masterpiece" is a camera, an alleged story and a "come-on" with a pocketful of money to back the enterprise. The streets are full of "actors" and "directors," so-called, and the resulting film can be advertised and booked as the greatest thing ever, with just as much freedom as can the picture of real merit.

The alarm over this over supply of rubbish comes from the thought that it may soon disgust the public with all motion pictures, and thus set back the art, if not irretrievably, at least appreciably. While it is true that the big feature craze is drawing a new public to the lure of the moving film—people who have never patronized the shorter pictures to any extent—it is at the same time feared that pictures so badly produced as are many of those now being exhibited cannot hold this new public, and in the end will drive them back to the theater, never to be reclaimed. While these fears are not without reason, as any one must testify who is acquainted with true picture art and who has condemned himself for one or a number of evenings to sit through the torture of some of these amateur offerings, I cannot bring myself to believe that the outlook is as foreboding as it may seem. Not all of these features are bad, and is it not more reasonable to hope that the disease will cure itself?

Frank E. Woods.

How did it all come about? Originally all motion pictures were mere fragments except the prizefight films, which were the first long subjects produced. Topical and dramatic films were from fifty to one hundred feet in length. Then came the longer dramas and comedies, which, about six years ago, with the advent of D. W. Griffith as a director, began to develop along artistic lines. With the improvement in quality came a tremendous increase in business, and American producers made money so rapidly that for a time they imagined that they had solved the secret of the public taste. Because they had succeeded so amazingly with pictures limited to one thousand feet, they argued that the public would stand nothing longer, and, besides, the single reel was the basis of the weekly service schedules. A few saw further into the future, but they were not the ones who held the pursestrings and their opinions went for nothing.

There were not wanting significant, tangible indications of what might be done with American multiple reels three years or more ago, as I now recall. The Vitagraph Company made an experiment with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in three reels, which it sent out a reel at a time, and the profitable result was such that it should have been a lesson to every producer. It went by, however, comparatively unnoticed. Nine producers out of ten continued to declare that the public would never sit out a long subject.

It was not until a few rather pretentious three and four reel subjects came over from Europe and the state rights plan began to be popular that any considerable thought was given on this side to feature productions. Even then the old line companies, as I shall call them, were slow to wake up. They were making too much money from their regular weekly releases based on the one reel unit.

It was "Quo Vadis?" in eight reels that awakened the menagerie and set it howling. George Kleine's clean-up on that one picture convinced everybody in the business, and the Lord knows how many outside of it, that the big, quick fortunes of the future would be in the long multiple feature. "Quo Vadis?" big only in its length, its magnificent settings and its really capable acting in spots, nevertheless held its spectators and broke all records for attendance. If "Quo Vadis?" could do all that, what could not a real, live, honest-to-goodness motion picture of similar length do?

But still the old-liners saw not. They grudgingly increased to two or three reels and occasionally four, and some of them made the error of padding out short subjects by the simple expedient of "stalling" in front of the camera and lengthening the footage in each scene. They left it for the outsiders, the incompetent, the inexperienced, the theatrical adventurers, to jump in and seize the golden opportunity. So the old-line manufacturers have only themselves to blame if they find much of their business stolen away from them by a class of producers who have, with a few honorable exceptions, learned as yet not the first rudiments of the new art. And the honorable exceptions, it should be noted, drew on the expert picture makers for their management and direction.

And what a ruthless slaughter the inexperienced newcomers are making of the rich dramatic material in their hands? When one thinks of the vandalism they are guilty of, one can only shudder in genuine sorrow. Great plays and great dramatic novels are seized upon by these reckless, unskilled butchers and are ground out into so many links of moving picture sausage. The title of a play or book or the name of a great stage star is about all there is to the most of them to recommend them to the attention of the public. For a time these have sufficed, so great is the drawing power of the motion picture. But nobody competent to judge believes it can last, and hence the tears of many of the old-line picture makers who now see good picture material being wasted while a good share of the money of the dear public goes into the coffers of those who formerly scoffed at the films. If it were not so tragic it would be funny, and I am not sure it is not funny in spite of its tragedy.

Can we help smiling when we observe the gloom of the old-liners at the temporary success of the enemy they had feared and shunned, until recently, as one would a rattlesnake?

I well remember how the manufacturers of the earlier days dreaded the ogre of the theatrical man. If they saw one coming they would cross to the other side of the street. No theater manager must ever be permitted to get so much as the end of his nose into the picture business. This great juicy picture field was all their mutton, and they proposed to devour it, meat, bone and gristle, all by themselves. I recall on one occasion when a theatrical manager of the highest repute proposed to join with them in a small way. It would have given them the benefit of enterprising theatrical methods in exploiting and production, without hampering the artistic development of the pictures. It would have added to the mental equipment of the manufacturers the very element they lacked—an expert knowledge of the art of catering to the public. It would incidentally have introduced into the pictures in a regular way and under proper auspices one of the greatest living American stars. Right there the old-line manufacturers had their chance to forestall the very movement that has since overwhelmed the most of them, and they turned it down. They made no secret of the reason; they feared the very idea of a theatrical man. How, then, can we fail now to enjoy, just a little, their discomfiture? Theatrical men were bound to come into the business and they have now come in, as it happens, mostly by themselves, and although they are making a mess of it, it is not they who are suffering most—it is the old-line manufacturers, who are now scrambling, some of them, for theatrical connections that are either worthless or too late.

On the other hand, let us take a good smile at some of these same theatrical people, managers and players who have lately stepped so jauntily and condescendingly into pictures. Could there be anything more truly laughable than the figure they cut? Yesterday scorning, scoffing, jeering at the pictures; today fawning, strutting and pretending to save them! How long ago was it that one manager gleefully declared in a theatrical journal that they (the theatrical men) had the pictures on the run? Today he is grandly announcing "masterpieces" in the films. His stock of old plays will be hashed over in the prevailing wretched way, ruining their future possibilities if they have any, and he will hope to retrieve his theatrical losses by trying to bunco the picture public as he so long buncoed the theater public. I'll wager a few that he finds himself too late. He scoffed just about six months too long.

And then there are the belated actors and directors who are "elevating" the picture art—yes, "elevating" is the word. Listen to their talk, and then laugh! Watch their performance and laugh some more! They have come into the pictures purely to show the old-timers how to put them on and how to act them. They declare that the regular picture makers, producers and players don't half appreciate the grand possibilities of the films. "Just watch us and we'll show you a thing or two!" Then they proceed to show us the same old stage stuff that the public long since sickened of —the bombastic acting of the past—all coupled with the most ignorant disregard of the carefully developed technic of the motion picture. Some day these "elevators" may learn that the very first principle of motion picture playing is to be human—natural. The very essence of the successful motion picture drama is the illusion of reality. Very few of the new comers seem to realize this.

What will be the outcome? There should very shortly be a clearing of the atmosphere, so far as features are concerned. Those who have rushed into the business unprepared by experience will find themselves without a market for their worthless wares. The public learns rapidly, and will not for a very long time pay good money for nothing but a name. On the other hand those recruits who have wisely joined with trained producing companies, may last and prosper thereby. Meanwhile the established companies, adjusting themselves to circumstances and having the expert people to properly produce the features of the future will fill the public demand so well that they will gain back the business they now appear to have partly lost.

Incidentally, copyrighted books and plays, becoming reduced in available quantity, will give place to original subjects written primarily or jointly for motion picture exploitation. It has been quite clear from the first that some day great fiction authors will have in practical mind possible picture royalties in the same way that they have long figured on possible stage royalties, and they will frame their stories wisely for picture adaptation. Many of them think they are doing this now, and have extravagant ideas of the value of picture rights in their books. Eventually they will learn just what is needful and will write especially for the pictures or with picture rights in careful view.

As for the one and two reel pictures, issued in regular programs, I cannot see that they will ever entirely die out. There is the same reason for their continued profitable existence as there is for the magazine and short story in the printer's world and for the vaudeville branch on the speaking stage. There will always be a demand for good short pictures. If the bad ones die off who will weep? Speed the day!

CHRISTY MATHEWSON SIGNS WITH UNIVERSAL.

Christy Mathewson, the Bix Six of the New York Giants and perhaps the world's best-known baseball star, is to appear exclusively in a series of comedies and dramas for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. This was determined when Christy's name was finally secured to a contract several days ago. This contract will run for a period of one year and calls for at least one release of two reels in length every month.

As to who will play opposite Christy, has not yet been determined upon. However, the plays will be staged for the most part at the New York Imp studio. Credit for the securing of Christy Mathewson is indirectly due to Joe Brandt, manager of the "U" Publicity and Advertising departments.

While Christy had not entertained any definite ideas of entering the picture game prior to a few weeks ago, he was approached by Mr. Brandt, who talked figures the size of which the star could not consistently overlook. Considerable negotiation was had before the papers were finally drawn up, but this done, Mr. Mathewson expressed himself as thoroughly in tune for the undertaking and enthusiastic over the prospect.

INDUSTRIAL M. P. CO. FILMING MICHIGAN FOR PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

The Industrial Moving Picture Co. of Chicago has officially closed a contract with the Michigan Commission of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, whereby it will put on film thousands of feet of moving pictures which will comprehensively and reliably illustrate the industrial activities, natural resources, beauties, etc., of the State of Michigan. These films will be exclusively exhibited by The Industrial M. P. Co. in the Michigan Building at the Panama-Pacific Exposition during the entire time of the Exposition at San Francisco. This is one of the biggest industrial film deals ever put over and there were dozens of film companies bidding for the contract.

John Ince

BEING a member of a family distinguished in theatricals can bring a certain prestige to the player on the stage, but the screen artist cannot depend upon that aid. Too often his name is unknown; to the picture public he stands on his merits alone. So it is that comparatively few people know the Lubin actor-director. John E. Ince, comes from a family long known in the annals of the American stage, and is a brother to Thomas H. and Ralph Ince, noted directors with the New York Motion Picture and Vitagraph companies respectively. The Lubin player was the last to enter the field of photoplay, making his first appearance before the camera in the Philadelphia studio one and a half years ago, and immediately proving himself a photoplayer of power and promise. He came to the new and larger public as an actor with an established reputation and needed only to sound the possibilities of the voiceless drama before permanently casting his lot with the film world. Ince's forceful, intensely virile acting and robust personality are as potent on the animated screen as behind the footlights.

John Ince.

Always having played parts such as Stephen Ghent in "The Great Divide"; Messala in "Ben Hur"; and with Blanche Walsh in "Resurrection," it is only natural that Mr. Ince should be cast for heroic characters. He finds fullest expression of his individuality and temperament in drama of the West, where the conflicts involved are those of red blood and brawn. Mr. Ince's gifts as a director are not less than his art as an actor. His generalship of the army of supernumeraries employed in his Civil War production, "The Price of Victory," written for him by Emmett Campbell Hall, established him as a director of sensational spectacles.

His modesty and reticence are oddly at variance with the players' calling. The big actor-director is as shy of newspaper publicity as a great man. When he leaves the studio it is to jump into his Hupmobile and speed out of sight. The greater part of his day has been spent in strenuous work. He is lost until next morning and then he resumes the responsibilities of his position, following always the lure of his ambition—to produce a picture beyond criticism.

UNUSUAL INSTALLATIONS OF MOVING PICTURE MACHINES.

A few of the recent equipments furnished by the Picture Theater Equipment Company of 21 East 14th street, New York City, give a very good idea of how the moving picture is being used to furnish entertainment and instruction in all kinds of places as well as in moving picture theaters. This firm has recently installed an Edison Model D with Transformer in Dr. Saher's Sanitarium at Kingston on the Hudson, a Motiograph 1914 motor drive equipment in the Bloomingdale Hospital for the insane at While Plains and Power's No. 6 machines in the First Christian Church and also in the Presbyterian Church in Ashland, Ky., and in the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. in 28th street, New York City, and also in the Brooklyn Branch and also a Power's No. 6 machine in the United Odd Fellows Association of Ilion, N. Y.

This list of recent installations by the company is another evidence of the steady increase of the moving picture as a form of entertainment in institutions devoted to the uplift, education and general benefit of all classes.

EARL METCALFE LOSES HIS MOTHER.

Mrs. Cora B. Metcalfe, mother of Earl Metcalfe of the Lubin Stock Company, died on June 21st, following an operation at the Bethesda Hospital in Cincinnati. The deceased was fifty-six years of age. The funeral took place in Newport, Kentucky. Earl Metcalfe has the sympathy of the entire Lubin studio and all his many friends in the trade.

Among the Picture Theaters.

Apollo Theater, Washington, D. C.

AS is befitting to the National Capitol, the city of Washington, D. C., is well supplied with beautiful, artistic moving picture houses. These are not confined to any one part of the city, for they are to be found in the Northwest, the Southwest, the Southeast and the Northeast, and in this latter section is located the Apollo, at 624 H Street, a photograph of which is herewith published.

The exterior is of ornamental brick and stone, with lights over each of the three entrances, and a sign "Apollo" near the roof. The center of the foyer is arched with two pilasters of rough ornamental brick at the building line, while two pilasters at the far end of the arch, with marble bases, are plastered to match the champagne colored walls. The walls are paneled and decorated, and set to a height of about three feet from the floor with marble. The arched way is brilliantly lighted with a large electric arc and many smaller lamps. The flooring is a monolithic one, with a mosaic work border, and the word "Apollo" is inset in mosaic blocks near the center of the entrance. At both sides are ticket offices. The foyer is brilliantly lighted by three additional fixtures, chain hung, of the direct-indirect type.

Entrance to the handsome interior is gained through either of three pairs mahogany finished doors, the upper part of which is set with glass and curtained. Upon entering the house, one is immediately struck with its beauty. A soft light spreads over the theater from a dozen electric fixtures, chain hung, similar to those in the foyer. The huge beams, forming the ceiling supports, plastered and decorated, and the large pilasters at the sides, give an appearance of massiveness. The ceiling between the beams is highly decorated and the walls between the pilasters are paneled with a white embossed border. On each side of the structure are four stained glass windows which aid the two 36-inch fans in the proper ventilation of the house. These furnish ample aid in the summer to keep the house cool, although it is kept open only on rainy or disagreeable nights for the Apollo Park is operated during the warm months and immediately adjoins. During the cold winter months a modern heating plant keeps the air at a comfortable and even temperature.

Apollo Theater, Washington, D. C.

Considerable attention has been given to sanitation and the comfort of the patrons of the theater. The floor is of cement and easily kept clean. The chairs, 766 in number, are roomy and comfortable and are finished in mahogany. Two retiring rooms, one for ladies, the other for gentlemen, have been provided and a corps of uniformed ushers are ever ready to assist patrons in any way they can.

Two Powers 6a machines project a picture, 14 by 18 feet, on a gold fibre screen from a large and comfortable operator's station. The films are run off at a uniform speed, without that rush which so often tends to discourage patronage by reason of the fact that it appears as though the management wanted to clear the house in as short a space of time as possible in order to refill it with a new audience. Thus the house is gaining in popularity and is getting its share of the business.

A change was recently made in the management of this theater, and A. N. Waters now occupies the office at the rear of the cashier's desk. Little need be said of him in the way of introduction, for he is well known in the moving picture field. He came to Washington some two or three months ago following the completion of a road trip with George Kleine's "Quo Vadis," previous to which time he was manager of the Prince Theatre, in Jacksonville, Fla., and of houses in the Carolinas, Georgia, and other Florida cities. Thus it may be seen that he has wide experience in the moving picture business, and he has had a like experience in vaudeville, the fortunes of which he followed for a number of years.

C. L. LINZ.

WILLIAM PENN THEATER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

WITH the opening of the William Penn theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., on May 4, there has been bestowed upon the Iron City the distinction of having one of the best equipped, most elaborate and costliest motion picture theatres in the country. The new theater is under the management of Harry Davis and John P. Harris, the amusement magnates of Pittsburgh, who leased the house for a long term of years. The William Penn is located at the corner of Federal and Isabella streets in the center of the downtown district of Pittsburgh and on the most widely traveled street in the city. The central location of the house is of decided advantage to the attendance as it draws from practically every part of the city.

Built of brick, terra cotta, steel and concrete, the theater has a pleasing and imposing appearance from Federal street. The elaborate design of the facade stands out from the surrounding buildings and at night especially, when the lights are on full, the William Penn is a brilliant spot. The architects designs, besides calling for beauty, have made the house as thoroughly fireproof as it is possible to make.

In the matter of program the house is distinct from the other motion picture theaters of this city. Before the place was opened it had been decided to make it an exclusive feature picture theater, and running under the present program of two changes of the bill each week the new theater has made a step forward in the motion picture exhibiting business of the city. The pictures are changed on Monday and Thursday. The house opens at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and the running continues until 11.30 at night. The admission charge is 10 cents.

That an exclusive feature program is popular is shown by the large nightly attendance. The theater is always filled in the evening, when, in addition to the pit, the balcony is opened. The comfort of the patrons of the house has been especially studied. Every possible adjunct to a well equipped theater has been secured. A tiled and marbled foyer, decorated with photographs of the stars of the various producing companies, and tastily set off with huge palms, leads to the entrance to the auditorium.

Red carpets, hangings and decorations, under the subdued interior light, make a beautiful appearance, and the entire tone of the interior is of a restful, quiet type. An indirect lighting system and perfect ventilation combine with the other features to make the patron comfortable. The cooling system that has been installed makes the interior of the house a decided relief from the heat of the streets.

The orchestra chairs, and in fact, those of the balcony also, are numbered so that if a change in the present method of selling tickets makes reserved seats necessary, the plan could be put into operation at once. The angle of the floor makes unnecessary the tilting back of the head of the spectator. By building wide instead of long and making a proper grade in the floor the screen is brought almost in a direct line with every spectator's point of vision, and the craning of necks that is so apparent in many of the new theaters is eliminated entirely.

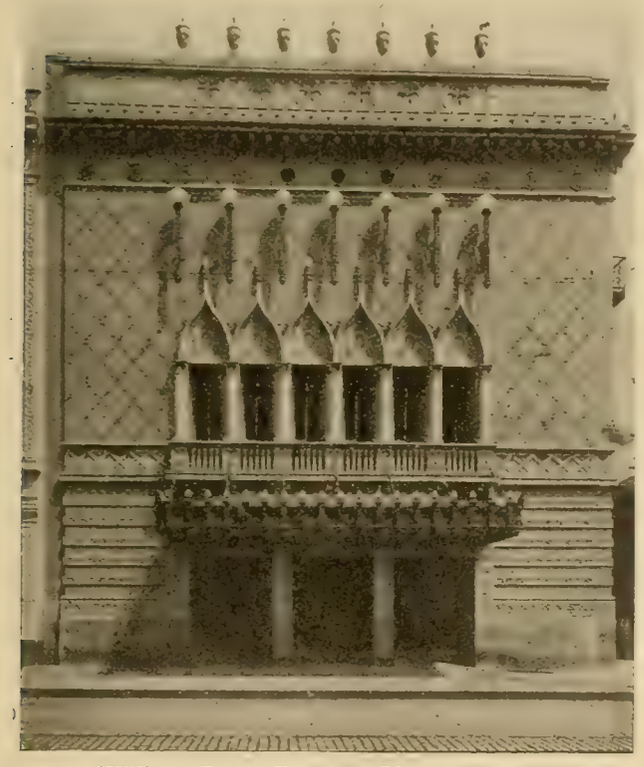
The music is furnished by a $2,500 Wurlitzer organ, with an orchestra attachment. An additional piano is also installed to make a change from the organ music. In following out the policy of the management for "complete refinement" only the very best music is played by the orchestra; no rag-time or so-called popular music is given to the players and only the most suitable selections chosen so as to bring out the correct atmosphere of the play in progress on the screen is used as an accompaniment to the pictures.

The screen is placed about fifteen feet back from the footlights on the stage and is enclosed in a shadow-box. At the present time palms help to create the coolness and repose that is so refreshing a change from the outdoor heat. The stage is so completely equipped that the screen could be removed and a play or vaudeville program put on at once.



William Penn Theater, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The balcony seats about 300 and contains the same high quality of opera chair as on the orchestra floor. It is reached by two interior fireproof staircases, which, running from the foyer up each side of the building, turn and meet at one entrance to the gallery. On this floor is a waiting room, furnished in wicker furniture, and opening with wide windows upon Federal street. Here also is a women's retiring room, and the office of the house manager.

Two Powers 6a machines are in the operating room, which is a model of up-to-date methods for protecting the operator and conserving light. It is situated above the gallery at the rear of the building and has a throw of 125 feet. Two operators are constantly on duty, and these men, in keeping with the general efficiency of everyone connected with the new theater, are thoroughly trained operators and give projection the careful attention that characterizes a trained man.

A men's smoking room and a women's rest room are also on the first floor, one to the right and the other to the left of the auditorium. Five exits in addition to the main entrance and exit, provide ample exit space in case of an emergency.

Although under the control of Messrs. Harris and Davis, the new William Penn, as with the other theaters of the Harris-Davis string, is under the supervision of a house manager. Charles H. Preston, who was with Keith & Proctor for nine years, is the manager of the William Penn. Several innovations, such as serving ice water to the audiences, maintaining a check room, etc., have been inaugurated by Mr. Preston. That such methods in a motion picture theater are appreciated by the best class of people may be seen nightly by observing the general character of the audience. Nightly the curb in front of the block in which the William Penn is situated, is lined with motor cars.

The employees of the theater, number seven ushers. On the night of the opening many handsome floral displays were sent to the house by friends of the management. Gigantic horseshoes, bouquets, potted plants, etc., were banked in the foyer and quite an affair was made of the opening of what was termed by one of the local newspapers the next day, "the handsomest theater in America."

PENN SQUARE THEATER, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

OPPORTUNITY didn't have to use a gavel when it rapped on the door of Emil C. Myer, of Cleveland, Ohio, manager of the Penn Square Theater, that city. It was just three years ago when the Penn Square Realty Company built the pretty little theater at the corner of Euclid avenue and East 55th street, Cleveland. The beauty of the little house and the policy adopted by the owners brought about a great deal of commendatory publicity along about the time it was opened for business.

Emil Myer was running a little motion picture house on Halsted street, Chicago, then, and a short time after the Penn Square was opened in Cleveland he heard of it. He noted the location and its advantages—a junction corner through which a great percentage of Cleveland's traffic centers; a business corner, and above all, in a very pretty and high-class residential section.

Penn Square Theater, Cleveland, Ohio.

So Emil Myer came into possession of Penn Square. He liked it, saw its big advantages and realized that it was one place in a hundred for a theater. Since he acquired the theater it has never been closed a single day.

There are 624 seats in the Penn Square and it is a rare night, indeed, when each one of those seats is not occupied. From an architectural standpoint the Penn Square is among the prettiest in the country. It is imposing without being gaudy and both exterior and interior decorations have won high favor in the eyes of artists. There is no mar in the general effect and the simplicity of the interior arrangement means an enhanced value to the entertainment. Penn Square audiences find their theater properly lighted, properly ventilated and carefully attuned to their desires for entertainment.

Since his coming to Cleveland, Emil Myer has made his way into the hearts of his fellow exhibitors and his audiences. He is a member of the Exhibitors' League.

Neff Withdraws—Pearce Elected.

(Continued from page 415.)

one here authorized to present my name to this body and never has been. One man among my friends asked me a few moments ago who is to nominate me. I didn't tell him because I have asked no one to nominate me, and I hope no one will. I appreciate your friendship, and in fact I want to be a friend of everybody, and above everything I want the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to endure forever."

(Tremendous applause, after which the members of the convention stood up and cheered.) After the roll call of national officers a motion for adjournment for thirty minutes was carried. On reassembling the convention proceeded to elect national officers. M. A. Pearce, of Baltimore, was placed in nomination for national president by M. E. Corey of San Francisco and seconded by Fulton Brylawski of Washington, D. C.; he was elected unanimously and made the following speech of acceptance:

"Mr. President and Gentlemen: I certainly consider this a high honor. When I came from Baltimore I didn't have any intention of even accepting the presidency of this great organization, but somebody kept pressing me and pressing me until they impressed upon my mind the fact that there is a time in a man's life when a certain duty presents itself when he must act, even though it means sacrifice for himself.

"I am not going to go into a lengthy talk, as my policy has always been to talk little and work hard, but I will tell you that I will do everything in my power to bring about a harmonious condition among all the exhibitors of the United States of America. And everything possible to put the League on a high plane and create a Board of Trade or anything that will benefit the League as a whole. In every instance everything I do, say or think in regard to the League will be what you men want and not what I want myself. I will not consider myself personally in any respect, but will feel it always my duty to act and say what you want and will be at your disposal for the entire year, at any hour of the day or any hour of the night."

Election of Officers.

T. P. Finnegan of Texas and W. C. Hubbard of New York were named and seconded for the office of first national vice-president, Mr. Finnegan being elected by a vote of 48 to 25. The election of Mr. Finnegan was then made unanimous. J. R. Carter of Arkansas named M. F. Corey of San Francisco for second national vice-president, being seconded by Fulton Brylawski of Washington, D. C. His election was unanimous. J. E. Phillips of Texas placed in nomination for national secretary W. R. Wilson of Columbus, O., George H. Wiley, the present national secretary, seconded. The election was unanimous. For national treasurer, O. N. Murray of Richmond, Ind., and Peter Jeup of Michigan were named and seconded, Mr. Jeup being declared elected by a vote of 50 to 26. On the motion of Mr. Murray the election was declared unanimous.

The report of the auditing committee was then read by Ed Kohl of Cleveland and declared everything correct. The report of the national secretary showed receipts of $4,746 and disbursements of $4,638. Adjournment was then made until 2 o'clock.

The afternoon session was an open meeting, during which addresses were made by representatives of the various manufacturers present. Brief remarks by the members of the meditation committee of the I. M. P. A., who were invited to be present, were also made.

Manufacturers Making Exhibits.

WHATEVER the result of the Dayton Exposition may be, and it is too early to sum up at this writing (Tuesday, July 7), the exhibitors can have no complaint against the manufacturers on the ground of the lack of interest. Considering the location of the city, the disadvantages of the place in which the exposition is located and the problematic success of the undertaking, it must be said that the manufacturers have responded splendidly. The main or major portion of the show was located in the basement of Memorial Hall, and dependent entirely upon artificial illumination. The ventilation was none too good, even with the assistance of large ventilating fans. In this basement all the mechanical devices were placed. During the intervals between the sessions of the convention, held in the assembly room across the street, there was quite a business-like hustle among the various booths.

On the main floor of the building booths were laid out for the film manufacturers and feature film men with other concerns not having displays of a mechanical nature. The greater part of Monday was occupied by the manufacturers in getting their exhibits in shape, and by Tuesday morning the booths presented a good appearance. The firms represented include the following:

Nicholas Power Company of New York, by Fred W. Swett, Bert Bohannan and Herbert Griffin; a full display of the Power product was made.

Mott-Le-Gaige Animated Advertising Company of New York, in charge of R. T. Ayres and H. L. Levy; demonstrating the Spiegel animated slide.

National Cash Register Company demonstrated a ticket selling device.

Krause Manufacturing Company of New York, represented by M. A. Kraus and Leon Berg; showing a large line of pictures of photoplayers for lobby display and post cards of the players.

Egry Register Company of Dayton, Ohio, represented by R. C. Ellis.

Dayton Power and Light Company, demonstrating its special lamps and arc lights for theaters.

Ernemann Photo-Kino Works of New York, represented by H. J. Hoffman; exhibiting printers' perforators, projectors and cameras.

American Slide Company of Columbus, Ohio, represented by R. J. Gardiner; showing slides and theater equipment.

Menger & Ring of New York, represented by Jacob Ring; showing an interesting line of lobby display frames.

Wyanoak Publishing Company, New York, reprsented by A. H. Byrd, A. A. Cormier and Tom Moore; showing a complete line of lobby displays.

Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, Chicago, Ill., represented by O. F. Spahr and A. F. Sass; demonstrating the Motiograph projecting machine.

A. J. Miller & Company of Bellefontaine, Ohio, represented by A. J. Miller, H. F. Miller and W. J. Rawlings; showing a fine line of lobby display frames in brass and copper.

Rex Film Renovator Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio, represented by R. D. Harnish and W. C. Moore; demonstrating a device for cleaning film.

Buquo-Hohman Company, represented by William Hohman; demonstrating a device for extending carbons.

Precision Machine Company of New York, represented by H. B. Coles and D. F. Cowan; demonstrating the Simplex projector.

Theater Specialty Company of Cleveland, Ohio, represented by George W. Armstrong and W. R. Hughes; showing a full line of special devices for picture theaters. In the same booth Miss Bruce represented the Morgan Litho Company of Cleveland.

Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati, represented by S. J. Newman and S. Newman; showing a complete line of brass lobby frames.

Fort Wayne Electric Works of Fort Wayne, Ind., represented by Julian Speer and Terry King; demonstrating the Compensarc, rectifier-generator and other electrical devices.

Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Registering Company of New York, represented by H. C. Simeral and Mr. Bowman; demonstrating ticket selling device.

Columbus Theater Equipment Company of Columbus, Ohio, represented by Fred P. Reynolds and Leo Dwyer; showing a line of theater specialties.

Atsco, Inc., of New York, represented by Robert Kane, H. B. Bryning, F. P. Bloomfield, J. W. Barlow and H. C. Creedon; showing a very interesting line of devices, including radium gold-fibre screen.

Recording and Computing Machine Company of Dayton, Ohio, represented by Mr. Whistler and Mr. Whitten; showing ticket selling device.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company had a large display of orchestra organs and supplied the music for the main hall by means of a $10,000 unit-orchestra.

The Typhoon Fan Company provided the ventilating devices for the exposition building and kept the temperature at a very low degree. Its fans were everywhere.

On the main floor of the hall the Bobbs-Merrill Company had a big display of its Kathlyn book. All the stores where books are sold in Dayton made big window displays of this interesting work.

Other film and feature concerns on the floors were the Selig Company, represented by C. L. Hull; Famous Players Company, by Mr. Burlock; World Film Corporation, by Earl Painter of Cleveland, and Clay Brehm of Cincinnati; Lasky Features, by Harry Reichenbach; Warner's Features, by H. Charnass of Cleveland and A. M. Williams of Cincinnati; All Star Features, by Joseph Farnham; Universal Film Manufacturing Company, by Joe Brandt; Pathe and Eclectic Companies, by John Pelzer; Eastman Kodak Company, by George A. Blair; Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, by Vernon R. Day; Schroeder Art Flowers, by Mr. Schroeder of Cleveland.

The Bartola Organ Company was unable to get space in the Exposition Hall and made a demonstration at the Savoy Roof Garden.

Samuel Lapin of Philadelphia demonstrated his "Drumona" piano attachment in the booth of Atsco, Inc., which concern is handling it. He had many investigators.

FIRST SALE OF SUBJECTS AT AUCTION.

The New York Film Mart Inaugurates Its Novel Scheme and Many Buyers Attend.

IN further support of the contention that motion pictures are no longer a luxury, but a staple necessity of life, there was held in New York City Tuesday, July 7, what is said to have been the first auction sale of pictures ever conducted in this country. The affair was of the plain, old-fashioned type—sandwiches and coffee being provided for prospective buyers in precisely the same way that a "spread" is made a part of the sale of any old farm where pigs, chickens, horses, implements, etc., are going under the hammer—and the products of various well-known producers of motion picture films merely took the place of the pigs, chickens, etc.

The novel sale was held by the New York Film Mart in its offices at 126 West Forty-sixth street, and was arranged by Frank Winch, a well-known amusement publicity promoter who is prominent in the affairs of the recently organized company.

The sale lasted throughout the day. It is a conservative estimate that fully 500 interested film men, representing all branches of the industry, were in attendance, going and coming as they did as the professional auctioneer cried his wares. During one of the early hours more than fifty people were counted in the projection room where the sale was being conducted. It is only fair to say that most of the visitors were attracted by the novelty of the idea, but that the venture was a business success is indicated by Mr. Winch's announcement that the auctions are to be continued, a sale being held on an average of once a week.

The designation of the New York Film Mart explains the auction plan of the company's selling scheme. The concern has been organized for the purpose of trading in motion pictures in the broadest sense of the term. In conjunction with two other companies that occupy the same suite of offices in the Leavitt Building, the New York Film Mart control not a few feature pictures which are being handled in the usual manner, either by the sale of state rights or rentals to individual exhibitors. As a more important feature of the business, however, the company is engaged in the business of "moving" for producers and other state right and rental concerns such of their products as may be placed in its hands. The auction sales, it is said, are to be only one of a number of novel sales plans which are to be adopted in this business of "moving" film merchandise.

The prices obtained varied considerably, but there were many instances where the negative and one print of a subject sold for 15 cents a foot.

POTIKER'S VISIT TO THE FATHERLAND.

A. Potiker, a widely known figure in the feature film rental and moving picture theater business in Ohio, who returned from Europe July 4, is known in Cleveland as the "boy wonder," having amassed a small fortune in the moving picture business upon the capital earned by selling newspapers. He left for his Fatherland in April on a pleasure trip. After touring the Continent he went to his birthplace in Bartfa, Lower Hungary, from which town he came to America about seven years ago as an emigrant, to starve or eat, according to his luck, there being too many mouths to fill under the Potiker roof.

He was immediately spotted as being eligible for the army. Then started his troubles. He asserted his acquired American spirit so loudly that two other policement aided the first copper in escorting Potiker to the police station. They didn't find any bombs for archdukes concealed about him, but they did find a bank-roll that compelled respect, as did also his persistent conversational waving of the red, white and blue.

The United States consul was summoned and backed up Potiker's claims to American citizenship. He was forthwith released, but the affair somewhat took the pleasure away from his visit to the ancestral manse. Potiker has decided that when he again wants to see the home town that he'll look it up in a geography and let it go at that.

KENNETH CASEY BOUND FOR AFRICA.

Kenneth Casey, the Vitagraph Boy, is still on his tour of the world. The Moving Picture World has just received a letter from the young man's chaperon dated June 8 and written aboard the R. M. S. "Armadale Castle," while that vessel was making its way along the coast of Spain. The letter reads as follows:

Kenneth Casey, known to the world as the Vitagraph Boy, is on his way to South Africa, and will play the principal cities there, including Cape Town, Johannesburg, Durban, Germiston. He has had a very successful six months in England and Scotland, and has been headliner over some of the best artists there. He went to the Derby at Epsom Downs, England, and placed his first bet on a horse named Oriby. He said "The old nag wasn't heard of. Just think of how many nice things I could have had to eat for those five shillings. This is my first and my last bet. Never again!"

CULLEN NOW MANAGER FOR S. Z. POLI.

Thomas H. Cullen, who for several years managed the chain of theaters for Aechtler & McKenney, located at Revere, Cliftondale, and Peabody, Mass., is now connected with the S. Z. Poli Theatrical Enterprises, as manager of the Palace Theater, Hartford, Conn., the handsomest house on the Poli Circuit, which opened May 25. Since the opening, the Palace has been playing to capacity, the vaudeville and motion pictures being above the average for a popular-price house. Mr. Cullen is well known among the theatrical circle in Massachusetts and is very popular with the profession, he being for some years a performer himself.

HECTOR DION WITH FLORENCE TURNER CO.

A letter received by the Moving Picture World announced the arrival in England of Hector Dion for the purpose of joining the Florence Turner company of photoplayers. Director Larry Trimble, who wrote the letter, told that Dion was at work producing a Turner comedy the second day after his arrival from the United States, and that he was playing a small part in the comedy in addition to producing it. The announcement will be received with interest by many who have long awaited a renewal of the combination which proved so effective in the early Vitagraph days.

Florence Turner's First Leading Man, Hector Dion (with script), Producing His First Picture With the Florence Turner Co., at Surrey, England.

GRAND CENTRAL EXPOSITION MANAGER'S NEW JOB.

F. E. Samuels, manager of the Moving Picture Exposition in New York for the last two years, is now hard at work promoting the "first American Manufacturers' and Salesmen's Cruise." The scope of this enterprise is to extend American commerce in Central and South America and the West Indies and includes a trip of 120 days by the S. S. Kroonland, sailing October 14, 1914.

FINE PORTRAIT OF MARY PICKFORD.

The Wyanoak Publishing Company of New York has produced an unusually good lobby portrait of Mary Pickford by its photo-gelatine process, which was demonstrated recently at the New York Film Trade Exposition. The portrait of Miss Pickford is hand colored and has been attracting much attention in the lobby of the Strand Theater in New York.

"LAY DOWN YOUR ARMS" (GT. NORTHERN).

THE Great Northern Film Company has secured the film rights to the famous novel, "Lay Down Your Arms," by Baroness Bertha Von Suttner, the noted Austrian authoress and exponent of universal peace, who died in Vienna on June 21 last. The Great Northern Company is now at work on an elaborate five-part production of this literary gem, which was an international success when published in 1890.

"Lay Down Your Arms," vividly pictures the miseries which war causes in the homes of the combatants. It paints the glories of war as only sham victories, not worth the terrible sacrifices of human lives that are exacted.

Baroness Bertha Von Suttner.

Baroness von Suttner had, for many years, espoused the cause of peace, her own life having been embittered by the horrors of war. When a girl she had been betrothed to Prince Adolf Wittgenstein, who was killed in a battle. She won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1905. In fact, it is said that her great activity in the interests of arbitration was what prompted Dr. Alfred B. Nobel to offer his peace prize. She was at one time secretary to Dr. Nobel and was a member of the Advisory Council of the Carnegie Peace Foundation.

The Baroness was born in 1843, the daughter of Field Marshall Count Franz von Kinsky. She was married to Baron Gundaar von Suttner in 1876. It was her book, "Lay Down Your Arms," which made her famous and she also attracted wide attention as editor of "Die Waffen Nieder" ("Lay Down Your Arms"), the magazine of the International Peace Bureau in Berne, named after her novel. She was Honorary President of the International Peace Bureau at Berne, and she founded the Austrian Peace Society. The Baroness traveled all over Europe, lecturing and enlisting followers in her cause. Her husband worked with her until he died in 1902. She visited America twice, in 1904 and in 1912.

Baroness von Suttner wrote more than thirty novels and novelettes, among which "Lay Down Your Arms" ranked foremost. Some of her other works were: "The Inventory of a Soul;" "The Age of Machinery," a journal of the Hague Peace Conference in 1900; "Martha's Children," a sequel to "Lay Down Your Arms;" "Letters to a Dead Man;" "The Great Thoughts of Humanity," and "The Romance of an Author."

SEVEN PROMINENT STARS IN FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPANY.

The largest number of stars that ever worked simultaneously before the camera of one concern are now gathered at the studio of the Famous Players Film Company, on West 26th street, New York.

The long list of stage celebrities thus engaged in recording the visual part of their art on the screen include May Irwin, Henrietta Crossman, William Farnum, William Courtleigh, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Fredericks and Mary Pickford.

May Irwin is engaged in a film version of her comedy success, "Mrs. Black is Back," by George V. Hobart. William Farnum is being presented in "The Sign of the Cross," Wilson Barrett's masterpiece. Henrietta Crossman will be featured in "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," a strong, emotional domestic problem play, by Mrs. Burton Harrison.

William Courtleigh is appearing in "The Better Man," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, the production of which is now nearing completion. Marguerite Clark is cast in the title role of "Wildflower," the novel by Mary Germaine.

Mary Pickford is engaged in a film version of "Behind the Scenes," a charming play of theatrical life by Margaret Mayo, author of "Baby Mine." Pauline Frederick is now in Italy appearing in Hall Caine's greatest work, "The Eternal City," the film adaptation of which is being produced in elaborate form under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

The negatives of these various productions, promising to be among the most pretentious yet released by the Famous Players, represent an initial cost of $300,000.

NEW CALIFORNIA PRODUCING CO. FORMED.

The United Keanograph Film Manufacturing Company of Fairfax, California, has been organized, built its studio and spent approximately $65,000 upon its first feature, without anything being known about it in the East, and without publicity of any other kind. James Keane is president and general manager of this new organization.

Work has been in progress since Mr. Keane's Christmas visit to New York, and in the opinion of the moving picture men on the coast he has been building a studio that is worth making great photoplays in. Sol Lesser, general manager of the Golgate Feature Service, has contracted for the first production for the eleven states of his territory.

United Keanograph Film Mfg. Co., Fairfax, Cal.

From right to left: E. M. Asher, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange; Irving Ackerman, director of the Orpheum Circuit, and owner of a string of theaters from Los Angeles to San Francisco; D. J. Grauman, associate and Western Representative of the Marcus Loew Enterprises, and owner of Grauman's Imperial Theater, San Francisco; James F. Keane, Director-in-Chief of the United Keanograph Film Mfg. Co., and Maurice Asher, a San Francisco attorney.

This production will run into six or eight reels. The name has not been announced. Nothing has been heard as to the identity of the actors and directors.

Invitations will be issued for a special performance probably to be given in the Imperial, one of the finest motion picture theaters in San Francisco, which theater is controlled by D. J. Grauman and his son, Sid Grauman. Mr. Keane will probably make the trip to New York soon with Sol Lesser, who is expected to arrive within a few days.

THE TYPHOON FAN.

The Typhoon Fan Co. of 1544 Broadway, New York, has been very much in evidence at this year's conventions, both in New York and in Dayton, O. The big exhaust fans that were in use on the mezzanine floor of the Grand Central Palace, New York, were installed by the Typhoon Fan Co. as their part of the model theaters at that exhibition. The Typhoon fan is very much in evidence at the current exposition of the M. P. E. L. of A. at Dayton, O. These fans are powerful, big exhaust blowers averaging six and eight feet in height and are the kind that can be had by few dealers, if any, other than the Typhoon Fan Co. These fans are wonderful ventilators and their power is extraordinary. It is doubtful if there are any fans bigger and stronger than the Typhoon fan.

CHANGES IN PATHE PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT.

P. A. Parsons, hitherto publicity agent for Pathe films, has turned over to Mr. Johnston of Eclectic, the publicity department and himself assumes charge of a new department devoted to posters, etc. The poster question has been receiving more and more attention from Pathe, until now it is felt that there should be one department devoted to getting out the best posters in the business. Pathe has now a staff of five or six first-class artists who are devoting their whole time to making sketches for Pathe posters with a punch.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"VALUE RECEIVED" (Victor).

It would seem that the old "barn-storming" days, when companies went out into the tank towns and played to the applause of decayed vegetables, slept on the trunks and seldom got salaries, had passed. Here and there, perhaps, one does find a company of players, even now, who still mark time to adventurous and precarious ways of old, fighting a losing battle against the theatrical "trust," but enjoying it withal. It is mostly the left-overs, who can spin rare tales; who have passed through a wealth of experience that makes for fiction and romance.

In "Value Received" it is as though one of those old-timers turned over one of the leaves of his life and read us a story, rife with atmosphere of days past, rich in romance, vivid in action, which can only come from real life, never from a word juggler. The spectators are carried out into one of those old-time, rough ranch towns of the West to move among the actors of a human drama of big appeal. You see and learn to appreciate what these "barn-stormers" had to face, to appreciate the good and the bad in them; also the audience is set before you in review and out of the audience comes a ranchman to protect an actress, where her degraded husband had failed, against the insults of his townspeople. It is the beginning of the story that develops with rare originality, fresh humor and considerable excitement. J. Warren Kerrigan is the hero-ranchman in this play. Vera Sisson is seen as the little leading lady of the theatrical company, who finds in the blunt cattleman all the manhood which her husband lacks. George Periolat, a man who has actually lived many of the incidents in this play, is seen as the husband manager. The Universal presents these splendid actors in "Value Received" for your consideration. Released July 20.

Scene from "Value Received" (Victor).

CORRECTION CONCERNING MARGUERITA SYLVA.

Several weeks ago a notice was published in the trade press referring to Marguerita Sylva and her work in the forthcoming George Kleine production of "Carmen," in which Madame Sylva plays the title role. The notice stated that Madame Sylva "Had been brought to this country by the famous English Actor, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, for an extended American tour in 1896." Madame Sylva's legal advisors state that such was not the case and that the dissemination of such information is damaging to Madame Sylva's artistic and social success. Her first American Tour was inaugurated in November, 1896, when she came to this country starring in "Carmen."

"FOGG'S MILLIONS" (Vitagraph).

The charm of this picture, besides the strong action and excellent photography, lies in the depiction of a phase of life that seems to be a modern tendency, the desire to gain possession of money and position at no matter what cost. A young adventuress, regardless of her marital relations, determines to get possession of old "Fogg's Millions." She succeeds through cajolery and pretended love in making him her husband. When the old man discovers her deception, he is stricken with apoplexy and dies from the shock. She is arrested with her accomplice and "Fogg's Millions" are claimed by the rightful heirs. The intensely dramatic character of the play is more than evident in the hands of Van Dyke Brooke, as old Fogg, and Norma Talmadge, as the adventuress. Their support is more than adequate, filling their several roles with great credit; Rose Tapley, Beatrice McKay, Kalman Matus and Harry Kendall. A drama of this nature always makes a decided impression, because it expresses the truth in a direct and unmistakable way. Words fail to convey what the eye can see. This picturization of one of the prevalent weaknesses of the present day is a source of great satisfaction to those who have thought upon its enormity, but have not had within themselves the power to properly express their opinions. It is one of the greatest sermons on the sacrifice of woman's love to Mammon, of youth to the golden calf of avarice, and the idolizing of position and wealth above character and all its virtues.

Scene from "Fogg's Millions" (Vitagraph).

VICTOR ANIMATOGRAPH MACHINE.

The manufacturers of this machine advise that the sales of their machine for the past few weeks have compelled them to make a large addition to their factory equipment. They expect to be in position to care for greatly increased business by the end of August. They claim highly satisfactory illumination and brilliancy of image from the optical system of the Animatograph. The simplicity of the lamp adjustment for feeding the carbons is another feature that they are proud of. Among the other advantages claimed for this machine is the standardization of all parts, making repairs a simple matter, the direct connection to lamp socket or main line, eliminating special wiring and its portable advantage on account to light weight. The machine takes the standard size of film.

KLEINE ISSUES CORRECTION.

It is reported in the current issue of a film journal that George Kleine is soon to release Belasco's "Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the title role. This is an error, as George Kleine has no interest in that production.

"KATE WATERS OF THE SECRET SERVICE." (Powers).

There is no use denying that people like to be thrilled, mystified and held in suspense, and no play or story seems to accomplish this as well as those which diclose the methods and workings of a detective. In "Kate Waters of the Secret Service" we have a real detective play that has the added virtue of romance and human-interest; and it is a girl, young and charming, who tackles the big problem of running down criminals; work that is usually left for men to do. The character of Kate Waters was conceived and put into form by Harry G. Stafford and Calder Johnstone, both of the Universal's West Coast scenario department and experienced scenario writers. Basing the plot on a domestic tragedy which happens at a United States army post the writers have made a story which will undoubtedly hold you in a firm grip of suspense and mystery. It was written for Edna Maison, who is featured in the title role. Miss Maison as an agent of Uncle Sam takes up the task of unraveling vague clues and matching her wits against hard circumstances and men. It affords the leading lady an opportunity to do a character entirely original; away from anything heretofore attempted. Charles Giblyn, one of the Universal's new directors, produced the piece. In two reels, released July 24.

Scene from "Kate Waters of the Secret Service" (Powers).

"ALLAH 3311" (Eclair).

This is the title of an exciting mystery play which will be released by the Eclair Film Company on Wednesday, July 22d. The leading roles in this three-reel production are portrayed by O. A. C. Lund and Barbara Tennant, and the story centers about the activities of the Rumanian secret societies in Washington and their final undoing by Miss Tennant as the girl detective. This film calls for the staging of some exceptionally good thrills, and Mr. Lund took a company of Eclair players to Washington in order to secure the proper atmosphere and detail.

Scene from "Allah 3311" (Eclair).

"CODES OF HONOR" (Lubin).

The story of Marie Bowditch is very dramatic and worthy of a big stage production. However, the photoplay has evidently lost no point of interest and tells the tale with wonderful intensity. Marie, brought up to be a pickpocket and criminal, pays her debt to justice, and with her little boy Robert finds a new life full of hope and happiness.

Scene from "Codes of Honor" (Lubin).

Fifteen years pass, and the Nemesis of her early life breaks with fury over her head and comes not only near wrecking her future but destroying the love and happiness of her son. Fate, however, wills it otherwise, and the end of the story brings sunshine to two families. The Code of Honor is a big factor in the denouement and gains a mighty victory for a man sorely tempted to withhold a proof. The story is written by H. A. Hallett and staged by Lloyd B. Carleton with a powerful Lubin cast, including the well-known emotional actress, Ormi Hawley.

"THE MYSTERIOUS MAN OF THE JUNGLE." (Nash Motion Picture Co.).

The first of a series of wild animal features, now being produced by the recently formed Nash Motion Picture Company, has been completed under the personal supervision of Thomas S. Nash and "Big Otto" at their studio and zoo in Los Angeles and will shortly have its advance showing in New York and London. The picture is four reels in length and depicts the romance and life of a young California couple who become the victims of fate in a strange and thrilling chain of circumstances which reach a sensational climax in the animal-infested interior of Africa. The accompanying illustration is taken from one of the many exciting scenes which make this a really extraordinary feature. Taking the success of this first production as a criterion the Nash company will undoubtedly find its product in very popular demand by exhibitors throughout the country. The release date on "The Mysterious Man of the Jungle" has not been announced as yet.

Scene from "The Mysterious Man of the Jungle" (Nash).

"THE SOB SISTER" (Rex).

John Tracy, managing editor of the Times, is one of those relentless fellows who believes in the publication of news regardless of whom it hits or the harm that it may do to innocent persons. Eventually he receives a lesson not to be forgotten. When the shoe came to be fitted on his own foot it was a different story. Incidentally there is a real, moving love plot woven into the story. Nell Gwynn, Times reporter, who comes under the newspaper sobriquet of "sob sister," is the girl. Bert Randolph, sporting editor on the same paper, is the man. Nell is sent out to get a story on a girl who has run away from boarding school. Nell gets the story and saves the girl from an awful fate, but—well, the girl happened to be the daughter of Tracy, managing editor. Tracy didn't know that when he forced Nell to write the story. When he found out—but see the play. It is located in a newspaper office, at least a large part of the action, and one of the big climaxes. Anna Little and Herbert Rawlinson, two of Universal's cleverest stars, are seen in the lead roles. James Dayton, editor of the Universal's scenario department on the Coast, wrote the script from the original story by Henry Care. Otis Turner is the director. This is a two-reel production, to be released July 16.

Scene from "The Call of the North" (Lasky).

"THE CALL OF THE NORTH" (Lasky).

In "The Call of the North," in which Robert Edeson is appearing in the leading role, which he created, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., Inc., look forward to one of the most perfect photoplays, from a standpoint of detail and atmosphere, ever produced in America. Stuart Edward White and Wilfred Buckland aid in the production. Cecil B. DeMille and Oscar Apfel directed in conjunction. "The Call of the North" has been ten weeks in the making and required a cast of two hundred people. The scenes were laid in different parts of the West. The first reel was staged at the Lasky studios, the next two at Great Bear Valley, Cal., and the two final scenes at Moose Factory, Canada. "The Call of the North" will be the August release of the Lasky company.

Scene from "The Call of the North" (Lasky).

"UNDER FIRE IN MEXICO" (Colorado M. P. Co.)

The five thousand Mexican Federal prisoners who are being held at Eagle Pass by the United States were given a chance before a motion picture camera to show how good they are as fighters. As there were, of course, no bullets flying recklessly about they were very brave—who wouldn't be?

Scene from "Under Fire in Mexico" (Colorado M. P. Co.).

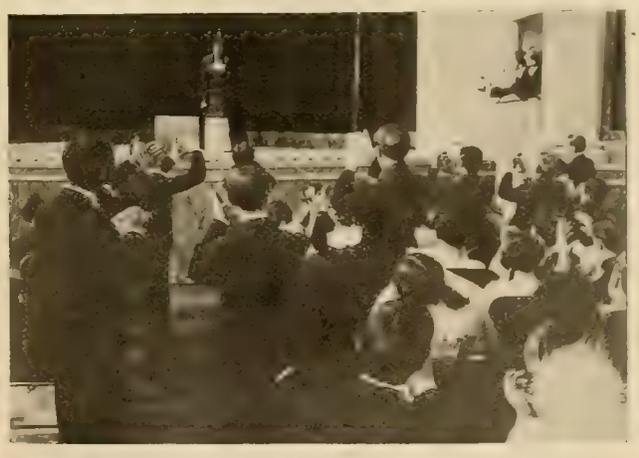
These real Mexicans appear in "Under Fire in Mexico," a three-part thriller soon to be released through Warner's Features, Inc. Their feats of horsemanship are surprising and when they charge across the screen with battle flags fluttering and sabres glittering you breathe easier when you realize that it is only in a picture. The above photo shows J. Arthur Nelson, president of the Colorado Motion Picture Corporation, in costume as he appears in "Under Fire in Mexico," congratulating them on their successful work in the production.

"THE RIVAL ACTRESSES" (Kleine).

George Kleine's Two-Part Feature Subject for Release Through the General Film Company, Tuesday, July 14, 1914.

The fascination of the stage and the inability of young girls to resist the lure of the footlights has been made the subject of one of the latest and most delightful Kleine releases, "The Rival Actresses," which tells the story of a youthful performer who wins her way to love and fortune in spite of the jealous machinations of another player. How she escapes the many pitfalls which lie in the path of professional progress makes an intensely interesting tale, a tale which is strikingly told by a selected company of world celebrated players of extraordinary talent.



Scene from "The Rival Actresses" (Kleine).

Ruth Merrill, a young actress, scores a brilliant triumph in a new comedy and incurs the enmity of a rival actress who makes every effort to wreck her happiness. To this end she encourages the stage manager of the company and a rakish young millionaire in their attentions to the girl, finally bringing about a misunderstanding between her and her fiance. In the end, however, the truth comes to light and with her professional success Ruth gains also the happiness of lasting love.

Notes of the Trade.

DAILY VITAGRAPH releases are still a feature of the Vitagraph program and offer a pleasing addition to the incidental music and novelties that have made the home theater of Vitagraph releases the mecca of moving picture fans.

* * *

George Terwilliger, who just returned from St. Augustine, Florida, with a troupe of Lubin players, is producing an unusual photoplay which is original in every respect—plot, characters, scenes—and conception. It was written for him by Lawrence McCloskey. Raymond Hitchcock, Flora Zabelle and a selected Lubin cast are appearing in this "Photophantasy" which Terwilliger is filming in five parts.

* * *

Through exclusive arrangements which have been made by the township of Tucson, Arizona, with the western Eclair aggregation, located at that point, complete motion pictures will be taken by the Eclair people of all points of interest in and about the town.

* * *

Charles Clapp, formerly on the Mirror staff, but more recently scenario editor of the Biograph, has severed his connection with that company, and is at present enjoying a much needed vacation in the "rural districts."

* * *

Hunter Bennett, assistant to the general manager of the World Film Corporation, is now on an extended trip which will cover the entire United States and Canada. Mr. Bennett will visit the twenty-two branch offices of the corporation, and confer with the different managers regarding the policy of handling the future output of the recent combination of the World Film Corporation and the Shubert interests.

* * *

"Moonshine Molly," a stirring tale of life among the moonshiners, by H. R. Durant, is being filmed by W. C. Cabanne at the Reliance and Majestic studios. The play tells a graphic story of love, intrigue and hatred among the moonshiners in the Kentucky hills. Mae Marsh will appear in the title role, assisted by Robert Harron, Wallace Reid, Fred Burns and Eagle Eye.

* * *

The World Film Corporation will release during the month of July "The Lights o' London" in five parts and "The Great Stroke" in five parts.

* * *

Rose Tapley, one of the Vitagraph players, was given a birthday surprise party at her home in East Orange, N. J., on Tuesday, June 30, when thirty of her friends and neighbors took her home by storm, decorated it from cellar to garret in yellow and green and gave the popular Vitagrapher one of the most enjoyable occasions imaginable.

* * *

An entirely new brand for Warner's Features will be launched by Jack Clark—one reel comedies, which will take that popular actor back into his old field.

* * *

On Monday, July 13, the Vitagraph theater, New York City, will offer its patrons another complete change of program. Two new feature pictures are announced, Richard Henry Savage's six-part drama of Russian life, "My Official Wife," in which Clara Kimball Young will be seen supported by an all star cast of Vitagraph players, and the three-part comedy, "Uncle Bill," another of those clever farces from the pen of Marguerite Bertsch.

* * *

J. E. Coolidge was stationed on a roof with his camera, getting ready to make a panorama of the recent Salem fire, when the owner of the building asked him to come down and assist in removing a sick member of the family from the danger zone. Mr. Coolidge barely had time to secure his camera and tripod and had to flee for his life. This is the reason the Salem fire pictures in Mutual Weekly No. 80 were all taken from the ground and not from a roof elevation.

* * *

F. A. Kelsey is producing and playing lead in "The Saving of Young Anderson," a gripping story of police life adapted from the Adventure Magazine at the Reliance and Majestic studios. The drama shows how a young police officer, formerly a gangster, rises above his surroundings despite the efforts of his former associates to pull him down.

* * *

The latest undertaking of the Lubin Company is a picturized version of Winchell Smith's "The Fortune Hunter" with Ethel Clayton, the charming Lubin actress, and William Elliot, late of the Belasco forces, in the leading roles. This elaborate photoplay, in which over three hundred people will appear, will be presented in five reels of two hundred scenes. It is being staged by Barry O'Neil.

* * *

A. B. Lamb, formerly of the Warner's Features, Inc., is connected with the Buffalo branch of the World Film Corporation.

* * *

Leah Baird is now back at the Vitagraph studios. She will start her first picture July 1, to be released in the very near future.

* * *

The famous Yale-Harvard Varsity boat races are shown in the issue of the Mutual Weekly No. 79, and should dispel all doubt as to which crew won the race.

* * *

Lionel Edel, formerly manager of the feature film department of the General Film Company of St. Louis, has been appointed traveling salesman for the World Film Corporation.

* * *

Samuel Goldfish returns from Europe this week. The trip of the Lasky chief was extremely successful. Mr. Goldfish will join his family at Long Lake, N. Y., where he will spend a few weeks with Jesse Lasky on a fishing trip.

The Edison Company has had the exclusive right to the filming of the various events which took place on June 26 and 27 during the police carnival at the Old Brighton Beach Race Course. Every important action of such officials as Governor Glynn, Mayor Mitchel and Police Commissioner Woods was taken by the Edison cameramen.

* * *

C. C. McKibben has been appointed manager of the Buffalo office of the World Film Corporation.

* * *

Sawyer, Inc., have made arrangements with the Esanja Film Company of Detroit to market their output of comedy films. This company, which is a new one in the field, although composed of old time motion picture men, has already produced six one-reel comedies and is turning others out at the rate of three every two weeks.

* * *

The current release of The Mutual Weekly, No. 79, contains some wonderful motion pictures of Mount Lassen in eruption. Mount Lassen is the only active crater in the United States and the films were secured under many difficulties and at great risk of life; the Mutual cameraman was compelled to flee the poisonous vapors several times.

* * *

The new four-story building, an addition to the already extensive Vitagraph plant, is now in course of construction at Brooklyn, N. Y. This building is intended for the mechanical departments.

* * *

The Gem Feature Film Service has opened an office in Algoma, Wisconsin, to supply feature service in that state. They are booking good business on "Evangeline," "The Money God" and "The War Correspondents."

* * *

Max Figman and Lolita Robertson are en route east with the negative of "The Man on the Box." The first showing of this feature, the latest from the Lasky studio, took place at the convention hall, Dayton.

* * *

Riding all alone in the tonneau of a giant 1915 model Fiat automobile, Miss Margaret Gibson, the charming leading lady of the Vitagraph Western studio, won first prize in the annual Bathing Girl's Automobile Parade, held Sunday, June 29, at Ocean Park, California. The first place carried with it an award of $50 in cash and a large gold and silver loving cup.

* * *

The William A. Brady Picture Plays Corporation now occupies its newly completed studio at Fort Lee, N. J. At the opening of September releases will be begun at the rate of one in each month. This number will be increased as the organization gets into perfect running order.

* * *

The scenario for "The Rose of the Rancho," which is to be produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., was submitted to David Belasco this week. Cast and other details for the first Belasco picture are going forward rapidly.

* * *

It required only one day for the Edison carpenters and property men to construct a village within the walls of Fort Schuyler, where many scenes were taken for "The Viking Queen," with Mary Fuller and about three hundred others in the cast.

* * *

The Sawyer Pompeiian projecting room was recently the scene of a very interesting party. In compliment to Mr. Jesse Lasky, this room was placed at his disposal, and he had as his guests Judge Dittenhoefer and members of his family and friends, who witnessed the first showing of a motion picture of Judge Dittenhoefer, which was made by Mr. Lasky and presented to the Judge by Mr. Lasky.

* * *

Wilfred Buckland, artistic director with the Lasky Company, constructed a stockade at Hollywood which Stuart Edward White, author of "The Call of the North," said is even more natural than the original which formerly stood at Big Lake Tap, Canada, far north of the beaten trails.

* * *

Ben Wilson has just been made a director in the Atlas Theater Corporation and has received a certificate entitling him to 500 shares of stock. The corporation will construct and operate one hundred motion pictures theaters throughout the States.

* * *

In the "Beauty" subject "A Joke on Jane" Jos. Rich attempts to play a joke on his wife, Jane. Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard play opposite and as the story goes the wits of Jane are more than a match for Joseph.

* * *

The Broadway Picture Producing Company are arranging the details of Thomas E. Shea's "The Man O' Wars Man," or "The Fall of Vera Cruz," which will be their next five-reel photoplay. Having completed "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," the release of which has been held back, they are now pushing Mr. Shea's production so it will be ready for August first release. Mr. Shea has secured Joseph LeBrandt to write the scenario and together they will produce the photoplay. Miss Dixie Compton will play Isabelle, the Mexican girl, opposite Mr. Shea.

* * *

"Business vs. Love" is a timely one-reel feature in which Vivian Rich and Wm. Garwood play opposite in a domestic drama. The husband is absorbed in his business interests and the wife is pining away for the love and devotion she craves but does not receive. Release July 22.

* * *

An interesting series of pictures in the Mutual Weekly, No. 79, is the launching and christening of the transatlantic flyer "America," in which Lieut. John Cyril Porte, of the British Royal Navy, expects to fly across the Atlantic Ocean.

Thos. Ricketts of the American Film Mfg. Co. has completed a two-act subject, "At the End of a Perfect Day." This is one of the series "In the Firelight" and "In the Moonlight"—both of which proved such remarkable masterpieces.

* * *

Charles Richman, recently secured by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., for appearance before the camera, will, in all likelihood, appear in Captain Barrington, in which he starred for several years.

* * *

The Bastile, one of the most famous prison-castles in history and the razing of which marked the fall of the ancient French monarchy, has been reproduced at Universal City, California, to be used in a series of features written around the unique French character, Francois Villon, who rose from a vagabond poet to the post of personal advisor to King Louis XI. The first of the Francois Villon series is a three-reeler and is entitled "The Oubliette." The role of Francois Villon is being played by Murdock MacQuarrie. The director is Charles Giblyn, and such stars as Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney play important parts. The story is from the pen of George Bronson Howard.

* * *

Donald I. Buchanan is a new member of the Vitagraph staff, engaged as special writer of scenarios and assistant to Ralph Ince in the directing of his pictures. Mr. Buchanan comes to the Vitagraph well equipped, as he has written a number of special pictures for other motion picture producers.

* * *

Madame Alice Blache is staging another one of her now famous mystery dramas. Claire Whitney is playing the role of a bride. Fraunie Fraunholz will also be seen in the new drama which will be presented in four reels.

* * *

The Board of Panama-Pacific Managers for Massachusetts has appointed Dadmun, of Boston, photographer to make the motion pictures of the state's industries, to be projected at the Exposition at San Francisco next year. These pictures will be exhibited at the expense of the state and will cover every department of industry.

* * *

An exact reproduction of a section of the sewers of Paris was built on the lot adjoining the Blache studio for an effect in "The Burglar and the Lady," in which James J. Corbett is featured.

* * *

A publicity stunt, advertising the A. B. C. Photoplays of 108 Prospect avenue, Cleveland, in the form of a subpoena, has attracted considerable attention. The writ has been cleverly gotten up and commands the reader to appear at the above mentioned offices where Albert Blinkhorn's Hepworth and Florence Turner productions are leased.

* * *

Kenneth D. Harlan, who accompanied Harry Schenck, Charley Pin and Vinnie Burns into the heart of Mexico, playing the part of the cub reporter who witnessed the battle of Monclova, has made arrangements with Madame Alice Blache whereby he will be seen in coming Solax releases. Dan Baker, the well known comedian, is also appearing before the camera under Madame Blache's direction.

* * *

The Wilfred Lucas company (Universal) has left Los Angeles for Big Bear valley, in the top of the Sierra Madre Mountains and forty miles from San Bernardino, California, where the principal scenes of the first installment of the "Trey O' Hearts" series will be produced. The first three-reel installment of this series is entitled "Flower O' the Flame," and it calls for sublime forests, rushing torrents and rugged mountains.

* * *

Albert Roccardi, of the Vitagraph players, familiarly known as Tony, underwent a serious operation at the Seney Hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y., on Wednesday, July 1. The operation proved a success and the patient withstood the ordeal splendidly.

* * *

"The Ranger's Reward" is a Frontier drama soon to be released that has a surprising ending, and one that should take audiences quite unawares.

* * *

Edward Jose, who took the part of Judge Harding in "The Stain" and the Lieutenant in "The Corsair," both by Pathe, is taking one of the principal parts in a new picture now under the direction of Frank Powell.

* * *

In the industrial parade, representing all industries of Southern California, which took place a few days ago in Los Angeles and was reviewed by the mayor, city officials and prominent men of the state, the Universal company's representation led the march. While more than one hundred industries were represented, those managing the parade felt that the Universal was the leading industry of the section and so it was given the first place.

* * *

Coming Frontier dramas featuring Dolly Larkin, Joseph J. Franz and Arthur Allardt are "The Fight in Lonely Gulch," "The Ranger's Reward," "The Broken Barrier," "The Gun Men of Plumas" and "On the Verge," all written by Karl R. Coolidge and produced by Joseph J. Franz.

* * *

In the subject, "The Dream Ship," produced by Harry Pollard, are used many properties of inestimable value. One rug alone is placed at a value of over $10,000. The chair used as a throne is one that was originally the property of a Spanish king. The scenes were taken in the Gillespie mansion at Montecito, one of California's choicest exhibits of natural and artificial beauties.

* * *

Miss Nellie Bell, who has appeared in recent Frontiers, has left that company and has become the bride of Carl Viden, photographer for the Kalem Company, at Santa Monica, California.

Thomas Ricketts, producer, shows his masterhand in "The Lure of the Sawdust," a two-part "Flying A" drama. The call of the white tents and the warmth of the hearth are depicted in truly artistic manner. The subject is set for release July 13, 1914.

* * *

Miss Ormi Hawley, who plays opposite Andrew Mack in "The Ragged Earl," the coming feature motion picture of Popular Plays and Players, Inc., of 1600 Broadway, New York City, has discontinued attending social affairs during the production of the picture. She now spends her evenings rehearsing for her work on the next day. The same is true of Eleanor Barry, who will also be seen in "The Ragged Earl."

* * *

Gus Anderson, the Norwegian marvel, a Pacific Coast fighter of considerable repute, was with the Vitagraph Company, posing for Theodore Marston, who directed the production of the fight picture, "The Greater Motive."

* * *

Sam J. Ryan, of "Tom Lewis and Sam Ryan" vaudeville fame, is always a good laugh whenever he comes on the screen. Ryan's record is mostly vaudeville comedy, but his experience in pictures has demonstrated the fact that he has something to offer to admirers of screen comedy. His six-year engagement with George Cohan has fitted him well for his present work in the Pathe studio.

* * *

Mai Wells, who has been a prominent member of the Frontier Company, has enrolled with Sterling Films.

* * *

"Satan's Rhapsody" is the unique title of a new, splendid and costly film soon to be released by George Kleine. The story features the famous actress, Lydia Borelli, whose sensational work in "The Naked Truth," now playing at the Candler theater, New York, proved a revelation to picture fans.

* * *

"The Ragged Earl," in which Andrew Mack will appear, the second production of Popular Plays and Players, Inc., of 1600 Broadway, New York City, is being produced from the adaptation by Benjamin S. Kotlowsky. Mr. Kotlowsky is a scenario writer of considerable reputation and has adapted several other stage successes for photoplay production, including "Michael Strogoff," the first production of Popular Plays and Players, Inc., in which Jacob P. Adler is starred.

* * *

George T. Fitzmaurice, who has been for some time at the head of the scenario department of Pathe Freres, has become a director. Mr. Fitzmaurice has written an exceptionally fine scenario for a six-reel feature and is directing the production himself. He has as his leading man William Roselle, in one of the biggest casts that has ever been used in an American production.

* * *

Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, of the Vitagraph, has completed the scenario of "The Chalice of Courage," from the novel by the Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, LL.D. The play is in five parts and every one full of action and intense interest.

* * *

A brand new animal picture, its main plot centering about the life of the circus with its sawdust rings and tight ropes, is the proposition upon which Director Fred Wright, of Pathe, is now working for a late summer release.

* * *

"The Line-Up at Police Headquarters," the feature picture introducing George S. Dougherty, New York's famous detective and police commissioner, produced by Gus Hill and William J. Counihan, has been turning people away wherever the picture has been produced. At the Tuxedo theater at 3d avenue and 42d street, Manager Shannon booked the picture for a return engagement at once as it broke all records of the house.

* * *

California's eccentric weather has at last settled down to business and to make up for lost time the Frontier Company have been working from 7 in the morning until 6 at night.

* * *

The wardrobe used in the original stage production of "The Ragged Earl," which is being produced as a feature motion picture by Popular Plays and Players, Inc., with Andrew Mack in the title role, is being reproduced by a specially engaged crew for the screen presentation.

* * *

Steve Snake is home, but not without a struggle. It required most of the New Rochelle (N. Y.) police department, the volunteer life saving corps, two motormen, three chauffeurs, a woman's screams and Lila Chester, to corral the fourteen-foot python and return him safely to the Thanhouser studio. Three weeks ago "Steve" was especially engaged to frighten Florence La Badie, the heroine of "The Million-Dollar Mystery." But he didn't do it. Instead, "Steve" crept out of his big wicker basket onto the highways and byways of Westchester County.

"GLOBE TROTTER" FILMS. Frank Romeiser. Zurich (Switzerland) Bahnhofplatz 14.

!!! EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY !!!

EXCELLENT NEGATIVE FILMS TO HIRE

with sole rights for all U. S. A. and Canada, of which some have been published in Europe, but never in America.

The films are first class, both in subject and production! American references given!

Sole Rights for U. S. A. and Canada 20 cents per foot for three months! For orders for over 3000 ft., 10% Reduction! On all orders received during summer season (till first of August), we give an EXTRA REDUCTION OF TEN PER CENT.!!! Sample copy 4½ cents per foot!

We have a large stock of Landscapes, Dramas and Comedies by the Best Actors. List and descriptions with cable words sent immediately on demand. Cable Address: "Globetrotter, Zurich."

Calendar of Independent Releases

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

SUNDAY, JULY 12, 1914.

ECLAIR—Willy Walrus and the Parisians (Comedy).....
ECLAIR—Lily as Little Mother (Comedy).....
FRONTIER—The Fight in Lonely Gulch (Drama).....

MONDAY, JULY 13, 1914.

IMP—When the World Was Silent (Two parts—Drama)...
STERLING—Almost Married (Comedy).....
VICTOR—Out of the Valley (Western Drama).....

TUESDAY, JULY 14, 1914.

CRYSTAL—Vivian's Four Beaus (Comedy).....
CRYSTAL—What Pearl's Pearls Did (Comedy).....
GOLD SEAL—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery (Series No. 14) (Two parts—Drama).....
UNIVERSAL IKE—The New Cook (Comedy).....

WEDNESDAY, JULY 15, 1914.

ECLAIR—Renunciation (Two parts—Western Drama).....
JOKER—Willy Walrus and the Awful Confession (Comedy)
NESTOR—Her Grave Mistake (Western Drama).....
UNIVERSAL—Animated Weekly, No. 123 (News).....

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1914.

IMP—Universal Boy (Series No. 1—Comedy).....
REX—The Sob Sister (Two parts—Drama).....
STERLING—Love and Lunch (Comedy).....

FRIDAY, JULY 17, 1914.

NESTOR—When Eddie Went to the Front (Comedy).....
POWERS—The Severed Hand (Three parts—Drama).....
VICTOR—The Panama-Pacific Exposition Up-to-Date (Top. and Edu.) .....

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1914.

"101" BISON—A Mexican Spy in America (Two Parts—Drama) .....
JOKER—His Wife's Family (Comedy).....

SUNDAY, JULY 19th, 1914.

ECLAIR—Tango Versus Poker (Comedy).....
FRONTIER—The Ranger's Reward (Western-Drama)....
REX—Out of the Darkness (Drama).....

MONDAY, JULY 20th, 1914.

IMP—In the Sultan's Garden (Drama).....
STERLING—The Circus (Comedy).....
VICTOR—Value Received (Two parts—Western-Drama)..

TUESDAY, JULY 21st, 1914.

CRYSTAL—Getting Vivian Married (Comedy).....
GOLD SEAL—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery (Series No. 15) (Two parts—Drama).....
UNIVERSAL IKE—Universal Ike, Jr., in Cupid's Victory (Comedy) .....

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22, 1914.

ECLAIR—Allah—3311 (Three parts—Drama).....
JOKER—Jimmy Kelly and the Kidnappers (Comedy).....
NESTOR—By the Sun's Rays (Western—Drama).....
UNIVERSAL—Animated Weekly, No. 124 (News).....

THURSDAY, JULY 23d, 1914.

IMP—The Gateway of Regret)Drama).....
REX—At the Foot of the Stairs (Drama).....
STERLING—Love and Lunch (Two parts—Comedy).....

FRIDAY, JULY 24th, 1914.

NESTOR—All at Sea (Comedy).....
POWERS—Kate Waters of the Secret Service (Two parts Drama) .....
VICTOR—Irene's Busy Week (Comedy-Drama).....

SATURDAY, JULY 25th, 1914.

"101" BISON—Olana of the South Seas (Two parts—Drama) .....
JOKER—The Polo Champions (Comedy).....

Mutual Film Corporation

SUNDAY, JULY 12, 1914.

KOMIC—Wrong All Around (Comedy).....
MAJESTIC—A City Beautiful (2 parts—Drama).....
THANHOUSER—The Leaven of Good (Drama).....

MONDAY, JULY 13, 1914.

AMERICAN—The Lure of the Sawdust (2 parts—Drama)..
KEYSTONE—(Title Not Given).....
RELIANCE—Our Mutual Girl No. 26 (News).....

TUESDAY, JULY 14, 1914.

BEAUTY—The Joke on Jane (Comedy).....
MAJESTIC—The Old Derelict (Drama).....
THANHOUSER—The Substitute (2 parts—Drama).....

WEDNESDAY, JULY 15, 1914.

AMERICAN—Youth and Art (Drama).....
BRONCHO—Shorty Turns Judge (2 parts—Drama).....
RELIANCE—How Izzy Stuck to His Post (Comedy-drama)

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1914.

DOMINO—Star of the North (2 parts—Drama).....
KEYSTONE—(Title Not Given).....
MUTUAL WEEKLY—Number 81 (News).....

FRIDAY, JULY 17, 1914.

KAY-BEE—The City (2 parts—Drama).....
PRINCESS—(Title Not Given).....
THANHOUSER—A Gentleman for a Day (Comedy).....

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1914.

KEYSTONE—(Title Not Given).....
RELIANCE—The Vengeance of Gold (2 parts—Drama)...
ROYAL—The New Housekeeper (Comedy).....

SUNDAY, JULY 19th, 1914.

KOMIC—"Billy" (Series No. 2) (Comedy).....
MAJESTIC—The Painted Lady (Two parts—Drama).....
THANHOUSER—Harry's Waterloo (Comedy).....

MONDAY, JULY 20th, 1914.

AMERICAN—A Man's Way (Two parts—Drama).....
KEYSTONE—(Title not given).....
RELIANCE—Our Mutual Girl, No. 27 (News).....

TUESDAY, JULY 21st, 1914.

BEAUTY—Her "Really" Mother (Drama).....
MAJESTIC—A Red Man's Heart (Drama).....
THANHOUSER—The Pendulum of Fate (Two parts—Drama) .....

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22d, 1914.

AMERICAN—Business vs. Love (Drama).....
BRONCHO—Shorty and the Aridville (Two parts—Comedy) .....
RELIANCE—Izzy and the Diamond (Comedy).....

THURSDAY, JULY 23d, 1914.

DOMINO—The Defaulter (Two parts—Drama).....
KEYSTONE—(Title not given).....
MUTUAL WEEKLY—Number 82 (News).....

FRIDAY, JULY 24th, 1914.

KAY-BEE—The Sheriff of Bisbee (Two parts—Drama)....
MAJESTIC—Lest We Forget (Drama).....
PRINCESS—(Title not given).....

SATURDAY, JULY 25th, 1914.

KEYSTONE—(Title not given).....
RELIANCE—The Saving of Young Anderson (Two parts Drama) .....
ROYAL—Milling the Militant (Comedy).....
—Servants Superseded (Comedy).....

Value Received

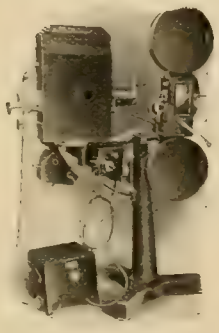
WHEN you purchase a Simplex projector, Mr. Exhibitor, you get full value for every dollar expended. It is the best machine that money, brains and skill can produce, and its parts are manufactured of the highest grade of materials, and by the most accurate machines obtainable.

It is your duty before purchasing a projector to consult mechanical and projection experts and obtain from them their unbiased opinion of the quality of the materials used in its construction, the principles involved in its design, its durability, and the kind of projection to be obtained therefrom.

We call your attention to a few of the salient features of the Simplex Projector:

Strength, accuracy and durability of construction.
Non-flicker and steadiness of projection.
Simplicity and silence of operation.
Absolute fireproofness.
Low cost of upkeep.

These are a few of the reasons why it costs more to manufacture the Simplex projector than any other moving picture machine on the market.



If YOU want VALUE RECEIVED, invest in a Simplex

Write for fully illustrated catalogue A

MADE AND GUARANTEED BY

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO. INC.

317 East 34th St. New York

Calendar of Licensed Releases

Current Releases

MONDAY, JULY 13th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—That Boy from the Poor House (Drama)....
EDISON—Qualifying for Lena (Comedy).....
ESSANAY—Sweedie the Swatter (Comedy).....
KALEM—A Diamond in the Rough (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
PATHE—A Russian Boar Hunt (Hunting).....
PATHE—The Wine Industry, Marsala (Travel).....
SELIG—The Wilderness Mail (Special—Two parts—Drama)
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 39 (News).....
VITAGRAPH—The Soul of Luigi (Drama).....

CINES—Rival Actresses (Special—Two parts—Drama)....

TUESDAY, JULY 14th, 1914.

EDISON—The Two Doctors (Drama).....
ESSANAY—At the Foot of the Hill (Drama).....
KALEM—Accused (Drama) .....
LUBIN—He Was Bad (Comedy).....
LUBIN—Tough Luck (Comedy).....
MELIES—Rags and Patriotism (Comedy).....
PATHE—Through Bosnia and Dalmatia (Scenic).....
PATHE—The Tombs of the Ancient Japanese Emperors, Annam (Indo-China) (Scenic).....
PATHE—Water Falls at Aragonia, Spain (Travel).....
SELIG—An Egyptian Princess (Comedy).....
VITAGRAPH—Fogg's Millions (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....

WEDNESDAY, JULY 15th, 1914.

EDISON—The Ever-Gallant Marquis (Comedy.....
EDISON—An Up-to-Date Courtship (Comedy).....
ESSANAY—The Fable of "Napoleon and the Bumps" (Comedy) .....
KALEM—The Express Messenger (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
LUBIN—Codes of Honor (Special—Two parts—Drama)..
MELIES—Justly Punished (Drama).....
PATHE—Pathe's Weekly, No. 45, 1914 (News).....
SELIG—His Last Appeal (Special—Two parts—Drama)...
VITAGRAPH—The Arrival of Josie (Comedy).....

THURSDAY, JULY 16th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—The Prospectives (Drama).....
ESSANAY—Snakeville's New Waitress (Comedy).....
LUBIN—The Cross of Crime (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
MELIES—The Test of True Love (Comedy).....
MELIES—A Sublime Deception (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 40 (News).....
VITAGRAPH—The Little Captain (Comedy-Drama).....

FRIDAY, JULY 17th, 1914.

EDISON—Meg O' the Mountains (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
ESSANAY—His Stolen Fortune (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
KALEM—Wanted an Heir (Comedy).....
LUBIN—The Lie (Drama).....
SELIG—Wiggs Takes Rest Cure (Drama).....
VITAGRAPH—Pigs Is Pigs (Comedy).....

SATURDAY, JULY 18th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—It Was Some Party (Comedy).....
BIOGRAPH—Some Decorations (Comedy).....
EDISON—Across the Burning Trestle (Drama).....
ESSANAY—Broncho Billy Puts One Over (Drama).....
KALEM—The Fate of a Squaw (Drama).....
LUBIN—She Wanted to Know (Comedy).....
LUBIN—All for Love (Comedy).....
MELIES—The River's Secret (Special—Two-parts—Drama)
SELIG—The Squatters (Drama).....
VITAGRAPH—The Song of the Ghetto (Special—Two parts Drama) .....

Advance Releases

MONDAY, JULY 20th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—(Title not reported).....
EDISON—The Adventure of the Absent-Minded Professor (Seventh of the "Octavious"-Amateur Detective Series) (Comedy) .....
ESSANAY—Money Talks (Comedy).....
KALEM—In the Wolf's Clothing (Fourth of the Alice Joyce Series) (Special—Two parts—Drama).....
PATHE—The Crayfish (Educational).....
PATHE—In French Guinea (Travel).....
SELIG—A Woman Laughs (Special—Two parts—Drama)..
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 41 (News).....
VITAGRAPH—Love the Clairvoyant (Drama).....

TUESDAY, JULY 21st, 1914.

CINES—The Stronger Tie (Special—Two parts—Drama)..
EDISON—A Matter of Minutes (Eighth of "The Man Who Disappeared" Series) (Drama).....
ESSANAY—Mrs. Billington's First Case (Comedy-Drama)
KALEM—The Beast (Drama).....
LUBIN—Temper and Temperature (Comedy).....
LUBIN—Worms Will Turn (Comedy).....
MELIES—(Title not reported).....
PATHE—A Badger Hunt (Hunting).....
PATHE—Life in Japan (Customs).....
SELIG—The Lure of the Ladies (Comedy).....
VITAGRAPH—Bread Upon the Waters (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22d, 1914.

EDISON—A Deal in Statuary (Comedy).....
EDISON—His Wife's Burglar (Comedy).....
ESSANAY—The Fable of "Higher Education that Was Too High for the Old Man" (Comedy).....
KALEM—The Rival Railroad's Plot (Special—two parts—Drama) .....
LUBIN—Who Seeks Revenge (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
MELIES—His Sense of Duty (Drama).....
PATHE—Pathe's Weekly No. 46, 1914 (News).....
SELIG—The Sealed Package (Drama).....
VITAGRAPH—Buddy's Downfall (Comedy).....

THURSDAY, JULY 23d, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—(Title not reported).....
ESSANAY—Slippery Slim's Inheritance (Comedy).....
LUBIN—The False Shadow (Special—Two parts—Drama)
MELIES—Wanted, a Sweetheart (Comedy).....
MELIES—When Preachers Leave Town (Comedy).....
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 42 (News).....
VITAGRAPH—The Apple (Drama).....

FRIDAY, JULY 24th, 1914.

EDISON—Laddie (Special—Two parts—Drama).....
ESSANAY—A Letter from Home (Special—Two parts—Drama) .....
KALEM—The Bingville Fire Department (Comedy).....
LUBIN—A Traitor to His Country (Drama).....
SELIG—The Substitute Heir (Comedy).....
VITAGRAPH—The Winning Trick (Comedy).....

SATURDAY, JULY 25th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—(Title not reported).....
EDISON—The Last Assignment (Twelfth of the "Dolly of the Dailies" Series (Drama).....
ESSANAY—Broncho Billy and the Gambler (Drama).....
KALEM—Defying the Chief (Drama).....
LUBIN—A Matter of Record (Comedy).....
MELIES—Black Pearls (Special—Two parts—Drama)....
SELIG—Footprints (Comedy-Drama) .....
VITAGRAPH—Romantic Josie (Special—Two parts—Comedy) .....

INEXPENSIVE AND ATTRACTIVE!

Beautiful and durable, ornamental as well as useful. POSTER FRAMES. Write for illustrations and special prices.

AMERICAN SLIDE & POSTER CO., First National Bank Bldg., Chicago

KLAW & ERLANGER

PRESENTING

Well-known Plays in MOTION PICTURES

PRODUCED IN

BIOGRAPH STUDIOS

Proclaimed by Exhibitors

PROGRAM HEADLINERS

THE FATAL WEDDING
IN THREE PARTS

STRONGHEART
IN THREE PARTS

CLASSMATES
IN FOUR PARTS

LORD CHUMLEY
IN FOUR PARTS

THE BILLIONAIRE
IN THREE PARTS

SEVEN DAYS
IN THREE PARTS

WOMAN AGAINST WOMAN
IN THREE PARTS

BOOKED THROUGH GENERAL FILM COMPANY EXCLUSIVELY

Special Photographs and two styles of one and three sheet posters and three styles of eight sheet posters available

Exhibitors News

Interesting Information Concerning Moving Picture Men Gathered By Moving Picture World Correspondents Everywhere.

PHILADELPHIA.

POTTSVILLE, PA., is almost run out of nickels which is due to the fact that the people hoard them up for the moving picture houses. Out of a consignment of $150,000 the Reading Coal and Iron Company did not get a single nickle and found it very difficult to pay the miners. The banks could not help out and the scarcity is blamed on the moving picture houses.

Mrs. Cyrus Niver, a member of the State Board of Censorship, is the originator of a rule which was adopted by the State Moving Picture Board of Pennsylvania. It restricts kissing to a limit of four feet. The rules that were decided upon are as follows: Husband and wife, three and a half to five feet; fiance and fiancee, four to six feet; newlyweds, five to seven feet; brother and sister, two and a half to three and a half; father and daughter, two and a half to three and a half; husband and mother-in-law, two feet.

Plans have been completed for the erection of a moving picture theatre at 2209 North Broad street, this city, by Mahlon H. Dickinson. The new structure, which will be erected on a lot 15 feet 10 inches by 125 feet, is to be assessed at $7,200. Work will be started some time in the near future.

Motion picture exhibitors and film exchanges in this city have been deeply interested in an investigation carried on here by the Legislative Commission on Fire Insurance. The investigation is being waged with an object of ascertaining the methods by which fire insurance companies carry on their business, and was formed at the instance of the last State Legislature which will receive the report of the commission at the conclusion of its hearings. The interest manifested on the part of the exhibitors and exchanges here is due to the testimony offered which, in some cases, shows the exorbitancy of fire insurance rates and the unfairness of the treatment accorded to policyholders. It is hoped by the trade in this city that a correction of certain abuses followed by insurance companies here and elsewhere will be recommended by the commission to the next State Legislature. The final result of the investigation is anxiously awaited by the motion picture trade in this city, as it is expected to have a more or less important bearing on insurance rates in which they are vitally interested.

Moving picture proprietors desiring to give performances on open-air property adjoining their places of amusement during the summer months may do so without obtaining another license, is the opinion of City Solicitor Ryan given recently to Director Porter of this city. For the comfort of their patrons, several moving picture proprietors requested Director Porter to permit them to give exhibitions in airdomes on adjoining property. So long as the property is confined to adjacent licensed theater property and the requirements of the fire marshal are fulfilled, the City Solicitor declared that he saw no need for a second license, provided that no attempt be made to give exhibitions in the enclosed theater simultaneously with the shows in the airdome. If the exhibition is to be transferred to a site some distance from the licensed theater, then, Mr. Ryan holds, a new permit would have to be secured.

The National theater, 10th and Callowhill streets, this city, has closed for the season, and will reopen in August with a Jewish stock company and moving pictures.

Hart's theater, situated at Frankford and Norris streets, this city, has closed for the season and will open with burlesque on or about the fifteenth of August.

Broadway theater, 52d and Greenway avenues, opened with first-class feature films on Monday, June 22.

Louis H. Cohen, of the Central Theater Company, has purchased the property at Broad and Dauphin streets from Morris Miller and the Delong Estate. The total assessed valuation of the property is $30,500. The purchaser will build a photoplay theater on the lot capable of seating 1,200 persons. Morris L. Miller has taken a mortgage of $30,000 on the entire lot.

A moving picture theater will be erected by J. S. Rogers, for J. Ellis, of Burlington, N. J. The new addition to the moving picture game will be a two-story brick structure seventy-five feet by two hundred feet. CONGDON.

SAN FRANCISCO.

"THE SPOILERS," Selig's big production has completed a two weeks' run at the Portola theater, and all records for attendance at the house have been broken. The doors were opened at half past nine o'clock in the morning to accommodate those who wished to come early and by noon the capacity of the theater would be taxed. During the afternoons and evenings it was impossible to accommodate the crowds and hundreds were turned away daily. The price for the morning show was 10 cents but after twelve o'clock this was raised to 20 cents.

Arthur S. Hyman, manager of the local branch of Warner's Features, Inc., is very enthusiastic over the decided turn for the better that business has take nin this territory. The business of this branch house has practically been doubled within the past six weeks and in spite of the fact that the force has been greatly augmented it has been found necessary to work nights to attend to all orders. The six reel features being released by this firm are attracting much attention and many inquiries have been received in regard to "Mother Love" and "The Light Unseen."

According to advices received from Lower California the yacht Iola, which left this city several months ago with an expedition to secure moving pictures for the California Motion Picture Corporation, is lost with Captain J. H. Syberg and George Woods aboard. The vessel was last seen on May 28, and was headed for Cape Lucas. She should have reached San Diego by June 10.

The pictures showing Mount Lassen in eruption have been a splendid drawing card at Grauman's Imperial, together with Laskys' "The Only Son." The attraction following this will be Jack London's "The Valley of the Moon." As soon as the announcement was made that this picture would be shown inquiries commenced to come in to the management in regard to prices and the length of the engagement, and it promises to be the same great success as "The Sea Wolf."

The Pacific theater, Hyde and Pacific streets, has been opened by Charles Spaugh, formerly of Merced, Cal. This handsome house is located in a fine apartment and residence section of the city.

Reports are current here to the effect that the Marcus Loew interests have completed plans for the erection of an immense hippodrome with a roof garden, the structure to seat about 4,000 persons. This is to be located in the vicinity of Sixth and Market, and work is to be commenced on it within ninety days. A cash prize of $500 is to be offered for a suitable name. The new house will be managed by Sid. Grauman who is to have charge of the Loew interests.

The Arcadia Amusement Company has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $50,000 by M. A. Fisher, D. L. Fisher and Mannie Asher.

The Independent Film Exchange of this city has opened a branch office at Seventh and Broadway, Los Angeles, this being in charge of Harry Hunter.

O. V. Traggardh, who is now the sole owner of the Union Film & Supply Co., has returned from a trip to Los Angeles and the intervening territory. While in the Southern city he moved the branch quarters of the firm from the Pacific Electric Building to 733 South Olive street, in the center of the supply district. Mr. Traggardh is preparing to make a trip to New York early in July to purchase films.

Max Graf, who for some time has been acting as traveling man out of the San Francisco office of the Eclectic Film Company, has been appointed manager of the new branch house of this concern at Salt Lake City.

The Eclectic Film Company has secured the necessary permits for the installation of an exhibiting room at 67 Turk street, and this will be in operation as soon as the equipment can be installed. This concern is also preparing to construct a storage vault with a capacity of five thousand reels to accommodate the immense stock that is being carried here.

A prosperity dinner was held recently in the nave of the Ferry Building, this being attended by more than two thousand business men of the city to celebrate the prosperous time now being enojoyed. A feature of the great gathering was a moving picture taken a few days ago in this city by the Keanograph Company of Fairfax, the scenario having been written and produced by James Keane. The picture entitled, "Through the Portals of the Past," show the Queen of Prosperity and the King of Optimism at the famous Towne portals in Golden Gate Park, viewing with astonishment and admiration the rebuilt city of San Francisco. Various scenes throughout the city are shown, together with many of its representative business men, and at the end Pessimism, with his hammer is banished from the city. The part of the Queen of Prosperity, "Miss San Francisco," is taken by Charlotta de Felice, while the King of Optimism is portrayed by George N. Chesbro. The rather ungrateful part of the Pessimist is taken by E. Alyn Warren. The banquet was largely attended by the theatrical interests of the city.

Marion H. Kohn, of the Globe Film Exchange, Inc., has abandoned his plan for a trip to New York, this having been made unnecessary by the arrival here of New York parties to close a number of deals that had been pending. This concern has taken over the balance of the space on the fourth floor of the Pantages building, and this will be occupied by the Apex Feature Service and the De Luxe Film Attractions. The Apex is to release three features a week in this territory and the De Luxe Film Attractions will handle "Sealed Orders," the "Blue Mouse" and other attractions. These two exchanges will be managed by Marion H. Kohn, and Morris Winik will have charge of the Coast territory and other branches to be opened at Seattle, Portland, Denver, Los Angeles and Salt Lake City. The services of Ernest Bru, formerly with Simmonds Features, have been secured for road work. The Apex has taken over all of the features formerly controlled by the Globe Film Exchange, Inc., and will in addition to these and its Apex films release a new brand to be known as the Strand. Mr. Kohn retains all of his interests in the Globe Film Exchange, Inc., but this will be under the direct management of Isidore H. Lichtenstein, and in the future single and multiple reels of regular subjects only will be handled.

Alton Tredick, recently with the Eclectic Film Company at Seattle, Wash., has been appointed manager of the branch maintained there by the General Film Company.

Geroge Ingert, recently with the World Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the Portland branch of the Eclectic Film Company. The Seattle branch of this concern is now under the management of C. M. Simmons, until recently with the General Film Company there.

The Family Theater at Kingsbury, Cal., has been purchased by Anderson & Lorin.

The Liberty Film Company has been incorporated at Oakland, Cal., with a capital stock of $25,000 by Emily Johnson, Sadie Lindblom, Tillie Hall, Alfred and Emory Johnson.

Brown Bros., of Salinas, Cal., have agreed to erect a concrete class A theater with a capicity of 875 for Berrier & Hanna. Plans have been prepared by Architect W. Binder of San Jose, California. CHURCH.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

THE Venice Theater Company which recently was incorporated under the state laws of Utah is erecting a new moving picture theater at Nephi. The company has a capital stock of $20,000. Thomas A. Foote is president, George O. Ostler, vice-president, and Harry Foote, secretary and treasurer.

Earl Blair is remodeling the Gleason Building at Wayzata, Minn., for use as a moving picture theater.

The Willmar Opera House Company of Willmar, Minn., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000. The incorporators are: Alton, Gertrude B. L. M. and Walter B. Crosby, Drusilla S. Baldwin and others.

Frank Hazelbaker, of Dillon, Mont., secretary of the Montana Exposition Commission, has decided that moving pictures which are taken in Montana to form a part of the state's exhibit at the San Francisco fair, will be shown in the moving picture houses of Montana prior to the opening of the exposition.

The Star theater at Missoula, Mont., has reduced its admission to five cents with no change in the service.

Manager E. L. Davenport of the Palace theater at Tacoma, Wash., secured the Tacoma exhibition of the Stadium Day pictures for a week's run. These films showed 40,000 Tacoma residents at their festivities and were a tremendous local attraction. They were taken by Beverly B. Dobbs, who is noted for his Alaskan films, and will be exhibited with much pride at the Panama-Pacific exposition by the state of Washington.

The name Auditorium was abandoned and the one of Majestic adopted, when that house in Boise, Idaho, began a regime of moving pictures. A strictly photoplay bill will be given, at least during the summer.

H. O. Clark returned to Great Falls, Mont., full of ideas for the new $100,000 moving picture theater building which he will erect in that city. He spent two months in the east with his eyes open.

Willis & Richter have bought the Lyric Theater at Dickinson, N. D., from A. W. Freeman, and both the opera house and the Lyric are now being operated under the management of L. J. Willis. The Lyric will be the regular home of the photoplay, while, aside from feature pictures on Wednesday evenings, the Opera House will be devoted to theatrical attractions.

The Duluth, Minn., News-Tribune is against separate moving picture theaters for adults and children. It says: "Why not make all these attractions just sensibly fit for folks and let it go at that? Just now when they are winning greater audiences by greater merit and by being more worth while, seems a strange time to classify them for retrogression."

The Bligh Theater at Salem, Ore., has fixed its change days as Sunday, Tuesday and Friday. More and more of the houses are finding that a daily change is not necessary to good business.

The riots in Butte, Mont., in the course of the celebration of Miners' Union Day were filmed by E. C. Schoettner of that city who was prepared to take the parade. The pictures were shown at the American Theater.

The Seattle theater in Seattle, Wash., marked its re-opening as a picture house with the World's Special Films Corporation five reel feature "Joan of Arc."

A 1,200 foot film of the Portland, Ore., Rose Festival caught thousands of faces and consequently was eagerly watched by the patrons at the Columbia theater in that city.

Under the direction of Miss Alice M Zierden, a bureau has been established in Portland, Ore., which has an excellent assortment of 5,000 educational slides which will be loaned to the schools of the state for use in connection with their studies.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

IN THE SOUTHWEST.

SHOWS were given at the Airdome in Sapulpa, Okla., while the Empress Theater was closed for remodeling.

J. E. Feeney, the new manager of the Grand Theater at Bartlesville, Okla., had an auspicious reopening. The women visitors to his remodeled and redecorated photoplay house were given flowers as souvenirs. The initial program, including "Strongheart" and "Love, Luck and Gasoline," were typical of the policy which is to rule.

The Isis Theater, North Main street, North Fort Worth, Tex., found that it paid to run the pictures of the Grocers' and Butchers picnic and baby show recently held in that city.

K. Beck, proprietor of Riverside Park at Hutchinson, Kan., is responsible for offering the authorities of that city one of the knottiest Sunday show problems they ever tackled. For some time they have battled over the issue. Beck proposed to construct a floating stage in the middle of Arkansas River and on that give his show. The city has no jurisdiction over a navigable stream. The spectators could sit on the bank and watch, and there is no penalty attached to watching a show.

Handsome new electric signs have been installed in front of the Rex and Grand Theaters at Carson City, Nev.

Moving pictures of the convention of Eagles at Louisana, Mo., and of the Railroad Men's Picnic were good local attractions when shown at the Majestic Theater at Hannibal, Mo.

The "pay day" scheme of giving prizes to patrons of photoplay houses has bumped into the law in Kansas. At Topeka Manager Lew Nathanson of the Best Theater was notified by the sheriff not to conduct the performance. He said that he had been notified by the county attorney that it was a lottery and not to permit it. Nathanson denied that it was a lottery, that each envelope contained real money and there were no blanks.

Miss Amelia Hunter is managing the motion picture theater which has been opened at Lorena Park, Ardmore, Okla.

William Brink and Henry L. Van Warren are now conducting the Epic Airdome, giving moving pictures at Henryettam, Okla.

Ministers of Argonia, Kan., are anxious that the members of their congregations as well as other photoplaygoers of the city see the best in religious films and have been planning a series of such pictures for the summer. They cooperated with the management of the Ideal Auditorium in bringing to Argonia the six-reel feature "Samson."

The films of the May Day fete at the State Manual Training Normal School which were taken by the Kansas Motion Picture Company of Wichita, Kan., are being booked in Kansas houses by Fain Conner of Pittsburg, Kan.

The John Carter building at Weatherford, Okla., has been secured by Stanset & Wilson of Bennington, Okla., who will operate a moving picture theater.

The members of the Rotary Clubs in the United States were filmed in their annual convention at Houston, Tex., by W. F. Bock of Toledo, Ohio, who will supply every club in the organization with a print.

E. H. Hill, manager of the Rex Theater at Arkansas City, admitted twenty-five girls and boys free to his moving picture show upon the presentation of 1,000 dead flies each.

James Buckley has erected a new building at Woodville, Okla., to be used for a moving picture theater.

When the petition was presented asking that an election be called in Hutchinson, Kan., to vote upon the question of Sunday shows, the city commission refused to call the election. Those who wanted the election tried to force it by mandamus proceedings. The city then attacked the constitutionality of the law which allows an initiative and referendum vote on any question, and the matter will be fought out in the state supreme court.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

ILLINOIS.

THE management of the Majestic theater at Belvidere gave a benefit performance for the Ogalla and Minneawawa Camp Fire Girls of the Episcopal Church.

Manager Lamb of the Palm theater at Rockford gets a suggestion of coolness out of the fact that many of his windows and doors are on the river side of the house. This, coupled with his electric fan equipment, is a big help to the hot weather business.

The Union Congregational Church at Peoria is using moving pictures to raise a fund to pay the expenses of the state convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies.

Because Warden E. M. Allen is a frequent visitor to the capital, and convict-roadmaking for Springfield has been persistently advocated, there was more than unusual interest in the "Life in the Joliet Penitentiary" films, and the Capitol theater, which had the Springfield exhibition, cashed in on some of this.

The Lyric theater at Mattoon was closed for several days while it was being remodeled and redecorated.

W. H. Sullivan and B. J. Huff, Jr., expected to have their new Empress theater, at 213 East Main street in Galesburg, open about the first of July. The house seats 300 persons.

The Kedzie Amusement Company of Chicago has increased the number of its directors from five to nine.

John Borden has erected an airdome in the rear of his moving picture theater at Matherville.

The I. and W. Amusement Company of Chicago has been incorporated to do an amusement business. The incorporators are M. M. Franey, Asher J. Goldfine and Harry P. Manns.

Earl Mullin and W. C. Maske have purchased the moving picture show at Rutland.

Harry Plunk has sold the Globe theater at Monticello to Frank F. Miner, city clerk. Mr. Miner will be assisted in the management of the house by his wife. The Globe is the only photoplay theater in Monticello.

The Vogue theater, on the west side of South Fifth street in Springfield, recently closed for ten days to make a number of changes in the house.

Members of the United Spanish-American War Veterans, department of Illinois, who held their state convention at East St. Louis, were the guests of Manager Joe Erber of the Avenue theater at a special program of moving pictures and vaudeville.

Prophetstown now has two moving picture shows, Carl Marvel having opened a new theater known as Dreamland, giving shows Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

The Central Amusement Company of Peoria has been granted a permit to erect an airdome in the 300 block on Shelley street in that city.

The Grand moving picture theater has been opened at Breese. Ben Frank is in charge of the projection and Miss Rosie Glaud is cashier.

The Beardstown Amusement Company of Beardstown has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000, to do an amusement business. The incorporators are L. W. Goodell, M. H. Harris, R. H. Garm and R. B. Glenn.

Roy Rogan has assumed charge of the Gaiety theater at Ottawa during the summer months.

Richard Brown of Ivesdale was secured by the merchants of that city to give his moving picture show in the open air as an attraction for country folk.

The pictures of the parade of the veterans of Illinois taken at the annual encampment of the Illinois Grand Army of the Republic in Mattoon under the direction of Manager Snyder of the Airdome of that city, did a big business when they were shown at his house.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Galesburg has elected Mrs. Fred Nelson chairman of a committee on moving picture censorship. Every member of the union is to act upon the board. If any of the women see a picture they think should not be run a request to discontinue it will be made of the exhibitor. Mrs. F. Smith, who read a paper treating the subject of the moving picture show, said that in her visits to the Galesburg houses in nearly every case she found only the best of pictures being exhibited. The exhibitors of the city have evidenced a willingness to work with the self-constituted censors.

The Galesburg Street Railway Company at Galesburg has started a moving picture show at Highland Park. The show is housed under canvas and the seating capacity is capable of expansion. The Gale Band has been engaged to furnish music [illegible] of the box.

Bloomington may have another moving picture and vaudeville house. Non-residents are said to be figuring on two buildings on Main street occupied by the Feicht and Buffalo saloons, with a view to making them into a modern theater.

Manager Hodson of the Oak Theater at Oak Park has been laying emphasis upon the desirability of reserving seats through a serial like "Kathlyn" and "The Million Dollar Mystery." He has found that his higher class patrons are pleased with the air of distinction given by this plan.

Harlem Park at Rockford is featuring its free moving pictures this season.

A moving picture theater has been opened in the opera house at Hillview, giving shows every Wednesday night.

Emil Berger made the opening of his airdome at Fourth avenue and Ninth street in Moline free to the public.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

CINCINNATI.

ARRANGEMENTS are under way for a change in the management of the local office of the World Film Corporation, G. J. Trask being succeeded, according to the schedule announced by Clay E. Brehm, who was formerly in charge of the Cincinnati branch for a short time. Mr. Brehm comes directly from the New York offices of the company.

Assistant Manager Haynes, of the Mutual Film Co., returned a few days ago from a successful trip through the territory surrounding Cincinnati, on which he rounded up some new business and saw a number of the old customers of the exchange. The Mutual program is going nicely with exhibitors, Mr. Haynes reports.

Manager Hetteberg, head of the Eclectic organization in Cincinnati, expects to make a pronounced hit with exhibitors with the pictures of the world's tour made by the Giants and the White Sox last winter. He has just received a number of prints of these pictures, and is delighted with them. Some comedy was injected into the film, making a more or less connected plot, and this, as well as the opportunity of seeing the athletes in action in all parts of the globe, is expected to make the pictures unusually popular. Ted Snowhook, a Chicago film man of wide experience, is a new member of the Eclectic force in Cincinnati. He will be on the road in this territory for the company.

Peter Blum is planning the construction in Mt. Healthy, a Cincinnati suburb, of a photoplay house which will contain seating room for 300, measuring 17 by 47 feet. The building will also have stores on both sides of the entrance and living quarters above. Architect Anthony Kunz is preparing the plans and specifications.

Ed. Winkelman, of Cincinnati, is said to be interested in negotiations which are under way for the construction of a motion picture theater on Sedam avenue, near Sixth street. This theater, if built, will make the second new one in that immediate neighborhood, another having been started a few weeks ago by a company organized for that purpose.

Frederick Burton, of Dayton, has filed suit against Westerman S. W. Edgar for damages in the sum of $5,000, which he alleges resulted from Edgar's failure to comply with an agreement by which Westerman was to advance him $2,500 for the purpose of purchasing a one-fourth interest in the film production of "The Reckless Age." The consideration for the agreement was an arrangement by which the profits were to be shared. Edgar alleges damages in the amount indicated by reason of Westerman's failure to produce the sum required in order to accomplish the deal.

The Columbia theater, of Dayton, was the initial producer in that city of "The Million Dollar Mystery," running the first installment with a high degree of success for several evenings last week. The large amount of publicity which has been used in connection with the new serial helped considerably in exciting curiosity and drawing the crowds, and the Columbia, as well as the other theaters elsewhere running the first installment, profited accordingly.

The Orient Feature Company, of Toledo, O., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $20,000, for the purpose of producing motion pictures and operating vaudeville and picture theatres. The incorporators are Rosina M. Herbert, I. A. Eppstein, John J. Ruben, Alice C. Eppstein and Hugh C. Dye.

The Eld Grand Theatre Company, of Bellaire, O., will add another to the list of motion picture houses in that town, as the organizers of the company, which has a capitalization of $5,000, propose the immediate construction of an up-to-date house. Those interested are Adolf Klein, Harry Herzberg, S. G. Crow, Fred Spriggs and Alma Dittrich.

Lafayette Roush, of Cincinnati, O., who formerly operated a motion picture house at Ripley, O., a suburb, is in bankruptcy, and is having some trouble with his creditors, who recently filed a protest against his release in bankruptcy, alleging that he had failed to list his moving picture outfit at its true value, that he used proceeds from the theater for the purpose of buying property which was placed in his wife's name, and that he committed other offenses which militate against his discharge from his debts under the bankruptcy law. The charges made will be heard in a short time.

The Youngstown "Vindicator," one of the daily papers of Youngstown, O., is advertising itself in a unique way, and at the same time giving many people pleasure. Each issue of the paper contains a coupon, which is good for admission to an exhibition of "Creation." The production is being shown at the Grand Opera House, and has run for several days. No charge whatever is made in connection with it, the paper adopting this plan of giving its public a treat.

The several motion picture exhibitors of Troy, O., recently decided in deference to public sentiment on the subject in that town which has made itself manifest, to close their houses on Sunday. The move was entirely voluntary, and was followed by commendatory resolutions on the part of the Troy ministerial association, composed of the ministers of the town, praising the exhibitors for their action. CASEY.

KENTUCKY.

THE Louisville airdomes have been reaping a fairly good harvest during the past week or ten days and the owners are well satisfied with general conditions. The weather has been so warm that, while people would go to the neighboring airdome, they would not take the trouble to dress up to come down town to a show. The down town houses, however, were busy all week as a consequence of the big Saengerfest of the North American Saengerbund, which was held in Louisville June 24 to 28. This event brought several thousand visitors to the city and helped things remarkably.

M. Switow, president of the Switow Amusement Company of Louisville has sold the Dream theater, at Madison, Ind., to L. E. Holwager, who also operates the Little Grand at Madison. This is the second of the string of houses owned by the Switow Amusement Company which has been disposed of within the past ten days.

Remodeling has commenced on the John C. Lewis Company's building, and the new Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, which is to build what is promised to be the handsomest house in Louisville, will push the work to completion early in the fall.

The Preston theater, which is managed by Sylvester Grove, is not being operated regularly at present, but Mr. Grove is operating the airdome immediately adjoining. During bad weather the regular house is open. The theater is drawing good audiences and showing some very good pictures, including several Mary Pickford plays.

The Majestic theater recently erected a large electric sign at the corner of Second street and Broadway, which marks the intersection of two of the busiest car lines in the city. This is one form of advertising none of the other houses has indulged in.

The motion picture program at the National theater has been drawing fairly good audiences ever since it was put on. This theater has a washed air, fan-ventilating system and even on the hottest days the temperature in the building has been held at normal with perfect ease. It has been the chief drawing card as a consequence.

A. V. Sheckler, formerly manager of the Grand theater, of New Albany, Ind., has been on the road for the Switow Amusement Company for some time looking after the various houses in the string, but has given up his position with the concern to take up road work under Manager Fred Sheldon, of the Louisville Warner office.

Ernest Carpenter has succeeded William Hunter as manager of the new Crescent airdome, which was recently established. Carpenter is a very busy man just now, as he is also connected with the Novelty theater and Carpenter & Johnston, who take motion pictures. The latter concern recently took motion pictures of the Saengerfest parade, given in Louisville during the past week. As the Saengerbund is a national society, the pictures may possibly be handled by one of the weekly event concerns.

George W. Jacobs, of Dawson Springs, Ky., was in Louisville recently making arrangements to purchase machines and supplies for a new house which will be opened on July 10 at the Springs. The house is being built by Roy Threlkeld, who has leased it to Jacobs for five years. The house will have a seating capacity of 370 and will probably be named "The Kentucky," although the name has not been finally decided upon. Mr. Jacobs is from Morganfield, Ky., and has been in the motion picture business for fourteen years, six of which were spent at Morganfield, Ky. He has also been connected with houses at Mt. Carmel, Mt. Vernon, Albion and Harrisburg, Ill., besides with a house at New Harmony, Ind., and is well acquainted with the motion picture business in small towns.

Manager Stout, of the Danville Opera House, Danville, Ky., has had a number of ventilators built, extending from the ceiling to the roof. A large number of electric fans have been installed, and it is now possible to keep the temperature moderate.

The Orpheum theater, of Fulton, Ky., recently showed some pictures taken in Fulton about two months ago. These pictures showed in the leading places of business, public buildings and large numbers of citizens, and made a hit with the public. Manager Chisholm was well pleased with the results.

The Kentucky Tuberculosis Commission, located at Frankfort, Ky., recently authorized a plan of campaign by which it expects to cover a rural section of approximately ten counties in the state in a health education campaign. The equipment for a moving picture exhibit which was used successfully for a time last fall will be augmented and the entire equipment will be mounted on an automobile so that various sections of counties not on railroads may be reached. C. H. Humphrey, of Lancaster, Ky., will be in charge of the work. The pictures will be supplemented with slides and a descriptive lecture. The commission has also authorized the preparation and printing of a large number of pamphlets of the home cure of consumptives which will be distributed at the lectures.

Information comes to Louisville that the Chicago Association of Commerce, which sent a delegation South, recently showed at a big meeting in Chicago moving picture views that were taken in Louisville, Lexington and other principal cities. The pictures were viewed with much complimentary comment concerning the cities visited and were received with enthusiasm. It was declared that "the generation now in command in the South will bring forth in the next quarter of a century that which will astonish the world. The panoramas of the two Kentucky cities shown were as follows: Louisville—Coal fleet of 30 barges, carrying 180,000 tons of coal; new bridge across the Ohio River, height 120 feet; two spans, each 620 feet, being the longest simply supported bridge spans in the world. This bridge is the property of the Kentucky and Indiana Bridge Company. Views of one of the largest distilleries of Bourbon whisky in the country, the largest mahogany lumber mill in the United States, and several views taken in Cherokee Park. G. D. CRAIN, JR.

IOWA.

THE stockholders of the Orpheum Theatre Company held a meeting at Fairfield and decided to dissolve the corporation.

P. E. Sinnot of Waterloo has purchased the Casino theater at Charles City from E. H. Chambliss, who has been conducting it for a short time.

Pence & Wagner opened their new Lyric theatre at Columbus Junction with "The Daughters of Men." The new house, which has a seating capacity of 280, is handsomely decorated and is equipped for good picture and vaudeville shows.

Warden McLaughery, of the Iowa State Reformatory at Anamosa, has renewed his request to the state legislature for an appropriation for equipment for a moving picture show to be used in the entertainment and uplift of the young prisoners. A similar request was refused two years ago.

Down town moving picture houses in Des Moines have gone back to the five-cent admission. Business at a dime was not up to expectation and when one broke away the rest hed to follow.

The Opera House at Jessup has been leased for one year to O. Palmer, who has been in the moving picture business for some time.

Robert Ford is now sole owner of the moving picture theater at Blockton, having purchased the interest of his partner, William Cortner.

Port Wilbern's new moving picture theater at Sibley, which is under construction, will be 31x76 feet.

As the result of the purchase by Miss Frankie Groom of Earl P. Hackett's interest in the Delpheus theatre at Clarinda, the Delpheus, the Bon-Ton and the Airdome are all under the same ownership and management. W. H. Osbourn will be manager of the properties. During the summer picture shows will be given at the Airdome, except on rainy nights, when the Bon-Ton will be used. In the winter the Delpheus and the Bon-Ton both will be given over to photoplay bills.

Elmer Schlidt has purchased the moving picture show at Little Rock from Lee Miller

George A. Van Camp, a newspaper reporter in Sioux City, has secured a camera and, under the name of the Animated Advertising Association, will film events and scenes in Sioux City and vicinity. One of the first pictures he arranged for was the auto races at the Sioux City Speedway on July 4. He plans to make pictures of interest to residents of Iowa and have them exhibited in theaters throughout the state.

Snyder Brothers have opened their new moving picture theater at Shannon City.

The management of the Electric theater at West Point has leased from the village a lot in the park and opened an airdome seating 500, which will give a few musical features in addition to three reels of pictures this summer.

E. E. Obriham, who has purchased the Family theater at Cresco from Will James, will run pictures Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday nights.

Miss Stella Russell, who will manage the World theatre at Storm Lake for her father, J. M. Russell, is a college graduate and former teacher in the public schools. Consequently patrons of the World are promised a program that will be somewhat educational, although none of the entertainment features will be sacrificed. D. E. Fyock, who sold the World, will devote his time to the Casino theater.

After A. C. Colledge's Elite theater building at Le Mars is completed it will seat 390, in addition to having a metropolitan front.

Harry Rick, who recently sold the Lyric theater at Boone, will go into the furniture and undertaking business at Williams.

The ordinance fixing a license fee of $50 a year for five-cent moving picture shows, $100 a year for ten-cent shows and $150 a year for fifteen-cent shows was brought before the city council at Council Bluffs and laid over. Its defeat was predicted.

G. T. Hochwender, formerly in the moving picture business at South Omaha, Neb., has purchased the Royal theater at Charles City from Arthur Kealing.

The Princess and the Cozy moving picture theaters at Odebolt have been consolidated and only the Princess will be operated in the future. O. W. Larson sold a half interest in the Princess to Harry Davis, owner of the Cozy. Davis will be in charge of the house and Larson will look after the bookings and other business affairs.

Lou Peters has purchased the Princess moving picture theater at Anamosa from Lee Lynch.

The Palm moving picture theater at 428 Brady street, Davenport, operated by George W. Morrison and G. E. Nelson, was attached by William Lillis, owner of the building upon a rent claim. W. F. Blakemore was ordered to operate the house, reporting to the court each Monday morning.

The Lyric theater at Waterloo has fixed Friday as special feature day.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

ST. LOUIS.

THE SHENANDOAH THEATER, at Grand and Shenandoah avenues, one of the largest moving picture and vaudeville houses controlled by the Associated Theaters Company, gave a benefit for the pure milk and free ice save-the-babies campaign, conducted by the Post-Dispatch, on July 11. A five-reel film entitled "The Piper of Hamelin," was given. The Hughes Printing Company contributed the programs. The Shenandoah gave a benefit for the same cause a year ago at which all box office records were broken.

J. Ignatius Finnegan, of St. Louis, has produced a four-reel drama, entitled "Quantrell, the Border Wars of Missouri." The film is founded on the historic incidents of the civil war. The reels were shown at Penrose Garden, July 3 and 4, when a special program was provided, including fireworks for the benefit of war veterans. Mr. Finnegan gave a lecture explaining the pictures in detail at every show. The feature was made by the Yale Feature Film Co., of St. Louis, and all the scenes were posed on the spots of the actual happenings as depicted in the drama.

A large water cooler has been installed in the Easton-Taylor theater at 4472 Easton avenue. Sanitary paper cups are furnished free to the patrons.

The Mikado theater, 5049 Easton avenue, has closed for the summer, but promises to open early in the fall.

The Hamilton Airdome, which is the largest and most handsome alfresco amusement place in St. Louis, has the operator's booth located in a beautiful pagoda, the lower floor of which is used for a women's rest and retiring room. The pagoda is large and roomy, almost as large as many small cottages, and with the fluttering white curtains at the windows it looks like a very attractive little home set in the middle of the airdome.

E. W. Dustin, manager of the Eclectic Film Company's branch, has fitted up a very complete projection room at the Eclectic Exchange, 3210 Locust street. GIEBLER.

MICHIGAN.

A ROOM in the Paquette Block in Sheboygan has been leased by Hennesy & Company, who will operate a moving picture show. They own houses in Detroit, Bay City and elsewhere in the state.

The Grand Theatre Building in the Hermann Building, on Calumet street, in Lake Linden, has been remodeled for use as a picture theater.

An automobile equipped with an eight-note set of horns is being used for advertising purposes by the Majestic moving picture theater at Battle Creek, Mich. A man beside the chauffeur plays as the machine is driven through the streets.

Manager James Champan of the Temple theater at Cario has remodeled his house. He also is changing daily instead of every other day.

Charles Q. Carlisle will be manager of the Mecca theatre, which has been opened at 110 South Washington street, Saginaw, by H. E. Oppenheimer, Ed. C. Forest and Carlisle

IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

W. H. WINANS, commissioner of publicity at Cleveland, Ohio, will not use the municipal exhibit room in the city hall for moving pictures in connection with public welfare work, but all films for education of the public in civic affairs will be shown in the regular photoplay house. The fire department has refused to allow the use of the exhibit room for this purpose.

Home-made moving pictures, reels showing industrial and residential Linton were shown at the Grand Opera House in Linton, Ind.

A new pipe organ has been installed in the Columbia theater at Alliance, Ohio, which is now under the management of Lemotto Smith. It will be used in connection with the moving picture shows which will be alternated with other attractions.

Andrew Cherry has made plans for the erection of a new building in Racine, Ohio, to be used as a moving picture theatre. Shows will be given every night at five cents.

The women exhibitors of Omaha, Neb., and vicinity are given a good deal of prominence in a feature story in the Omaha World-Herald. Miss Lillian M. Linstrom, who gave up a job as stenographer to begin a successful career as the manager of the Pastime, is paid a business tribute by the Mutual exchange. "If she doesn't get what she wants we get the devil," says one of the office men. Other photoplay women who are given credit for good work are Mrs. Nicholas Amos, who is interested in three houses in Council Bluffs, La., just across the river from Omaha; Mrs. George Truman, of Lincoln; Mrs. George M. Watradt, of Stanton; Mrs. Florence Davis, of Madison; Mrs. G. V. Higgins, of Crawford; Miss Hoffman, of Elm Creek; Mrs. A. K. Ackyrod, of West Point, and Mrs. Elsie Ouderkirk, of Franklin.

The Elk Grand Theatre Company of Bellaire, Ohio, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are Adolf Klein, Harry Herzberg, S. G. Crow, Fred Spriggs and Alam Dittrich.

A crusade to have signboards removed from the entrances to moving picture theaters in Dayton, Ohio, is planned by the welfare department of the city council.

The Big Brothers of the Elks' Lodge at South Bend, Ind., had films made there, explaining the nature of the work in befriending boys who have not had a chance. In addition to picturing the parade which was a feature of a fraternal picnic, a story of the rescue of two boys who had been arrested, their encouragement and rise in the business world is told. The films will be shown to 1,400 lodges in the United States.

Joseph Moore and Othro Stone of Clinton, Ind., have made arrangements to open a moving picture theater in the Stone Building on Main street in that city.

Carl B. Kreutzer will be manager of the Lyric theater, on South Broadway, in Peru, Ind., which was purchased recently by his father, J. J. Kreutzer, from Walker & Son.

The management of Krebe Park, near Hamilton, Ohio, has added an outdoor moving picture show.

An ultimatum has been delivered to exhibitors in Omaha, Neb., that unless white slave, blood and thunder and the features generally wildcatted are tobooed, steps will be taken by the Social Service Board for a censorship for all pictures. T. F. Sturgess, chairman of this board, does not like the number of white slave pictures passed by the National Board of Censorship. He says his organization wrote to the National Board six month ago demanding to know the reason for this influx. No reply was received. Another letter (registered this time) was sent. No reply was received to that. Mr. Sturgess cited an agreement made last spring by the Omaha exhibitors that all films of this class would be suppressed.

"Jap" Wilson has sold the Red Mill theater at Columbia City, Ind., to S. H. Randall, who owned it for a time and then sold it to Fred Hood. The death of a sister-in-law and of the mother of Mr. Wilson at Montpelier, Ind., made it necessary for him to remove to that city.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

WISCONSIN.

ALDERMAN LUCAS of Madison, Wis., has introduced into the city council an ordinance aimed at immoral moving picture shows.

The building occupied by the Gem theater at Rio was sold, and August Berkholtz closed the show the last of June.

Plans for a moving picture theater, costing $50,000, at Twelfth and Chambers streets, in Milwaukee, were drawn for the Badger Amusement Company of that city.

The Bureau of Visual Instruction of the University of Wisconsin, Extension Division, will not compete with exhibitors, according to its chief, William H. Dudley. The survey completed by the bureau shows that there are fifteen schools in the state of Wisconsin owning moving picture machines, thirty more are negotiating for them, and it is expected that fifty more will be installed before next Christmas. In the five months that the bureau has been in operation demand has been made for 15,000 feet of film. A course of thirty-five lectures with accompanying films is planned for many schools next year. There are 180 projection rooms in the Wisconsin schools, and for these the bureau has 20,000 slides to loan.

Clarence A. Sterling, formerly with the theatrical attraction "The Rosary," is managing a set of "Satan" pictures in Wisconsin. The films went well as Saturday and Sunday attractions at the Opera House in Marshfield.

Unusual photoplays have gone into the Shubert theatre in Milwaukee for the rest of the summer.

W. M. Vance has rented the Broadway theatre at Superior and opened it with a stock company, which gives tabloid dramas with pictures between the acts. Two shows a night are given. Labor troubles at the Broadway have been settled and union men are being employed.

Ellwood S. Brown, of the Orpheum, at Hartford, is booking the films of the Firemen's Tournament at Oconomowoc, which he secured.

Small industries in Wisconsin will be shown just as much consideration as the large ones in taking moving pictures to be used at the state exhibit at the San Francisco fair. The Wisconsin Commission, D. E. Bowe, secretary, Germania Building, Milwaukee, will have direct charge of the film part of the display.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

MISSOURI.

A. L. SCHWAHARDT, of Quincy, Ill., has purchased the Gem theater, of Trenton, Mo., from Frank Rader and Mrs. Josie Brown. The change was effective July 1. The former owners have not decided on their future plans.

Charles Watts has opened a house at Turck, Kan., the seating capacity being in the neighborhood of 200. Edison machines have been installed, with other modern equipment. Evening performances will be given.

A new airdome has been opened at Axtell, Kan., Elmer Henricks being the proprietor.

A wedding was a recent feature at the Airdome at Atchison, Kan. The nuptials attracted a good crowd, the usual interest in such occasions being in evidence.

A. J. Thrun has opened the Reel-Electric theater at Minneapolis, Kan., the house having a seating capacity of about 300. The indirect lighting system, a color scheme of green and licensed pictures are various features of the new theater.

M. A. Lewis, owner of the Navo theater at Bonner Springs, Kan., has improved his theater, installing a new Simplex projecting machine and other modern equipment.

The latest addition to moving picture theaters at Leavenworth, Kan., is the Princess, opened on Delaware street by George H. Royer and J. E. Howell. The house has been thoroughly renovated. Oscillating electric fans and other devices for the comfort of patrons during the summer have been installed.

Robert Dunlop, Oklahoma State treasurer and gubernatorial candidate, has evolved a plan by which he hopes to prevent Al Jennings, the former outlaw, from doing too effective "beating back." Mr. Dunlop has arranged for 1,000 feet of moving pictures to be made of him. The scenes will be taken on Mr. Dunlop's farm near Oklahoma city. The necessary heart appeal has been provided, it is said, old oaken buckets, tattered straw hats and other stage properties playing important parts in the setting.

J. G. Tindale has closed the Elite Theater at Gas, Kan., and will conduct performances at Electric Park during the summer. The Elite will be reopened in the early fall.

Howard Collins is remodeling a building at McPherson, Kan., and will shortly open a motion picture house, to be known as Grace Theater.

Fred P. Bartlett has reopened his airdome at Pleasant Hill, Mo., a few miles from Kansas City. The initial offering was "The Squaw Man," admission being raised to fifteen cents for the occasion.

Fred F. McClure, censor of moving pictures in Kansas City, has issued a letter to the local exhibitors, outlining the attitude of the newly formed board. Pictures which have been passed by the National board of consorship will not be inspected by the local department, unless a complain is made. In that contingency, the exhibitor will be asked to send the picture to the municipal projection room in the Waterworks building for inspection by Mr. McClure, and later, by the court of appeals, if the exhibitor is not satisfied with the decision of the individual. All pictures which have not been passed by the National board must be inspected by the municipal authorities before being shown. All white slave and "dope" pictures must be passed by the local board, regardless of action taken by the National board. In closing his letter, Mr. McClure commented on the class pictures manufactured and shown in Germany, stating that he believed that this plan would be adopted in the United States eventually. In other moving pictures which are inappropriate but on [illegible] to entirely [illegible] another, according to the view of the Kansas City censor [illegible].

The [illegible] which preceded the vote on the [illegible] ordinance, on the Metropolitan Street Railway, of Kansas City, provided a topic of conversation in exhibitors' circles for those who went for and against. The extension of the franchise organized previous [illegible] which was held on July [illegible], H. E. Lapp, of the Standard Amusement Company, and Frank L. Newman, of the Royal Theater were appointed on a committee of two hundred to work for the passage of the measure.

Several changes have been announced by the Kansas City branch of the Warner Feature Film Company. Charles Warner, formerly in Kansas City with the American Feature Film Company, and also independently, has joined the Warner exchange and will work on the road. He probably will be made manager of the branch a little later. William Warner, formerly with the Morgan Film Company in Kansas City, but more recently with the Atlanta, Ga., branch of the Eclectic, is another addition to the Warner branch. He will act as outside man. J. C. Wolff will continue as manager for a time, though he will eventually go to Denver to spend several weeks.

The Richlynn Amusement Company has begun work on the remodeling of the theater. About 115 seats will be added to the total capacity, bringing this up to about 550.

MURRAY.

WASHINGTON.

A BILL has been introduced into the House of Representatives by Congresman Howard, of Georgia, who seeks to compel all persons, firms, or corporations in the District of Columbia engaged in conducting open air theaters, baseball parks, or other places of amusement where admission fees are charged by owners, or lessees, to furnish free of cost to the patrons of such places an adequate supply of pure, cool drinking water, with sanitary cups, which shall be placed in sufficient amount conveniently accessible to all patrons. The bill is apparently the result of Congresman Howard being forced to pay ten cents for a five cent bottle of "tonic" at the ball park where, he says, they have even gone so far as to take the handles off the faucets so that one is compelled to patronize the vendors of soft drinks or go thirsty. He also stated that other amusement places were short on water accommodation.

Congressman Howard would have little difficulty along this line is he would patronize the Virginia Theater, on Ninth Street, Northwest, for at that place it is possible to wet one's whistle with a good brand of lemonade without having to dig into one's pocketbook for other than the regular admission. Mr. Howard, if he has any, could also leave his children there enjoying a first class show while he and Mrs. Howard take in the sights or do their weekly shopping.

Evidently the people of Washington do not appreciate good shows, for they do not seem to patronize those houses that show "big" things. At least such was the case at the Casino Theater where Harry Crandall exhibited such films as Jack London's "Sea Wolf," and others of a similar type, and he is no longer operating that theater. An effort has been made to educate the people to pay a fair price for a good show, but without avail. They hedge at more than ten cents per admission and only come across with that amount when extras are shown. This city is one of the hardest to satisfy in the way of amusements, and the man who can size up his clientele and keep them coming to his house is a good one. Even the legitimate houses are often hard put to please the people, for what may have proven a howling success in other cities will meet with a very cool reception here.

It is interesting to note that American manufacturers are cutting quite a figure in the European markets, for during the month of March, the last month for which figures are available, we sent abroad approximately 23,000,000 feet of film. Last year we sent only 3,000,000 feet in the same month, but that was an off year. In the nine month ending with March the total amount exported was 146,000,000 linear feet, which is nearly four times the amount exported during the same period in 1913, and three times that of the nine month ending with March, 1912.

For the first time in the history of the moving picture industry a performance was given on the White House grounds, although during President Roosevelt's administration indoor exhibitions were given, as also during the stay here of President Taft. The screen was set in the rose gardens behind the west terrace of the White House and on this was projected Gabriele D'Annunzio's historic drama, "Cabiria." The audience consisted of the President, his family, members of the Cabinet and their families, and a few other guests, numbering about forty in all. Tom Moore, of this city, acted as manager and was assisted by Mrs.

Moore and a corps of operators. A grand piano, presided over by Prof. Klein, of the Hippodrome, New York, was placed near the screen. The machine was operated from a high table placed at the rear of the line of chairs. Colored lights were used to give tone to the pictures. The performance proved a rare treat to the distinguished audience, especially Mrs. Wilson, who showed her keen appreciation of this historical play.

The Washington Herald, a morning newspaper, has made arrangements with the Photoplay Arts Company, of New York, to supply portfolios of moving picture stars. These portfolios can be obtained from the newspaper upon presentation of a coupon published in each issue and ten cents. The portfolios are seven inches by ten inches and are of calendared paper. They average nearly two dozen photographs each and are proving popular with the moving picture fans here.

Andrew J. Thomas and Sherman H. Dudley have taken over the American Theater, formerly the Lyceum, and will hereafter run vaudeville, catering to the city's colored population. Thomas and Dudley are the proprietors of the Howard and Dudley theaters and the lease on the American Theater will run for five years.

Roulette dancing, the serving of refreshments, and acommodations for about three thousand people are the features which make the moving picture theater, formerly a riding academy, at Twenty-second and P Streets, Northwest, stand out a little beyond the ordinary. Will F. Thomas, who for a number of years was connected with the B. F. Keith interests in this city and in Philadelphia, and who has established quite a little reputation as a lecturer throughout this section, conceived the idea of remodeling this large building to fit it for its present requirements. It is open on all four sides and is roofed with glass. By reason of its situation, it is perhaps one of the coolest places in the hot Capital. Music is furnished by the Boston Ladies Orchestra and this in itself is a treat. A section of the floor has been marked off in squares and during the evening roulette dancing is enjoyed by the patrons. A wheel has been placed on the wall and when the music stops this is spun. The wheel contains numbers corresponding to those within the squares on the floor and the couple occupying the square containing the same number as that on the wheel is presented with a souvenir. A number of tables have been provided and at these cool, soft drinks are served. A name has not yet been provided for this new place, and the management is offering a prize of $25 to the person suggesting the one most appropriate. The admission has been placed at ten cents.

The proprietors of the Washington Theater have opened a very attractive airdome adjoining their house. This park has a capacity of 800 and is well fitted out. Brick booths have been built to house the operators and cashier and spacious toilet rooms of brick have also been provided. Considerable care has been given to the equipment, and the park comes well up to all the rules laid down by the different branches of the city government, in itself no small task. A double show is run each evening when it is possible to give an outdoor show. During inclement weather the performances are given in the closed house.

Tom Eastwood has just returned from a trip throught the Carolinas, where he went in the interests of Warner's Features.

There is quite a little excitement along Ninth street just at present due to the activity of the so-called film censor. This lone policeman seems to be taking exception to just about everything, and anything, and his latest attack is on the replacing of sign boards without a permit. It seems that one of the managers of the theaters located on this street noticing that his display boards were getting in bad shape had them taken off and replaced with compo-boards. Mr. Policeman, noticing the decided improvement thus made, haled the manager into court. He refused to appear and now it will be a case of a jury trial—just to see who's boss. The sympathies of the exhibitors in the downtown section are strongly with the manager, for the policeman has been declared by many to be considerable of a nuisance.

The marked success attending the second blow-out of the Screen Club of Washington is prompting the officers to even greater efforts, and the next affair to be "pulled off" will contain many novelties. Just what these novelties will be or what form the meeting will take will not be divulged by President Dresner, but it will be in the hands of an aggregation of live wires, and something out of the ordinary may be expected. Nothing in Washington has ever had better success than the Screen Club and its affairs, and from the support being given both it would look as though their long existence will be unquestioned.

C. L. LINZ.

When Writing to Advertisers
Kindly Mention
MOVING PICTURE WORLD

DETROIT.

ON JULY FIRST the censoring of pictures by Lester Potter came to an end. The police department have a new plan for censoring motion picture films. Potter will continue to do a part of the work, as a member of the free lance squad. Under the old system Potter censored films before they were shown at the theaters. Now the work of censoring will be done at the theaters while the films are being shown in the regular way. "The idea of having the work done through the free lance squad is to separate it from the criminal end of the police department," said Commissioner Gillespie. "With the new plan the officers can drop in unexpectedly on any show and shut off objectionable features. The film people showed us quite clearly that we have no right to censor films before they are shown. All we can censor is the theater, each one individually."

"That's me, that's me," said more than 500 members of the Board of Commerce at the Temple theater on June 30 when the motion pictures taken on the recent cruise to Duluth were shown as a part of the regular performance. It was Board of Commerce night, and the entire lower floor, boxes and mezzanine were occupied by members and their wives, nearly 800 in all.

The Calvert Theater Company, of which David King is president, has completed a deal to build two motion picture theaters in the North Woodward district. The Kenilworth theater will be built on the southeast corner of Kenilworth and Woodward avenues, ground having already been broken. Seating capacity will be 1,500, costing $75,000, and to be completed by October 15. The other theater will be at the corner of Woodward and Philadelphia avenues. The cost of this will be $50,000, seating 1,200, to be ready by October 1. Mr. King is now one of the principal stockholders in the Calvert and National theaters.

George H. Riddell, manager of the Theater Novelty Co., whose factory is at 1573 Mt. Eliott avenue, contemplates opening an office downtown so as to be convenient for motion exhibitors. Mr. Riddell, in addition to manufacturing a number of novelties, will specialize in all sorts of repair work for motion picture theaters. Mr. Riddell, by the way, is also manager and stockholder of the Mt. Eliott theater, at Mt. Eliott and Harper avenues, which seats 400 persons. An interesting fact about this house is that since it was opened two years ago, it has seldom played to less than capacity. Three performances are given daily, with extras on Sundays and holidays. It must be admitted that the success of the Mt. Eliott theater is largely due to the efficient management of Mr. Riddell. In the first place he is always "on the job," to extend the "glad hand" to his patrons, and to be of any service to them that he can.

George Weeks, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, returned June 29 from a business trip to New York. Mr. Weeks reports local business to be excellent.

Douglas Dickerson, manager of the Detroit branch of the World Film Corporation, has taken a two-year lease on the Harmonie theater, corner of Russell and Leland streets, and has opened it as motion picture house. The theater was formerly a dance and lodge hall. It has a 700 seating capacity, all on the main floor. He has placed Frank Casper in charge, who, by the way, has a fine tenor voice and will occasionally render vocal selections as an "added attraction." Performances will be given nights and Sundays only; there will be no matinees on week days. The theater is in a thickly populated district of working people, and should prove a very profitable investment for Mr. Dickerson. The opening took place July 4.

The Ford-Detroit Weekly (a weekly review of local events filmed by the motion picture department of the Ford Motor Company) had its first showing at the Garden theater on June 28. It comyrised 500 feet. The photography was excellent. Among the events shown were the Detroit Tigers playing ball at Navin Field, the General Hospital which Henry Ford is financing, delivering mail to freight boats on the Detroit River, and interior views of the Ford plant. In the near future, the Ford-Detroit Weekly will show pictures of John H. Kunsky's residence.

Manager Jewett of the Motion Picture Department of the Ford Co., recently "pulled off a good stunt" in connection with the Garden theater. He notified the management that motion pictures showing the audience coming out of the house would be taken on a Saturday afternoon. Merchants in the same block "got next" and when it was time for the pictures to be taken they were all standing in front of their stores. The pictures were then shown the following Saturday matinee, and created a surprise to many of the regular patrons who saw themselves in action. The Moving Picture Department of the Ford is ready for work twenty-four hours out of the day. A camera and outfit is attached to a Ford car, and when a call comes in of a fire or an important event, it is only necessary for the operator to get in the car and go, as everything is in readiness for making the picture.

Delegates to the Central Conference of American Rabbis, which met in Detroit from June 29 to July 6, were guests of Adolph Finsterwald at the National theater on Wednesday evening, July 1, to see the feature production entitled "Spartacus." Mr. Finsterwald is president of the National.

Notice is given that the partnership lately existing between Teodozya Chylinski, Charles Chylinski, Stefania Eminowics and Thadeus Eminowics, carrying on a business as a moving picture theater at 1093 Chene street, has been dissolved by mutual consent, and in the future the theater will be operated by Thadeus Eminowics.

In the statement of incorporation filed by the Esperanto Film Manufacturing Co., of Detroit, the principal stockholders are given as Alex W. Beal and J. A. Servis.

SMITH.

INDIANA.

W. C. QUINBY and W. C. Dodds, representing the Quimby Amusement Company, have taken over the Jefferson Theater, Ft. Wayne, and will continue to operate it as a moving picture theater. The ten-year lease was obtained, it is said, at a sum said to be in the neighborhood of $80,000. W. L. Hill, who has been managing the house, will be retained in charge. As soon as possible the house is to be closed for repairs and the stage removed. In its place balconies will be erected for singers. A new front is to be added, a $5,000 pipe organ installed and an orchestra of eight pieces will be a feature. W. C. Quinby, head of the company, has a chain of about twenty-one houses.

The important part of the eyebrows play in the movie actors success is made the subject of an editorial by the Indianapolis Star. It adds "if you notice the movie heroes and heroines in action you can hardly fail to note they all have very powerful and expressive faces, with strong lines, large and mobile features, heavy eyebrows. The movies have been a wonderful boon to the actor whose voice and enunciation may have been execrable, but whose gift of facial expression is very great."

Moore & Stone expect to open the American, as it will be called, in Clinton about August 1. A feature will be music furnished by the Moore family orchestra. The house will seat about 400.

The Lyric Theater, Peru, now renamed the Colonial, has been sold by W. B. Walker to former Mayor John J. Kreutzer, whose son, Carl Kreutzer, will run the house. Extensive repairs are being made.

The Luna-Lite Theater, Marion, has a standing invitation posted in the theater and in its advertising asking patrons to suggest pictures in which they are interested, offering to get such pictures when possible.

W. C. Bowers, Crawfordsville, has equipped his motor truck with an electric generator and plans to use the equipment to put on picture shows. He will follow fairs and chautauquas over the state.

The Switou Dream Theater, French Lick, Ind., has been sold to William Luckett and W. W. Sloan, proprietors of the theater building.

The Methodist Episcopal Church picnic at Webster Lake, near Huntington, was filmed by order of the church and the "movie" will be put on at a church entertainment, even the actors being required to put up to see themselves. One of the number was "rescued" from drowning by several "heroes."

Jacob Blosser bought the Eureka house, Rochester, from J. E. Wilkinson, who expects to open a house in Indianapolis.

H. F. Linton is to open a movie house in Mulberry.

The Church Federation at Winamac, has endorsed the Isis theater in its purpose to exhibit only such films as have been passed by the Chicago board of censors. Each week the Isis management sends a notice of its program to Chicago for approval.

The merchants of Covington tried the experiment of offering a free movie show to attract a mid-week at town, showing the films on the public square. The stunt succeeded so well that it is to be made a permanent feature if a satisfactory arrangement can be made with Eugene Ford, who gave the first show. Ford is the owner of the Family Theater, Covington.

The merchants at Odon are making arrangements to add a free outdoor movie show to be an added attraction to the weekly band concert. A three hour show was given the night of July 4.

Herschel Redding has sold his picture house in Sheridan to Merde Irick of Terhune.

The North Vernon, Ind., airdome is putting on a baby show as a puller for the crowds.

North Vernon has passed a license ordinance, requiring the payment of $12.50 per six months for a strictly movie house, and $17.50 for the house that has a stage for vaudeville.

The Weidis brothers have bought the Royal Theater, Fairmount, from E. E. Rile.

R. E. Blackstone, manager of the Blackstone Theater, Martinsville, since redecorating and painting his house has added a pair of singers and announces a purpose to put on a feature service regularly.

WILLIAM.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

THE BEAST (July 21). Although she loves Jack Brandon, Edith is compelled to marry wealthy James Melford to save her father from jail. Marriage reveals Melford to be a drunkard and a brute. Edith and her husband visit a fashionable cafe one evening. During their absence, Marie, Edith's maid, and Brooks, the butler, make merry in the library. The unexpected return of master and mistress finds the servants unable to leave the room unobserved. The two hide behind the heavy window portieres. Melford, who is intoxicated, roughly attempts to embrace his wife. Filled with disgust, Edith pushes him away. The man falls, striking his head against the floor. Unable to revive him, Edith flees to her room in terror.

The morning papers inform Jack Brandon that his former sweetheart has been arrested on the charge of murder. He hastens to her aid. Marie and Brooks, who are sweethearts, are the principal witnesses against the unfortunate woman. Shortly before the trial, Marie learns that Brooks has fallen in love with another girl and mentally vows vengeance. The sight of the butler openly flirting with her rival on the day of the trial strengthens Marie in her resolve. Called to the stand to describe how Melford met his death, the maid springs a sensation by declaring Edith innocent and revealing the real slayer. Who the murderer is and how the death of Melford occured is shown in a denouement of wonderful interest.

"IN WOLF'S CLOTHING" (Fourth of the Alice Joyce Series—Special—Two Parts—July 20).—Carter Gordon, a fortune-hunter, becames betrothed to Daisy Brooks, daughter of a millionaire. Frame, Brooks' attorney, calls at the house to deliver some securities to his client. Dick Worth, his chum comes with him.. Carter is furious when he sees Daisy and Dick become interested in each other. The fortune-hunter sees Brooks place the securities in the library safe. Hard pressed for cash, Carter attempts to steal the documents, but is discovered in the act by Dick and Brooks. The shock kills Brooks before he can warn his daughter against marrying the scoundrel. Believing that Daisy loves Carter, Dick maintains silence. Later, he warns Carter that he will hold him accountable for Daisy's future happiness.

Realizing how deeply Dick loves Daisy, and knowing that the girl loves his chum, Frame plans to unite the two. Believing Carter is merely marrying the girl for her money. Frame informs him that Brooks has died penniless. The information reaches Carter on his wedding day. The man promptly prepares to flee. When the bridegroom fails to appear, Dick, who is among the wedding guests, suspects something wrong and goes after Carter. The latter is just about to go abroad. Furious, Dick thrashes him and compels Carter to accompany him. Daisy is overjoyed when the two apear. Frame, however, realizing the truth, denounces Carter as a fortune hunter just as the marriage ceremony is about to take place. The scoundrel slinks away.

Overcome with shame, Daisy faints in Dick's arms. He carries the girl into the library where she recovers. Then comes the knowledge that Daisy's only reason for not breaking her engagement was her pledged word. Happy in the knowledge that Daisy has loved him all the time, Dick takes her in his arms.

"THE RIVAL RAILROAD'S PLOT" (Special—Two Parts—July 22).—Intense rivalry exists between the Midland and Northern Railroads, both of which are trying to land the government mail contract. The Northern having established a record run, its rival determines to beat it. Ruth's sweetheart, Jerry, is the fireman on the locomotive which is to try to smash the Northern's record. Henley, a spy for the rival railroad, attempts to bribe Jerry and is knocked down.

At Henley's order, Jim Downs, his accomplice, enters Jerry's room on the day of the run and knocks the boy unconscious. The scoundrel then reports to Manton, the engineer, that he is to substitute for Jerry, who has been taken ill. Jim spills a chemical into the feed tank which causes the water in the boiler to form. The flyer comes to a standstill. Ruth, at the station a few miles ahead, anxiously wonders what is delaying the train. An attempt to telegraph for information results in the discovery that a falling tree has torn down the wires.

Rushing to a siding where an engine is standing, Ruth induces its crew to speed down the track in search of the missing flyer. Jim is filled with dismay when the rescue locomotive arrives. Billy revives and hastens to the office, where he tells of what has happened. At the same moment, determined to prevent the breaking of the Northern's record, Jim attempts to hold the engine crew up at pistol's point. A desperate battle ensues. The scoundrel finally falls from the cab and is killed. The break in the wires is repaired. Ruth telegraphs her story into the main office. Just as she finishes, the answer comes, "Well done! Mail just arrived. Beat record by one minute!"

"THE BINGVILLE FIRE DEPARTMENT" (July 24). Kartoffel, Chief of the Fire Department, and Schnitzel, Chief of Police, are rivals for the hand of Minnie, the mayor's daughter. Minnie, however, meets Bretton a fire extinguisher salesman. The two fall in love. The two chiefs, undismayed, continue to press their suits. Schnitzel, however, is loved by Tillie, an old maid. Driven to distraction by the woman's persistance, the Chief of Police finally heaves her into a mudpond. Undaunted, Tilly continues to pursue her idol.

In his effort to win Minnie, Schnitzel develops into a bold, bad plotter. To get his rivals out of the way, he sends Kartoffel off on a wild goose chase and has Eretton arrested. Minnie, however, turns the chief down hard. Like all real villains he immediately plans revenge.

The man hires Ferocious Flossie, a desperate criminal, to disable the only piece of fire apparatus in town and then set fire to Minnie's home. The desperado succeeds in his foul designs, but is seen in the act of setting the house afire by Minnie.

The girl turns in the alarm and then runs for help. Meanwhile, Chief Kartoffel finds that his automobile hose cart has been rendered useless. Minnie meets Bretton who hastens to the house and extinguishes the fire with his patent extinguisher. When the mayor returns home he learns how Minnie's sweetheart has saved his residence. In gratitude he consents to the marriage of the lovers. Schnitzel learns of this with desnair. Death possessing no terror for him, he takes the most desperate step he can think of—he marries Tilly.

"DEFYING THE CHIEF" (July 25).—Running Elk and Snake Eye, are rivals for Ohonka's hand. Although the maiden loves Running Elk, Chief Big Bear, her father, favors Snake Eye. The latter discovers a party of hostile Indians in the vicinity. He suggests to the chief that Running Elk be sent out as a scout, hoping his rival will be captured and slain by the foe. The chief consents and Ohonka's lover is ordered to spy upon the war party.

Before leaving, Running Elk proceeds to his sweetheart's tepee to bid her goodbye. Snake Eye, who has followed the brave, is wild with rage. Casting caution to the winds, the Indian steals after Running Elk with the intention of slaying him. But the latter hears his foe approaching. The two engage in a deadly knife-duel which is seen by a terrified squaw. The fight ends with the death of Snake Eye. The squaw hastens back to the camp where she informs the tribe of what has occurred. Running Elk is made prisoner.

The warriors decree the death of the warrior. Lots are drawn to decide which of the braves shall be the man's executioner. Ohonka sees the fatal knife drawn by one of the tribe. Running Elk's death is to occur between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock that night. Promptly at 10 o'clock Ohonka, clad as a warrior, approaches the Indian guarding the tepee in which Running Elk is confined. Believing her to be the executioner, the brave allows her to pass. The loevrs make good their escape. Later, when the real executioner arrives, the ruse is discovered. Just as the tribe is about to pursue, their foes make an attack upon the camp. While the deadly conflict rages, Ohonka and Running Elk continue their flight until all danger of capture is past.

VITAGRAPH.

"LOVE, THE CLAIRVOYANT" (July 20).—Annoyed by Broughton's attentions to Ruth, his wife, John Masten becomes intensely jealous, but makes no comment. Ruth, who is of a vivacious nature, sees no harm in Broughton's attentions. She gives a party, during which her husband is called away, and while looking over some reproductions of famous paintings, Ruth sees one representing "Iche Liebe Diche" (I Love You) and suggests to her guests they get up tableaux of living picures. All are enthusiastic and Broughton agrees to assist Ruth as stage director. Masten returns and through the alcove window sees his wife in Broughton's arms, posing as "Iche Liebe Diche." Not knowing it is a tableaux, he rushes upstairs in a frenzy of jealousy. After the party, Ruth finds her husband packing up. He wildly accuses the girl of unfaithfulness, and giving her no chance to explain, abruptly leaves the house. Broughton learning of the trouble he has unconsciously caused, tries vainly to see Masten and clear up the situation.

Ruth makes up as a fortune-teller for a church. Masten arrives, is seen by Ruth and, at her instigation, Broughton induces him to have his fortune told. Not recognizing her in her gypsy make-up, he is astounded when Ruth tells him he has wrecked his happiness by his unwonted jealousy. He leave the tent and outside meets Broughton, who satisfactorily explains the entire tableaux affair. Masten, thoroughly repentant, begs his wife's forgiveness, holds out his arms, and Ruth, with a little cry of gladness, comes to him and whispers softly, "I Love You."

"BREAD UPON THE WATERS" (Special—Two Parts—July 21).—Jean, an artist, takes everybody's troubles upon himself. As often as he can sell a picture, he does so, and then squanders the money upon "dem good-for-nothin' artists," as Mammy says. Falconer, another artist, is a heavy drinker and dies, leaving Mary, Laura and Toodles, his children, in sore straits. The artists are very sorry, but know nothing they can do to help them, as they have little to give. Jean, though poor himself, takes the orphans into his home. Having just bought a new overcoat, Jean meets J. Gage Russell, an elderly and poorly-dressed man, on the street, without a top-coat, and Jean forces his own upon him, under the impression that the old gentleman needs it. Old Russell sees the humor of the situation and follows Jean, learns his address and determines to investigate the artist's conditions, so struck is he by his unusual generosity. Jean continues his life of self-sacrifice for his friend's children and finds it no small undertaking. Russell, who is a millionaire, instructs DuBeen, an art critic and picture dealer, to help Jean along by buying all his productions. DuBeen later tells Jean he lacks soul that he must live some deep emotion that will reflect in his work before he will be great. All goes alone smoothly until Jean is awakened to the state of his heart by Harmon making love to little Mary and asking Jean's consent to allow him to marry her. He realizes his own great love for the girl, but in a last supreme sacrifice, hides it, and with tears in his eyes gives her to Harmon, while he returns to his studio to worship at the shrine of his high ideals of love. His soul awakened to these great thoughts, he imparts them to his canvas and his fame spreads throughout the world.

"BUDDY'S DOWNFALL" (July 22).—Left behind by his brothers on their fishing trip, Buddy is disconsolate until he sees Lilly, a stylish young lady from the city, who is visiting Mrs. Boyd, their next-door neighbor. He awkwardly makes her acquaintance, and it proves to be a case of love at first sight on his part. She is older than he and although secretly amused, is gracious to Buddy and he acquires such a swelled head that he passes haughtily by his old friends, Grace and Elsa Forster. Buddy invites Lilly to the Strawberry Festival and she consents to go with him. She meets his older brother, Arthur, they are mutually attracted and Buddy is made to feel that he is a "Third Party." To prevent Buddy from taking Lilly to the Festival, Arthur, on the night of the affair, hides his brother's long-trouser suit and the poor boy is obliged to go in short pants. Lilly spies his abbreviated trousers and, smothering a laugh, trips off on Arthur's arm. Buddy accuses Arthur of playing a trick on him and after a strenuous argument which nearly breaks up the Festival, Buddy goes home sobbing with grief and shame. The following day Arthur, after a severe scolding from Mother, returns Buddy's suit. Buddy dons his man's clothes, and later meets Elsa and Grace. They are about to pass him by when Buddy stops them and apologizes for his previous rudeness. All are soon the best of friends again and when Arthur goes by with Lill, Buddy merely smiles in a superior manner, showing that he has entirely recovered from his "downfall."

"THE APPLE" (July 23).—Promising to send for his sweetheart Roza, when he gets settled, Hugo Hunfalvy leaves Hungary for America. In New York he meets Louis Kaplan, an old friend, who owns a fruit store. Louis' sister, Marie, is pretty and flirtatious, and is much impressed by Hugo. He soon falls under the influence of her wiles and buys part interest in Louis' store. Some weeks later, Hugo receives word that Roza is coming on the next steamer. He is not over-pleased, as he had almost forgotten her. When Roza arrives, Marie slyly calls attention to the newcomer's provincial manners and peasant clothes, causing Hugo much embarrassment. Roza receives a visit from her Aunt Sophia, who sees how things are going and determines to help the girl. Hugo marries Roza and they continue living with the Kaplans. Hugo treats his wife very coldly and the climax comes when he leaves her to attend a theatre party with Marie. Roza is heartbroken and goes to her Aunt's for sympathy. Sophia is a wise woman, pretends a sudden illness and insists only Roza shall nurse her. Marie is no housekeeper and Hugo soon misses Roza's neat ways and good cooking. In accordance with her plans, Sophia gives Roza money to buy modern dresses and fashionable finery, so when Hugo calls and sees Roza in her new clothes, he realizes she is very beautiful. Awakened at last to the fact that his wife is his dearest possession, he fervently entreats her to come back to him. At first she is cold and indifferent, but softens and finally consents, provided he will buy a little home of their own. He eagerly agrees, kisses her passionately and Sophia watches them in their happiness.

"THE WINNING TRICK" (July 24).—Florence Trevor is a romantic young girl, who, although brought up in luxury, has acquired an idea that riches are not at all desirable. Alfred Fletcher, an extremely wealthy suitor, asks her to become his wife, and while she likes him, refuses, saying she will not marry a wealthy man. Fletcher is amazed and rather crestfallen. A few days later, he tells the girl's father he intends taking Florence at her word and proclaim he is a poor man. Trevor and his wife approve the plan and both appear shocked to learn from Alfred that he is financially ruined. Florence, however, experiences a change of heart. When the young man calls and asks her if she is willing to become his wife, now that he is poor, she throws herself into his arms. Her parents make strong objections to the match and the young people elope. At first all goes well, although Florenec has heaps of trouble keeping house without the modern conveniences and latest improvements. Her husband pretends to be looking vainly for work. Threatened with eviction for non-payment of rent, she tries to find work herself, but meets with ill-luck and begins to tire of poverty. Alfred secures a position as butler in a beautiful mansion and after seeing the beautiful place and comparing it with her own cheap little apartment, Florence becomes discontented. When Alfred returns, she hysterically tells him, "I wish I had married a wealthy man." This is what he has been waiting for. The following day, she again visits the mansion in hopes of securing a position as maid. "The Master of the House" is announced, and Alfred, elegantly dressed, steps into the room. He has played "The Winning Trick" and Florence, after recovering from her amazement, snuggles lovingly in his arms, declaring she will never again long for poverty.

"ROMANTIC JOSIE" (Special—Two Parts—July 25).—While employed as maid of all work in the suburban home of Mrs. Bilkins, Josie, who is of an intensely romantic nature, sees a novel her mistress is reading, and is seized with a desire to read it. Mrs. Bilkins goes to the city and Josie takes advantage of the opportunity to "borrow" the book. She becomes so absorbed in following the adventures of "Gwendolyn and her lover" of Knighthood days, she forgets all about the dinner cooking on the stove. When her mistress calls up on the 'phone, Josie is too much interested to pay any attention and Mrs. Bilkins, alarmed, decides to return home at once. Readin~ feverishly, Josie pays no heed to the smoke pouring from the stove and soon the house is filled with it. Meantime, a policeman rings in a fire alarm and calls out the reserves. The police and fire apparatus arrive on the scene and set to work extinguishing the "fire," while a large crowd gathers. Mrs. Bilkins, arriving on the scene, faints. Despite the clouds of smoke and drenching streams of water, Josie, in the midst of the turmoil, continues devouring page after page until Hank bravely dashes in and carries her to safety. She drops her book on the way out and goes right back after it. Mrs. Bilkins, who has learned there was no fire after all, becomes mad clear through and peremptorily discharges Josie, who tersely replies, "I should worry." Josie steals away to a quiet corner with Hank and finishes reading the romantic adventures of the hero and heroine.

"Hallberg"

TALK NO. 34

Motion Picture Brilliancy

You cannot show a beautiful thousand-dollar painting at night with a candle burning on the side to illuminate it. Your exhibit would be a dismal failure. It is the same way with motion picture projection, if you provide the best film, best machine and the best operator, you cannot show a decent picture with an inferior current supply at the arc. Get a "HALLBERG" A. C. to D. C. Economizer, and make the best picture in the world. You don't realize what this means until you see a picture projected with the light from a "HALLBERG", it speaks for itself, and I want you to know that information concerning this important "HALLBERG" A. C. to D. C. Economizer will be furnished to you immediately upon receipt of your inquiry. Mercury Arc Rectifiers and Rotary Converters are out of date, the "HALLBERG" A. C. to D. C. is superseding these devices, and is used by all leading picture exhibitors.

I take old machines in trade as part payment for new ones, and I also make liberal allowance on your old rheostats, A. C. Economizers, A. C. to D. C. Converters and Rectifiers in trade for the celebrated "HALLBERG" A. C. to D.C. Economizers, which give the BEST LIGHT with the LEAST CURRENT.

BIOGRAPH.

IT WAS SOME PARTY (July 18).—Jack loves Fanny Higgins. Her father does not approve. Jack, downcast and cast out, sees Pa Higgins going to a party given by a gay society widow. He follows and sees Pa join a gay poker party, the stakes played for being the players' wearing-apparel. Pa has lost nearly everything but his B. V. D's. Jack gets Fanny as a witness to the scene—shocking! Fanny gets into the room after Jack has frightened the players, steals Pa's clothes and brings him to terms. Jack gets Fanny and she returns Pa's clothes.

SOME DECORATORS (July 18).—Bilkins decides on a general house cleaning. For this purpose he employs a whitewasher, painter and paperhanger. They quarrel over a can of beer and "start something." In the melee that follows the house is wrecked. The police are called and add to the confusion. The arm of the law reaches up chimneys, over roofs and all over the place finally capturing the belligerent workmen in the bottom of the lake. Bilkins at the finish is anything but clean.

THE PROSPECTORS (July 16).—The old Prospector dies and leaves his daughter alone in the uninhabited hills. Two other prospectors come, a young man and an older one. They meet the girl and the inevitable happens—they love her, the young man with a poor and noble love, the old man with the black primitive passion of desire. The older one tries to accomplish his purpose through treachery and cowardice, but he only meets a just death, while the manly youth and the courageous girl move on to the life of love and happiness.

THAT BOY FROM THE POORHOUSE (July 13).—To be in a poorhouse is a hard lot, but to go from a poorhouse bound to a stern, cruel taskmaster is still harder, especially when one is a little boy. Then, to find an opportunity to show one's inherent heroism and thus win the gratitude of a rich man and the permanent companionship of the rich man's son is perhaps compensation enough. And thus it is with "That Boy from the Poorhouse."

ESSANAY.

MONEY TALKS (July 20).—Mr. Forflush has a great desire for spending money, but his salary does not warrant the luxuries his life necessitates. The time finally comes when his creditors hound him. A wild chase takes place, which ends by Mr. Forflush jumping into a huge puddle of mud, where he accidentally finds a big wallet stuffed with bills. He is now able to pay his creditors and all ends well.

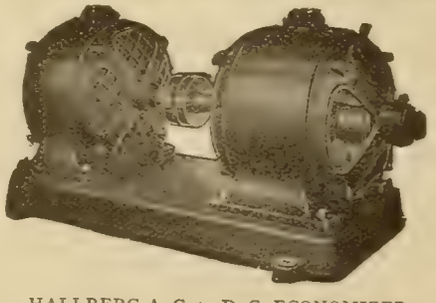
MRS. BILLINGTON'S FIRST CASE (July 21).—Mrs. Billington had been a law student for a number of years, and much against the wishes of her husband, determines to take a case as soon as she receives her diploma. Her husband, a prominent attorney, discovers who her client is, and pays the prosecuting attorney a handsome sum to allow him to handle the case. Mrs. Billington is defeated by her husband and the humiliation stings her to the core. She later agrees that the woman's place is at home, and the river of marital happiness runs smooth once more.

HIGHER EDUCATION THAT WAS TOO HIGH FOR THE OLD MAN (July 22).—Buchanan Bartlett, shiftless son of Hiram Bartlett, farmer retired, is sent to college to learn things. Father becomes peeved when he receives a bill of expenditures a month later from his son, amounting to two hundred and fifty dollars. The old man decides to investigate things, and the following day finds him at the university. Hazing

Distributor of the Celebrated Mirror Glass Screen and "Mirroroide" Curtain

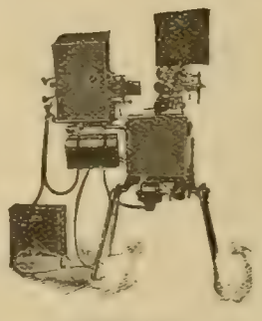
SIMPLEX

Distributor Simplex Machines



HALLBERG A. C. to D. C. ECONOMIZER FOR ONE OR TWO LAMPS

Distributor Power's 6-A Machines



POWER'S 6A

Factory Selling Headquarters for POWER'S, SIMPLEX, MOTIOGRAPH and EDISON MACHINES, "HALLBERG" STANDARD A. C. ECONOMIZERS, "HALLBERG" D. C. ECONOMIZERS, MERCURY ARC RECTIFIERS, MOVING PICTURE MACHINES and FLAME ARC CARBONS

I EQUIP THEATRES COMPLETELY

Free Circulars on all makes of M. P. Machines, but Hallberg's Big Catalogue, 100 pages, costs you 25c. by mail.

J. H. HALLBERG "THE HOUSE OF QUALITY" 36 East 23rd Street, New York

compared to the rough treatment father received at the hands of the college boys was like a social four o'clock tea. What they didn't do to father wasn't worth doing, so the elderly gentleman decides to take his son back to the farm. The story ends with Buchanan hoeing the corn field in the blistering sun.

SLIPPERY SLIM'S INHERITANCE (July 23).—Mustang Pete and Slippery Slim are in love with the fair Sophie. Slim borrows money from his sister, so he may lavish gifts on the woman of his heart. Slim's sister is in love with Mustang, but he spurns her love. One fine morning Slim receives a letter from an attorney to the effect that he has been left ten thousand dollars. This he shows to Sophie, but she is afraid to marry him for fear Mustang will do something desperate. Slim conceives the idea of leaving a note for Sophie, in which he states that he is about to commit suicide, and wants her to marry him before he dies, thereby gaining his fortune. Sophie rushes to Slim's bedside where the marriage ceremony is performed. The queen of Snakeville becomes furious when she discovers that her husband is very much alive and that the money was left to his sister. Mustang rushes to Slim's home only to discover that the deceitful one's sister has been married to another man. Business of collapse.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE GAMBLER (July 25).—Broncho Billy, an express rider, is married to Stasia Wynn, daughter of Grant Wynn. John Mackey, a gambler, comes to town and Wynn loses all his money to him. Broncho Billy buys his wife a scarf pin, which her father steals and loses to the gambler. Mackey is caught cheating and is driven from town. Across the border, Broncho sees Mackey and hears him tell how a "beautiful girl" gave him the scarf pin. Broncho recognizes the pin and grabbing Mackey, takes him to his home where he confronts Stasia. Stasia meanwhile has promised her father not to betray him. However, the father hears the commotion in the next room and confesses. Broncho begs his wife's forgiveness, which she willingly gives.

"A LETTER FROM HOME" (Special—Two Parts—July 24).—John Armory is appointed special State's Attorney to investigate the timber land grafting situation. He breaks the news to his fiancee, Ruth, and a week later they are married. J. R. Zerkel, a timber king, meets Armory at the country club and offers him a bribe to report things in a normal condition, but the latter refuses to listen to him. The attorney and his wife leaves Chicago for Westchester, where he takes up active work in his investigation. His time is limited, which necessitates his neglecting his wife, which later nearly breaks his heart when he discovers in her diary that she is lonesome and wants to return home. Zerkel sends a wire to Phillip Bently, a banker in Westchester, informing him to offer Armory a handsome sum to drop the investigation. Bently tries and fails. A few days later Zerkel's right-hand man, Clutton, arrives in Westchester under an assumed name and tries to force Armory to accept the bribe. Armory's love for his wife prompts him to accept, but she, aware of the fact that her husband has been acting strangely for a day or so, plays eavesdropper and is overwhelmed with disgust when she sees her husband accept the tainted money. Later that evening she confesses to her husband that she loves him more than she does the big city, the bright lights and everything she is accustomed to, and if he will return the tainted money to the crooked lumbermen, she will be perfectly contented to remain in Westchester with him the rest of her life. Armory returns the money, much to the discomfort of Clutton and informs that gentleman that he is going to see the investigation through and that the bribe offered him will only be another piece of evidence for placing him and his gang behind the bars.

MELIES.

"RAGS AND PATRIOTISM" (July 14).—Percy Perkins and Archie Van Cleve, two knights of the road, read that the Americans were beaten in the first International Polo Match. This touches their sense of patriotism to such an extent that they gather others of their kind, also two dilapidated horses, a colored gentleman and a mule and challenge the Englishmen. Everything is going splendidly for their side until a beautiful white cat walks across Archie's face and he wakes up to find it was all a lovely dream.

"JUSTLY PUNISHED" (July 15).—Mrs. Oxford repels the advances of Viscount Monmouth, a man who has nothing else to do save play Don Juan. Her husband's brother, who has been estranged from the family for years, pleads with her to try and effect a reconciliation. She promises that if he will wait for three days, when it will be her husband's birthday, she will try to win her husband's pardon. Viscount Monmouth sees them together and informs Oxford that his wife is meeting a lover and deceiving him. He, convinced against his will, plans the destruction of the couple when next they meet. However, he discovers the truth in time and Viscount Monmouth himself falls into the trap he had caused to be made. Next day Oxford introduces his brother to all the neighbors at the birthday party.

"THE TEST OF TRUE LOVE" (July 16).—The daughter of a rich banker was afraid she would be married only for her money, so she went into the office of her father's solicitor, disguising her identity. One of the clerks fell in love with her and she returned his affection, but when she presented him to her father as her intended husband she was told she would be disinherited. This she risked, and her father afterward explained that it was merely a test of her affection as she had tested her husband's.

"THE RIVER'S SECRET" (Special—Two Parts—July 18).—Diamond mines seem to gather blackguards like a magnet gathers steel dust. The chances of obtaining a stone whose sale will make the vendor rich for life, attracts all those to whom honest work is abhorrent. Money is easily won and easily lost, and when it cannot be made on the "I. D. B."—the independent diamond business—which consists of selling stolen stones—well, there are generally "pigeons" to be plucked. This engrossing story tells how a scoundrel after fleecing his victim, kills him and impersonates him with the idea of gaining more money. Nemesis, however, finally overtakes him and he meets his death in the very same river in which he had thrown his earlier victim.

"A SUBLIME DECEPTION" (Special—Two Parts—July 16).—A widow by effacing herself and sacrificing her property brought about her daughter's marriage with the man she loved. Being flighty the girl nearly lost all through a silly flirtation and was only saved at the apparent cost of her mother's honor. However, the daughter realized at last that this was too dear a price and, confessing all, restored her mother to the man who loved and honored her, and obtained her own husband's forgiveness.

GEORGE KLEINE.

THE RIVAL ACTRESSES (Cines—Special—Two Parts—July 14).—Ruth Merill, a young actress of great talent and beauty, is assigned to an important role in a new comedy and scores a tremendous success, thereby arousing the jealousy and incurring the enmity of Ethel Barber, an older player and a member of the same company. Her continued success causes her rival's envious heart to suffer all the pangs of acute jealousy and to seize upon every possible opportunity to halt her rise in the profession. Ruth's fiance is Harry Lowe, an artist, and having failed in several efforts to injure her professional standing, Ethel resolves to attack her happiness by causing trouble between the lovers. To this end she persuades the stage manager to show Ruth marked attentions and at the same time find underhanded means to make Harry distrust his sweetheart's faith. She finally succeeds in causing a break between the two. Ruth is heartbroken, but, determined not to allow Harry to see that she cares, begins to accept the attentions of Hudson, a millionaire, who has been fascinated by her many charms.

Harry and Hudson, unacquainted with each other, have a mutual friend in George Stewart. One day Harry is at George's rooms when Hudson bursts in and boasts of his conquest of the young actress, displaying a note which she has written him, giving him a rendezvous, as evidence of his success. It is with difficulty that Stewart prevents a bare-handed battle between the two. When he understands the situation, Hudson suggests that Harry take his place and meet Ruth at the designated spot. In the meantime Ruth has repented of her hasty action and persuaded the old prompter at the theater to carry a note telling Hudson that she cannot meet him as promised, and instead of his sweetheart, Harry finds the old fellow waiting for him at the rendezvous. The two then hurry back to the theater, and a moment later the young people are in each other's arms.

EDISON.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE ABSENT-MINDED PROFESSOR—(Seventh of Octavius—Amateur Detective Series of July 20).—When Octavius received a letter signed by Professor Harper, asking him to come out to his country residence for the purpose of solving a mystery, he felt greatly flattered. When Octavius arrived at the Harper home, the professor explained matters. For the past two weeks, somebody had been regularly stealing from his collection of antiquities. Warning the professor to say nothing of his presence in the house, Octavius settled himself in the room with the curios and waited. While he was waiting, the professor received a telegram reminding him of an important engagement in the city that evening. In the excited hurry of departure, the professor completely forgot about Octavius.

Thus it happened that when a mysterious female glided into the curio room, and abstracted a few more of the professor's relics, and when Octavius, starting to pursue her, knocked over a few antique busts, the butler, hearing the noise, and believing Octavius to be a burglar, promptly collared him and threw him into the wine cellar. In the wine cellar, Octavius found the missing curios hidden in the pocket of a long coat. When the professor returned the next morning, and effected the release of his ill-used guest, Octavius had quite forgotten to be interested in the identity of the person in the household who owned a kimona with storks in it. The kimona was the only thing he had been able to distinguish clearly about the mysterious female who swiped the relics.

The professor reported that the kimona belonged to his daughter. Octavius ordered that the household be summoned before him. He recognized the mysterious female at once. None the less Octavius' duty was only too clear. So he turned sadly to the professor, and informed him that his daughter was guilty of the theft. The beautiful mystery was not the professor's daughter. She was the second maid, and had simply "borrowed" the kimona. The professor's real daughter came in just in time to hear Octavius accuse her of the crime. Things immediately became so lively that Octavius was glad to escape alive.

A MATTER OF MINUTES—(Eighth of "The Man Who Disappeared" Series—July 21).—It will be remembered that Nelson Wales had put his sister into considerable danger and difficulty on account of the fact that that amiable young man had forged her name to a mortgage. John Perriton, the man who disappeared for Mary's sake, saved her from an unpleasant situation. The next day he came to the Wales' house to call Nelson to account. Confronted by his sister and the angry Perriton, Nelson, at first, attempted to bluster his way out of the situation. When that failed to produce the desired impression, he locked Perriton and Mary into a room, and telephoned to the police that he had captured John Perriton, the murderer.

While they were locked in the room, John told Mary the truth about the murder—that Nelson had killed the butler, and that he, Perriton, had shouldered the responsibility for her sake. Mary, filled with horror, none the less believed Perriton's story. The police arrived at the front door, and John escaped through the window, directing Mary to meet him at a certain station on the railway line. John climbed to the roof by means of a rain spout, and after a desperate race with the detectives, succeeded in completely eluding them.

At Nelson's suggestion, the detectives, foiled in their pursuit of Perriton, turned their attention to his sister. They followed her aboard the express train which she took to keep her appointment with Perriton. Mary, discovering that she was followed, sent a telegram to the train she knew Perriton had taken, telling him that she would elude the detectives, and would meet him at Vernontown, a junction point, where they could catch a north-bound express. Mary succeeded in eluding the detectives, by the clever ruse of leaving the train, and quickly slipping back aboard just as it was starting. Meanwhile Perriton's train had broken down. Realizing that everything depended on making the connection Mary had planned, he was at his wits' end. The accident to the train would certainly make him miss the connection. An aeroplane meet in the vicinity of the accident solved the difficulty. Perriton hired an aeroplane just as the express came into sight. Mounting into the air, the great birdlike machine raced for miles against the speeding train, and reached Vernontown in time.

A DEAL IN STATUARY (July 22).—Gerald had a well-developed artistic temperament and a consequent aversion for disturbing his beautiful soul with thoughts of labor. He liked his friends—and one friend, named Ethel, in particular—so much more than he did pottering about with clay and marble, that his days, instead of being spent in the devoted concentration of purpose were filled with automobile parties and tango teas. A curious lack of appreciation of the real excellence of his motives on the part of his creditors led, after a time, to so many insistent demands for payment that Gerald was reluctantly forced to telegraph to his aunt, requesting the immediate gift of $1,000.

Gerald's Aunt Jerusha knew something of her nephew's proclivities, and promptly telegraphed back that she would give him $5,000 if he ever finished a statue. Gerald, filled with delight at such reckless generosity, replied that he had two statues finished, and requested his aunt to remit the $10,000 in any way she pleased. In reply to this, Aunt Jerusha wrote that she was coming to look at the statues. This put Gerald in a rather uncomfortable position because the two statues he mentioned had only existed in his imagination. For a young man of his quick mind, however, a little thing of that sort did not make any particular difference. After a little thought, he hired his Japanese valet and the gardener to pose for the statues.

When he showed Aunt Jerusha his masterly "Japanese Wrestler" and his equally excellent "American Boxer" everything would undoubtedly have gone along all right, had it not been for a small boy who had overheard the entire scheme. The small boy stuck a pin in the ankle of the American Boxer, while Aunt Jerusha was inspecting the group. The sturdy boxer prompt-

Do This NOW!

If you do not receive a copy of "The Universal Weekly" every week, send me the name and address of your theatre and I'll see that you get it, NO MATTER WHAT PROGRAM YOU ARE USING. You can't know what's going on in the film business unless you read "The Universal Weekly." Here's a corking good chance to boost your business. Do it now!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

205 West Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.
252-A Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.
1122 Farnam Street, Omaha, Neb.
Hubbell Building, Des Moines, Iowa.

Agents for All Makes of Machines and Accessories

"The Biggest and Best Film Renter in the world"

U. S. Army & Navy Goods

Complete Stock
Correct Regulations
Nothing Faked

CONFEDERATE UNIFORMS, U. S. A. UNIFORMS (any period), RIFLES, SADDLES, CARBINES, REVOLVERS, TENTS, HATS, CAPS, FLAGS, AMMUNITION, COWBOY CHAPS, BELTS, HOLSTERS, QUIRTS, ETC., All Ready for Immediate Delivery.

FOR SALE OR HIRE

Send for Catalogue "G"

ARMY & NAVY STORE CO., INC.
245 West 42nd St., New York
Between B'way and 8th Ave.

ly took a swing at his partner in crime, who replied with a bewildering sucession of piu-jitsu holds and ended by jumping on the boxer's stomach. Aunt Jersuha went home. The shock sobered Gerald to such an extent that he actually went to work, and made enough money all by himself to marry Ethel.

HIS WIFE'S BURGLAR (July 22).—When Mr. Smith came home early one afternoon and discovered that his wife was not in to welcome him, he became highly indignant. Mrs. Smith was very fond of gadding about. She loved to play bridge and she loved to make calls and lend her voice to the cheerful chatter that arose to the accompaniment of clattering teacups. The indignant Mr. Smith decided, as many a sadder and wiser man has done, to teach his wife a lesson. With the aid of a couple of pillows, a suit of clothes, a hat and a pair of shoes, he evolved a remarkably life-like dummy. He placed it under Mrs. Smith's bed, allowing the legs and shoes to protrude slightly. Then Smith secreted himself in the closet and waited. Mrs. Smith returned, beaming, from the party, and went to her dressing table to remove her hat. In the mirror her eyes fell on the two legs under the bed.

Mrs. Smith gave one despairing shriek of horror and fled from the house. On the street, she hastened to the nearest policeman and breathlessly confided her terrible story. The policeman summoned assistance and followed her back to the house. Meanwhile Mr. Smith had removed all traces of the dummy and had started on a search for his eyeglasses. He had just discovered them under the bed where he dropped them while putting the dummy in place. When the policemen entered, hauled him from beneath the bed, swathed him in a sheet to quiet his frenzied struggles and bore him past the hysterical Mrs Smith on the front porch to the station house. At first the sergeant would not listen to the poor man's excuses, but at last he consented to send for Mrs. Smith. Then Mr. Smith had the pleasure of telling his wife just how it all happened.

LADDIE (Special—Two Parts—July 24).—The great tragedy in a mother's life is when her children grow up and leave her. When her son, John, left her to go to the city, Mrs. Carter was utterly heartbroken for a time. But, because there was no help for it, she was philosophical, and if she grew any sadder as the years went by, her sorrow did not show in her patient old face. When fifteen years had passed since "Laddie's" departure, Mrs. Carter learned that she must give up her home, on account of a railroad which needed the property for its right of way. Naturally enough, her first thoughts turned to "Laddie." She decided to go to him in the city and surprise him.

Mrs. Carter arrived at "Laddie's" house late one evening. She was surprised at its prosperous appearance. Laddie's infrequent letters had not made her realize that her son had become a rich and successful physician. At the door, she told the maid to inform Dr. Carter that a poor woman from the country wished to see him. Laddie, with some impatience, consented to see her, and the mother, with a glad cry, flew into his arms. Laddie was glad to see her, of course, but the poor mother soon felt that something was lacking. When the realization finally dawned upon her that Laddie was ashamed of her, it nearly broke her heart. But because she was too proud to stay where she was not wanted, Mrs. Carter crept silently away from the house after nightfall. After a few experiences with the seamy side of city life, she was taken care of by two kindly people who were only too glad to do the lonely old woman a good turn.

When Laddie realized that his own coldness had driven his mother away, his remorse was terrible. Every effort he made to find her, however, was in vain for more than a year. Then, one morning, on his regular call to the hospital, he discovered her in one of the wards—dying. It was too late for the broken-hearted man to do anything else than tell the frail old woman that it had all been a terrible mistake, but even that poor consolation was enough to bring a smile to the dying lips, and a last stir of joy to the mother heart at the thought that she had really been loved after all.

THE LAST ASSIGNMENT (Twelfth of the Dolly of the Dailies Series (July 25).—When Dolly Desmond left the home of her youth to embark on a journalistic career in the city, she left the town in a state of furor behind her. The story called "The Perfect Truth," the first installment of which Dolly published in the town newspaper, aroused so much resentment against Dolly that the townspeople revenged themselves by withdrawing their money from her father's bank. Two or three months after Dolly went away, the bank was in such straits that suspension of payment seemed only a mattter of hours. Then "The Perfect Truth" in its complete form was published as a book. It met with an immediate and startling success. Dolly attained to fame and wealth almost over night. The echo of her success reached her native town, and people began to sit up and take notice. It was one thing to feel themselves the butt of the joke of an immature schoolgirl, and quite another to know that they had been the material from which a famous authoress had drawn her inspiration. In the midst of the excitement, Bobby, at the newspaper office, suddenly received word that Dolly was coming to town. The news was not an unmixed pleasure for Bobby. He had an evil conscience. He had been madly in love with Dolly before she left town, and believed that she cared a good deal for him. After she left, he fell in love with another girl. However, Bobby's first duty in the matter was perfectly clear. So he wrote up a headline article for his paper announcing Dolly's arrival. The town went wild with excitement. Fame was about to fall upon it again for the first time since Hank Bowers had been lynched for horse stealing many years before. All hatred and jealousy was forgotten and Dolly was welcomed by a tremendous popular demonstration.

The first thing she did was to set her father's bank on its feet again, partly with the help of the money she had made and partly by the use of her extremely persuasive tongue. In the midst of the excitement, a stranger arrived in town—James Malone, the enterprising business manager of Dolly's paper. Everybody wondered who he was, and Bobby was the first to find out. For when he went to Dolly's house, with hanging head, to explain how matters stood, she told him that she was going to marry Malone. And that is how we leave Dolly with one career behind her, and another and far finer one ahead.

SELIG.

"REPORTER JIMMIE INTERVENES" (Special—Two Parts—July 6).—The city editor remarked to his star reporter, Jimmie: "This is the biggest steal that any corporation tried to put over the municipality. Run it down, break it up, and you will own the shop." Jimmie went after the new assignment fast and furious, and the front page of his paper began to attract the attention of the populace to a new condition of affairs, in which a railroad trust appeared to be hiding behind an innocent application made by a coterie of seemingly disinterested citizens, all of whom were associated with big corporations.

Councilman Blake, a cold-blooded politician, led the controlling faction of aldermen, and while he had long been a "suspect" nobody was clever enough to "put it over on him." At the preliminary council meeting only a single vote was required to give the "people's property" to the railroad trust. The lacking vote was Black, who, knowing his previous power, reserved his right to hold the big job in leash. At this point in the game, grim Grayson, the head of the railway trust, came to the city secretly, just as Blake expected he would, praying for a conference.

In the interim Reporter Jimmie met and impressed Alice, Blake's stenographer, who felt the power of his personality, and could not restrain her interest in the story that was unfolding as he came day after day for interviews. When she learned that Councilman Blake was to be a guest that night at Grayson's country home she "tipped it off" to Jimmie by 'phone. He managed to get unobserved into Grayson's house and his sharp ears overheard the conclusion of the bargain between the councilman and the magnate. Blake hurried away, and Grayson sat down to enjoy reflecting that he had the winning of the franchise fight in his pocket—signed for a certainty by Blake. The alert Jimmie leaped upon him, bound and gagged him, and, possessing himself of the precious document, escaped from the house and made a run for his

BE UP TO DATE

Install

CORCORAN TANKS

Get No. 6 Price List

A. J. CORCORAN, Inc., 11½ JOHN STREET NEW YORK CITY

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"

The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature

IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

EXCELSIOR
FEATURE FILM CO., INC.

"THE TOLL OF MAMMON"
IN FOUR PARTS

The Unanimous Endorsement of the Seven Leading Critics

Should Satisfy Even the Most Exacting Buyer—

ARE YOU ONE?

Some territory still open at attractive prices.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE
110 WEST 40TH ST., NEW YORK.
SUIT 1002 - PHONE, BRYANT 8059.
ARTHUR ROSENBACH Sales Mgr.

STUDIO
LAKE PLACID
N.Y.

horse he had concealed in the shrubbery. He runs into the husky secretary of Grayson and handed him a punch on the point of the jaw and then proceeded to his horse. The secretary, however, rallied for the count and took a shot at Jimmie, that came so close that it made a brain bruise across his brow.

Grayson's man staggered to his feet, rushed to the house and found his master trussed up like a stuffed turkey. He released him, learned the truth of the raid, and consequently, upon his master's demand, rushed for his automobile. The wounded reporter rides madly on and then the automobile comes flashing into the scene. Jimmie tried out all the tricks at his command in fox chasing—in cutting across ploughed fields and taking down narrow, rough lanes, but Grayson's car ate up the miles savagely and came closer and closer. Now they were in the city limits, and on a shaded boulevard the car caught up with the tired rider and his foam-flecked steed. Jimmie was dragged from his horse, and was about to be thrown in the car and carried away when a mounted patrolman appeared and asked impertinent questions. Jimmie thrust the document in the officer's hand, when Grayson declared his identity and insisted that a valuable document had been stolen from him. The patrolman glanced at the document and the significance of it appealed to him so powerfully that he handed it back to Jimmie and told him to "Beat it." Then he compelled the frantic Grayson and his huskies to conform with the speed laws so he could trot alongside their automobile through the park.

Things were happening in the City Hall in the interim and likewise at the newspaper office, a sort of expectant hush that comes before great news "breaks." The editor was about to order the presses to start, giving up the expected scoop as too late, when Jimmie with a bloody handkerchief bound about his brow, and the knock-out document in his hand, staggered into the office with his smashing story. It was a big thing and the bold-face type played it up in scare-heads. The scene shifted to the council chamber, Blake concluded his speech and the voting was about to begin, when Jimmie darted into the room and pushed the "extra" under the nose of the astonished Blake, and then passed other copies around so quickly that the great franchise steal died a-bornin'. Blake's pretty stenographer was at work early that morning when the telephone rang and she recognized the voice, unmistakably Jimmie's that said: "Hello, a friend is talking. Will you marry me?" It wasn't hard to guess the answer, and when the orange blossoms bloomed upon her brow two months later, the newspaper that Jimmie helped to the greatest scoop of the time was heavily represented both in "among those present" and the bridal gifts.

"THE WILDERNESS MAIL" (Special—Two Parts—July 13).—Jan, the hunter, is in love with Marie, a French-Canadian girl. The same charmer has captivated Otto, the driver of the Wilderness Mail, a vengeful and selfish individual. Marie has a half-sister, Joan, a decided contrast to her—a sweet lovable girl, not ordinarily bold or aggressive, but when aroused, firm to a finish. She resents the way her sister meets these two suitors, the one following the other, as quite unworthy of a modest woman, and hotly tells her so. First comes good-natured Jan, who presents Marie with the pelt of a beautiful red-fox. He is hardly out of sight in the woods when the mail driver comes, and she greets him even more effusively with kisses. He also gives her a present. Joan, outraged by her demonstration, speaks to Marie sharply, and Otto tries to conciliate her; but she in shame and mortification, runs to the woods.

Otto soon drives his dog team along down the snowy trail and meets Joan, roughly parleys with her and tries to kiss her. She struggles and screams. A little distance away in the woods, Jan is talking with some wood-men. He hears Joan's cries and rushes to the rescue. Otto is so sorely worsted, he can hardly stand alone, but is helped to his feet by the two woodsmen as Jan takes the girl away. The news of Jan's victory has reached the settlement, and the next morning he is given a commission to get a letter through to Fort Hope before the Wilderness Mail reaches there, carrying advices that would rob a good man of his fortune. With a fresh dog team, and a big reward in view, Jan forges ahead, and overtakes the phlegmatic Otto idly dull from his beating. In crossing a frozen lake, Jan falls through. Otto passes on with a deaf ear to all his calls for help, sure that his enemy will perish miserably. Happily, Jan's dogs are more humane, and tugging at their lines move him to safety on firm ice.

An outlaw lies in wait to rob the Wilderness Mail. He is about to shoot the advancing man when he discovers his mistake, for Jan is again ahead. He lets Jan pass by, but when Otto comes upon the scene, he kills him. Then he climbs a tree over the scene of the murder, and by dropping into the tracks of Jan, cunningly conceals his own trail. Soon two Northwest mounted police put in an appearance, find the body of Otto, and observing the trail of Jan, conclude he is the murderer.

Jan, unconscious of the crime that has been committed, rushes on his way, delivers the packet entrusted to him, so that the good news gets there first, justice is done and the man's property is saved. He then recuperates after his long journey, takes the back trail home when he is met by the mounted police, who arrest him, accusing him of the murder of Otto. He denies the charge strenuously and,r ankling under the injustice of it, makes a stout resistaance. but is eventually overcome and carried back to Ft. Hope, bound as a prisoner. The news soon reaches the settlement and the lone cabin of the two sisters, Marie and Joan. The former immediately writes a bitter note to Jan, upbraiding him wrathfully as the murderer of the only man she ever loved. Joan is so firmly convinced of the innocence of Jan that she concludes to go to him, making a long journey over the lonely trail to Ft. Hope. When she is admitted to the prisoner, he describes his trip in detail—how Otto left him to drown, and later tried to shoot him; but that he had gone on ahead unmindful of it. This reassures Joan more than ever that Jan is innocent. Thereupon she determines an investigation upon her own account, returns to the scene of the crime and, by studying the situation carefully, observes how the murderer climbed the tree, traversed the long branch, and dropped into the trail of the man ahead. She then follows the side trail which leads to the lonely cabin of the outlaw.

Joan draws her revolver, enters the cabin and finds the outlaw befuddled in liquor, mussing over the plundered mail. She tries to arrest him, but drunk as he is, he makes resistance and endeavors to grapple with her. She shoots him in the arm, then binds his hands behind him and drives him before her back to the headquarters of the police where she delivers him as the real murderer. Hers was the most unusual and daring deed, and was highly commended by the authorities. Jan is released upon the confession of the outlaw, and the last scene shows Jan and Joan entering their own cabin in the dimming light, presumably after the service in the little church in the clearing where their wedding had been celebrated.

"A WOMAN LAUGHS" (Special—Two Parts—July 20).—Clara is an attractive coquette, seemingly wholesome, but really a most designing person. Some facts of her past have become known to a grave and studious gentleman, David. He is seriously ill but during his convalescence he observes her assiduous attentions to his friend, Louis, with growing alarm. He warns his friend against the woman, but Louis misconstrues his advice and persists in his affair with Clara. This love, however, soon curdles to hate. He associates David with his misfortune and writes a note to Clara that he is "through with them both—forever." In the loneliness of his room, he tears up the photograph of the heartless woman, and then goes to the sideboard to mix himself a libation. Just as he places his hand on the electric water-kettle, an accident at the distant power-house sends extra heavy voltage over the wire, and he catches the full current, which kills him.

David happens in to see Louis and finds him dead in the room with the fragments of the photograph, the note and other signs of broken hopes scattered about him. In a wild rage, believing that Clara's conduct had inspired his friend to suicide, David rushes for her, drags her back to the chamber of death, and tells her that she must remain there until the police come. She looks coldly at the dead man at her feet—she has no regrets—her interests are centered in herself alone. As she sees the officers coming, she clasps David by the arm, scornfully exclaiming: "Let them come in. They will find us both here." David is seized with a great fear, as the epistle left by the dead man would involve himself as well as the woman; so he allows her to go out on her wicked way, and she passes through the door with sibilent laughter as he is left alone with his friend. The officers come, examine the premises—they see the burned handle of the kettle and observe that the hand of the deceased is similarly burned. This dissipates the theory of suicide, showing that Louis was really electrocuted.

David seeking forgetfulness, goes West and plunges into out-of-door business, improving big real estate holdings, and busying himself to dull the aching grief caused by the ruined life of his friend. Much to David's surprise and regret, his trusted young engineer, Scott, comes one day upon the scene accompanied by his sister and a dashing woman whom he introduces as his fiancee. All at once the spectre of the past rises, vicious and impertinent in the person of the bold and resourceful Clara, whose eyes challenge him to interfere with her affairs by revealing the past. The coquette mischievously busy as of old, soon has an alliance with a fashionable young idler, George, with whom she travels about the country, while Scott is busy in the affairs of his profession. David is only too glad to have her out of his sight, and is not surprised when he discovers her in the arms of the ardent George, whom she has chained to her chariot wheel.

Not to be too precipitant, David gives Scott an inkling of the affairs, and the latter starts investigating on his own account and soon sees things for himself. He confronts Clara in indignation, but she is cool and defiant, and taking off her engagement ring flings it at his feet. He is too deeply humiliated to remain. He rushes away, and then in desperation, draws his revolver intent upon self-destruction. Happily, David arrives at this moment, wrests the weapon from him and finally calms the desperate man. He tells him how Clara's laughter has echoed through the sorrowing years—a trail of misery and despair. Scott is for making away with her at once, but David cautions him: "Let her live, and make her pay."

That night as she is packing up, about to leave, she gets a note signed by "George," asking her for a tryst at the old meeting place just once more. She secretly leaves the house, and upon reaching the hill, instead of finding George, she comes face to face with Scott. She feels that he is about to kill her. She turns from the scene and flees back into the dark, the embodiment of fear. When the morning comes David meets Scott, but the latter has triumphed over himself. He remarks: "She is a woman. I cannot avenge the wrong she put upon me." So the siren fades out of the story—her palsied lips forgetting forever again to frame a laugh.

"ALGIE'S SISTER" (July 7).—Old Man Rocks, in a desperate effort to cure his son, Algie, of high life and the bright lights, sends him out West to his ranch. The cowpunchers make game of him, and he is the butt of their pranks. They send him out with his arms full of pails, to catch a long-horn steer long enough to milk it; then they pull off their famous Western "sell"—the badger fight—so that, all in all, he is exceedingly uncomfortable. One fine day he sees an "ad" of a famous female impersonator, who is out of an engagement, so he secretly hires him to come to the ranch. This man is some actor, and the simple cowboys fall in love with him, introduced as Algies "sister." All this causes a let-up of torment and a corresponding measure of regard for Algie. Then old man Rocks comes out to the ranch and surprises him. The actor's wit and abilities save the day, however, until he and Algie can get the old man alone. Imagine, however, the old man's astonishment at finding himself singled out from the crowd of punchers in the yard and subjected to a perfect deluge of kisses. However, he sees the joke when it is later explained to him and determines to give Algie another chance in the outside world.

When Algie and his "sister" announce their return East, all the cowpunchers accompany them to the depot, and there is a general depression and some weepy times. Then comes a surprise when the "sister" sends her photograph, showing her as a boy, and they admit that Algie, after all, had the laugh on them.

"CARYL OF THE MOUNTAINS" (July 8).—Caryl, a mountain maiden, vainly fights to keep her father, Joe Nelson, from joining a moonshiner gang, whose chief is Speck Taylor, a man she hates, one who has tried in vain to win her. As Nelson joins the renegades, Caryl meets Jim, a timber cruiser. Sometime later, Speck Taylor comes to Nelson's cabin and immediately picks a quarrel with Jim. The men have a terrific fight in which Speck is badly worsted. One of his gang brings Speck the news that Revenue men are in that region; so he writes a fake letter declaring that the writer will lead them to the moonshiners' still. He signs Joe Nelson's name, and slips it in the latter's pocket. He then works it so that his gang will visit Nelson's cabin and they will find the letter on him. As the mountain-code means death for the informer, the crowd give Nelson short shift, and he is tied to a tree and about to be shot when Speck tells Caryl her father's life will be saved if she will give herself to him.

At this dramatic moment Jim appears, and just as the executioner raises his gun to fire, he drops from the shot of Jim's revolver, and the rest of the cowardly crowd fly to cover. Caryl rushes to her father and protects him with her body. The Revenue men come upon the scene and the moonshiners are eliminated. Jim then explains the case to them, and the letter really saves Nelson from prosecution after all. Jim's heroic action and his adroit explanation captivates Caryl and she twines her name with his.

"DID SHE CURE HIM" (July 10).—Mrs. Jenks, is fat and husky, and determines to cure her husband of night running to the Lodge. Jenks feels that the call has come and slides out of the front door softly when a husky arm comes after him through the crack in the door; he is seized firmly by the collar, with a trick of the jiu jitsu he is yanked back from view and the door slams shut with a bang. Then is shown a view of the cozy interior. Jenks has a very important date at the club, and tries to explain it, but Mrs. Jenks proposes to keep him home and cure him of the thirst habit with a fruit cure. Preparatory to administering the "treatment" she locks up his shoes. He tries to escape from the window, but is shot up and otherwise maltreated as a porch-climber trying to effect a forcible entrance to his own house. Mrs. Jenks again takes him in hand, and puts the "treatment" into effect at once. She makes him eat bananas, apples and grape fruit until he seems to lose his waistline right in view of the audience. As the fruit gives out, she feeds him raw potatoes until he falls in a fit. Cure or no cure, it is a sidesplitting comedy filled to the brim with amusing activity.

"HIS FIGHT" (July 11).—Young Dr. Brant and his wife are very happy until Hanshaw appears on the scene. In the course of time, Hanshaw wins the young wife, and the doctor, returning home unexpectedly one evening, finds her in his "friend's" arms. In spite of his wife's prayer for forgiveness, Brant makes Hanshaw take the woman, divorces her and she becomes the latter's wife. In the years that intervene, Brant has become a famous surgeon, and the woman suffers her rightful punishment for perfidy through Hanshaw's cruel treatment.

Ten years after the break and its forced cementing, Dr. Brant is visiting a friend in his summer home on the seashore. One dark and stormy night a man rushes up and states that the stranger in the new bungalow a mile up the shore is dying of appendicitis. Instead of sending for a surgeon across the Bay, Brant's friend induces him to take the case. When the latter arrives at the house, judge of his astonishment when he comes face to face with his former wife. It is Hanshaw who is dying. Now ensues a dramatic struggle—the woman still loves Brant. She urges him to let Hanshaw die. She says: "His life is in your hands tonight: Let him die and take me back!" The woman's mellow beauty, and the growing warmth of the old love that has never cooled, sets Brant's brain reeling. He catches the woman in his arms and seemingly surrenders to her demand. Then he goes in to minister to the ailing man. He locks the door behind him and is for the time, fighting with himself for the helpless one, assisted only by the maid. The woman waits without—hopeful and joyous, seemingly triumphant. Hanshaw will die and she will have Brant back again. Dr. Brant returns to her looking white and haggard. Has he let him die? The woman flies to him. Gently, but firmly, Brant puts her aside. His fight with himself has been for justice. He tells her: "Madame, I have done my best. Your husband will live."

"AN EGYPTIAN PRINCESS" (July 14).—John Knutz, a chemist, thinks he has discovered the principles of life. In order to test his discovery, he arranges with an Egyptologist for the loan of a mummy. On this same day Mlle. Aimee, a Russian dancer, who is preparing to produce the Dance of Isis, arranges with the Shall It Be Brass Frames or Wood?

That's the question that confronts a good many exhibitors when they're ready to buy. He goes on to say, "I can purchase wood frames from most any art picture frame maker right here in my home city, and possibly at a saving of cost, too. Why, then, should I order brass frames from out of town, resulting perhaps in delayed shipment, etc."

That's the kind of fellow we want to get hold of. The kind that thinks only of the convenience of ordering. He don't stop to consider the Quality and Durability of metal frames against frail, wooden ones. You SHOULD know as well as we do that no matter how costly a wooden frame you may buy, that after a few months' use they begin to lose their once fine finished surface—warping sets in, the back won't fit any more—and then they're not fit for use.
Here's where we come in.

"NEWMAN" Metal Frames are made of heavy brass covered wood moulding, drawn through a special die which interlocks the metal to the wood, making one solid unit. The corners are re-inforced with steel, has double strength glass front, and a non-warpable compo-board back keeps the posters flat.

Thus, we have a frame to stand the everyday rough usage—a frame that will not warp nor fall apart under all weather conditions. They are practically un-wear-outable.

There's the argument. And we can back it up by proof—by pointing out, for instance, the beautiful Broadway Theatre of New York. They threw out every wood frame they had—once beautiful, massive mahogany cabinets, about a year and a half old, and fitted up their entire lobby with NEWMAN BRASS FRAMES of that everlasting quality.

Write in at once—while it's fresh in your mind—for new 1914 catalog and more proof of their worth.

The Newman Mfg. Co.

NEW YORK: 101 Fourth Ave.
CHICAGO 108 W. Lake St.
CINCINNATI 717 Sycamore St.

Established since 1882.

NASH

THE MYSTERIOUS MAN of the JUNGLE

TOM NASH
AND BIG OTTO
ANNOUNCE THEIR FIRST RELEASE OF

WILD ANIMAL PICTURES

A FOUR REEL FEATURE OF THE MOST SENSATIONAL AND ORIGINAL KIND, WHICH WILL BE RELEASED UNDER THE

"BIG OTTO" BRAND

UNDER WHICH THE STRONGEST OF ALL POSSIBLE WILD ANIMAL PICTURES WILL BE PRODUCED BY

NASH MOTION PICTURE CO.

EXECUTIVE OFFICES: GARLAND BLDG. STUDIO AND ZOO: BAIRDSTOWN,—LOS ANGELES, CAL.

New York Representative: Stanley H. Twist—Inter Ocean Sales Co., 110 West 40th Street. Telephone Bryant 5667.

BIG OTTO BRAND

CALIFORNIA EXHIBITORS APEX FEATURE SERVICE PANTAGES THEATER BLGD. SAN FRANCISCO

Egyptologist, White, to dance at his house in order to secure correctness of costumes. Mlle. Aimee, left alone in White's curio room, attacked by headache, takes a powder which affects her heart. She sits on the edge of the empty mummy case, loses consciousness, and falls into it. At this juncture the expressmen arrive to convey the mummy to Knutz's laboratory. When the dancer recovers consciousness, she steps forth from the case, and Knutz actually believes he has brought an Egyptian princess back to life. The dancer, unfortunately, cannot speak English and is unable to enlighten him.

Knutz's wife appears upon the scene, and Mlle. Aimee, observing her jealously, tries to escape from the place and takes refuge in Neighbor Dobbs' studio. Finding no convenient place of concealment, she assumes a pose behind a large empty frame. At this moment Dobbs comes in with a committee who are passing upon his work for certain mural decorations, and they immediately close a contract on the strength of viewing the living picture they see. After they depart, Dobbs, who is simply silenced into astonishment, vents his admiration in Russian, which brings the dancer back to life. A withered old crone comes into the studio, selling matches, and Dobbs suggests turning the joke on Knutz for the curing of his jealous wife. He gets the old matchseller to dress in the gowns of the princess, making a withered and fearful contrast to the beauty. She slips into Knutz's laboratory, and when he comes back, led by his jealous wife, they have a double shock at discovering the old woman in the mummy case. This settles Knutz's faith in his elixir of youth; he makes peace with his wife, and does not waste any more time upon idle experiments.

"HIS LAST APPEAL" (Special—Two Parts—July 15).—Clark Gordon who served time for forging a signature, was released from the penitentiary—a changed man. Knowing the dangers that surround a "jail-bird" he leaves the place and goes to a far city. He secures work in the stock and bond establishment of Bell & Taylor—the former member of the firm being particularly friendly and his sponsor in business. Taylor is a tricky individual and seriously involves the firm by selling absolute worthless securities. An invalid, Mad Muller, who invests his all in these mythical properties, reading of the firm's collapse, comes to remonstrate with Taylor. The conversation between the two men becomes so heated, that Muller strikes Taylor upon the head with a seal and kills him, and then flees. Bell, in the next office, hears the heavy fall and rushes into the room. At the beginning of the quarrel, Gordon fearing trouble rushed out to get the police, leaving Muller and Taylor alone. When he returns with the police, they find Bell on the scene, and immediately arrest him, accusing him of the crime on circumstantial evidence, and he is convicted and sentenced on this charge to be hanged.

Gordon learns from the confession of the real murderer, a dying man, that his friend is innocent, and as the Governor is away from home, in order to gain time, he forges the Governor's name to a reprieve of the death sentence. This is a daring and desperate remedy, but when the Governor becomes acquainted with the facts, he forgives and commends Gordon, who is happy in having his best friend reinstated in the esteem of the world.

"THE SQUATTERS" (July 18).—Helen Ralston, daughter of a wealthy business man, wearying of the empty life of fashion, decides to give herself up to sociological work. She is assigned to a rather hopeless district, occupied by the fishermen squatters on the lake shore. There she finds old Bill Simpson and his handsome but ignorant daughter, Mary. She teaches her how to read and write and then shows her how to dress herself becomingly. Mary's sweetheart, Antonio Angelo, a rough vindictive squatter, is much vexed as he observes Mary emerging from her surroundings of ignorance. He blames Helen's teaching for the change in his sweetheart, and spitefully swears to get even.

Helen's father happens to buy the squatter's land for a warehouse, and then has to hire deputy sheriffs to oust the squatters. When Mary hears of the situation, she hurries to the scene and intercedes in time to stop blood-shed. Angelo cuts the fishermen's nets and then incites the fishermen against Ralston, declaring that he was their greatest enemy. They lure Ralston to their domain and decide to take him to an island and starve him until he will agree to let them live on the lake shore. In the fight he drops his watch. Mary finds it, gives it to Helen, and she recognizes it as her father's watch. She sees trouble and begs the squatters to save her father. They then get a launch and pursue the runaways. Angelo threatens them with a knife, but the vigorous Mary knocks him out with an oar. In the conflict that follows Helen is thrown into the lake, but is rescued by Mary. Afterwards the squatters are pursued by armed men, led by Harvey Mathews. Ralston is brought back to shore, and the vindictive Angelo attempts his assassination. But again Mary rushes to the rescue, knocks Angelo down, and he is tied up and given over to the police. Eventually, the Rev. Chas. Markham wins the stalwart Mary for his wife, while Harvey Mathews and Helen wed as the ending of the romance.

"WIGGS TAKES THE REST CURE" (July 17).—Jasper Wiggs, on the verge of a nervous breakdown, is advised by his employer to take a "rest cure." Poor Wiggs has scarcely been settled at the sanitarium before the village officials begin a celebration, which noise drives him wild. Unable to withstand the noise, Wiggs leaves the sanitarium and goes into the mountains, where he hopes to rest in peace. He purchases an auto of ancient vintage, and before anybody has a chance to explain the intricate works of the machine to him he starts on his way. Wiggs gets along all right until he tries to stop it—and the more he tries to stop it, the faster it goes. Constables endeavor to arrest him for speeding, but he cannot stop. He finally smashes into the side of a barn, and is tossed into forgetfulness. Then the constable and the undertaker escort him to the hospital.

While convalescing, he writes his wife, telling her that he is going into the mountains to die in peace. He hires a man to drive him there, but on the way they encounter "Black" Dugan, a desperado, who is pursued by the sheriff. He compels Wiggs to exchange clothes with him, and when the sheriff comes up Wiggs is in the line of fire. Finally he signals to stop firing, explains the situation, and the sheriff almost bursts with laughter at the close mistake. Eventually Wiggs comes upon "Black" Dugan, who is sleeping in the shade of an old sycamore, thinking that he is immune from capture. All the ferocity of Wiggs boils up over the indignities to which he has been subjected, and he gives the desperado a terrible licking. He then brings him back to the sheriff, bound and gagged. When he returns to his office he finds his employees mourning him as dead, but Wiggs soon convinces them that his nerves are all right, his muscles have regained their strength and that he is once more a real "live one."

"THE LURE OF THE LADIES" (July 21).—Jack McIlvain, a club fellow, a society man, the product of modern riches and idleness, seemingly with nothing to do and less to think about, all at once becomes impressed with the fact that he ought not be a bachelor any longer, and proceeds to get a little advice on the subject from a fortune teller, who lives in atmospheric condition and who needs a change of linen and bathticket. This ancient and aromatic dame tells the handsome young man annex of minus, that the next young woman he sees that day will become his wife. This misinformation bores itself into the McIlvain bean with such effect that the young man breaks all precedent and gets busy at once. He feels that he has been grieving long enough in his bachelor quarters as he looks over his photographs and sees more fair faces in the rings from the smoke of his cigarette. When he starts on his morning constitutional he observes a young woman step into a jewelry store, carelessly look over a few diamond tiaras, and then pass them back to the clerk with a look of utmost disdain. He immediately takes her to be the woman of his fate, an heiress of unlimited wealth. She goes into a barber shop where he goes to have his face fixed, and turns out to be a manicurist. Although his face is lathered he makes love to the fair one, as she trims his digits.

All of a sudden he sees a skirt flutter by in the street and rushes madly after it, pursued by the manicurist and the barber. This young woman goes into a sanitarium and the undaunted McIlvain follows her and soon finds himself trussed up in a straitjacket, pinned onto a couch on the advice of the barber who pronounces him insane. Eventually he manages to get on his feet and walks down the street with a couch attached to him; he meets another fair one and she thinking he is an unusual man, listens to his proposal. She is an heiress and when she leaves the room to get her father and mother, he makes love to her French maid, and her husky sweetheart coming on the scene, fires him through the window. The jar of this tames him for a while and he goes to his apartments to think it over, and concludes to be less precipitate in his courtship hereafter.

"THE SEALED PACKAGE" (July 22).—Brian Godfrey and Arnold Lambert are clerks in the diamond broker's office, both interested in Mildred St. Pierre, the daughter of an old employee. For a while she is impartial but Arnold is too impetuous in his addresses and she repulses him.

Gilbert Howell, a traveling salesman of the firm, puts into the vault a sealed package containing valuable private papers. On the same day is placed in the vault, a number of fine uncut stones in a similar package. When Howard starts on his usual tour, he takes from the vault what he thinks are his papers. That same evening, old St. Pierre, recalling the fact of leaving some very important papers on his desk is worried and decides to make sure by going back to the office alone to place them in the vault. Arnold Lambert, who is passing that way, observes this move, and his scheming curiosity is aroused. The following morning the loss of the uncut diamonds is discovered, and Arnold Lambert recalls his opportunity of the night before in the presence of the old man at the office and remarks it to Brian. The latter resents the imputation upon the integrity of his hoped-to-be father-in-law, recalling that Mildred said that any sudden shock would be fatal to her father. Meantime Arnold has been spreading the virus of the story through the office, and Brian, thinking to save Mildred's father, accuses himself of the theft. This is unlooked for and Arnold, now believing she will repudiate the man of her choice in favor of him, 'phones her. Howell, opening his package in a distant city, finds the diamonds, and realizing his mistake, wires the office that he will forward the diamonds at once. Arnold discomforted and crestfallen, is discharged for his disgraceful action in the matter, while Brian rises higher than ever in the esteem of Mildred when she learns of his sacrifice for her father.

"THE SUBSTITUTE HEIR" (July 24).—Jack Benton, a foolish old millionaire, falls into the clutches of a designing female—Julie Legrand, a French adventuress. She poisons the mind of her husband against his nephew, Charles Benton, a worthy young man who has married the old man's secretary. The uncle sends the young couple away and disinherits his nephew, but, through the intercession of Aunt Nancy, a faithful old colored retainer, Benton makes a will leaving his nephew two-thirds of his estate in case his own wife has no child.

When Benton dies, a shyster lawyer tells the precious relict if she only had a child she could have and hold all the Benton millions. This impresses the adventuress so favorably that she bribes the old colored mammy to secure a child from a neighboring orphan asylum, and when the will is administered, she will produce it as the heir of the Benton millions. In the interim a baby boy comes to bless the home of the younger Bentons, who are living in straightened

FLA. GA. ALA. MISS. LA. APEX FEATURE SERVICE 315 RHODES BUILDING ATLANTA, GA. TENN. N. C. S. C. VA.

The Secret Seven

IN 4 PARTS

ANOTHER GREAT MYSTERY STORY ABOUNDING IN TREMENDOUS BIG SCENES OF REAL POWER, ACTED BY BRAVE MEN AND BRAVER WOMEN

THE LIVEST LIST IN THE LAND

THE DEVIL'S EYE—A Weird and Fascinating Tale—4 Parts
AN ALPINE TRAGEDY—Fine Drama in a New Set—5 Parts
THE MIDNIGHT MARRIAGE—Howard's London Hit—4 Parts
THE DAREDEVIL DETECTIVE—Hayes, the Marvel—4 Parts
BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER—Russian Drama—4 Parts

FOR EVERY APEX FEATURE IS A FULL LINE OF LITHOS

APEX FILM CO.

145 W. 45th Street, NEW YORK. P. P. CRAFT, Manager.
European Office: H. WINIK, 35 Little Newport St., London

HUGH HOFFMAN

circumstances. The faithful old colored woman prevails upon the Bentons to let her take the young child, the legitimate heir, to the house of the scheming widow, as the foundling that she desires to palm off as the rightful child of old Joe Benton.

At the moment, however, when the adventuress takes the oath, that the child presented is her own, the daring old mammy, who has a strong sense of humor, substitutes a colored child. This is too much for even the brazen adventuress and she promptly denies she ever had a child. This is the psychological moment, the rightful heir is produced, and thanks to the cleverness of Aunt Nancy, the worthy young couple come into their own, and the adventuress goes on her stormy, scheming way.

"FOOTPRINTS" (July 24).—Paula and Robert are betrothed and Mrs. Gray gives a party in honor of her son at their country house where Paula is a guest. A big moment of this function is when Mrs. Gray shows her guests a valuable diamond necklace, which is rapturously admired by Paula. That same night the necklace disappears. This news is kept from the guests, but Robert finds a handkerchief on the floor in the room and secretly sends for Teever, the noted detective. This disciple of Sherlock Holmes finds a naked footprint upon the waxed floor, evidently made by the thief taking the diamond.

In order to find the duplicate foot he cleverly suggests "a bare-foot party for the ladies." Mrs. Gray cannot engage in this as she is bed-ridden for the day by rheumatism and Paula is among the missing. The detective has the imprint of all the fair feet and finds that none correspond with the copy on the floor of Madam's boudoir. Paula rushes in late to join the party, and the detective is astonished to find that her footprints correspond with those on the waxed floor.

Poor Robert is heart-broken over this, but swears Teever to silence. That night he is awakened by an unusual sound; he calls Teever and tells him that a woman has left the house. They follow her in silence. It is Robert's mother in her nightrobe walking in her sleep. She goes to a big garden urn and places something in it. Then Robert awakens his mother and conducts her back to the house. The detective measures the foot-print left by the dew-wet foot upon the stone walk and finds it identical with that of Paula, and the one printed upon the wax floor. Both men hurry back to the urn, and there hidden among the plants is the casket containing the diamonds. There had been no thief. Mrs. Gray had concealed the diamonds there in her sleep as a somnambulist, and so Paula's wedding bells rang merrily without a doubt or discord.

LUBIN.

"TEMPER AND TEMPERATURE" (July 21).—Bill Benson and Dr. Gregory are pals. Bill gets word that his mother-in-law intends paying a long visit and he begs the doctor to give him poison. The doctor naturally does not give it to him, but that evening the doctor is called to the house to treat Mrs. Benson. Mother bothers the doctor with her continuous flow of conversation and he pretends to find her ill. He slips a clinical thermometer in Mrs. Brown's mouth to keep her quiet. Bill likes the idea and appeals to the doctor to give him one. Doctor Gregory does so and Bill has a fine time. He breaks the thermometer but strips the wood casing from a bath thermometer and makes that do. He is telling Dr. Gregory all about it over the phone when his wife and her mother overhear him. Dr. Gregory gathers from what he hears that he will be needed and hurries to the aid of Bill. When they have nearly killed Bill, they phone for the doctor and become frantic when they can't get an answer. Dr. Gregory walks in to the great relief of the two women and presently we find Bill in bed wrapped in bandages. With a thermometer in his mouth he chews the cud of remorse while mother entertains him with her prattle.

"WORMS WILL TURN" (July 21).—Bill Raggels, a tramp, is awakened from blissful slumber by a police officer. Another policeman, more kindly than the first, dries the tears of the tramp and loans him his handkerchief with which to dam the further flow. Bill makes his way to the hobo camp and tells his fellows of the insult put upon him. They swear revenge and a smart young tramp is told off to be the instrument of fate.

The tramps conceal themselves in a deserted spot and the single tramp goes to heave a rock into the pit of the stomach of a policeman, who happens to be Bill's oppressor. A chase ensues, during which the tramp so plans his route as to engage the interest of the other members of the force. Two policemen catch him, but they get into a fight as to which officer shall take his captive to the station and the tramp breaks away again. He leads the force to where the other tramps are concealed, and the roadsters overpower the minions of the law. They take possession of the station-house, throwing the chief out of the window, and bravely repulse a sortie; but in the end they are put to flight by a woman's wiles.

"A TRAITOR TO HIS COUNTRY" (July 24).—General Diego Gonzales, leader of a band of Filipino insurgents, admires the daughter of a Filipino named Galvo who lives not far from where the insurgent leader has hidden his camp. Gonzales offers his love to Maria but is repulsed. Later he sees her meet Manuel Suarez, an insurgent soldier. He leaves for his camp to think out a plan to seize the girl by force. Returning to her father's shack, Maria finds a company of United States infantry in search of a band of Filipino insurgents. The girl and her father say that they know nothing of the band and the captain withdraws. Maria then hastens to warn Manuel of the presence of the Americans. Manuel in going to tell the general overhears Gonzales plotting to kill him and abduct his sweetheart. Instead of telling Gonzales the news, Manuel rushes to warn his sweetheart, but finds a young Filipino officer and his men there before him. He decides that the only thing to do, in order to save Maria, is to inform the American camp and tells Captain Carter that he will lead him to General Gonzales' hiding place.

The American and his company start out with Manuel as a guide. Meanwhile Gonzales and two of his soldiers go to the sentry post to kill Manuel. They are puzzled at finding him gone and see the Americans advancing through the jungle. Too late to warn his men at the camp, Gonzales hides with his two men while the Americans and Manuel halt in the clearing. Manuel remains behind so that he may not be spotted as an informer and the Americans march on. After the troops are gone Gonzales and his men pounce upon Manuel and rush him away to the mountains. Carter and his men surprise the insurgents, and after a fight, take them prisoners. A squad captures the Filipinos at Galvo's house. Maria searches among the prisoners, the wounded and the dead, for Manuel, but in vain. In the mountains Manuel is tied to a tree and Gonzales tattoes on his forehead the inscription, "Traidor ala patrie,"—a traitor to his country. He then starts to kill Manuel, but is shot by a soldier of Carter's company. Carter and his men take Manuel back to Maria, who, seeing the inscription on his forehead, turns away horrified. Carter, however, explains the incident and all ends well.

"A MATTER OF RECORD" (July 25).—Timkins pines for a little evening out once in a while, but Mrs. Timkins thinks a man's place is at home. Timkins purchases a dictaphone for office use, and soon after gets a great idea. He dictates records, then instructs the night watchman in the use of the machine. At home, Timkins boldly tells Marian that he must work at the office that evening and meets her scornful disbelief with an air of injured innocence, telling her that if she does not believe him she may call him up on the telephone every fifteen minutes. Marian doesn't see how he can beat this game, so she agrees. When she calls up the watchman answers, tells her Mr. Timkins will be there in a moment, then turns on the dictaphone on which he has placed one of the prepared records. Marian is quite satisfied and the headache Timkins has next morning elicits her deep sympathy—she knows he worked almost all night at the office. The scheme continues to work beautifully.

A short while later Timkins is dictating letters to the dictaaphone, when Marie Forrest, a rosebud, traveling as a typewriter, brings him a batch of typed letters. They are alone in the office, and Timkins trifles a bit, forgetting to stop the recording dictaphone and Marie comes back real readily. That night is another selected for "work at the office" and Marian, according to custom, calls up every fifteen minutes. She gets perfectly satisfactory responses until about 11 o'clock, when the sleepy watchman gets hold of the wrong record. Marian hears a short business letter—and then! She of course thinks Timkins at the office all right enough, but the question of where he is isn't nearly so interesting as what he is doing. Next day Mrs. Timkins telephones on behalf of Mr. Timkins, who is indisposed, that Miss Forrest may seek another job, that she (Marian) will do Mr. Timkin's typewriting in the future.

"WHO SEEKS REVENGE" (Special—Two Parts—July 22).—Colonel Latham, commanding an army post in the West, has incurred the hatred of Mike Hogan, a worthless soldier. The post is attacked by Indians at a time when the Colonel's wife is about to give birth to a child. Together with the wife of a soldier, who is in a similar condition, Mrs. Latham is conveyed to the safest building, and while the battle rages both women become mothers, the colonel's child being a girl, the soldier's a boy. Hogan, in handcuffs, is in an adjoining room. One of the Indians makes his way into the building and kills the surgeon. The soldier's wife is the Indian's next victim, but before he can murder the infant, Mrs. Latham has succeeded in reaching a carbine and shoots him. The shock and excitement is too much for her strength and she dies. Hogan makes his way into the room and the opportunity suggests to him a fiendish revenge on the Colonel. He transposes the infants, placing the Colonel's daughter in the arms of the soldier's wife, and the soldier's son beside Mrs. Latham. He then takes the carbine in his manacled hands, and when the Colonel and others enter, poses as the slayer of the Indian and savior of the babies. Hogan is released by the grief-stricken Colonel, and gains more credit by offering to take care of the soldier's baby, the latter having been killed. The child (the Colonel's daughter) is turned over to Hogan and his wife.

Twenty years elapse; the Colonel, retired, has established a manufacturing business in the East and amassed a fortune. His factory is an unsanitary firetrap; his employees, young girls, overworked and underpaid. The one tender thing in the Colonel's life is his love for Rodney, whom he expects to embrace the military career. Hogan's wife is dead, and he has become a drunken loafer, living upon the slender wages earned by Rose, whom he has forced to secure employment in Latham's factory. Rodney comes home for a vacation, meets Rose and falls in love with her. Hogan's hope is that this may result in the girl's ruin, in which event he proposes to tell the Colonel the truth and enjoy a fiendish vengeance.

Rodney, for the first time becomes interested in the factory and its employees and is horrified at the conditions. He protests to the Colonel and is told not to concern himself. Latham is informed that Rodney is infatuated with one of the factory girls, and orders him to drop the affair. To his astonishment Rodney declares his intention of marrying the girl and a quarrel ensues. Rodney declares that he will not return to West Point, but will devote himself to exposing conditions in the Colonel's and other factories. Soon after, Rodney and Rose disappear together, and Hogan thinks his plans have succeeded. He tells Latham that Rose was his child and taunts him that she is now ruined by the boy he has loved as his son. Latham is broken hearted to think that he is responsible for the fate of his wife's child. Later, the Latham factory burns. Hogan has seen Latham enter the factory building, and is frantic of the idea of his being killed—he wishes him to live and suffer his grief and shame. He determines to rescue him and tries, but at the expense of his own life. The old Colonel is rescued by Rodney. Rodney and Rose have returned with the hope of affecting a reconciliation between Rodney and Latham, and when the latter learns that the young people are married, his thankfulness is great and he welcomes them home. It seems needless to disclose to them their true relationship to himself and Latham keeps the secret.

"THE FALSE SHADOW" (Special—Two Parts—July 23).—John Mason and his friend, Fred Sterling, a doctor, are both in love with Grace Gordon. John knows nothing of Fred's love. He proposes to Grace and is accepted. Grace's father, a strong believer in eugenics, gives his consent to the marriage, but suggests that John submit to a medical examination. John goes to Fred, telling him of his engagement, and asking him to make the examination. Fred finds John in perfect health, but seeing a way to put his rival out of the way, he substitutes a drop of blood from a diseased patient, and tells John he cannot be married.

Overcome by the blow, John writes to Grace's father, telling him the result of the examination, and asking him to keep the real truth from Grace. He is unable to apply himself to the magazine illustrating at which he has made a success, and goes down the scale until he is a mere outcast, hoping only for death. Sterling renews his attentions to Grace, but finds her broken hearted over John's disappearance. She falls ill and Fred attends her. All his skill is of no avail, and with Grace on the verge of death, he decides that John must be brought back. He tells the father of his act. He and the father go in search of John.

Meanwhile the artist has taken a little room in a tenement. His money is gone and his clothes are in rags. He sits in the squalid room, praying for death. In the hall below, two children are playing with tin cans filled with burning paper. They hear their mother coming and fearing punishment hide the cans behind a barrel of trash. Fred and Gordon searching for John, come to the tenement. It is in flames. At an upper window they see John. Fred dashes up the burning stairs. John has welcomed the fire as a means of egress from life and locks the door. The doctor calls, but John will not answer. Fred tears a rung from the burning stair rail and breaks in the door. He tells John the truth—that he is not tainted with disease. The two men try to escape, but find the stairway cut off. Fred is nearly overcome, and John drags him back into the room. The only way of escape is by the window. They climb out and succeed in reaching the roof. They see a fire ladder and make their way toward it. John reaches the ladder and turns to help Fred. As he reaches out his hand, the roof collapses and Fred is carried down into the flames. John returns with Gordon to Grace's bedside, where he takes her in his arms.

Gas Users — Attention!

The "Guil Pastil" doubles your light. Each (large size), $1.25; 6 for $6.75. "Fulco" adapter makes Pastil fit any calcium burner, $1.00 each.

We carry most complete line in stock of picture machines and supplies in No. America. E. E. FULTON, 152 W. Lake St., Chicago, Sole American Distributors for "Guil Pastil."

The Appeal—The Punch—The Quality

There you have the triple alliance that plays to crowded houses. You know that. And you also know that when you put on a program that doesn't have this combination of essentials—you lose.

Warner's Features have the Appeal—Every story strikes the chord of intense human interest. The themes run the gamut, from comedy, through romance and stirring adventure, to tragedy.

Warner's Features have the "Punch"—Every scene throbs with life and action and tense situations. The story is told from beginning to end with vim, vigor and verve. The "punch" is always there.

Warner's Features have the Quality—Star players produce Warner's Features. You know them—Marion Leonard, Gene Gauntier, Cecelia Loftus, Sid Olcott, and a host of other top-notchers. Star acting and star photography give the quality to

WARNER'S FEATURES

The Star Feature Service

Below are briefly described two new Warner's releases. Make a note of them.

Under Fire in Mexico

J. Arthur Nelson in "Under Fire in Mexico"

A thrilling, stirring story of Mexican warfare, to the staccato accompaniment of hair-breadth escapes, dark conspiracies, wholesale massacres, daring rescues and the crash of battle. This great feature was produced by the U. S. Film Corporation, under the direction of

J. Arthur Nelson

It shows deeds of valor performed by American troops under Mexican skies, and through it all runs a thread of romance—a pretty love story with a happy ending. The acting and photography are fully up to the high Warner's standard.

The Romany Rye

A beautiful gypsy, dainty, winsome and capricious, is the heroine. Around her centers the whole romantic story, and the love she awakens, and the tragedy she causes, will make any audience thrill. The gypsy part is played by

Miss Marion Leonard

That means the acting is perfect. Miss Leonard portrays the gypsy maid in a most realistic manner. There is a young farmer in love with her, a jealous gypsy lover, a sweet old mother, and plenty of fighting and romancing.

Miss Marion Leonard in "The Romany Rye"

There are many more Warner's Features that you ought to know about. Write now to your nearest Warner's Exchange for full information.

Warner's Features, Inc., 130 West 46th Street, New York

INDEPENDENT FILM STORIES

UNIVERSAL

GOLD SEAL.

LUCILLE LOVE, THE GIRL OF MYSTERY (No. 12—June 30).—True it is that Lucille has regained possession of the priceless documents, still she is in a more dangerous position than ever before. She again finds herself Hugo Loubeque's prisoner in his San Francisco residence. Her position is especially dangerous because Loubeque is now thoroughly tired of the extreme bother she has caused him. She realizes that he is now in deadly earnest, and when he demands the return of the papers she promptly hands them to him in fright and misgiving. A fortunate incident to divert Loubeque's anger occurs when Thompson, the crook-butler, enters. Lucille accuses him of stealing her jewels, and to prove her assertions she takes the "stolen" jewels from his pocket. Loubeque's pent-up anger and impatience then breaks in all its fury on the butler. The spy knocks the man down and strangles him almost into insensibility.

While Lucille is waiting for her fate to be decided she glances listlessly out of the barred window.

Outside of the house she sees Lieutenant Gibson, the man she loves, and who is in the same predicament with her father in that both will be dishonored unless the documents are recovered from Loubeque before he finds an opportunity to use them. Lieutenant Gibson has tracked Lucille to this house. However, Loubeque sees Gibson almost as quick as does Lucille, and he at once begins giving orders to his men that they may forestall an attack.

However, Lieutenant Gibson is just as quick in action as Loubeque, and before the spy can get his forces together Gibson's men attack the house, batter down the front door and begin fighting in the corridors and upon the stairways. Loubeque realizes that his force is outnumbered and commands all to escape through the underground tunnel. Lucille is carried into the tunnel, but in covering the retreat of his men Loubeque hesitates a moment too long and Gibson dashes in and holds him up at the point of a revolver. Loubeque holds up his hands and backs against the door. Gibson looks around and gives an order, and as he does so the door against which Loubeque leans quickly pivots and the spy disappears.

Loubeque joins his men in the tunnel. They escape with Lucille to an automobile. The girl soon realizes that she is being taken back to Loubeque's estate in Mexico.

Once arrived at the hacienda, Thompson, the butler, begins to smart under the ill-treatment given him by Loubeque. The butler rebels against the spy and takes Loubeque's chauffeur into his confidence, and between them they plan to liberate Lucille and escape themselves. They communicate their plans to Lucille and all three decide that that night at the third hoot of the owl, they will escape in Loubeque's automobile. Loubeque becomes suspicious of the conspirators, and when he can learn nothing by other means, he plays possum. He pretends that he is asleep, and watches the three people out of the corner of his eye.

Already the owl-hoot signal has been twice given, and Lucille is ready to escape, when Loubeque jumps to his feet and grapples with the astonished butler. While they are fighting the spy drops the documents. Lucille picks them up. She herself gives the third signal, jumps over the balustrade, climbs into the automobile and speeds away with the chauffeur.

After overpowering Thompson, Loubeque dashes to the front of the house just in time to see Lucille being whisked away in his machine. He calls his men together. They mount their horses and give chase.

REX.

AT THE FOOT OF THE STAIRS (July 23).—The husband learns of his wife's love for the other man, but does not suspect that she is planning to elope. The new maid arrives. The husband, in his happiness, finds time to be kind to her. Used only to harsh words the little maid hesitates in her plan of theft.

Night comes. The crooks, unsatisfied with the maid's attitude, decide to commit the robbery themselves. The stool pigeon has told the police who surround the house. Only a moonbeam lights the room at the foot of the stairs. The crooks hear a sound. With the trembling maid they hide as the wife comes down stairs, ready for flight. The lover enters. The police run in. Thinking the lover is the thief, they attack him. In and out of the moonlight patch they struggle. Behind the curtains the maid asks for the revolver and fires. The struggle in the moonlight ceases. The light flashes. The lover is lying dead across the table. The husband, aroused, comes down the stairs. The maid explains that the lover is a thief and so she shot him. The detective carry the body out and the husband's honor is saved to the world. But he knows and sends the faithless wife away. A gleam of hope comes to him from the faithful maid as he goes up stairs again. The crooks come out of hiding. The little maid, now strong in her love for the husband, covers them with the gun and drives them from the house.

AN AWKWARD CINDERELLA (July 26).—The college boy, Bob, comes home after a four-years' absence. Immediately he calls up his friends Betty and Brownie and their mother, a typical society matron. Bob tells them he is coming right over. Consternation reigns. It is the maid's afternoon out and they could not so far belittle themselves as to open the door. So the little slavey, Ella, is pressed into service. Awkward, shy, inquisitive, she greets the visitor, who is amused and interested in her. Again he sees the little maid and something neither can explain draws them together.

The night of the big masked ball arrives. The mother and her daughters go as Bob's guests. The little slavey in her old colthes is left at home. She finds an extra costume and decides wildly to brave the danger. Decking herself out she attends the ball, but the shoes of the sisters are too large for her and she is forced to wear her own old ones. Bob finds the unknown woman at the ball and is strangely attracted to her. They—well, you know the rest of the Cinderella story. They lived happily everafter.

WHEN FATE DISPOSES (Two Part—July 9).—Bob is a successful American artist in Paris. His studios are the haunt of Paris students, and many are the gay scenes enacted there. But while all is gay in the big rooms below, Ella, an American girl, who lives in a single room on the floor above, is weeping with disappointment and fear. She has failed to sell her pictures; poverty is near.

Bob meets her in the hall, and her fresh, unspoiled young, beauty attracts him. Still, the girl is disheartened, but an old musician cheers her.

Madame Valerie, a successful French woman, and her nephew, observes the girl's attraction for the stalwart Bob. His heart has gone out to the little girl above. He goes to her room to invite her to join the party below. The nephew, a gay young fellow, is won to Ella on first sight, and she responds. The old musician, knowing the world and the hearts of men and women, approves of the younger man.

The time goes on. Bob helps the little girl with her painting, and she, grateful for this aid, imagines herself in love with him. They become engaged, and a celebration is arranged. Madame Valerie and Alan, her nephew, are among the guests, both distraught. Alan goes into the next room and begins to play on the violin a plaintive love song. Drawn as by some spell, Ella moves toward the inner room. It is the call of youth to youth. Bob realizes his true position in the girl's affections. He calls her, and telling her he has made a mistake, asks her for his freedom. Unconscious of the terrible wound she is giving him, she gives back the ring and joyfully goes back to Alan and happiness. Bob sinks back, the light gone out and only deep friendship, and the unknown love of Valerie to support him.

UNIVERSAL IKE.

A TRIANGLE MARRIAGE (July 17).—Daughter is a sweet and simple thing but not easily managed. Mother picks Harry. Dad prefers Johnny. Daughter herself has her heart set on Billy.

A mild war is declared when daughter sees a way to solve the matter. She tells mother that she will marry Harry, Dad that she will wed Johnnie and whispers slyly to Billy that he is the man.

Promptly the mischievous maid writes two letters. She tells Harry to dress as a boy and come over that evening to elope, promising to be dressed as a woman with heavy veil. The other missive informs Johnnie that he is to dress like a woman with a heavy veil and be ready to elope that night.

At the appointed hour, father and mother pretend sleep, each certain that the favorite is to win the girl. Harry and Johnnie, in their respective disguises, slip around the house and into each other's arms. With all haste they are away to the justice of the peace and are married. Meanwhile the girl and Billy are trying to get aay from the house. Mother and father discover them and the chase begins.

After a riot and a marriage on the run Billy and the girl are tied safely for life.

STERLING.

ALMOST MARRIED (July 13).—John Smith, farmer, has two daughters, one pretty and the other fat and unattractive. The farmer wishes to marry off the fat daughter to Reuben, a neighbor. Lizzie and Reuben think well of the match until the pretty daughter, May, returns from a visit. Reuben throws over Lizzie and bestows his attentions on May. Lizzie complains to her father who kicks Reuben out. Reuben hires two ruffians to kidnap his lady-love. The kidnappers become confused and kidnap the wrong girl.

Meantime May's real lover arrives and urges her to go auto riding with him. Reuben is waiting at the justice's office. The kidnappers are pursued by the farmer. Funny situations pile up during the chase. Arriving, Lizzie recognizes Reuben and makes a dive for him. Reuben realizes that something is wrong and attempts to escape. Father and the neighbors arrive, but when the father discovers it is Lizzie that has been carried off and not May, he holds the crowd back to allow the marriage to take place. Reuben throws Lizzie out of the window, the father shoves her back again. There is a wild scramble until Reuben makes his escape and hikes it down the road.

LOVE AND LUNCH (Two Parts—July 23).—Ford secures the consent of his sweetheart to marry him, but sweetheart's fond parents insist that Ford find himself some kind of work to do before he attempts to take a wife. Now Smith has a lunch wagon. Jones, his waiter, is a single man and will, in spite of the boss' objections, flirt with the girls. Smith's wife finally objects, insisting that Jones should have a married man working for him. Ford hears of this and applies. When asked if he is married, Ford replies in the affirmative, thinking that he will be married shortly after he gets the job. Ford gets the job.

Peggy comes to the lunch counter, glad that her fiance has now secured work and anxious to congratulate him. Ford suddenly finds himself in an embarrassing position—he cannot talk with Peggy on account of the boss's rule. When she persists, Ford finds himself under the necessity of treating her roughly and finally throwing her out of the place.

Jones finds Peggy weeping and to comfort her, asks her to marry him. Peggy consents and they act upon the decision. They return to the lunch counter, after the knot has been tied, where Ford observes them making love. This is more than Ford can stand; he leaves his counter and reprimands Peggy for her actions. Smith discovers that his waiter, Ford, is neglecting his work. When Ford returns, bitter at the discovery that his girl has gone and married another man, Smith fires him and gives the job to Jones who applies for the position on the ground that he is now married. Of course, a fight results; the lunch wagon runs away; the gas tank explodes; the police are called and it ends in a general rough-house.

CRYSTAL.

GETTING VIVIAN MARRIED (July 21).—Vivian's Pa and Ma are anxious to marry her off. They have Percy call, but Vivian discourages. Then Harold is invited to court her by the parents. Vivian makes herself appear homely thereby driving him away. Later Vivian is approached on the street by Percy who insists on paying her unwelcome attentions. Charley happens to be passing by and observes this and thrashes the flirt. Then he goes into the bakery and securing some pies, chases Percy. A pie he throws happens to strike Vivian's Pa in the face.

That evening when Charley visits Vivian, Pa recognizes him and kicks him from the house. Vivian, in spite of the efforts of her parents, escapes and accompanies Charley. They start for the minister's on a bicycle. They have numerous adventures where the girl's father has preceded them. But when the old man learns that Charley is anxious to marry his daughter, he willingly gives his consent to the surprise of the young people.

IMP.

THE LADY OF THE ISLAND (Two Parts—July 6).—The story opens after the death of Vivian's father, with the reading of his will, Vivian is made sole heiress, while her uncle is placed over her as guardian for a term of years. Should she marry, the estate goes to the husband. The uncle, Ralph, determines to marry his own son, Jack, to Vivian, and as the estate is on a secluded island, he is confident that matters will work out his way.

We are then introduced to Teddy and Brian, who leave in a motor launch to look for what Brian calls "the land of romance." They arrive at Vivian's island and make camp. Vivian, meanwhile annoyed by the attentions of Jack, complains to her guardian, and declares her intention of returning to the mainland. She attempts it that night, but is injured in a trap set by the father and son. Brian and Teddy hear the girl's cry; they rush to her assistance, only to be met by father and son, who order them from the island as trespassers. As the girl lies unconscious on the bed, the guardian takes her picture to be used as a lantern slide. His purpose is to throw the picture by means of a lantern, into Vivian's room, showing her dead. It is his scheme to drive her insane or to suicide.

Teddy, while roaming around the house in-

To be Released

July 14

Posters
1-3-6 Sheets

PASQUALI AMERICAN
110 W 40th St. CO. NEW YORK

Territory for Sale

Ready

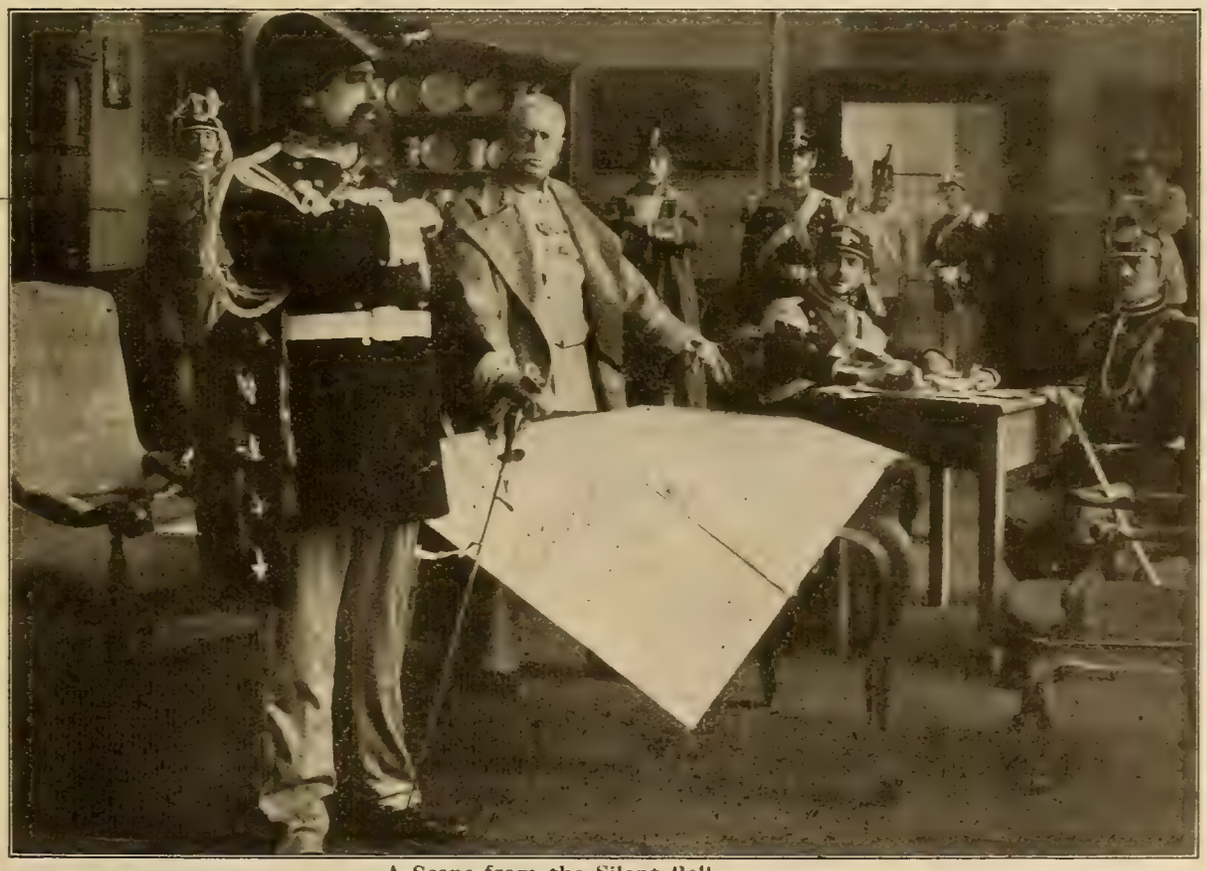
to be Shown
Sepia Photos
2-Color Heralds
Slides

THE SILENT BELL

IN 3 PARTS

A true incident of the courage and bravery of a child. A powerful three-reel drama based upon that great event in European history where the best and noblest of Italian blood threw off the Austrian yoke. Love, treason, suicide and battles are here most artistically shown.

Some territory open on the MEXICAN MINE FRAUD and CHIMNEY SWEEPS, both in five parts



A Scene from the Silent Bell

vestigating, is captured and made a prisoner in the cellar; his boat is overturned to give Brian the impression that he is drowned. Later, a nurse comes to the island to care for Vivian; she soon suspects something wrong, and informs Brian, whom she has met, of her fears. Vivian asks Brian to take her from the island. The plot discovered, the nurse finds herself also a captive with Teddy in the cellar. Vivian and Brian carry out their attempt to escape, but are foiled. It is Teddy's dog that rescues him from the cellar, and it is the dog which, while swimming to the mainland carrying a note for help, meets the boys in the rowing skiff. Following the race to the isand, there is a terrific fight. But the guardian and his son are captured and made prisoners in the cellar themselves.

Later, there is a double wedding: Brian and Vivian and the nurse and Teddy. Visiting the island in a launch, they send the dog off to the cellar with a package. The dog pulls the bolt and the guardian and his son stagger out; they open the package left by the dog. It is a wedding cake; and the two men are glad to get even a wedding cake to eat.

IN THE SULTAN'S GARDEN (July 20).—Lieutenant Robins, young naval officer, is smitten with Haydee, the favored inmate of the Sultan's harem, whom he has seen. Haydee, in turn, becomes interested in the handsome young American and manages to write him a note to be delivered to him on his warship lying in the harbor. The note implores Robins to effect her rescue. The adventurous boy attempts it, but fails.

Haydee, being unusually beautiful, a close espionage is kept over her movements. When Robins succeeds in climbing the wall, he is observed and captured by the Sultan's guards. He is confined in a dungeon and sentenced to be executed at daybreak. Haydee is condemned to be sewn up in a sack and cast into the sea as a penalty for her secret love affair.

However, a servant who is fond of Haydee, manages to place a knife in the sack and when the girl is thrown into the sea, she cuts her bonds and swims to a ship. Once aboard, she startles the commander with her story. The commander, having little liking for the sultan, sends his troops to effect the escape of the condemned officer. There is a dash and a one-sided battle; Robins is freed. But before the soldiers and Robins can escape to sea, the Sultan's forces are re-inforced and the battle continues. Finally, the guns of the ship are turned on the natives and the men gain shelter. On board Robins finds his Oriental sweetheart; his brother officers envy his adventure and attendant result.

THE GATEWAY OF REGRET (July 23).—Gwendolyn's mother is the keeper of a notorious gambling house. Her daughter has been reared in a convent and knows nothing of her mode of living. One night a derelict, who has gained entrance into the gambling house in order to beg from the players, is seen by the mother and is ejected. In his maudlin way he swears to be revenged. The next day his curiosity is aroused, and he follows the mother to the convent and learns of the daughter's identity. Seeing his opportunity for revenge he tells the daughter that the mother is ill. She hurries to the house. Disgusted by the surroundings she leaves and is swallowed by the great city.

Gwendolyn is employed as a chorus girl. Before long there is a mutual affection between her and the star. Finally he asks her hand in marriage. She hesitates. She gives the mother's address and tells him he must see her mother first. He goes to the house, is overwhelmed with grief when he sees the gambling resort, and, going back to the girl, tells her their marriage is impossible. She staggers away to spend the night on a bench in the park. The next morning she is taken to a hospital.

A large audience gathers to see their favorite star. He comes upon the stage; the realization of the wrong he has done the innocent girl overwhelms him and he collapses. A note is brought him from the girl in the hospital. Throwing an ulster over his costume he hurries to the hospital. He tells her that her past belongs to herself and that her future belongs to him.

JOKER.

JIMMY KELLEY AND THE KIDNAPPER (July 22).—The world has been cruel to Jimmie Kelley the detective. He decides to blow his brains out and end his misery. He raises his trusty revolver to his temple. At the critical moment his eye falls upon newspaper and he reads that a great reward is offered for rounding up of a band of kidnappers. Forthwith he forgets his dark project and goes in search of an honorable kidnapping friend. He proposes to his friend that he kidnap young woman then he, Kelly the detective, will work on the case, discover the woman and split the reward money with the kidnapper. The crook agrees. He steals Bess, the daughter of a wealthy banker. He ties her hand and foot in a barn, sets his infernal machine to exploue at twelve and notifies the girl's father that if two hundred dollars is not forthcoming, his daughter will be blown to a Kingdom Come.

The hysterical father employs Kelley to ferret the mystery. Kelley makes for the old barn where the girl is hidden. The gunpowder is sizzling. The intrepid Kelley fights his way into the death trap and saves the girl. The grateful father hands him the reward. But the kidnapper is watching from a distance. He cannot wait for the division of the spoils. He runs up and demands his share. The girl identifies the crook as her abductor and the brave Kelley and the trustworthy kinapper are led away to jail.

THE POLO CHAMPIONS (July 25).—The English polo team, of which the Duke of Mike, and the Earl of Jake are members, challenges Foxy Bean, manager of the American polo team, to a championship game to be played in America. The Britishers, after being properly decorated with the order of the Boston Garters by the Prince of Whales, leaves England's shores on the backs of their ponies, swimming across the Atlantic Ocean. They arrive safely in America and are greeted in a right royal fashion by the opposing team. The great match is pulled off. Through the superior playing of the Duke of Mike and the Earl of Jake, the Britishers win the game. But the Americans resent what surely seems unfair methods displayed by her opponents and a free-for-all results. The Britishers, however, are saved by a number of American heiresses who witnessing the distress of the blue-bloods, rush to their rescue.

NESTOR.

BY THE SUN'S RAYS (July 22).—Bandits capture a gold shipment from the Colorado mines. Where did they get the information that the shipment was to be made? A detective is sent from the company's Chicago office to aid John Davis, mine superintendent, in finding the criminals. Under their very noses another shipment is stolen. Frank Lawlor, clerk in the office, loves Davis' daughter, Dora. The girl feels a strange repugnance for the man. When the detective Murdock arrives, her woman's heart awakens. Lawler is angry, but conceals his feelings.

Another shipment is to be made. Murdock gathers a posse and sends them out. He is starting himself for their hiding place when Dora comes along on her horse. Love drives out other thoughts for a few moments, when a sudden flash of sunlight strikes their faces. Murdock is startled. Taking his field-glasses he sees Lawler on a distant hill, flashing a signal with a mirror to some one below. The treacherous clerk returns to the office. Murdock, leading the posse, capture the accomplices. Dora is holding Lawlor at the office by pretending to accept his hated love making when the posse returns. Seeing the game is up, Lawlor attempts to escape, is shot and his body brought back. Dora and Murdock acknowledge their love as the picture fades.

ALL AT SEA (July 24).—Alice Moore prefers young Bob Chester. Father and mother can't seem to agree with her. The Moores are spending the summer at Vorando Beach. Bob is at the nearby Tent City. At last the situation in the minds of Mr. and Mrs. Moore, become desperate and they decide to take their daughter back to San Francico. Alice determines to outwit them and is secretly married to Bob. Alice's brother arrives. Their greeting is effusive. Bob is jealous.

The whole party leaves on shipboard for the northern city. Alice, angry that Bob doubted her love, will not tell who her brother is. Bob disguises as a steward to avoid her parent's wrath. Complications galore arise. Brother is angered at the presumptious steward and his sister's disgraceful flirtation with him. Mr. and Mrs. Moore suddenly discover the identity of the steward. Then trouble certainly does follow. At last, however, things come straight. The secret of the marriage comes out. Everybody is forgiven and the picture fades as the sun goes down.

ECLAIR.

ALLAH 3311 (Three Parts—July 22).—Of an afternoon, Jack Bond, a young author and newspaper man, is handed by his editor a newspaper clipping which tells of the disappearance of the daughter of the Roumanian Ambassador, who has been recently murdered. Bond sees in the clipping the inspiration for a novel, dealing on international politics.

That night while Bond is working in his room over his novel a girl suddenly enters. She is pretty and appeals, with tears in her eyes, for help and protection against pursuers. Bond succeeds in turning her pursuers aside and then asks for an explanation. She informs him that she is the daughter of the murdered Ambassodor. It would appear that the Turkish League had been planning to acquire Roumania and, fearing the Ambassador's opposition, had threatened him with letters signed "Allah 3311." Defying them, the Ambassador had been kidnapped and his dead body was found later. Regina vowed to track the members of the league and avenge the death of her father. Her only clue was the "Allah 3311," which suggests Turks. Learning these details, the young author volunteers to help her.

At Bond's suggestion, Regina frequents the cafes. One evening she observes the mysterious number on a cane and follows the owner. Later, she secures employment with the stranger, who is a Turk, as a maid. She learns the secrets of the society. All that is needed for the conviction of its members is a certain book. Bond, in the meantime, has discovered that radium is used in the cane for a weapon. Bond is captured and imprisoned. Regina releases him and, by the aid of the radium cane, overpowers the leader and steals the book. Bond called the police, who arrive in time to save the girl and boy from death.

"WHEN DEATH RODE THE ENGINE" (July 26).—A price is placed on the capture of Jose Estrade, a notorious outlaw, by Sheriff Webster. Hearing of this the bad man sends one of his assistants to the Sheriff's house to pin a dagger to the dining room wall, to which is attached a note of warning. Angry at the outlaw's temerity, the Sheriff offers a reward for his capture, dead or alive.

Awaiting his opportunity, the desperado enters the Sheriff's home and after beating Mrs. Webster sets fire to the cottage and steals the baby. The officer returns in the nick of time and, dashing into the blazing house, liberates his half unconscious wife. A posse is organized, and led by the Sheriff, they pursue Jose.

Carrying the child, Jose mounts a giant locomotive and, knocking the engineer senseless, starts upon a wild ride, closely followed in another engine by the Sheriff. The two trains gradually draw together and Webster leaps across to the opposite cab. The outlaw knocks him unconscious and jumps with the baby. Recovering his senses, the Sheriff follows and a terrible battle ensues, wherein they roll from a precipice into the water. After a terrific struggle the Sheriff overpowers the bandit and leads him back to the posse.

BISON.

OLANA OF THE SOUTH SEAS (Two Parts—July 25).—The story opens when the subjects of King Kula celebrate the marriage of his daughter Olana to Chief Polapo, a handsome young warrior. While the wedding feast is at its height, Newaka, another warrior and rejected suitor of Olana, is plotting with a Kahuna, a witch doctor, for the abduction of the princess. A sleeping potion is prepared from the awa-root and Olana drinks it, believing that it is ordinary drinking water.

When the Princess falls into a deep sleep, the king calls the witch doctor to cure his daughter. However, the sorcerer declares the girl is dead and beyond his help. Chief Polapo, the young husband, is heartbroken. Olana is carried to the royal burying ground, which consists of a spacious cave, and left there for dead. Soon after the mourners have left, however, Newaka and the sorcerer arrive and revive the sleeping girl. Newaka then carries her to a neighboring island, of which King Lopikana has a single daughter named Neola. Neola sympathizes with Olana, but the two girls cannot communicate with each other, as they speak different languages.

King Popikana is a bitter enemy of Olana's people, and when the treacherous Newaka offers to lead them through a secret entrance into the realm of King Kula, Lopikana accepts the offer. The hostile forces invade the realm of King Kula and a war of extermination begins. After a long siege of fierce fighting the forces of Lopikana are defeated. Newaka is slain in hand to hand combat with Polapo and King Kula kills Lopikana in battle. In the meantime Olana has made Neola understand the particulars of her abduction. Neola is touched and prepares to send Olana back to her husband and people. While King Kula's subjects are celebrating their victory, Polapo appeals to the Gods to return his young wife. The great Gods are well disposed toward the lover, and even while he is praying Olana returns.

VICTOR.

A BEGGAR PRINCE OF INDIA (Three Parts—July 10).—Prince Hyzem has been raised within the castle walls as a beggar. Hyzem does not know that he is the rightful heir to the throne which his villainous uncle occupies. Time comes, however, when the young beggar prince longs to go beyond the walls of the castle. The opportunity is given him one day by his uncle's minister, who, not recognizing him, offers to take him on an expedition to the capital of one of the neighboring states. This state is governed by Jahan. The Uncle, his own country in a weakened condition through debauches, is anxious to enlist the aid of Jahan to protect it from the hillsmen. At the palace of Rajah Jahan, the Minister is humiliated and ordered away. Hyzem, wandering through the courtyard, meets the Princess, Jahan's daughter; it means love for both.

HEPWORTH'S, LONDON, PRESENTS

A THREE REEL PHOTOPLAY DRAMA ENTITLED

THE TRAGEDY OF BASIL GRIEVE

AN AMBITIOUS WOMAN MARRIES A YOUNG AUTHOR FOR HIS NAME AND MONEY AND THEN SUBSEQUENTLY MURDERS HIM IN ORDER TO BE FREE TO WED ANOTHER. A STRONG DRAMA TOLD IN A GRUESOMELESS MANNER WITHOUT JEOPARDIZING THE REALISTIC CLIMAX.

THREE PARTS

A PLEASING TWO REELER

THE CRY OF THE CAPTIVE

BEAUTIFULLY PICTURED AND MASTERFULLY ACTED

TWO PART DRAMA

A THROW OF THE DICE

A STIRRING DRAMA OF INDUSTRIAL STRIFE

SPLIT REELS

A FRIEND IN NEED
SPLIT REEL DRAMA

NO FLIES ON CIS
SPLIT REEL COMEDY

HEPWORTH AMERICAN FILM CORPORATION

110-112 West 40th St. A. BLINKHORN, Pres. NEW YORK CITY

ECLIPSE-URBAN FILM COMPANY

PRESENTS

A GRIPPING TWO-REEL PHOTOPLAY

THE JOKE THAT KILLS

A TWO-PART DRAMA DEPICTING THE LIFE BEHIND THE FOOTLIGHTS

TWO PARTS

A TWO REEL BARNET-PARKER DETECTIVE DRAMA

THE MYSTERY OF GREEN PARK

THE FIRST OF A SERIES BY ARNOLD GALOPIN

A MOST EXCITING TWO-PART DRAMA

THE BIRD OF PREY

A STORY THAT ABOUNDS IN INTEREST

SPLIT REEL COMEDIES

Sammy Is Too Cautious Peter's Perseverance

COMING! Miss "Billy" Campton, celebrated French actress, in a Two Reel Comedy, "Maud, the Ragpicker" COMING!

ECLIPSE-URBAN FILM COMPANY

110-112 West 40th St. Telephone 3095 Bryant NEW YORK CITY

On returning to Jahan's palace, the party is attacked by hillsmen and completely wiped out, with the exception of Hyzem. He escapes and returns, only to be made prisoner by his uncle for leaving the palace. Later, the sister of the hillsmen's chief is captured. The uncle seeks to make her a part of his harem, but is repulsed. In a drunken debauch the uncle sends for his nephew, Hyzem, and offers him the girl. The girl stabs the uncle, and, with the aid of Hyzem, escapes.

In the mountains Hyzem is received as a brother. He thinks of his Princess and makes his way to her palace. It is the evening of the Princess's betrothal to Borla. Hyzem is captured and held as a thief; he refuses to state his mission. Hyzem is assisted to escape by the Princess, and she, in turn is captured by the hillsmen. It is in the hills that the beggar prince meets her again, and she accepts his love. However, she informs him that he is the rightful possessor of the throne which his Uncle now occupies and urges him to return and fight for it. This Hyzem does; he meets with little resistance, and in the end we have him married to the pretty Princess, with the consent and blessings of her father.

AT MEXICO'S MERCY (July 6).—Jack Desmond is superintendent of a mine in Mexico. The quarter's shipment of thirty thousand dollars in gold is ready, when Romero, Mexican, demands tribute. Jack refuses to pay it. He is shot and his sweetheart, Brenda, goes for help. Meanwhile Gen. Cardillo has left his wife and child in neutral territory. The child escapes from its sleeping mother and runs into the woods. Jack, wounded, but trying to get back to civilization, meets the child and manages to carry it to its home. The mother is intensely grateful.

Brenda has been captured by the soldiers and thrown into prison. Later Jack is captured and stood up to be shot. Gen. Cardillo, learning that Jack is the man who brought back his child, saves his life, merely putting him in the prison. Romero decides to get rid of both Jack and the general. He plants a charge of powder in the cellar and escapes. But Brenda has appealed to Uncle Sam before the Mexicans caught her, and the U. S. soldiers attack the prison and rescue her and Jack just in time before the place blows up.

IRENE'S BUSY DAY (July 24).—Mr. Peck, a wealthy old man, has a ward, Irene, whose father has left a will saying she is to marry Peck when of age. The picture opens with Irene bidding her school-girl friends good-by. Peck takes her home. George meets Irene and they become mutually interested in each other. Peck observes the infatuation and drives George away from his house. Next day at church George again forces his attentions on Irene along with other boys. Peck, in order to keep Irene unspotted, dresses her as a boy. Irene in this disguise gets into an embarrassing position one day and is rescued by George, who does not recognize. Later, Irene tells George that she is being forced into marrying Peck. Disguised as an apple woman, George gains entrance to Peck's grounds; while the housekeeper is in the kitchen, George puts Irene beneath his apples and escapes. Peck hears of it and gives pursuit, but arrives at the church too late. George has made Irene his wife and gives Peck the laugh.

UNIVERSAL.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 122 (July 8).—Novel Patriotic Pageant—Railroad and steamship companies unite in forming spectacular parade which is viewed by thousands in Hoboken, N. J.

Dispossessed—Forced to move in hurry, automobile comes to rescue and moves own garage to new location.—Los Angeles, Cal.

All for the Cause—Noon hour speeches by prominent suffragettes are becoming popular among Wall Street brokers.—New York City.

Some Boat Race—Uncle Sam's stokers hold exciting race in which shovels are used for oars and washtubs for boats.—Manila, P. I.

Juvenile Police—Schoolboys from East Side patrol streets after hours and assist greatly in rounding up of bad boys in the neighborhood.—New York City.

Unique Industrial Parade—The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, largest industry in Southern California, heads nimble dollar prosperity parade held by business men of Los Angeles, Cal.

Aviators Race—Spectacular celebration of the nation's birthday is furnished by birdmen in 50-mile race over New York City.

Early Morning Blaze—Large manufacturing plant destroyed by flames in one of the most stubborn fires ever fought in Manchester, N. H.

World's Most Powerful Fire Boat—With her enormous pumps set in motion by Mayor Mitchel the "William J. Gaynor" forms grand spectacle on her trial trip up the Hudson.—New York City.

Tango Stops War—Officers and friends of General Carranza holds picnic before his departure.—Durango, Mexico. Sub-title. Latest in men's headgear.

Bomb Wrecks Tenement—I. W. W. bomb makers killed when dynamite intended for Rockefeller estate explodes.—New York City.

To the Happy Hunting Grounds—The old "Reliance," successful America cup defender of 1903, now to be demolished for its lead and copper.—Erie Basin, New York.

Here's to Luck!—May the new America cup defender prove as successful as the old "Reliance."—Greenpoint, Conn.

Cyclone Destroys City—Many homes ruined and business section severely damaged when cyclone strikes Watertown, S. D.

Independence Day—On 138th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence President Wilson delivers a patriotic speech, Independence Hall, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cartoons by Hy. Mayer, world famous cartoonist of Puck.

MUTUAL FILM CORP.

BEAUTY.

"A JOKE ON JANE" (July 14).—Rich, who is somewhat of a grouch, refuses to accompany his pretty young wife to a card party. Being a "spunky" little woman, Jane goes by herself. Left alone for the evening, Rich determines to make her sorry and hatches a scheme. Summoning Wise, his friend, he obtains his assistance. Rich goes to his wife's room, and removes the contents of her jewel case. He then gets Wise to securely bind and gag him. His scheme is to make Jane believe, on her return, that a thief had rendered him helpless. Wise goes home and foolishly confides the joke to his wife. Mrs. Wise secretly sends Jane a note, informing her of the trick. Highly elated, Jane shows the note to her friends and hastens home.

Meanwhile, "Second Story" Ike, a burglar, looks in and discovers Rich gagged and helpless. Entering, he relieves him of all of his possessions, including Jane's jewels, which Rich has placed in his pocket. Delighted over the easy haul, Ike then starts out to ransack the house. While he is thus engaged, Jane comes home and proceeds to torture poor Rich, who is utterly helpless. She tickles him nearly to death. Finally she shows him Mrs. Wise's note and for punishment, decides to leave him tied up for the night. Poor Rich struggles frantically at his bonds, but owing to the gags in his mouth, is unable to tell Jane of the robbery. She bids him "good-night" and goes to her room highly amused. Entering she is horrified to discover a man in the closet and nearly faints. Slamming the door shut, she locks him in and summons a cop. Ike is dragged off to jail and when Rich gets the gag out of his mouth he solemnly swears never again to indulge in a practical joke.

THANHOUSER.

DEBORAH (Two Parts—July 14).—Deborah, a beautiful Jewish maiden, driven from her home in a large city, found refuge in the woods near a small town. With her was two of her own faith, a woman and an old man named Abraham. During her wandering Deborah met Joseph, the son of Lorenz, burgomaster of the town, and neither the girl's inherited hatred for the Christians, nor the young man's contempt for her race could prevent love coming to them. Its arrival swept away the least traces of racial and religious enmity, and Deborah and Joseph resolved to journey to the new world and a new life.

Nathan, the town's schoolmaster, unknown to the people of the place, was an Apostate Jew, who feared exposure. He feared and hated the people of his own race. Discovering the attachment between Joseph and Deborah, he informed the burgomaster, and then persuaded Joseph to consent to a test of Deborah's love. The test was to be a bag of gold—a bribe for the girl to give up Joseph. He contrived the affair in such a manner as to make Joseph believe that Deborah accepted the bribe, and Joseph, brokenhearted, consented to marry Anna, the pastor's niece, who loved him since childhood. Deborah, not hearing from Joseph, comes to the town and is horrorstricken at his accusation. Later, after his wedding, he learns of Deborah's innocence, and seeks her forgiveness; but Deborah curses him and leaves the village, telling him she will return in later years to witness the damage her curse has wrought.

Several years pass. Joseph and Anna have a pretty little daughter. Joseph, his interest in the Jews aroused, secures an order from the Emperor permitting the Jews to settle in the town. Deborah returns to the town, and nearly falls a vactim to Nathan, the schoolmaster, who incites the citizens against her. Her life is saved by Anna, and later when Joseph returns and she realizes his nobility of character, she forgives him for the past. The schoolmaster is exposed, driven from the village and dies. Deborah goes forth into the world alone.

THE LEAVEN OF GOOD (July 17).—Nell Rogers comes to New York from a small town in Maine to find her brother, Harry, missing

Your patrons shun the warm theatres in summer. Make your theatre cool and they will return soon again.

The sign

"Cooler Inside"

will invite them in. Make good by using

Westinghouse Electric Fans

because they give the most breeze with the least expense for current. They need no attention except lubrication once a season.

Send for Folder 4268 showing styles.

Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co.

DEPT. BR EAST PITTSBURGH, PA.

Sales Offices in 45 American Cities.

WHY

are we equipping some of the finest new theatres today?

BECAUSE

T. S. M. QUALITY

Lobby Displays have the individuality they want.

No. 30 Frame.

IF YOU

investigate our goods Mr. Exhibitor (who has not placed his order for that new or remodeled theatre) we feel certain the merits of our Brass Display will get your ORDER,

you surely will

GET THE BEST.

The Theatre Specialty Mfg. Co.

1232 East 3rd Street,
CLEVELAND, OHIO.

See our Exhibit Booth 27, Dayton Convention.

THE STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO.

PRESENTS

THE POPULAR AMERICAN STARS
MR. ARTHUR DONALDSON, MR. JAMES VINCENT
AND MISS VIOLET STUART IN

"THE LAND OF THE LOST"

RELEASED JULY 15

REPRODUCTION OF 9 SHEET

A GRIPPING DRAMATIC PRODUCTION IN FOUR PARTS

SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF PUBLICITY
INCLUDING 1, 3 AND 9 SHEETS

STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO. 145 W. 45th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

since childhood. Ignorant of the fact that he has become a member of a notorious gang of thieves, she exhausts all her funds in a vain search. Penniless and despondent she wanders into City Hall Park. Jim Kelly, Harry's old partner, in crime, finds Nell sobbing on a bench and takes her to his room. Following a conlesson as to his mode of livlihood, and after a promise to lead a better life, they marry. Five months later finds Jim in dire straits. With no money to buy food and medicine for his sick wife and unable to find work, he agrees to accompany his old pal, Harry the Rat, on a safe-blowing venture. Just as the "Rat" it about to force the safe, Jim seems to see the face of his sick wife and remembers his promise. Telling the "Rat" that he has decided not to blow the safe, he turns to leave, but the "Rat," believing himself betrayed, springs on Jim. In the struggle that follows Jim knocks the "Rat" unconscious and escapes. Regaining consciousness, the "Rat" goes in search of Jim to revenge the trick which he imagines has been played. He finds Jim in his room with his sick wife. From behind a partly open door he hears their story, from which he learns that Nell is his sister. Overcome he tip-toes to Jim and informs him of that fact. Then, after slipping a roll of bills into the astounded Jim's hands, he kisses his sister and departs.

MUTUAL WEEKLY.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 80 (July 9).—Annual Intercollegiate Boat Races are rowed over the beautiful Hudson course at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Cornell wins the "Junior Eights."

Mlle. Pelletier, female aeronaut of Auxerre, France, thrills spectators by perilous parachute leap from aeroplane.

Mrs. "Jimmy" Watts, another daring aviatress, says flying is fine for the nerves.

Alonzo Trinqual, believing that the world will be destroyed by another deluge, has built an ark to emulate Noah.

"Better Babies week observed in New York. Mayor Mitchel presents the prizes. Johanna Wiggers, the 100 per cent. baby, and winner of the grand prize.

Trial trip of New York City's newest fireboat, the "William J. Gaynor."

Extremely warm weather drives New York's population to the seaside resorts.

Historic city of Salem, Mass., partially destroyed by $20,000,000 fire.

The Autoped.—Boston man shows new machine within reach of everybody.

Hispano-American Exposition is opened at Earl's Court by the Lord Mayor of London.

DOMINO.

THE DEFAULTER (Two Parts—July 23).—Jim Latimer, a typical rounder, juggles his books and absconds with his employer's money. A tramp who has stolen Latimer's coat is found dead, and the papers in the coat lead the detectives to believe that it is Latimer who has been killed. His wife marries again, but keeps her former marriage a secret from her husband. One night she is aroused by her child crying; going to the nursery to quiet her she hears a noise down stairs. She secures a revolver and investigates, and discovers her former husband, Jim, in the act of stealing the silver. She kills him, in self defense, and her secret is never known to her husband.

BRONCHO.

SHORTY AND THE ARIDVILLE TERROR (Two Parts—July 22).—Shorty and the boys ride into Aridville. To meet Bessie Gordon, whom the boys think is a dentist, Shorty feigns a toothache. Upon going to the office to have his tooth pulled, Shorty discovers the husband of Bessie and his flirtation proves serious, as he is compelled to have his tooth removed to carry out his bluff. Two-Gun-Bill, the terror of Aridville, comes to town to quench a desert thirst. Shorty and the boys plan to have Two-Gun-Bill flirt with Bessie and play the same joke on him. Two-Gun-Bill goes to Bessie. She gives him gas. When he comes out of the gas, he shoots up the place and runs Dr. Gordon from the office. The Dr. climbs in his old machine and a chase follows.

KAY BEE.

THE CITY (Two Parts—July 17)—John Hodges, son of a miserly New England farmer, is forced to leave home and find work in a pool room in New York City. Silas Hodges, his father, advertises that he is desirous of investing some money, to which he receives a reply. Jim Walters, a crook, replies to the advertisement and induces him to invest $1,000.00 in a fraud. His son, who is cashier in the poolroom, goes to the bank to cash the check. He notices that the check is endorsed by his father. In the meantime the pool room is raided by the police. Mr. Hodges escapes and returns to the country. John also hurries home and restores to his father the $1,000.

AMERICAN.

"A MAN'S WAY" (Two Parts—July 20).—Henry and Louise had gone through college together. Afterward, Henry went out to pursue his career, that of a geologist, meanwhile letting business gradually crowd out Louise, who never forgot to love him. On a vacation Henry came in contact with an old mountaineer and his young granddaughter, Gladys, a sweet, girlish product of the mountains. Soon interest grew to infatuation. Career was forgotten. They were married and very happy for awhile, but Henry's ambition again came to the front, and he decided to go back to the place of his work. In the city, Henry steadily followed in the footsteps of success, shaking off, for a time, the thoughts of his child-wife, off in the mountains with her old grandfather.

Louise, the girl who had always loved him, soon realized the hopelessness of her love. Gladys, back in the mountains, was broken-hearted. Louise's unrequited love for Henry undermined her health and she had to be sent up into the mountains to regain her strength. One day she heard a melody; she followed the sound and came upon Gladys. A prank of Providence brought together two women whose hearts were given to one man. The two became fast friends. Meanwhile Henry was successful, but not happy. Thoughts of his child-wife came until finally he started for her. She was gone! For five years he searched to no avail. She sings at a big reception. By a strange coincidence Harry comes to the same reception. He is greatly affected by the singing, but does not recognize in this cultured woman his little mountain Gladys. She recognizes him, but controls herself. After the solo she goes into the garden. He starts to follow. He watches, and as this woman battles with herself, the old crude instincts return—she tugs at her ear. Henry recognizes her through this mannerism. He goes to her—his wife—but she spurns him. Louise, who is present, stands a witness to the scene, and realizes that the man she loves pleads for the love of another. Gladys is adamant. Henry leaves her. Louise's love for Henry forces her to him. He pours out his story to her, not knowing that every word is a wound. Louise, realizing now that her love is hopeless, leaves him. She goes to Gladys and says, "I saw all; you must go to him." Gladys will not relent, so Louise, desperate in her love for the man and her wish for his happiness, lets out the secret that Henry is the man she has loved and begs Gladys for the sake of her love to go to him. Gladys loves Henry deeply. Her pride is broken by Louise's magnanimity, and husband and wife are reconciled.

"BUSINESS VS. LOVE" (July 22).—Chester Stanley, who desires to control M. L. S. stock, neglects his wife. She takes this neglect to heart and causes herself a great deal of unhappiness. One day on reading a portion of a letter addressed to her husband, she learns that if Craig and Son, business rivals of her husband, gets financial assistances and push M. L. S. stock, they will force her husband to the wall. It is a question now of love vs. business and Agnes decides to enter business and if possible crush her husband, so that having lost everything he may return to her with his love.

She pawns her jewels and raises a large sum of money. This she places in the hands of Craig & Son with instructions to buy M. L. S. stock. With this money they steady the market, restore confidence and M. L. S. stock goes up by leaps and bounds. Just before the closing of the stock-market, Agnes gives orders to sell her stock. She returns to the offices of Craig & Son and finds that she has made a fortune of nearly $100,000. In the meantime, Chester Stanley faces ruin. He goes to his home, his mind temporarily unbalanced and decides to end it all. In his room he kisses the picture of his wife and draws a pistol from the drawer of his writing desk. He is about to commit self-destruction when Agnes comes into the room. He sees the check for $100,000 made out to his wife and cannot grasp its meaning. He hides the revolver and asks for an explanation. She tells him how she made the money and looking up she says: "Chester, after all a little love is just as important as business." He understands and draws Agnes into his arms.

RELIANCE

"OUR MUTUAL GIRL" (No. 26—July 13).—Upon the urgent invitation of Mrs. Knickerbocker and Margaret, Dunbar arrives at the Knickerbocker home and accompanies aunt and niece to the Waldorf-Astoria Roof Garden, where they have dinner far above the humming motors of Fifth avenue.

Upon their return to Mrs. Knickerbocker's house they find Ada and "Kid" Joseph awaiting them. "Kid" Joseph notices Margaret's increasing interest in Dunbar and Mrs. Knickerbocker's apparent approval of the intimate friendship between the two. The "Kid" is not much pleased with the turn in affairs and visits Madge Travers to tell her he has information which will prove that Margaret's professed friend, Dunbar, is a crook.

Visiting Mrs. Knickerbocker soon after her talk with "Kid" Joseph, Madge tells Margaret's aunt what she has learned. Mrs. Knickerbocker, however, is incredulous and displeased. When he learns that Madge Travers has failed to convince Mrs. Knickerbocker of Dunbar's duplicity, "Kid" Joseph personally visits Dunbar and warns him to cease visiting Margaret. Dunbar sneers at the young gangster's threats.

Unconscious of the tension surrounding her, Margaret visits the studio of Penrhyn Stanlaws, the famous illustrator, who sketches her in colors. She spends a delightful afternoon in Mr. Stanlaws' place.

Shortly after Margaret and her aunt return home, they have two visitors, Dunbar and "Kid" Joseph. The "Kid" again demands, in a whispered conversation, that Dunbar cease his attentions to Margaret, but when Dunbar smilingly shakes his head in negation, the "Kid" steps before Margaret and Mrs. Knickerbocker and denounces Dunbar as a dangerous crook. Both Margaret and her aunt are shocked at the accusation and reiterate their confidence in Dunbar.

"IZZY THE DETECTIVE" (July 1).—Izzy, because of his own laziness, has lost his job. Misfortunes never come singly, however, and hot upon the heels of this disaster Izzy learns that his girl has deserted him. Despite all his efforts to connect with a new position, Izzy fails to do so. He has about plumbed the depths of despair when he reads the advertisement of a fake detective agency: "Be a Sleuth—Ten Lessons for Ten Dollars."

Izzy always had had a sneaking ambition to be a regular Sherlock Holmes and he at once subscribes his ten dollars. He receives his ten printed lessons together with a number of placards advertising rewards for criminals, who long since have passed to their fathers.

The office boy employed by the detective agency in taking the photographs of the criminals to the printers, has lost one of them and in order to hide his own carelessness substitutes the photograph of a prominent English nobleman then visiting the city.

Izzy, of course, picks out the photograph of the nobleman and as the latter passes through the streets has him arrested. His false accusation enmeshes him still deeper in difficulties and poor Izzy is put in solitary confinement for insulting the representative of a foreign government. After spending some time in jail he is released and warned to get a regular job or be imprisoned again on a charge of vagrancy.

"THE WEAKER TRAIN" (July 4).—Forsythe, a young military student of good family and independent means, marries Maisie, the daughter of a hotel keeper, while at school but shortly after graduation heeds the pleas of his parents and family who deprecate his union with one who in their opinion is beneath him in social station. Forsythe deserts his wife and renounces her.

A child is born of the union. The boy grows to be a man but is not very successful at his work and finally, so that he may not be a burden upon his mother who has reared him as best she can on her limited means, he enters the army.

The son spends several years in the ranks and finally is appointed a corporal. War breaks out and he is delegated to guard a certain post in

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

Liberty Motion Picture Company

"The name and fame of 'LIBERTY' will circle the globe."

Our equipment is "top-notch"
Our aim is to top the "top."

We are equipped to handle any amount of outside printing.

WANTED!!

Scenarios:—Two or three reel Canadian and Northwestern stories—strong on exteriors. Let them be original.

Address, Scenario Department.

LIBERTY MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

20-52 E. HERMAN STREET GERMANTOWN, PHILA.

STATE RIGHT BUYERS

A CHANCE TO BUY AT YOUR OWN FIGURE

"A CRY IN THE NIGHT"

SENSATIONAL MELODRAMA IN FOUR PARTS

OPEN TERRITORY

West Virginia	Oregon	Texas	Alabama
Western Pa.	Idaho	Louisiana	Georgia
Ohio	Montana	Oklahoma	Florida
Indiana	Utah	Arkansas	North Carolina
Kansas	Wyoming	Kentucky	South Carolina
Missouri	Colorado	Tennessee	Virginia
Washington

New York State, Outside of Greater New York.

IF YOUR TERRITORY IS ON THIS LIST DON'T HESITATE SEND IN YOUR OFFER

All prints on Eastman Stock.

20TH CENTURY FEATURE FILM COMPANY

216 West 42d Street, New York City, N. Y.

READY IN TWO WEEKS
THE BIGGEST AMERICAN SENSATIONAL FEATURE OF THE CENTURY

order to prevent one of the enemy's spies from breaking through the cordon.

While on duty the young man hears of his mother's fatal illness and leaves his post without permission. The son learns his father's name at his mother's death bed, and is astounded when he remembers that the commander of his regiment bears the same name and initials and undoubtedly is his parent.

Upon his return the young soldier is called before Forsythe and sentenced to death for having deserted in time of war. When Forsythe asks the young man why he committed such a breach of honor, his son tells of his mother's death and Forsythe realizes that he has sentenced his own son to execution. That night he aids his son to escape by exchanging his cape for the corporal's uniform worn by the young soldier but is shot himself when he attempts to leave the guard house.

KOMIC

"THE WHITE SLAVE CATCHERS" (June 28).—Sam contemplates suicide. Sadie's dad has repeatedly kicked him out of his domicile and even Sadie has begun to lose faith in her hero. Sam is reduced still further in spirits when Sadie tells him that her father has threatened to have him arrested as a white-slaver if he shows up around her home again.

Instead of committing suicide Sam hits upon a brilliant plan; he decides to elope and be married on the wing. Sadie being agreeable, they pack their telescopes and set out for the pastorate of the minister in the next town.

Here come complications. Sadie's dad, apprised of the elopement, calls in the police. Two score eagle-eyed detectives are summoned. Bloodhounds are hastily fed with raw meat and roused from their kennels. Church bells are rung and the local Anthony Gumstalk mounts his velocipede to overtake Sam, the white-slaver.

Sam and Sadie find the minister's house in good time ,but, woe is me! his reverence is not home. Sadie, however, foils the detectives by blacking her face and posing as the rector's maid. The detectives, weary with their unwonted exercise, determine to call it a day and lie down in the pastor's parlor for a nap.

Anon, the minister returns home. Sadie, hastily washing her face, explains matters to him, and while the sleuths of the law sleep on, Sam and Sadie are made one and indissoluble. Meanwhile Anthony Gumstalk has sent a note to the head of the detective bureau in Sadie's home town. "Can a White Slave Be Black?" is the gist of the note. Sadie's father and the sergeant of detectives receive the message and hurry to the minister's, feeling that things have taken a dark turn. When they arrive Sam and Sadie are leaving with their marriage certificate. Papa and the sergeant obtain relief by casting stones at the detective force.

LOCAL PICTURES WILL FILL
YOUR THEATRE
WRITE US FOR PRICES
Developing and Printing
For the Trade
Reasonable
COMMERCIAL FILMERS
1101 W. Randolph St., Chicago.

Floral Decorations For Theatre, Stage and Parades
Best selections from the markets of Europe and America
Botanical Decorating Co.
504 So. 5th Ave. CHICAGO
Prices the lowest ever offered for reliable goods

FEATURE FILM STORIES

FILM RELEASES OF AMERICA.

A KNIGHT OF KNAVERY (Three Parts).—Alice Moran secretly marries Raol Courtais. Her cousin, George Dubois, is an insistent suitor for her hand and his advances became so impertinent that she has to reprove him. The slighted suitor, becoming suspicious of an interchange of notes between Courtais and Alice, bribes Robert, the banker's servant, to spy on the banker's daughter. Learning that Raol is in Alice's room, he informs the banker who hurries to the girl's boudoir and there denounces the presuming man and the girl. The girl, acknowledging Raol as her husband, is disinherited. Raol later calls upon the old man, whose constitution has been undermined by the shock. The old banker receives him kindly and forgives all.

On his way home, Raol stops in a cafe where he meets Dubois. There he tarries for an hour. On the morning following, Robert, the spy, goes into his master's room where he finds him dead. Courtais is arrested, charged with murder. Courtais attempts to establish an alibi by calling upon Dubois to prove that he was drinking with him in a cafe at the hour the crime was committed. This statement Dubois repudiates and the defendant is committed to fifteen years' deportation. Alice, after her husband has gone to the land of stripes, goes to live with her uncle, whose gambling soon acomplishes his ruin. Alice, without means, accepts Dubois' offer of aid. He continues his importunities for her to mary him. This she refuses to do.

In the meantime, Raol in the far-oñ penal colony, has managed to escape. He hides in a barrel which is being shipped to the home country and manages to make a friend on the native shore who gives him the means with which to make a new start. A clever engineer is Raol and he succeeds in perfecting an invention he had secretly begun before his disgrace, which invention brings him position and wealth. Convinced that Dubois had some malice in having him "sent away," Raol engages a detective. In disguise, Raol goes to Dubois, who has carried on his uncle's banking business. He manifests such a wonderful interest in a certain stock on which he plunges heavily (whose value is fictitious), that Dubois also buys strong. Raol sells his own stock which had been purchased for him and Dubois finds himself with an enormous amount of handsomely engraved paper and about seven cents in cash.

Understanding that the end is near, the usurper runs to the place by the lakeside where he had hidden his uncle's last will which bequeathed the property to his forgiven daughter. Hs is watched by the detective, who fails to prevent him from hurling the casket containing the document into the water. Dubois is captured and arrested. A diver is sent into the lake depths for the casket which is recovered. It contains proof that the dead banker's property was left to his daughter and that there was no motive for any criminal act on Raol's part. The villain then meets the same fate to which he had committed his rival—deportation.

MERA, THE MEDIUM (Three Parts).—Harry Wright, visiting Lord Chester, expresses admiration for his picture, "A Glance Into the Past," which tells of a moment, tragic, terrible, in the life of a celebrated fortune teller. Lord Chester tells the story of the picture.

"In the town of X lived Zira, an old fortune teller, with her servant, Harel. In the same house lived Alice Janere, who beggel her to reveal the secrets of her future, but Zira's lips were sealed. She had promised Alice's mother that never would she tell the girl what might befall in the tomorrow. 'I will be your fortune teller,' said Alice's mother, 'and your fortune is both spiritual and material. The savings of my lifetime are for you,' and the mother went to a picture on the wall and released a spring which allowed the portrait to open outward In the cavity lay a humble treasure of jewels and money.

"There were other ears who heard, other eyes that saw. John, the betrothed of Alice, coming to visit her, paused in the doorway. He closed the door softly again and went away, the light of avarice in his eyes.

"The next day brought evil doings. An unscrupulous woman with whom John had been intimate, blackmailed him for twenty-five hundred dollars. John, weak and dissolute, went to the home of his fiancee in the dark of the night. His knife mutilated the picture. He stuffed the treasure into his pocket. A sound at the door, Alice's mother entered. A struggle. Out of the door fled the criminal; on the floor was stretched a dead woman. The shock and the fight had stilled her heart for evermore. John returned to his apartment. The blackmailer called and demanded the hush money. A struggle outside the door.

"Alice, having discovered her mother lying dead on the floor and the domestic bank rifled, went to her fiance for aid. ushing into the room she attempted to embrace nim. He repulsed her. Alice noticed the pearl necklace and locket which belongs to her mother on the blackmailer. The truth came upon her. 'You are the murderer of my mother,' she cried as she fell unconscious."

"Zira adopted the bereaved Alice. A short time later Zira died. Going to another town Alice led a double life. As Ethel Landier, she was sought and respected as a wealthy and beautiful young woman; as Mera the teller of fortunes, she was the talk of the community. Mera learned much as to the inner lives of people while in her pose as an heiress. Eavesdropping at a reception one evening, she overheard a young girl telling a friend about her sweetheart. His picture was in a locket. It was loose and when the girl rose it dropped to the floor. The features were those of John, the false lover—of John, the burglar—of John, the murderer.

"John's new fiancee was eager to visit Mera, but John was averse. He decided to visit the fortune teller himself to learn how much she might know. He went to the house at 13 Mysteria street. Mera entered her residence, which connected with the fortune telling house by a secret passageway. In a mirror's reflection Mera studied the features of her betrayer. Mera was guarded in her readings, her object being to allow him to think that she had little ability in telling the past or the future. She said that at the next masque ball at midnight a black domino would appear.

"At the masquerade ball at midnight the woman of the black domino walked quietly and silently into another room. He followed in doubt and in fear. He tried to pull the masque from her face. A revolver flashed in her hand. 'Do not look into my face,' said the woman behind the domino, 'for it conceals death—death to you.' A faintness came upon him. A few minutes later he was found unconscious. The black domino had disappeared

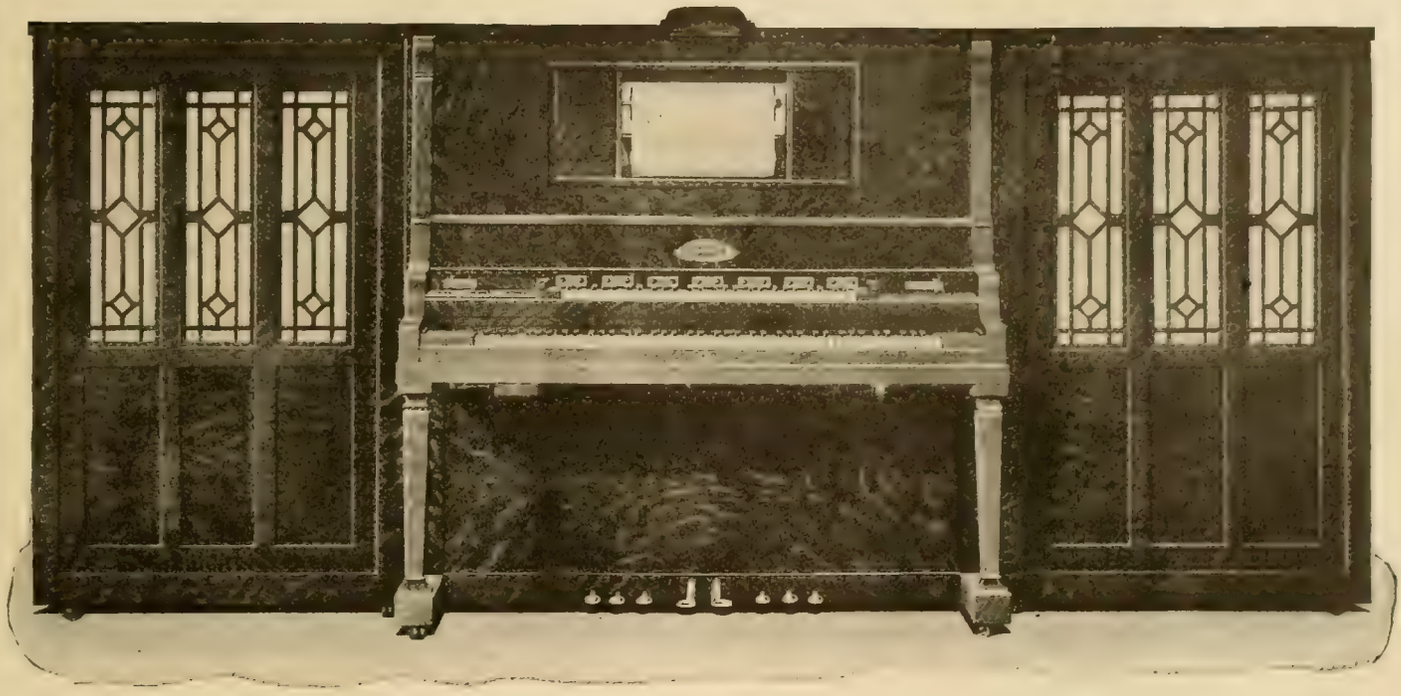
"John, anxious that his bride-to-be should be given a roseate reading by the fortune teller went to Mera again and seeked to bribe her into giving a false reading to the girl. 'I will paint you as you deserve,' said the seer sternly. His money lay untouched on the table, but John believed that it had accomplished its mission. He took his fiancee to the house of mystery. 'Your future will be clear to you if I expose the past,' Mera said, and by a manipulation of cards, she called back to John's memory the things that had been. Enraged, John rose to his feet and grappled with the medium. He pulled the wig and the concealing spectacles from her face. A shot rang out from the rear from the revolver of Harel. 'To look upon my face was death to you. I told you,' murmured the medium. This is the story of a wonderful picture."

FEATURE PHOTOPLAY CO.

THE MYSTERIOUS MR. WU CHUNG FOO (Four Parts).—Though the weather outside was miserable, it had no effect upon the members within the pleasant room of the Astor Club. To pass the time merrily, a game of cards was proposed, and Lord Lister, a detective, arose from the table a lucky winner. Being naturally a close observer, his eyes fell upon an inscription on one of the dollar bills, "We are held prisoners by a Chinese gang at Cosia, near Sacramento. Send help!" After discussing this appeal among his friends, he is determined to unravel the mystery and his friend, Charles Brand, consents to accompany him. On a vast farm in the small village of Cosia lives Mr. Wu Chung Foo, a rich Chinese merchant, of whom Lord Lister has often heard

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

SEEBURG
"Motion Picture Player"



THE WONDER OF THEM ALL

A combination of piano, orchestra and pipe organ, played either manually or automatically.

Comprising over 30 distinct instruments, giving all effect necessary for

"PLAYING TO THE PICTURES"

Won the heartiest approval from those exhibitors who attended the recent convention at New York City.

For full particulars write

J. P. SEEBURG PIANO COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

Republic Building 209 S. State Street, CHICAGO

his friend, Gov. Morton, speak. Through him he secures a letter of introduction to the merchant, asking him to permit two close friends to have the use of his hunting grounds.

The next day Lister and Brand start out on their journey, well prepared for all contingencies. At their destination they are met by Mr. Wu Chung Foo and escorted to his home. On the way Wu Chung, trying to make his guests uncomfortable, explains that his ground is the exact location where so many people have mysteriously disappeared. This does not see fear in Lord Lister but a firm resolve to carry out his plans. A peculiar stare in the eyes of the yellow man gives Lord Lister grounds for suspicion. At his home they are introduced to his adopted daughter Hattie, and not many words had passed between them before she cultivates a strong liking for Charles Brand.

Wu Chung suspects that the purpose of their visit is to gain his secret. Not approving of their purpose, and of the friendship which has sprung up between Hattie and Charles, Wu Chung informs the agent of his subterranean city to capture the latter, and to set him to work in the mine as a slave. That night the detective decides to go one step further into the mystery and, disguising himself as a shadow, he ventures into the private room of the master of the house. Here he learns of the secret door built in one of the walls which leads to the solution of the enigma. As Wu Chung passes in, Lister follows, but his steps are halted by an iron gate to which he has no key.

The next day while out riding, Hattie and Lister discover that Charles, who had ridden ahead, has mysteriously disappeared from his horse. To lessen the grief of Hattie, Lister acquaints her with the circumstances of which she had not the slightest knowledge. When the matter is explained to Wu Chung, he catches the accusing eye of Lister and decides to rid himself of his second burden.

In a like manner as his friend, the detective is seized by an ape and carried into a cave through rocks. Horrified at her second discovery, Hattie determines to master the situation. She obtains possession of the key, and, with gun in hand, gains entrance to the subterranean city, where many white men are held as slaves and worked to death in her foster father's mine. Having presence of mind, she runs for the help of the soldiers. They arrive in time, capturing the criminals, and giving Wu Chung the just measures he deserves. Hattie is once more safe in the arms of her lover and the white men are freed, while Lord Lister, their liberator, having accomplished his purpose, happily looks on.

COSMOFOTOFILM. CO.

"SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER" (Three Parts).—Mr. Hardcastle, an old-fashioned country gentleman, has a daughter, Kate, whom he designs to marry young Marlow, the son of his old friend Sir Charles Marlow. Letters on the subject have passed between Hardcastle and Sir Charles, and it has been arranged that young Marlow shall pay a visit to the Hardcastles, with the hope that the two young persons may develop a mutual interest that will fulfill the wishes of their parents.

Young Marlow, as it happens, though halefellow among men and quite at his ease with women of the humbler classes, is shy and embarrassed in the presence of ladies of means and position. He dreads the visit to the Hardcastles, but is persuaded to go by his friend, Hastings, who is in love with Mrs. Hardcastle's niece, Constance Neville. Hastings volunteers to accompany young Marlow in order to be near his own fair one, and thus to seek opportunity to defeat the plan of Mrs. Hardcastle, who intends that Constance Neville shall wed her own son by a former marriage—Tony Lumpkin, a loutish, prankish young man.

When Hastings and young Marlow stop at a tavern to enquire the way to Mr. Hardcastle's house, they fall in with Tony, who is carousing with the frequenters of the tavern. Tony plays a practical joke; he directs them to Hardcastle's house, but tells them that it is an inn kept by a man who poses as a gentleman. Hastings and Marlow go to Mr. Hardcastle's house, and, thinking the place an inn, lord it about and give blunt orders in a fashion that drives their bewildered host almost to distraction.

Hastings is first to discover their mistake. He comes face to face with his beloved Constance, and she sets him right. He decides, however, to keep young Marlow in the dark, for he knows that his friend will take the first excuse to depart when he has once learned the truth about the supposed inn. So Hastings tells young Marlow that Miss Neville and Miss Hardcastle happen to be stopping in the house. Young Marlow is then introduced to Miss Hardcastle, but he is so overwhelmed by shyness that he dare not raise his eyes to look at her, and he escapes from the tete-a-tete as quickly as he can. Later, however, meeting Miss Hardcastle in the housewife's dress which her father requires her to put on every evening, he mistakes her for the barmaid, and at once, with all confidence, develops an interest in her. She does not at first undeceive him, but rather leads him on, for she recognizes his merits. When it is obvious that, because of the supposed difference in their stations, there can be no further relations between them, she at last tells him that he is in Mr. Hardcastle's house, and that she is a poor relation of the family. Young Marlow professes his love for her, but he is extremely disturbed by the realization of his unmeant rudeness to Mr. Hardcastle, whose genial reassurances, when the mistake has been explained, barely induce the young man to remain in the house. The sudden arrival of the senior Marlow helps to clear the situation, but there is still some confusion due to the fact that young Marlow does not yet suspect the true identity of Miss Hardcastle.

Meantime Hastings, with the assistance of Tony—who is quite out of sympathy with his mother's plan to marry him to Miss Neville—has planned to elope with his fair one. Tony gets Miss Neville's jewels out of his mother's apartment and hands them over to Hastings, who gives them to young Marlow to care for. Young Marlow at once places them in charge of Mrs. Hardcastle, whom he supposes to be the "landlady." Thus Miss Neville has to give up the idea of taking her jewels with her. The elopement is later frustrated by Tony's stupidity in asking Mrs. Hardcastle to read him a note sent to him by Hastings. Mrs. Hardcastle, in a high dudgeon, sets out with her niece by carriage to place the girl in charge of a relative; but Tony, who accompanies the carriage, so manages that after a boisterous journey the carriage stops in a pond near the place where it started; and while Mrs. Hardcastle, thinking they are many miles from home, is hysterical over imaginary danger from highwaymen, Miss Neville slips from the coach into the waiting Hastings' arms. She decides against eloping, however, and induces Hastings to take her back to the house.

The confusion as to young Marlow's attitude towards Kate Hardcastle is finally cleared up when his father and Mr. Hardcastle, after witnessing from behind a screen a tender love passage, suddenly appear and make young Marlow aware of Kate's true identity. Happy relationships are quickly established, and Hastings and Constance, returning at the moment, are forgiven by Mrs. Hardcastle.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES, INC.

MR. BINGLES' MELODRAMA (Three Parts).—Mr. Bingles sees a melodrama one night in the theater and makes up his mind to become as actor. He becomes acquaisted with an author, who has a play for sale, and, after a reading, determines to produce it. Bingles sees a dramatic agent, engages a company and begins rehearsals. The author is not satisfied with the cast selected by Mr. Bingles and is especially dissatisfied with the fact that Bingles is to play the hero. According to the terms of his contract with the producer, the author can select certain members of the cast, and proceeds to do so, much to the discomfiture of Bingles, who has to pay a week's salary to the discharged artists.

The opening day arrives and the play is to be "tried on the dog" in a small town, several miles distant from Mr. Bingles' home. The railroad fares take Bingles' last cent, but he is optimistic and being broke does not worry him. Everything is in readiness and Mr. Bingles prepares to conquer the world with his genius. The play begins, and every contretempts that could be thought out by a congress of pessimists, happens to the actors and the working of the $150,000 production.

The author is among those present and becomes incensed, in sympathy with the audience, at the way his work is being treated. He enlists the services of several small boys, who, under his guidance, go out between acts and buy all the available vegetables and soft fruits, and a basket of eggs. Various other members of the audience "get wise" to what is going to happen and prepare to be in at the finish. The play, which becomes worse as the action proceeds, finally ends and applause from the impatient audience brings Bingles before them to be met with a shower of vegetables, etc., and Bingles realizes that all is lost.

The company, disgusted, finally wend their way to the railroad station. Bingles tries to obtain transportation by leaving his watch as security, but to no purpose. The company is in the last stages of dispair when the author arrives and purchases tickets for every one but Bingles, who is left to wait ten hours for another train or walk the railroad track. Some five hours later Bingles is seen entering his home a sadder but wiser man.

SHADOWS OF THE PAST (Three Parts).—Mark Stetson, a scheming politician, entangles the Brandons, husband and wife, and their friend, Antoinette, in his smuggling schemes and engineers their arrest, to protect himself. The picture opens with the liberation from prison of the trio and their determination to lead a respectable life. Stetson, who has kept track of the three, knowing of their release, visits them in their home and insinuates that he still has them in his power. Fearful that his influence might again drag them from the straight path, they flee the city.

Five years later, Brandon, by perseverance and industry, has achieved a position of trust in an insurance company, and Antoinette, a situation as secretary to Haddon, the popular candidate for Governor, who has fallen in love with her and presses her to marry him. Antoinette promises to become his wife, but not until after the election. Stetson, a supposed friend of Haddon, visits the lawyer's office, sees Antoinette and follows her home. He discovers she is living with the Brandon's and determines to use them in his scheme of selling Haddon to the opposition candidate. Brandon resents the politician's advances of friendship, but is compelled to accede to his wishes, though not until after a desperate struggle in which the wily schemer obtains the upper hand.

During the nomination dinner the Brandons are to induce Haddon to visit a famous cafe, by telling him he will find Antionette and Stetson there together, cause a disturbance, create a scandal and endanger the candidate's chances for election. In the meantime, Stetson makes love to Antionette in sight of Haddon. She resents his attentions, but because of his knowledge of her past is compelled to accept them. He proposes she help him in just one more innocent little scheme and then he will go out of her life forever. Still fearful of him, she consents and they leave together. Stetson takes her to his apartments. Antionette becomes suspicious when she finds the doors locked and demands to know what he intends doing. He tells her he is going to break Haddon. Thinking Antionette is safe in his power, Stetson 'phones Brandon to go ahead. She gets an inkling of what Stetson intends doing and by a clever ruse escapes, and, by taxi, makes all speed to reach the cafe and Haddon in time to prevent the fulfillment of the plot.

Stetson and his female accomplice follow in another machine. Antoinette's taxi dashes across a railroad track just in time to escape an oncoming train. Stetson, trying to follow, smashes into the engine and the occupants of the auto are hurled to their death. Antoinette reaches the cafe before the Brandons have had time to carry out the politician's orders and they, surmising something has gone wrong, decide to make the best of the situation. Haddon purchases a newspaper extra giving details of the accident. Antoinette, no longer fearing her Nemsis, tells Haddon of her past, and, he, forgiving, all ends happily.

BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION CO.

THE WILL O' THE WISP (Four Parts).—Larry Thorn, a novelist and man of wealth, loves and is engaged to Miss Julie Rider. While at a fashionable ball, Larry discovers Julia encouraging the attention of Baron Von Keller. Some nights later at the club the Baron insults Larry and an arrangement to fight a duel is made between them. The Baron, really afraid of meeting Larry, sends word of the challenge, giving time and place, anonymously to Julia. Julia arrives in time to stop the duel, returns the engagement ring to Larry, and shows her preference for the Baron. Larry becomes piqued and discouraged with women and society in general and decides to go away and forget. He takes up a sort of hermitage in a river bottom section of the country, where he builds a shelter in a tree.

In this vicinity there lives a blind old miser

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

with an only daughter, very pretty, but a wild, uneducated impulsive creature who has never known a mother's love or care. In fact, has seen few people outside of her association with the blind father. Larry chances by the old man's house and sees this odd little creature, answering to the name of Hazel. He only gives her a passing thought, but later when alone in the forest the thought of her comes back and she becomes an inspiration to him for a great novel. Allen, a wealthy farmer in the vicinity, sees Hazel and because of her odd manner and wonderful beauty, desires her for himself. He calls on her father and with a big sum of gold and whiskey buys her from the old man.

Hazel, from her attic room, overhears the bargain and that night escapes to the woods. After hours of flight she walks into a bed of quicksands. Larry is startled from his sleep by her cries for help and arrives in time to save the girl from a certain death. He carries her to his camp, recognizes her and offers to take her back home. She tells him why she ran away and begs him to help her. Larry finds a home for her with an old farmer's widow, who soon brings out the good qualities in the girl, dresses her neatly and when Larry calls to see her he can hardly believe Hazel the same girl. He continues his novel with Hazel as the central figure and unconsciously falls deeply in love with her. The heavy rains set in, the rivers break their banks and the entire country is flooded.

Farmer Allen, unable to get his purse back from the old, blind father of Hazel, finds his chance for revenge yhen he sees the old man's little farm flooded. He calls at the house, tells the old miser of the rising waters and offers to lead him to safety. The old man gets his treasure box from its hiding place. Allen wrests it from him, locks the old man in the room to die like a rat in a trap, escapes with the treasure box and rows up the river, but meets with disaster and Allen and the miser's hoard are swallowed by the whirlpool of muddy waters. Hazel, hearing of the rising water, calls upon Larry to go to the rescue of her blind father. The old man's house has been washed into the river bed, but the old man has managed to get on the roof where Larry, after some daring feats, finally rescues him and brings him to Hazel. Larry takes Hazel and her father back to his home, marries Hazel and gets a specialist to restore the old man's sight. His novel, inspired by Hazel, becomes a big success and he takes Hazel to a ball given in his honor where, in a beautiful gown, she does honor and credit to his standing, and becomes the social favorite of the season.

GENERAL FILM CO.

MAN'S ENEMY (Three Parts—Biograph K. & E.).—Warwickshire, England.—Warriner and his neighbor, General Sir Arthur Stanton, through a dispute, become enemies. Warriner, starting on a hunting trip, accidentally discharges his gun and is killed. Tom Warriner believes his father was murdered by Sir Arthur and swears vengeance. Grace Lisle is Sir Arthur's ward and prospective daughter-in-law. Her brother Fred, is Harry Stanton's pal. Tom Warriner, now known as "Drake," is proprietor of a gambling house. His accomplice is Sarah Banks, an adventuress. Fred Lisle becomes infatuated with Sarah and loans her lodge funds entrusted to his care. Harry discovers Fred's haunt. Drake, recognizing Harry as the son of General Stanton, determines to ruin him. Harry meets Sarah and is fascinated. Sarah tells Tom she intends to marry Harry. Fred implores Sarah to return the loan, but she only laughs. Drake brings about Harry's downfall. Harry is so infatuated with Sarah that he marries her. Fred confesses to Sir Arthur, who promises to make good the money is Sarah does not. They visit Sarah. Harry in an intoxicated condition enters with Tom. Sir Arthur is dumbfounded and demands an explanation. Harry tells him that Sarah is his wife.

Years pass and Fred Lisle, now a clergyman, advises Sir Arthur, who is in poor health, to go to the Riviera for a rest. On the Riviera, Harry, Count Lanski, Drake and Ikey (a bookmaker) gamble until Harry loses all his money, the Count being the winner. Sarah starts a flirtation with the Count. Harry is about to seek solace in drink when he meets Grace. She begs him to stop drinking and he promises. Drake, worried over the money he owes the Count, learns that Sarah is about to elope with him and tells Harry who insults the Count, resulting in a duel. Drake sees a chance to have the Count killed. He loads only one pistol. The signal is given to fire and the Count falls dead. Drake tells Harry that he is Tom Warriner and that he intends to swear that Harry murdered the Count. Ikey, a secret witness, forces Tom to inform the crowd that the Count committed suicide.

Later in London, Sir Arthur, learning that Harry is in the city, searches for him. Polly and Adolphe, formerly servants in Drake's gambling house, now married, conduct a lodging house. Mrs. Sanders quarrels with her husband, Bill. Grace and Fred appear and interfere. In the crowd that has gathered are Sarah and Drake. Fred questions them as to Harry's whereabouts, but they plead ignorance. Harry is now working as a watchman. Tom and Sarah bribe Sanders to get Harry intoxicated. Ikey notifies Grace where Harry is working. Harry is discharged and Sanders takes his place. Sarah learns that Grace is coming for Harry. She bargains with Sanders to spoil Grace's beauty by throwing vitriol in her face. Grace finds Sanders, who has fallen asleep, in Harry's place, and is about to awaken him when his child volunteers to lead her to the overseer to obtain Harry's new address. Sarah is furious because her plan is foiled and shakes Sanders, who wakes up and dashes the vitriol in her face by mistake.

Ikey takes Harry to the lodging house and Tom follows them. The police, thinking Harry threw the vitriol, are about to arrest him, when Ikey and Polly prove that Sanders is the guilty man. Sanders is arrested. Harry attacks Tom. Mrs. Sanders is taking care of Harry at his father's home. Sir Arthur forgives Harry. Ikey, in the meantime, has struck it rich and loans Tom money. Tom decides to desert Sarah. She pleads with him and they have a fight during which Tom kills her. He is arrested and dies in prison. Harry and Grace are married and Sir Arthur at last realizes his fondest dream.

ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT (Essanay—Four Parts—July 18).—Eight hours is not a very long time, yet it completely changed the lives of a girl and a man. A man's life was fanned out by fate, criminals were caught and punished, and a battle of wits took place, while the mystery baffled New York City. The Earl of Valletort insisted that his daughter, Lady Hermione, marry a Hungarian Count. The Count saw a clear path to the throne of his country. Money was necessary; he must have wealth; thus his choice of Lady Hermione. The Earl himself had no money. When his wife passed away she left every dollar, and a big estate it was, to her daughter. The Count promises to do wonders for the girl if the latter would arrange to have his daughter marry him. The Earl tries to force his daughter to marry the Count, but he was not the man of her heart, so she escaped to America. She considered the marriage vile, and would avoid it at any cost. She took with her a plotting Frenchman, who was known to her father. She was not aware of this at the time, so when she arrived in America, she decided to marry him. (He agreed to protect her with his name, nothing more.) She had arranged to marry Jean de Courtois to escape the Hungarian nobleman, disappear suddenly and later secure a divorce.

De Courtois tries every method imaginable and every excuse ever invented to delay the wedding. He finally meets a newspaper reporter, whom he had met in America before, and gives him the whole story, but not his permission to use it. De Courtois promises he will give his consent in a day or so, and keeps the scribe waiting so long that he becomes disgusted. A few days later the scheming Hungarian gets in touch with a few questionable characters, who make their headquarters on the East Side in New York. He instructs them to watch de Courtois. Henry Hunter, the newspaper reporter in mention, insisted that de Courtois allow the wedding to take place immediately, but the latter complained of having lost the license. The Count's men have learned of this through their leader, Antoine. They also were aware of the fact that Hunter was to get another.

John Delancey Curtis, with his friend, Howard Devar, arriving from China, register at the Central Hotel, and, unknowingly, secures a room quite near that occupied by de Courtois. That night the Count is overpowered by the Hungarian's paid men, bound and gagged to await the arrival of the newspaper reporter. Hunter arrives and just as he steps from the taxicab, is killed. Curtis is the only eye witness. The police demand that he hold himself ready for the inquest in the morning.

Late that night, while strolling up Broadway, Curtis discovers that he is wearing the coat of the murdered man. In the pocket he discovers a marriage license, made out to Lady Hermione and Jean de Courtois. This thrills Curtis, and he decides to see Lady Hermione and find out just what the license means. He arrives at her quarters and is informed that the man to whom she was to be married was nothing to her, except as a protector from the Hungarian. Curtis believed that de Courtois had been killed. He was not aware of the fact that the newspaper reporter had been sent for the license, and now Lady Hermione believes what Curtis had told her. Curtis offers himself as a bodyguard, and she accepts him, marrying him a few minutes later.

The Earl arrives in New York, informed of the whereabouts of his daughter, and rushes to the minister's home, only to discover that Lady Hermione is married. They try to interfere with Curtis, but the young American, filled with spirit and enthusiasm, punches the Count in the eye, scaring the Earl almost out of his wits. Curtis and his bride catch a taxicab and leave the infuriated nobleman bewildered. They secure a suite at the Hotel Plaza. When the American returns to his room at the Central Hotel he is met by the Earl and the Count, who furiously reprimand him. Steingall, chief of detectives, links Curtis with the murder of de Courtois.

De Courtois is later discovered in the room almost exhausted. He refuses to talk. Steingall found telegrams from the Earl, asking to delay the ceremony until his arrival—and that he, de Courtois, would be paid well. Curtis manages to convince the detective that he is guiltless and later discovers the car in which the murderers had escaped. He follows the machine. With the aid of the detectives, Curtis and Devar capture the East Side assassins.

The Earl endeavors to have Curtis arrested on the charge of abduction, but when Steingall makes it plain to the Count and Earl that they must leave this country immediately, or he will arrest them in connection with the murder of the reporter, they are glad to leave. The adventure brought about an undying friendship between Steingall, Curtis and Devar, and it is said by those who know that Curtis and Lady Hermonie lived happily ever after—in fact, she did not remember that she had married him for a bodyguard, for she loved him with her whole heart and soul, and he worshiped the ground she walked on.

SHANNON OF THE SIXTH (Kalem—Five Parts).—Ram, High Priest of the Temple of Delhi, urges his people to throw off the British yoke. Word of the uprising reaches General Kimber who is in command of the troops at Calcutta. Summoning Captain Arlington and Lieutenant Shannon of the famous Sixth, he orders them to proceed to Delhi with their troops. Arlington and Shannon are rivals for the hand of Dora, the commandant's daughter. Although secretly betrothed to Surrada, the beautiful native girl employed as Dora's maid, Arlington is filled with jealous rage upon discovering that Dora loves his rival. The captain has tired of Surrada but fears to cast her off because of the scandal she may create. Shortly afterwards, Arlington and Shannon reach Delhi where they succeed in restoring order. The High Priest Ram, however, lays his plans for a general uprising and on Sunday, May 10, 1857, the famous massacre at Meerut, which started the nationwide mutiny, commences. Thousands of English men, women and children are slain.

Ram and his followers make their way to Delhi. At the sight of the priest, the Sepoy troops turn upon their white officers and slay them. At the first sign of danger, Arlington flees. Shannon, however, rallies the white troops. The soldiers are finally compelled to make a stand about the arsenal. The women and children beg Shannon to slay them, should the natives prove victorious. Knowing the terrible fate which must befall them should they fall into the hands of the Sepoys, Shannon consents. The women and children are placed in the magazine of the arsenal, while Shannon makes preparations to destroy the building in event of defeat. The soldiers are beaten back. The victorious natives rush into the arsenal to capture the women inside. Shannon lights a fuse leading to the powder stored in the building. The awful explosion which follows rends the walls asunder, bringing death to the hundreds in the building. Arlington makes his way back to Calcutta where he informs General Kimber that Shannon and his men have been slain by the natives. Believing her sweetheart dead,

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

Dora is grief-stricken. Arlington attempts to console her but is spurned.

By a miracle, Shannon has escaped death in the explosion which destroyed the arsenal. Slaying a native, the lieutenant disguises himself in the man's clothes. After many days he reaches Calcutta. Dora is overjoyed to see her lover alive and uninjured. Fearing lest his cowardice be revealed, Arlington implores Shannon to keep silent. The latter consents. General Kimber marches upon Delhi with his entire army. A few days after her father's departure, Dora decides to follow. Accompanied by a bodyguard of natives, she sets out for Delhi despite Surrada's pleas. The treacherous natives, however, deliver the girl into the hands of Shah, king of Delhi. Inflamed by her beauty, the king decides to make her the queen of his harem. Overwhelmed by the fate which menaces her mistress, Surrada slays the man guarding their room and escapes from the palace. The native girl makes her way out of the city to the British encampment. While she informs General Kimber of his daughter's plight, the murder of the guard is discovered. Dora, is thrown into a dungeon to await torture and death.

Kimber, Arlington and Shannon are horrified upon hearing Surrada's awful news. Shannon and Arlington beg to be allowed to go to the girl's rescue. Because of his seniority in rank, the honor falls to Arlington. Accompanied by Surrada, the man hastens towards the city gates. The two arrive a moment too late and are locked out of the city for the night. Unwilling to return to camp, Arlington and Surrada enter the Temple near by where they determine to hide for the night. There the captain sees the great diamond which forms the eye of the idol Brahma. Filled with greed, Arlington forgets his mission and unknown to Surrada, pries the jewel from its resting place. Umballa, a servant in the Temple, sees the thief at work, and is knocked unconscious after a struggle with the Englishman. To hide the jewel, Arlington returns to camp where he announces his failure. Unable to sleep, Shannon strolls beyond the lines. Learning of Arlington's failure upon his return, the man denounces him as a coward. Later, the thief wraps the diamond in a cloth and gives it to Surrada. He tells the native girl that it contains his mother's jewels.

The following morning, Ram, Umballa and a number of natives arrive at the camp and inform General Kimber of the theft of Brahma's eye. Having promised that the sacred edifice should not be molested, the British commander vows to find and punish the offender. Umballa sees Shannon. Mistaking him for his assailant, the native accuses the lieutenant of the theft. Circumstances point to Shannon as the vandal. Kimber orders him to his tent. Shortly afterwards, the British troops make an assault upon Delhi. While the attack is going on, Surrada, suspecting the truth, comes to Shannon and gives him the package. Heart-broken because of her lover's deception, and fearing the curse of Brahma, the girl suicides before Shannon can interfere. The lieutenant sees that the British are being repulsed. He rejoins his men. Calling for volunteers Shannon announces his intention of blowing up the city gates. Accompanied by three men, the lieutenant crawls to the gates where he plants several sacks of powder. A few moments later, the huge doors are torn from their hinges by a terrific explosion. Led by Shannon, the British enter the city and sweep all before them. King Shah hears this news with dismay. Furious, he determines to wreak vengeance upon the daughter of the British commander. Dora is tied to the muzzle of a loaded cannon. After lighting the fuse the natives flee. The maddened rebels make a last stand in the city streets. A number of them surround Arlington. Facing death, the man's courage comes to the surface. Six of the natives fall by his sword. A spear thrust through his breast brings Arlington low. Attracted by a woman's screams for help, Shannon and his men dash into the palace courtyard. The gallant soldier sees his sweetheart's awful danger. Slashing her bonds, Shannon pulls Dora aside. An instant later, a terrific roar appraises the fainting girl of the awful danger from which she had been rescued in the nick of time.

BROADWAY PICTURE PRODUCING CO.

"THE TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE" (Five Parts).—A feud between the Tollivers and Falins has existed for many years. Jack Hale, a New York Mining Engineer, comes into the country and searches for coal lands. He hears of coal on the Tolliver land and, after investigating, begins large operations, during which he falls in love with June, daughter of Judd Tolliver.

Dave Tolliver, nephew of Judd, has long loved June and becomes frantically jealous of Jack. June first loves Jack with childish simplicity, but through the duplicity of her cousin Dave, she learns her love for Jack is more than childish fancy. Jack wants her sent to school and with the consent of Judd furnishes funds for her education.

Judd and Dave Tolliver are moonshiners, whose unlawful business is discovered by Jack, who has been appointed sheriff, and after a desperate attempt by Dave and his friend Red Fox to kidnap June, Jack decides to send June to New York to finish her education. The coal interests prove bad; failure stares Jack in the face. Dave in a feud fight with the Falins, kills Bob, a friend of Jack's, with Judd's gun. Old Judd is accused and arrested.

Jack sends his last dollar to June and she returns to her old home, a beautiful society girl, but when she learns Jack has had her father arrested, she turns on him. She seeks the Tollivers and demands a rescue of her father, in which a terrific fight between the Tollivers and Falins takes place. Judd is seriously wounded and the Tollivers put out the white flag and are notified they must leave the country in forty-eight hours, which they do, carrying the wounded Judd with them.

After many miles of travel Old Judd dies, but in his last breath denounced Dave and tells June to go back to Jack. After Judd's death she cannot give up her first love for Jack and at last gives up Dave and goes back to her old home. Dave follows and in an attempt to destroy June's old home with dynamite, he is foiled by Jack, who grabs the ignited can of powder and accidentally throws it into the dynamite cabin, which is blown to atoms, killing the wicked Dave, who has been spying from the cabin's interior. June and Jack are happily married by the Old Justice, their trysted friend, Uncle Billy, at the foot of "The Lonesome Pine."

HEPWORTH-AMERICAN.

"THE WHIRR OF THE SPINNING WHEEL" (Two Parts).—Jasper, the village blacksmith, is in love with Nan, the daughter of old Blind Judith. Nan has long wearied of the village and has no intention of spending her whole life in it. She accepts Jasper's devotion in a half-hearted and indifferent sort of way. Black Meg, the village ne'er-do-well, is herself desperately in love with Jasper. Things are in this condition when one day Nan's beauty is observed by the tire-woman of Lady Betty Hastings, the wife of a noble of great wealth and influence who, although she spends most of her time in London, has a country seat in the little village, which she occasionally visits. The woman is so enthusiastic in her praises to her mistress of Nan's good looks and charming appearance that at last Lady Betty's curiosity is aroused and she condescends to pay a visit in person to old Judith's cottage. Lady Betty offers Nan a position as her maid. Nan, therefore, a few days later departs for London. Before she goes, she does her best to comfort her mother, and promises that she will come back to her again, saying, "One day I will return and creep in softly, and when you hear the whirr of the spinning wheel, you will know that I have come back to you again." Nan begins to realize that life in the great city is not quite all that she pictured it, and that service with Lady Betty is not going to be as light and pleasant as she thought when she first took the situation. Lady Betty's friends consist of a fast set of dissolute men and women, and their strange behavior both distresses and disgusts the innocent country girl. One evening, when a ball is in progress, Lady Betty rings for Nan to come down to the ballroom, wishing to show her guests her "funny little country mouse," as she calls her. One of the men present, who is half drunk, clasps her in his arms. Nan is taken aback, and bursts into tears. She receives no sympathy, however, from Lady Betty, who, after rating her sharply for being such a cry-baby, dismisses her to her room. This scene has been witnessed by Sir Walter Carnaby, who follows her and offers her a home with his sister. Her departure is noticed by the spiteful tire-woman, who informs her mistress than Nan has run away to Sir Walter Carnaby. On arriving at Sir Walter's mansion, Nan is met by his sister who takes an immediate fancy to the girl. Many months pass, and Nan, in the delightful whirl of the new life that opens up before her, forgets all about her lonely old mother. At length the old lady's distress becomes so great at hearing nothing of her daughter, that Jasper volunteers to go to London and find out what has become of her. On reaching Lady Betty's, he is told by the tire-woman her version of what has happened, and is overwhelmed with grief at the sad news. He goes to Sir Walter Carnaby and succeeds in getting an interview with Nan, who appears quite pleased to see him, and he gives her her mother's letter. She soon realizes, however, from Jasper's conversation that he believes her to be guilty, and in a fit of indignation orders him from the house. Jasper returns to the village, and not daring to tell Judith what he believes to be the true state of affairs, comforts her with lies, saying that he has seen Nan, and that she is getting on splendidly. In the meantime, however, the tire-woman has been to the village again, and has told her version of the story to Black Meg. All this time Nan's conscience has been reproaching her for leading a life of idle luxury in London, while her mother is living in loneliness at home. She returns home and creeps softly in at the door, she slips into an empty chair and sets the spinning wheel going. The wheel has been idle and silent ever since she went away, and directly her mother hears it she remembers her daughter's promise on the eve of her departure. Clasping her in her arms, she folds to her heart the prodigal who has returned at last.

GAUMONT.

"THE IRON MAN" (Three Parts.—At Rochecombe Castle a large house-party is assembled. The young countess of Servenac and her husband prove excellent hosts; they are newcomers in the district and appear to possess fabulous wealth. Late one night the Count receives a mysterious visitor. In the library one of the panels slides noiselessly up at a touch from a lever hidden under the table, a coarse-looking man creeps through the opening and leaves a small chest, which contains valuable jewels, with the Count. A week or so later Servenac makes the acquaintance of a wealthy young American, Phillip Travers, from whom he learns that Travers is motoring to Marseilles that night to join his yacht, intending to start on a trip to the Indies. The Count appears to take a particular interest in the fact, and later prevents Travers carrying out his plan, by disabling his car by a shot at the tire from the roadside. The chauffeur finds it will take two or three hours to repair the damage, and a peasant is hailed by Travers, who, on hearing that he is the landlord of the "Black Bull" Inn, which is near at hand, decides to wait at the inn. Once inside the "Black Bull" he is drugged, robbed and his body placed in the cellar. His chauffeur, calling a little later, is informed that his master did not stop at the inn, but drove straight on towards Marseilles.

Some weeks later the police, having entirely failed to discover a clue to the mysterious disappearance of Phillip Travers, the case is taken up by the celebrated detective, Barnet Parker. Finding that the "Black Bull" is the only inn between the spot where the motor broke down and Marseilles, Barnet Parker engages a room at the inn, and finding the landlord's manner rather suspicious, he determines to make a thorough search. During the small hours he exposes the callers. One large cask gives a hollow sound to his tap; he removes the top, and on crawling through finds his way into a second cellar. Flashing his electric torch around he finds a scrap of paper; it is a torn bill, but the name Phillip Travers is quite distinct; here is a valuable clue. Pursuing his investigations, Barnet Parker finds a stone staircase, which apparently has no exit. Before leaving, the detective makes a careful plan of the two cellars, and by its aid next day he discovers that the subterranean passage through which he has passed must lead to Rochecombe Castle. He must now find a means of penetrating the Castle, and a plan is quickly formed. Under the assumed name of Lord Chilton, he becomes acquainted with the Servenacs and is soon on intimate terms with them and in due course receives the invitation to Rochecombe Castle, which he has been angling for. Several guests are at the castle, and Bridge, for considerable points, is the chief amusement. Lord Chilton has extraordinary luck and wins large sums from the Count. This appears to annoy Servenac and he fails to hide his chagrin. But it is dangerous to win money in the castle, and late that night the detective is requested to go to the library with Servenac to inspect some pictures. Bending over the prints, he is seized unawares by Servenac and his accomplice and pushed against a suit of armour. Some ingenious mechanism is released and the iron arms close on Barnet Parker like a vice. He is bound and gagged, and then the sliding panel opens; he is carried down a flight of steps and left in the cellar. But he recognizes his surroundings at once and remembers noticing the electric switchboard. After many struggles he manages to get the switch between his teeth, and by forcing it backwards and forwards burns the ropes which bind him, then swinging himself over a deep stream, which separates this cellar from the rest under the house, he finds his way out into the garden and round to the library window. Meanwhile the Count becomes nervous as the electric light goes out, and the Countess begs him to go down to the switch and find out what is wrong; therefore, when Barnet Parker enters the window, it is the work of a moment to push the accomplice into the arms of the Man of Iron and to stifle the screams of the Countess. He makes the two captives secure, and in response to a tapping on the panel, raises it sufficiently to allow Servenac's head to come through, and then quickly lowers it on his neck, thus neatly catching him like a rat in a trap. Then cooly walking to the telephone, the detective phones for the police, having carried out most successfully his ingenious plan.

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

WORLD FILM CORP.

"THE LIGHTS O' LONDON" (Five Parts).—Harold Armytage is entertaining a party of sporting and race-course associates when Squire Armytage returns and orders his son's companions out of the house and bids Harold choose between them and him. Father and son part in anger, and Harold prepares to go to London after an interview with Bess Marks, his sweetheart.

Bess refuses to be parted from Harold and they plan to go away together. They are married in London and soon after, when looking for work, Harold meets one of his old racing friends, who persuades him to go to the races. There his friends, in collusion with a bookmaker, put Harold on to a "wrong un" and Harold, ruined, goes home to Bess and confesses the truth. The pinch of poverty comes and the landlady turns them out. They tramp back to his father's home in the hope that his father will forgive him, or at least help Bess.

In the meantime Clifford Armytage, Harold's cousin, who is looked upon as the heir, has been making love to Hetty Preene, a frivolous girl, daughter to Seth Preene, one of the Squire's gamekeepers. Seth Preene sees Harold and Bess, and tells Clifford of Harold's arrival in the neighborhood. Clifford is terribly alarmed as the old squire has been mourning the absence of his son, and Clifford fears he will forgive him. Clifford and Seth plot to rob the old squire and put the blame on Harold.

When Squire Armytage sees his boy he nearly relents, but a fresh quarrel ensues and Harold goes, leaving his wife to the care of her old father. The robbery takes place. The squire, who has surprised Preene, is struck down by Seth and dies before he can exonerate Harold, who has been arrested and accused of the crime.

Seth gives Clifford the family jewels he has stolen, but he retains the will he found with them, which leaves the estates to Harold, thinking he can hold it over Clifford if Clifford tries to play him false. Harold is sentenced to seven years, and Clifford orders Bess to leave the place. She goes to London and takes a room in the house of a family of show-people named Jarvis and nurses the boy, Shapespeare Jarvis when the old people go on tour.

Meanwhile Clifford has induced Hetty Preene to leave her father, and takes a house for her in St. John's Wood under the promise that he will marry her. He gives her the Armytage jewels. Some time after Harold has been a convict he learns that Bess is ill and the thought tortures him and he determines to escape. Just as he is about to fall into the hands of the warders in search of him, he meets with Joe Jarvis, who shelters him in his London home, where to his joy, Harold and Bess are reunited.

Seth Preene, now a well-to-do inn-keeper on the money paid him by Clifford, is sorrowing for his daughter and is half suspicious that Clifford has had a hand in her leaving home. Clifford denies this, but drops a registered letter receipt giving Hetty's address in London. Seth thinks Clifford is paying money to Bess, and determines to pay a trip to London to find out why, if possible. Just as this happens, while Clifford is down in the country, Hetty, who is very vain, has gone to the theater wearing the Armytage jewels, and in leaving drops a diamond bracelet which is taken by a coster to the police. Clifford, alarmed for the safety of the bracelet and fearing that some one will discover that it is part of the jewelry reported as stolen from Armytage Hall, gets the police to issue a reward and comes to the police station to identify it.

There he sees a reward bill announcing the escape of Harold, and having kept himself informed of the whereabouts of Bess, he instantly jumps to the conclusion that Harold may come to the house where she is living. He offers to point her out to a detective and takes him to the address, at which Harold arrives with the old showman and his wife.

Shakespeare Jarvis, who is devoted to Bess, sees the detective and instantly rushes home with the news. The police enter and Harold after a desperate struggle makes his escape. Seth Preene comes to London and goes to Hetty's address, arriving just after Clifford has got the bracelet and warned Hetty about wearing them in public. When he has gone to his club, Hetty puts all the jewels on and is admiring herself when her father is shown in. Seth, expecting to see Bess, is overwhelmed to find Hetty, and realizes her shame. He goes off in a fury to find Clifford and meets the betrayer of his daughter on a bridge over the canal in Regent's Park, near which Harold and Bess are resting in their flight. Seth Preene fiercely tells Clifford that if he does not make Hetty his wife within a week he will tell the whole truth and send Clifford to prison in place of Harold. Clifford turns on him and after a fierce fight throws Seth over the bridge into the canal. Harold hears Seth's cries for help, throws off his coat and rescues Seth, who is astonished to see in the man who has saved his life the young master his evidence sent to prison. In gratitude he tells Harold to go back to the Jarvis' house and wait till he comes. He will pay his debt.

Harold and Bess return to the showman's home but are discovered by Clifford and the police, and after Harold has thrashed Clifford he escapes by the window only to be arrested and taken by the police. But just as Clifford has denounced Harold, Seth Preene, who has telegraphed for the will to his lawyer, in whose custody he has placed it for safety, arrives, and denounces Clifford and gives Harold the will which makes him master of his old home. A King's pardon is soon obtained for Harold, who returns with Bess to Armytage Hall amid the acclamations and rejoicings of the tenants.

ITALA.

"AN AERIAL REVENGE" (Three Parts).—That mother and daughter should become rivals for th hand of a man is not so unusual when taking into account similar circumstances of this character in the past. However in this case the man most desired by these two women proved to be an adventurer and a villian of the worst type. He, pretending to love the daughter, engendered in the mother's heart a feeling of affection for him through which he hoped to gain intimate relations with her uncle, the secretary of state, with a view to procuring secret documents for a rival country. Strange to say the adventurer was introduced by a cousin of the younger girl and carried on his love affair for a time successfully.

Fate ordained that the adventurer should accompany the mother and a party on a trip to the Alps and here mid snow-capped mountain peaks he worms his way into her affections. Upon their return he succeeds in gaining an audience with the secretary of state and obtains his confidence. He is later brought face to face with the young girl whom he has deceived, and through the efforts of a life-long friend of the family his villainy is exposed. Realizing that his cleverly contrived plans failed, the cowardly villain seeks refuge in flight. Having access to the vaults where state documents are kept he secures a number of these and finally reaches the railroad station where, unfortunately for him, the hero of the story discovers him buying a ticket. Both men board the same train and a struggle ensues while going at great speed. The villain makes a wild leap from the fast moving train and succeeds in reaching the hangar of the aerial club, where he bribes an official to loan him an aeroplane in which he endeavors to reach Germany.

Our hero is hot on his trail, however, and by a clever ruse also succeeds in securing an eroplane, and a mad race in midair follows. The hero overtakes the villain and reaching a height far above him finally swoops down on the criminal and he is precipitated to earth, where he is later found, mangled and bleeding, among the wreckage.

LEADING PLAYERS FILM. CO.

"FORCES OF EVIL" OR "THE DOMINANT WILL" (Three Parts).—Dr. Gregory falls in love with Mrs. Livroy, and is repulsed. He puts her under hypnotic influence, and wills that the poor weak woman come to his house at eleven o'clock. She joins Gregory who carries her off.

Mr. Livroy cannot tell his little ones, and they are made to believe that their mother is dead. The children gather small trifles belonging to their mother to keep fresh her memory. Mr. Livroy sells his home and removes to a luxurious villa on the Riviera.

One day the children are startled by the appearance of their mother in a by-path of the park, but the image, seen for a moment only, disappears. The children see their mother pass again and run toward her.

Mr. Livroy goes in pursuit of the couple and overtakes them on the cliffs. A terrible struggle takes place between the two men and Livroy is struck down. Gregory is carrying Lucille off when the earth gives way and the two fall.

Livroy is rescued. Gregory learns that Lucille is reviving. He knows that she has seen her children at her bedside, and feels that he is no longer the tyrannical lord of the unhappy woman. Before dying, he writes to the District Attorney charging Livroy with throwing him over the cliff.

Lucille confides her story to Dr. Jarlier. Dr. Jarlier tells Mr. Livroy Lucille's story of the influence Gregory had over her will. The children take the hands of both their parents and this loving link joins them together forevermore.

FEATURES IDEAL.

"THE CRUCIBLE OF FLAME" (Three Parts). Mr. Ruggers and his daughter, Irene, live a peaceful life in their country cottage, having for their neighbor and only visitor the country doctor.

Into this life of seclusion, however, there comes a disturbance in one Agnes Dely, Irene's school companion, who has become an actress, and leads a gay life in the city. Irene is invited to spend a short time with her and see something of the world. She goes in spite of the disapproval of her father. During her absence the doctor confesses his love for Irene, and asks for her hand in marriage. Irene returns, but is, indeed, unhappy. She has learned the lesson of the world by bitter experience, and is confessing her secret to the doctor, when her father overhears and drives her from home in utter humiliation. A year later Irene pleads with her father, but with no success. In despair she abandons her child on her father's doorstep, and goes on her way.

Mr. Ruggers receives the child and adopts him as his own. Six years pass. Irene's child is the idol of his grandfather, while the doctor's friendship is as strong as before. Irene has become a school mistress for poor children. A fire breaks out in the school and Irene heroically rescues one of her pupils. She is injured ,and, owing to her bravery, a reconciliation with her father is brought about.

Meanwhile the child's father extorts money from Mr. Ruggers by his legal right to the boy, and some evil associates kidnap the child without his knowledge. Fired by paternal love he runs to warn the child's grandfather, but is too late. The boy has freed himself and arrived home safe. Ruggers, seeing a shadow, shoots, and the vendetta is concluded. Finally Irene marries the faithful doctor, and thus happiness sheds its light once more over the family of Ruggers.

FAMOUS PLAYERS.

"THE EAGLE'S MATE" (Five Parts).—The Mornes of Virginia are a lawless mountain clan, a strong, fierce folk, scornful of any law save that writ large in their own hearts. They dwell on a nearly inaccessible peak called the Eagle's Eyrie, and because of their craggy abode and their fierce natures are called the "Eagles." Lancer, son of the leader, has been sent to college by Anemone's aunt, Mrs. Breckenridge, who is a Morne herself, though Anemone, her petted and cherished niece, is ignorant of this fact, as are the rest of the townspeople. Lancer's father is arrested for moonshining, and Lancer shakes off the shackles of civilization and leads the clan to the rescue of his father, joining the Mornes in their lawless life in the Eyrie. Fisher Morne, the brutal and uncouth cousin of Lancer, falls in love with Anemone, and being repulsed by her, abducts her and carries her off to the Eagle's Eyrie. Lancer and Anemone have met and have felt an irresistible attraction for each other. When Anemone finds Lancer at the Eyrie, she begs him to save her and send her back to the valley. But with the wild daring of his clan, Lancer tells her he intends to have her for himself, fights Fisher for her, and conquers. Anemone marries Lancer to save her aunt from paying the immense ransom Fisher would exact for her return, but tells Lancer she hates him—and finally convinces him that she does. In anger, Lancer replies that he will never speak a word of love to her until she asks him to, and they live in the Eyrie as strangers. Fisher shoots Lancer and lays the crime on Anemone. The wounded Lancer demands that Anemone be returned in safety to her aunt, declaring she is innocent. Anemone learns that the sheriff is leading a posse up to the Eyrie to attack the Mornes, who have been betrayed by the traitor, Fisher, and she returns to lead the clan against the representative of the law, for she has learned to love Lancer and now longs to be herself considered an "Eagle." She reaches the clan in time to warn them, and the baffled posse returns. Anemone's aunt, at the crucial moment loyal to the Mornes, comes to the Eyrie, and shows them through the action of the traitor, Fisher, the folly of outlawry and its inevitable end. Lancer, now the acknowledged leader, through the sweet influence of the noble little Anemone, recognizes the truth of his aunt's words. The Mornes promise no longer to rebel against their State. Lancer and his bride begin their honeymoon in the Eyrie, and Anemone is at last truly happy as the Eagle's mate.

APEX

"THE MIDNIGHT MARRIAGE" (Four Parts).—Leopold, brother of the King of Savonia, is, in the absence of direct heirs, Crown Prince of the kingdom and heir to the throne. In face of the laws which declare that members of the royal family must only marry those of blood equal to their own, and without the knowledge of the King, Leopold has wedded Stephanie, a beautiful peasant girl, and lives with her in a village in the hills whenever he is able to escape from the court. A year after the marriage he receives an urgent summons from Stephanie, and finds, on reaching his mountain home, that a son has been born to him. The fact compels him to inform Stephanie that, by the laws of Savonia, their marriage is illegal and that the child can never be recognized as his heir and successor as ruler of Savonia.

Paul grows to manhood in the mountains without knowing his father's name, but on her deathbed Stephanie tells him her unhappy story, and he learns that it is the Crown Prince Leopold who has broken her heart and deserted her at the dictates of worldly ambition. Alone in the world he determines to seek his fortune in Savonia. Satanella, a woman of the woods, has fallen in love with him, but he rejects her advances, and in doing so makes her his enemy for life. Prince Leopold, on the death of Prince von Strelsburg, one of the chief nobles of Savonia, writes to the dead man's son and daughter, Prince Eugene and Princess Astrea, informing them of their loss and acquainting them of their father's will, which direct that, on attaining her twenty-first birthday, Astrea shall become the wife of Captain Rudolph von Scarsbruck. Scarsbruck, a man of good family but dissolute habits, soon learns that Astrea dislikes him and intends to take full advantage of the two years of freedom left her by the will. He therefore takes advantage of her brother Eugene's weak character to involve him in losses at cards, and getting him into his power by these means, readily obtains his assistance by the promise of 100,000 crowns if his suit is successful.

Two years pass, and it is the eve of Astrea's twenty-first birthday. Paul has proved a successful soldier, and to celebrate the winning of his commission, has invited several of his soldier friends to meet him at the "Golden Dragon." Eugene and Scarsbruck are seated at another table in the same inn. Satanella, now living a gay life in the capital, sees and recognizes Paul, and tells Scarsbruck and Eugene of his history. When Paul asks them to drink with him, they contemptuously refuse, and Eugene uses insulting expressions regarding Paul's mother. The young officer knocks him down, and, on Eugene drawing his sword, defends himself and severely wounds the Prince. Scarsbruck orders soldiers to arrest Paul, but declaring that he will not surrender until he has proved Eugene a liar, Paul succeeds in getting away. Astrea, when the hour approaches when she will be no longer able to refuse the husband imposed upon her by her father's will, goes for counsel and guidance to the old priest, Father Gerard, in the private chapel of Strelsburg Palace. Paul, hard pressed by the soldiers with Scarsbruck at their head, takes refuge in the chapel, and, questioned by Astrea, tells her that the blood on his sword is that of his mother's slanderer. Astrea sees in his appearance a way out of the difficulties which beset her. She tells him her story, and concludes with the appeal: "Make me your wife and we will say good-bye forever."

Paul, moved by the evident distress of the beautiful girl, agrees to her request; and with the hands of the clock showing a few minutes to midnight, the strange wedding ceremony begins, with the man and woman and the priest alone in the still chapel. Before the ceremony is completed, Scarsbruck and his men are heard at the door demanding admittance. Urged by Astrea, the priest completes the ceremony, the angry soldiers battering at the door forming a strange accompaniment to the benediction. On the stroke of twelve the ceremony is over, and Astrea, hastily directing Paul to hide in a small inner room, goes with the priest to admit the angry Scarsbruck. The latter tells Astrea that he is searching for the man who has wounded her brother; but by a great effort, she maintains her self control and denies that anyone is hidden in the chapel. Ten days later Paul is captured and brought to the barracks handcuffed at Scarsbruck's orders. Astrea enters and scornfully denounces Scarsbruck and her brother for their cowardice. A moment later Prince Leopold enters and orders Paul's handcuffs to be removed. Paul asks him for a private audience, and when it is refused asks again in a low voice: "In the name of Stephanie." Leopold orders Scarsbruck and Eugene from the room, and hears Paul's story. The gallant bearing of the young soldier touches him, and he declares: "I will acknowledge you as my son," but Paul, with the memory of his mother's wrongs still before him, replies hotly: "I will not recognize you as my father."

Von Scarsbruck and Eugene, learning that Astrea loves Paul, plot to ruin her reputation. Hidden below her window at night, they see her throw her handkerchief from the balcony to Paul below, and, after he has walked away, Scarsbruck climbs up the balcony to her room and threatens that unless she promises to marry him he will remain there all night, and so hopelessly compromise her. Paul hears suspicious sounds, and returning, also climbs into the room and attacks Scarsbruck. The latter succeeds in ringing the bell, and sneeringly tells the lovers that Eugene and Father Gerard will shortly come to investigate, and that his desire to ruin Astrea's reputation will be achieved. Paul's answer is to place a revolver to his head and force him behind a screen. When the priest and Eugene enter, only Astrea is visible; and Scarsbruck, with the revolver muzzle pressed to his forehead, dares not utter a word, and Eugene and Gerard withdraw.

Paul contemptuously orders Scarsbruck from the room; and in response to a challenge, agrees to fight him in an hour's time. He retires to his room to prepare for the encounter. Satanella, still nursing the hatred bred in her by Paul's rejection years before, has hidden behind curtains, and with a revolver, taken from a case on the table, fires, severely wounding Paul in the arm. Despite the handicap, he is about to keep his engagement when Astrea enters, and, snatching up his own sword, bars the door and declares she will not allow him to fight until he has recovered. A moment later, as von Scarsbruck and Eugene enter, she slips behind the curtain. Von Scarsbruck taunts Paul with cowardice, and Astrea, stepping forward, releases Paul from his promise and tells him to fight his rival at once. With his sword held in his left hand, Paul succeeds in holding von Scarsbruck at bay; but Eugene treacherously warding off one of his thrusts, enables von Scarsbruck to run his sword through Paul's body. As Astrea is doing her best to staunch the flow of blood from the lover's wounds, Prince Leopold enters the room. In response to Astrea's questioning look he declares: "Princess, he is my son." King of Savonia, and able to make and unmake laws, Leopold summons Paul before him and offers to legalize the marriage with Stephanie, and to make Paul heir to the throne. The young man's answer is to lead Astrea to his father, and to present her as his wife. Leopold will not recognize his son's marriage with a woman not of royal blood; and Paul will not, like Leopold himself, put her aside. Neither will give way, and in the end Paul and Astrea leave the court and capital forever.

LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

"THE ONLY SON" (Five Parts).—Thomas Brainerd, sr., as a prospector, is a dutiful and loving husband and father. Two children, Gertrude and Thomas, jr., are born while the Brainerds live in a log cabin in the mountains. Brainerd strikes gold, goes to New York, where he becomes a financial power. He neglects his wife—devotes every moment of his time to his growing industries, simply supplies funds to his family—and his wife, alone and melancholy, is fascinated by an artist and consents to "sit" for a painting. Feeling her neglect keenly, Mrs. Brainerd becomes a victim to the wiles of the artist, who, however, is killed by the husband of a former victim before the affair has progressed too far.

Brainerd, learning of his wife's affair with the artist, orders her from the house. Thomas, jr., sides with and accompanies his mother. Heretofore a worthless spendthrift, Thomas now becomes ambitious and joins interest with a penniless inventor, goes West, establishes a factory, makes a go of it, sells out to his father at an enormous advance, convinces his father that his mother is innocent and, as he transfers the invention to his father's firm, sees his mother in his father's arms, which example he immediately follows by proposing to the girl he has always loved.

"THE MAN ON THE BOX" (Five Parts).—Lieutenant Bob Warburton is wounded during an encounter with the Indians and taken to the home of Col. Annesley for medical treatment.

Recovering, Bob finds that his service in the army has expired and he says he is penniless. However he is rich in romance and becomes fascinated by the Colonel's daughter, Betty. Betty, not knowing who Bob is, offers him a position as coachman, which he accepts. Many and varied are Bob's experiences as "The Man On the Box" of the Annesley coach.

Becoming implicated in a plot to defraud the United States Government of important plans, he thwarts the attempts of a Russian Count and saves important plans. Betty, while visiting Bob's sister, who is a dear friend, learns from Bob's photograph who he is, but allows him to continue as coachman. Bob is entirely ignorant of Betty's knowledge of his identity.

Betty's father loses his money; then Bob discloses his identity and admits he is the possessor of a large fortune in his own right; however, Betty's and Bob's romance is one of pure love and, after a series of intrigues, plots and counter-plots, all of which "The Man On the Box" foils, the couple are married and live happily ever after.

ECLECTIC.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE (Ninth Episode).—Rescued from the savage Indians, Pauline promises Harry to be good and not get mixed up in any more adventures. But she finds it impossible to long endure the quiet life of the ranch, and as a harmless experiment they all agree to let her take part in moving pictures. She goes to Pathé Frères, finds Chief Director Gasnier, and is taken along on a trip to Devil's Island as one of the angels in a production of "Paradise Lost."

Business affairs keep Harry back temporarily, and Owen, who has booked himself as one of the "lost souls," leaves Hicks behind to hold Harry on the main land. At last when Harry is ready to go he finds that the regular steamer has sailed. He gets a fast motor boat but the owner has been bribed by Hicks, and he maroons Harry on a desert island. On Devil's Island the production of "Paradise Lost" has started, and a young desolute player named Booth has become enamored of Pauline. Owen sees an opportunity and bribes him to carry her away. Pauline is nearly distracted. In the nick of time to prevent this scoundrelly abduction Harry scrambles up on the shore from an improvised raft on which he has made the trip from the island on which he was marooned.

Rushing up he knocks Booth out. Pauline flees away to the shore, sees a hydro-aeroplane, speaks the pilot who agrees to take her to the main land. They have barely started, however, when the pilot lights a cigarette. The match he carelessly tosses away, lights on one of the wings and in a few moments the machine is in flames. Coward that he is, he grabs the only parachute and leaves Pauline to her fate. Quite equal to the emergency, however, Pauline rights the plane and lands in safety, fully determined to take no further part in such foolish experiences. She has not reckoned, however, upon the villainous plans which Owen and Hicks are perfecting for her destruction.

THE REIGN OF TERROR (Six Parts).—During the French revolution which changed the government of France from a monar to a republic, the lowest citizens of Paris seized the reins of government and caused the imprisonment of Queen Marie Antoinette.

The Chevalier de Maison Rouge visits his brother-in-law Dixmer, who is supposed to be strong in-law Dixmer, who is supposed to be strong for the revolution, and enlists his help in a desperate attempt to free the Queen. A young officer of the revolutionists is persuaded by the wife of Dixmer to allow the Queen to take a little exercise in the courtyard of the prison. On one of these walks she is presented with some flowers, one of which contains a note telling of the plans of the conspirators. This note is found by one of the guards and the attempt to rescue her is a failure

Not to be disappointed the Chevalier makes a second attempt. The authorities fearing this have the Queen moved to another prison. Dixmer and the Chevalier by a ruse overpower the warden, and Dixmer's wife takes the place of the Queen in the cell. The plot seems to be going successfully when it is spoiled by the arrival of the Queen's former guards. To prevent any further attempts the revolutionary tribunal order the execution of the Queen. This is carried out although the Chevalier and Dixmer make another attempt to rescue her which results in their death.

WE BUY, SELL and RENT
Moving Picture Machines, Films and Chairs
THEATRE BROKERAGE EXCHANGE
440 S. Dearborn Chicago, Ill.

Good Power's No. 5 Machine, complete, $70.00
Edison, Exhibition Model, all complete, $90.00
200 reels of film, new lot, $4.00 to $5.00
ECONOMY FILM CO.
105 FOURTH AVE. PITTSBURGH, PA.

FILMS FOR SALE
40 Three-Reel Features
20 Two-Reel Features
250 Single Reels
Machines and Supplies
ISIDOR WENIZ FILMS CO., 133 N. Gay St., BALTIMORE, MD

When Your Picture Machine Needs Repairing
WHY DON'T YOU SEND IT TO US?
We have the best equipped machine shop in the country and can repair any make of machine. Write us and get acquainted.
WE BUY SECOND-HAND MACHINES.
GEO. M. HOKE SUPPLY CO.
76 N. State St. (bet. Lake and Randolph) Chicago, Ill.

CALEHUFF SUPPLY COMPANY
(INCORPORATED)

Jobbers for Powers, Edison, Motiograph and Simplex

LARGEST LEADING SUPPLY HOUSE IN AMERICA

Mercury Arc Rectifier	Wagner Converters
Flame Arc Lamps	Brass and Wood Frames
Automatic Ticket Registers	Ticket Choppers
Exit Signs	Asbestos State Booths
Slide Ink	Ft. Wayne Compensarcs
Carrying Cases	Fire Extinguishers
Tickets	Fire Boxes
Condensers	Carbons
Pianos	Cement
Chairs	Trap Drum Effects

MIRROR SCREENS

PROMPT SHIPMENTS BACKED BY A SOLID GUARANTEE

A Few Slightly Used Machines

N. W. corner 13th and Race Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

CAMERA MEN OF PROVEN ABILITY

furnished for all occasions. We send our men to any quarter of the globe. Special lighting equipment suitable for making interior scenes under any and all conditions rented with competent electricians by the day, week or month.

We make educational, dramatic or industrial pictures to order.

SMALLWOOD FILM CORPORATION

"Specialists in Industrial Motion Pictures"

949 Broadway, New York City

FEATURES FOR SALE

G. W. BRADENBURGH, 802 Vine St., Philadelphia
Phone Walnut 534. Cable "Bradfilm"

TITLE	Length	Maker	Adv.	Price
WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY No. 1 to 12....	1200	Edison	1-3	$360
THE WRECK	2880	Vitagraph	1-3-6	175
LEAP OF DESPAIR	3670	Itala	1-3-6	150
BRIGAND'S DAUGHTER	3950	Pasquali	1-3-6	150
FOUR DARE DEVILS (as new)	2840	Cosmo	1-3-6	125
MYSTERY OF THE DEATH HEAD.....	2800	Monarch	1-3-6	100
IN THE MIDST OF THE JUNGLE (First adventure of Kathryn)	3000	Selig	1-3-6	150
BULL FIGHT: SPAIN VS. MEXICO (New)....	2000	Huerta & Ross	1-3-6	120
WANTED BY THE POLICE	3000	Mittenthal	1-3-6	100
TOM BUTLER	2650	Eclair	1-3-6	125
SPANISH BLOOD (Asta Neilsen)	4200	Union	1-3-6	200
THE GYPSY (Exclusive Copy, new).....	3200	Gamsa	1-4	275
UNMASKED (Exclusive Copy, new)	2800	Gamsa	1-4	225
THE IRON MAN	2000	Urban	1-3-6	100
FIGHT FOR THE GREAT BLACK DIAMOND.	3000	Nestor	1-3-6	200
A DARE DEVIL RESCUE (Rodman Law)....	3000	Roma	1-3-6	125
A BROKER'S SACRIFICE	3000	Itala	1-3-6	100
THE DREAD OF DOOM	3000	Itala	1-3-6	125

Terms cash with order. 100 additional features. Send for list and prices.

The cheapest house in the trade for second hand films. Ordinary films, comic and dramas for sale from $5.00 per reel up, with posters. Over three million feet to select from. Every film with title and sound condition. No Junk. Everything for the exchange man. Titles to order 5 ft. at 40 cents each, any color, leader stock $5.00 per 1000 feet. Cement, Pathe Formula, $1.00 per quart.

Moving Picture Theatre Mailing Lists For Sale

20,192, covering United States and Canada, price $40.00, or $3.50 per thousand for such states as you want.

670 Film Exchanges, U. S.	$3.50
70 Manufacturers and Studios, U. S.	1.00
34 Moving Picture Machine Mfrs. and Dealers	1.00
231 Film Exchanges, Foreign Countries	3.00
520 Moving Picture Theatres, Foreign Countries	3.00

Ask us for full particulars.

TRADE CIRCULAR ADDRESSING CO.

166 West Adams Street, Chicago

Established 1880

Out of the modern demand for the Burroughs machine, and the manifold uses of which it is capable, have been evolved 86 different and distinct models of Burroughs Bookkeeping machines in 492 combinations of features.

Our business is to fit machines to your needs. Let us try, at our expense.

Burroughs Adding Machine Co.,

122 Burroughs Block, Detroit, Michigan.

Loyal Picture Fans

will keep your house packed week-in and week-out if you give them the best pictures perfectly projected by

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

The choice of successful owners and operators everywhere. Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers put life into your pictures by bringing out every detail with brilliant clearness and distinctness.

Regularly supplied with the Edison and Nicholas Power Machines, and procurable from any film exchange.

Our free booklet is full of interest to owners and operators.

Write for it today.

Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.

566 ST. PAUL STREET ROCHESTER, N. Y.

FOR RENT

Very Reasonable

Entire Sixth Floor

In the

MECCA BUILDING

1600 BROADWAY (At 48th St.)

Formerly occupied by the

KINEMACOLOR COMPANY

Completely Equipped for the Production of Motion Pictures

12500 Sq. Feet of Space—Cost $20000 to fit up—including Large Projecting Room, Vaults, Executive Offices, Telephone Booths, etc. Day and Night Service—Sprinkler System—All Light.

For Further Information and Pamphlet apply to Superintendent on Premises, or

Mecca Realty Co.

1743 Broadway, New York City

Phone Columbus 8100

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES

AMERICAN.

July 3—Mein Lieber Katrina Catches a Convict (Comedy)
July 6—Cameo of the Yellowstone (Two Parts—Drama)
July 8—Feast and Famine (Drama)
July 13—The Lure of the Sawdust (Two Parts—Drama)
July 15—Youth and Art (Drama)
July 20—A Man's Way (2 parts—Drama)
July 22—Business Vs. Love (Drama)
July 27—The Broken Barrier (2 parts—Dr.)
July 29—Does It End Right? (Drama)
July 31—All On Account of a Jug (Comedy)

BEAUTY.

July 7—The Other Train (Drama)
July 14—The Joke on Jane (Comedy)
July 21—Her "Really" Mother (Drama)

"101" BISON.

July 4—The Hopes of Blind Alley—Three Parts—Drama)
July 11—Prowlers of the Wild (Two Parts—Drama)
July 18—A Mexican Spy in America (2 parts—Drama)
July 25—Olano of the South Seas (2 parts—Drama)

BRONCHO.

July 1—Shorty Gets Into Trouble (Two Parts—Drama)
July 8—The Final Reckoning (Two Parts—Drama)
July 15—Shorty Turns Judge (2 parts—Comedy Drama)
July 22—Shorty and the Aridville Terror (2 parts—Drama)

CRYSTAL.

July 7—Nearly a Stepmother (Comedy)
July 14—Vivian's Four Beaus (Comedy)
—What Pearl's Pearls Did (Comedy)
July 21—Getting Vivian Married (Comedy)

DOMINO.

July 2—His Hour of Manhood (Two Parts—Drama)
July 9—The Curse of Humanity (Two Parts—Drama)
July 16—Star of the North (2 parts—Drama)
July 23—The Defaulter (2 parts—Drama)

ECLAIR.

July 8—Duty Two Parts—Drama)
July 12—Willy Walrus and the Parisians (Com.)
—Lily as a Little Mother (Comedy)
July 15—Renunciation (2 parts—Western Dr.)
July 19—Tango Versus Poker (Comedy)
July 22—Allah-3311 (3 parts—Drama)
July 26—When Death Rode the Engine (Western—Drama)

FRONTIER.

July 5—The Broken Barriers (Drama)
July 12—The Fight in Lonely Gulch (Drama)
July 19—The Ranger's Reward (Western Dr.)
July 26—When Memory Recalls (Drama)

GOLD SEAL.

July 7—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery (Series No. 13—Two Parts—Drama)
July 14—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery, Series No. 14 (2 parts—Drama)
July 21—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery (Series No. 15—2 parts—Drama)

IMP.

July 6—The Lady of the Island (Two Parts—Drama)
July 9—The Old Rag Doll (Drama)
July 13—When the World Was Silent (Three Parts—Drama)
July 16—The Universal Boy, Series No. 1 (Comedy)
July 20—In the Sultan's Garden, (Drama)
July 23—The Gateway of Regret (Drama)

JOKER.

July 8—Bess, the Detectress, or the Dog Watch (Comedy)
July 11—Love Roses and Trousers (Comedy)
July 15—Willy Walrus and the Awful Confession (Comedy)
July 18—His Wife's Family (Comedy)
July 22—Jimmy Kelly and the Kidnappers (Comedy)
July 25—The Polo Champions (Comedy)

KAY-BEE.

July 3—The Heart of a Crook (Two Parts—Drama)
July 10—The Feud of Beaver Creek (Two Parts Drama)
July 17—The City (2 parts—Drama)
July 24—The Sheriff of Bisbee

KOMIC.

July 5—"Bill" No. 1 (Comedy)
July 12—Wrong All Around (Comedy)
July 19—Bill No. 2 (Comedy)
July 26—Leave It to Smiley (Comedy)

KEYSTONE.

July 2—Fatty's Finish (Comedy)
July 4—Love and Bullets (Comedy)
July 6—Row Boat Romance (Comedy)
July 9—(Not yet announced).
July 11—(Not yet announced).

LUX.

June 12—A Family Feud (Comedy)
—View of the Alps (Scenic)
June 19—The Newlyweds (Comedy)
June 26—A Day's Outing (Comedy)
—The Telephone Operator (Comedy)

MAJESTIC.

June 30—Suffragette Battle in Nuttyville (Comedy)
July 5—The Angel of Contention (Two Parts—Drama)
July 7—The Only Clue (Drama)
July 12—A City Beautiful (Two Parts—Drama)
July 14—The Old Derelict (Drama)
July 19—The Painted Lady (2 parts—Drama)
July 21—A Red Man's Heart (Drama)
July 24—Lest We Forget (Drama)
July 26—The Mystery of the Hindu Image (2 parts—Drama)

NESTOR.

July 8—A Ranch Romance (Western—Drama)
July 10—The Great Universal Mystery (Com.)
July 15—Her Grave Mistake (Western Drama).
July 17—When Eddie Went to the Front (Com.)
July 22—By the Sun's Rays (Western-Drama).
July 24—All at Sea (Comedy)

POWERS.

July 3—Pearl of the Sea (Drama)
July 10—Passing the Love of Women (Drama)
July 17—The Severed Hand (3 parts—Drama).
July 24—Kate Waters of the Secret Service (2 parts—Drama)

PRINCESS.

June 26—Professor Smith (Comedy)
July 3—The Decoy (Drama)
July 10—The Girl of the Seasons (Comedy)
July 17—The Veteran's Sword (Drama)

RELIANCE.

July 13—Our Mutual Girl, No. 26 (News)
July 15—How Izzy Stuck to His Post (Comedy-Drama)
July 18—The Vengeance of Gold (2 parts—Dr.)
July 20—Our Mutual Girl, No. 27 (News)
July 22—Izzy and the Diamond (Comedy)
July 25—The Saving of Young Anderson (2 parts—Drama)

REX.

July 5—The Foreman's Deceit (Drama)
July 9—When Fate Disposes (Two Parts—Dr.)
July 12—Plain Mary (Drama)
July 16—The Sob Sister (2 parts—Drama)
July 19—Out of the Darkness (Drama)
July 23—At the Foot of the Stairs (Drama)
July 26—An Awkward Cinderella (Comedy-Dr.)

ROYAL.

July 4—Did She Run? (Comedy)
July 11—Mistakes Will Happen (Comedy)
July 18—The New Housekeeper (Comedy)
July 25—Milling the Militant (Comedy)
—Servants Superseded (Comedy)

STERLING.

July 6—Billy's Vacation (Juvenile—Comedy)
July 9—Snooke's Flirtation (Comedy)
July 13—Almost Married (Comedy)
July 16—On the Beach (Comedy)
July 20—The Circus (Comedy)
July 23—Love and Lunch (2 parts—Comedy)

THANHOUSER.

July 12—The Leaven of Good (Drama)
July 14—The Substitute (2 parts—Drama)
July 17—A Gentleman for a Day (Comedy)
July 19—Harry's Waterloo (Comedy)
July 21—The Pendulum of Fate (2 parts—Dr.)
July 26—From Wash to Washington (Comedy)

UNIVERSAL IKE.

July 7—Me, Him and I (Comedy)
July 14—The New Cook (Comedy)
July 21—Universal Ike, Jr., in Cupid's Victory (Comedy)

VICTOR.

July 10—A Beggar Prince of India (Three Parts—Drama)
July 17—The Panama-Pacific Exposition Up-to-Date (Topical and Educational)
July 20—Value Received (2 parts—Western-Drama)
July 24—Irene's Busy Day (Comedy-Drama)

FEATURES.

HEPWORTH AMERICAN.

July 6—No Flies On Cis (Comedy)
—A Friend in Need (Drama)
July 13—The Tragedy of Basil Grieve (3 parts—Drama)
July 20—Once Aboard the Lugger (Comedy)
—Poorluck Minds the Shop (Comedy)
July 27—The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel (2 parts—Drama)

ECLIPSE-URBAN.

July 6—The Mystery of Green Park (2 parts—Drama)
July 13—Butterfly and His Dog (Comedy)
—Magic Matches (Comedy)
July 20—The Joke That Kills (2 parts—Dr.)
July 27—Sammy Is Too Cautious (Comedy)
—Peter's Perseverance (Comedy)

WHITMAN FEATURES.

GARRISON FILM CO. DISTRIBUTORS.
June 13—The Toll of Love (Four Parts—Dr.)
June 27—Jane Eyre (Five Parts—Drama)
July 11—Lena Rivers (Five Parts—Drama)

PASQUALI.

June 29—The Chimney Sweeps of the Valley of Aosta (5 parts—Drama)
July—A Mexican Mine Fraud or the Game That Failed (5 parts—Drama)

WORLD FILM CORP.

July—The World, the Flesh and the Devil (6 parts—Drama)
July—The Lights o' London (5 parts—Drama).
July—The Great Stroke (5 parts—Drama)

EXCELSIOR FEATURE FILM CO., INC.

July—The Toll of Mammon (4 parts—Drama)

FEATURES IDEAL.

June—Whom the Gods Destroy (3 parts—Dr.).
June—The Actress' Redemption (4 parts—Dr.).

LEADING PLAYERS FILM CORPORATION.

June—The God of Death (3 parts—Drama)
July—Germania (5 parts—Drama)

COSMOFOTOFILM CO.

July—She Stoops to Conquer (4 parts—Drama)

GAUMONT.

June 13—Kronstadt (3 parts—Drama)
June 27—The Iron Man (3 parts—Drama)

ECLECTIC.

July—Giants-White Sox Tour of the World (6 parts)
July—A Pearl of the Punjab (3 parts—Drama).
July—The Tramp (3 parts—Drama)
July—The Reign of Terror (6 parts—Drama)
July—Detective Craig's Coup (5 parts—Dr.)

ROLL TICKETS

PRICES

Five Thousand $1.25
Ten Thousand $2.50
Twenty Thousand $4.50
Twenty-five Thousand $5.50
Fifty Thousand $6.50
One Hundred Thousand $8.00

Your own special Ticket, any printing, any colors, accurately numbered; every roll guaranteed. Coupon Tickets for Prize Drawings, 5,000 $2.50. Stock Tickets, 6c per 1,000. Prompt shipments. Cash with the order. Get the samples. Send diagram for Reserved Seat Coupon Tickets, serial or dated.

NATIONAL TICKET CO.
SHAMOKIN, PA.

See Americans First

FLYING "A" FEATURE FILMS

A MAN'S WAY

An Intense Two Part Society Drama Replete with — Human Interest.

One, Three and Six Sheet Attractive Lithographs

Release, Mon. July 20, 1914

AMERICAN BEAUTY

"Her 'Really' Mother"

Featuring MARGARITA FISCHER.

A Sociological Drama with heart interest and a strong moral.

Under direction of Harry Pollard.

Release Tuesday, July 21st, 1914.

"Business vs. Love"

A Domestic Drama of unusual fascinating power.
Under direction of Sydney Ayres.
Release Wednesday, July 22nd, 1914.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO.

CHICAGO

LICENSED RELEASE DATES

RELEASE DAYS.

Monday—Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Pathe, Selig, Vitagraph.
Tuesday—Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Geo. Kleine, Pathe, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph.
Wednesday—Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Pathe, Vitagraph.
Thursday—Biograph, Essanay, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph.
Friday—Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Selig, Lubin, Vitagraph.
Saturday—Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph.

BIOGARPH.

June 29—The Honor of the Law (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
June 2—The Goat (Comedy)
—The Firemen's Social (Comedy)
July 4—The Cracksman's Gratitude (Drama)
July 6—Eva, the Cigarette Girl (Comedy)
—The Boiler Maker's Day of Rest (Comedy)
July 9—A Romance of the Pueblo (Com.-Dr.).
July 11—Her Primitive Model (Drama)
July 13—That Boy From the Poorhouse (Dr.)
July 16—The Prospectors (Drama)
July 18—It Was Some Party (Comedy)
—Some Decorators (Comedy)

EDISON.

July 4—Molly, the Drummer Boy (Drama)
July 6—Her Spanish Cousins (Comedy)
July 7—Face to Face (Seventh of "The Man Who Disappeared" Series) (Drama)
July 8—Andy Has a Tootache (Eighth of the "Andy" Series) (Comedy)
July 10—In the Shadow of Disgrace (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 11—Dolly at the Helm (Eleventh of the Active Life of "Dolly of the Dailies"—Drama)
July 13—Qualifying for Lena (Comedy)
July 14—The Two Doctors (Drama)
July 15—The Ever-Gallant Marquis (Comedy)
—An Up-to-Date Courtship (Comedy)
July 17—Meg o' the Mountains (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 18—Across the Burning Trestle (Drama)
July 20—The Adventure of the Absent-Minded Professor (7th of the Octavius Amateur Detective Series—Comedy)
July 21—A Matter of Minutes (8th of "The Man who Disappeared" series—Dr.)
July 22—A Deal in Statuary (Comedy)
His Wife's Burglar (Comedy)
July 24—Laddie (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 25—The Last Assignment (Twelfth of the "Dolly of the Dailies" series—Drama).

ESSANAY.

July 4—Broncho Billy's Punishment (Drama).
July 7—A Night with a Million (Com. Drama).
July 8—A Boarding House Scramble (Comedy)
July 9—Slippery Slim—Diplomat (Comedy)
July 10—Night Hawks (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 11—Broncho Billy and the Sheriff (Drama)
July 13—Sweedie the Swatter (Comedy)
July 14—At the Foot of the Hill (Drama)
July 15—The Fable of "Napoleon and the Bumps" (Comedy)
July 16—Snakeville's New Waitress (Comedy).
July 17—His Stolen Fortune (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 18—Broncho Billy Puts One Over (Drama)
July 20—Money Talks (Comedy)
July 21—Mrs. Billington's First Case (Comedy-Drama)
July 22—The Fable of "Higher Education That Was Too High For the Old Man" (Comedy).
July 23—Slippery Slim's Inheritance (Comedy).
July 24—A Little From Home (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 25—Broncho Billy and the Gambler (Dr.).

KALEM.

July 4—The Political Boss (Drama)
July 6—The Weakling—Third of the Alice Joyce Series—Special—Two Parts (Drama)
July 7—Kaintucky Bill (Drama)
July 8—A String of Pearls (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 10—Rube the Interloper (Comedy)
—In Old England (Topical)
July 11—Lame Dog's Treachery (Drama)
July 13—A Diamond in the Rough (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 14—Accused (Drama)
July 15—The Express Messenger (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 17—Wanted, An Heir (Comedy)
July 18—The Fate of a Squaw (Drama)
July 20—In Wolf's Clothing (4th of the Alice Joyce Series—Special—2 parts Dr.)
July 21—The Beast (Drama)
July 22—The Rival Railroad's Plot (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 24—The Bingville Fire Department (Com.)
July 25—Defying the Chief (Drama)

GEORGE KLEINE.

June 9—The Trap-Door Clue (Celio—Special—Two Parts—Drama)
June 16—One Woman's Way (Cines—Special—Two Parts—Drama)
June 23—A Midnight Guest (Cines—Special—Two Parts—Drama)
June 30—The Bondage of Evil (Celio—Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 7—Heirloom (Cines—Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 14—The Rival Actresses (Cines—Special—2 parts—Drama)

LUBIN.

July 4—It's a Shame (Comedy)
—The Kidnapped Bride (Comedy)
July 7—Fooling Fanny's Father (Comedy)
—While Auntie Bounced (Comedy)
July 8—The Incompetent (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 9—The Debt (Special—Two Parts—Dr.)
July 10—The Tribunal of Conscience (Drama)
July 11—How He Lost His Trousers (Comedy).
—Mandy's Chicken Dinner (Comedy)
July 14—He Was Bad (Comedy)
—Tough Luck (Comedy)
July 15—Codes of Honor (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 16—The Cross of Crime (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 17—The Lie (Drama)
July 18—She Wanted to Know (Comedy)
—All for Love (Comedy)
July 21—Temper and Temperature (Comedy)
—Worms Will Turn (Comedy)
July 22—Who Seeks Revenge (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 23—The False Shadow (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 24—A Traitor to His Country (Drama)
July 25—A Matter of Record (Comedy)

MELIES.

June 27—A Shadow On the Wall (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
June 30—One Suit of Clothes (Comedy)
July 1—The Monk's Sacrifice (Drama)
July 2—Womanly Curiosity (Comedy)
—The Prescription (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 4—Hidden Death (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 7—A Discolored Romance (Comedy)
July 8—The Hole in the Wall (Drama)
July 9—Good Fortune's Tardy Smile (Comedy)
July 9—A Royal Survivor (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 11—A Friend's Forgiveness (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 14—Rags and Patriotism (Comedy)
July 15—Justly Punished (Drama)
July 16—The Test of True Love (Comedy)
July 16—A Sublime Deception (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 18—The River's Secret (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 21—(Title not reported).
July 22—His Sense of Duty (Drama)
July 23—Wanted a Sweetheart (Comedy)
July 23—When Preachers Leave Home (Special—2 parts—Comedy)
July 25—Black Pearls (Special—2 parts—Dr.).

PATHE.

June 29—Visit to Paris (Travel)
—Rapids and Water Falls of New Zealand (Scenic)
June 30—A French Village in Senegal, West Africa (Scenic)
—Venomous Serpents (Educational)
July 1—Pathe's Weekly, No. 43—1914 (News).
July 6—The Heart and the Circulation of the Blood (Biology)
—Modes of Travel in Japan (Manners and Customs)
July 7—A Tiger Hunt (Indo-China) (Scenic)
—The Ice and Snow
July 8—Pathe's Weekly No. 44, 1914 (News)
July 13—A Russian Bear Hunt (Scenic)
—The Wine Industry, Marsala, Sicily (Industrial)
July 14—Through Bosnia and Dalmatia (Scenic)
—The Tombs of the Ancient Japanese Emperors, Annam (Indo China)—(Scenic)
—Water Falls at Aragonia, Spain (Travel)
July 15—Pathe's Weekly No. 45 (News)

SELIG.

July 3—Making Good With Her Family (Com.)
—Doc Yak Wishes (Novelty)
July 4—The Little Hobo (Drama)
July 6—Reporter Jimmie Intervenes (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 6—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 37 (News)
July 7—Algie's Sister (Comedy)
July 8—Caryl of the Mountains (Drama)
July 9—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 38 (News)
July 10—Did She Cure Him? (Comedy)
July 11—His Fight (Drama)
July 13—The Wilderness Mail (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 13—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 39 (News)
July 14—An Egyptian Princess (Comedy)
July 15—His Last Appeal (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 16—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 40 (News)
July 17—Wiggs Takes the Rest Cure (Drama)
July 18—The Squatters (Drama)
July 20—A Woman Laughs (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 20—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 41 (News)
July 21—The Lure of the Ladies (Comedy)
July 22—The Sealed Package (Drama)
July 23—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 42 (News)
July 24—The Substitute Heir (Comedy)
July 25—Footprints (Comedy-Drama)

VITAGRAPH.

July 1—The Circus and the Boy (Comedy)
July 2—Two Stepchildren (Drama)
July 3—A Train of Incidents (Comedy)
July 4—The Toll (Special—Two Parts—Dr.)
July 6—The False and the True (Drama)
July 7—The Moonstone of Fez (Special—Two Parts—Drama)
July 8—Doctor Smith's Baby (Comedy)
July 9—Prosecution (Drama)
July 10—The Vases of Hymen (Comedy)
July 11—Lillian's Dilemma (Special—Two Parts (Comedy)
July 13—The Soul of Luigi (Drama)
July 14—Fogg's Millions (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 15—The Arrival of Josie (Comedy)
July 16—The Little Captain (Comedy-Drama).
July 17—Pigs Is Pigs (Comedy)
July 18—The Song of the Ghetto (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 20—Love the Clairvoyant (Drama)
July 21—Bread Upon the Waters (Special—2 parts—Drama)
July 22—Buddy's Downfall (Comedy)
July 23—The Apple (Drama)
July 24—The Winning Trick (Comedy)
July 25—Romantic Josie (Special—Two parts—(Comedy)

Greater New York Film Rental Company
All Specials Supplied. Main Office: 126-132 West 46th Street. Depot: 116-118 East 14th Street, New York.
Licensed Film Supplied to Licensed Exhibitors :-: :-: :-: :-: :-: Write or Call for Particulars

THE CENTAUR FILM COMPANY

The Oldest Independent Film Manufacturer

Has the largest commercial plant in America, the most up-to-date equipment, and an organization second to none.

Printing and developing in any quantity. Quality guaranteed. Prices interesting.

CENTAUR FILM CO.
BAYONNE, N. J.

The Players Popularity

is not confined to any locality. From the smallest "berg" to the largest, the players are well known to their public. This fact makes them ALL local favorites in every community. GIVE YOUR PUBLIC PLAYERS PICTURE POST CARD and start them making a collection.

Semi-Photo Post Cards, $3.00 per thousand; formerly sold for $4.00. Over 400 different players.

Hand Colored Post Cards
For the better class of Souvenirs, 60 of the most popular players, all factions, $10.00 per thousand.

Photo Post Cards
For hand coloring. NOTE: The Public buy cards from stationers and color them. It's a new fad—60 Popular Players $5.00 per thousand.

PHOTOGRAPHS, SIZE 8 x 10, of all the prominent players, Association and Independent, 400 different names, 20 cents each.
LARGE PICTURE, semi-photo, glazed finish, size 11 x 14, $1 per doz.; 43 prominent players.
LARGE PICTURES, HAND COLORED, size 11 x 14. Prominent Association players, $2.00 per set of 12.
Photographs for lobby display of the two and three reel features of all of the Mutual multiple reels—set of 6, $1.00. Always ready 10 days ahead of release.

Special 22x28 Association and Mutual Hand Colored Pictures of 24 Favorites
75 Cents Each. Framed $2.50 Each

KRAUS MFG. CO., 14 East 17th St., N. Y.
Send for Catalogue of over 400 players and samples free. Write us, giving details of your dull nights, and we will send you a remedy.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

LOBBY PHOTOS
Of
Alice Joyce Series
Also
Kalem Monday Releases
Authorized by the Kalem Company

Six 11 x 14 Photo Reproductions for $1.00
(JUST FILL ONE SHEET FRAME)

You have seen much of our product, so
KNOW THE QUALITY
The Wyanoak Publishing Co.
146 WEST 52nd STREET
NEW YORK CITY
Send Us Single or Standing Order
Your Credit Is Good

INDEX

TO CONTENTS.

ADVERTISING FOR EXHIBITORS..... 423
AMERICAN PLAYERS IN ENGLAND.... 441
AMONG THE PICTURE THEATERS..... 444
BILLINGTON, MISS FRANCELIA..... 410
BIG NEW ENTERPRISE, A..... 438
BRITISH NOTES 417
CALENDAR OF LICENSED RELEASES.. 456
CALENDAR OF INDEPENDENT RELEASES 454
COMMENTS ON THE FILMS (Licensed)... 432
COMMENTS ON THE FILMS (Independent) 433
"CRUCIBLE OF FLAME, THE" (Features Ideal) 439
DAVID HORSLEY TO DO ONE-REEL COMEDIES 417
"DEVIL'S EYE, THE" (Apex)..... 418
DOINGS AT LOS ANGELES..... 421
"EAGLE'S MATE, THE" (Famous Players) 412
ENGLISHMEN PLEASANTLY HOAXED.. 409
EXHIBITORS' NEWS 458
FACTS AND COMMENTS..... 403
FIRST SALE OF SUBJECTS AT AUCTION 447
FEATURE FILM STORIES..... 482
"FORCES OF EVIL" (World Film Corp). 437
HONOR THE PIONEERS..... 416
INDEPENDENT FILM STORIES..... 474
INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES..... 490
INCE, JOHN 443
"IN TUNE WITH THE WILD" (Selig).... 408
INQUIRIES 426
"JOHN BARLEYCORN" (Bosworth, Inc.). 406
LICENSED FILM STORIES..... 463
LICENSED RELEASE DATES..... 492
MANUFACTURERS' ADVANCE NOTES... 449
McRAE'S BISONS BACK FROM HAWAII. 436
MERE FIREBOARD CASE TABOOED..... 409
MOVING PICTURE EDUCATION..... 420
MUSIC FOR THE PICTURE..... 422
NO QUARTER AND NO COMPROMISE.... 405
NEFF WITHDRAWS—PEARCE ELECTED 414
OBSERVATIONS BY MAN ABOUT TOWN. 419
"OUBLIETTE, THE" (Bison 101)..... 410
PAYNE, EDNA 440
PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT, THE 425
"PRESIDENT'S SPECIAL, THE" (Edison) 411
PROJECTION DEPARTMENT 427
"REIGN OF TERROR, THE" (Eclectic)... 413
STORIES OF THE FILMS (Licensed)..... 463
STORIES OF THE FILMS (Independent).. 474
STORIES OF THE FILMS (Features)..... 482
TO BOOM EDUCATIONAL FILM..... 435
WAGNER IN MEXICO..... 440
WHAT ARE WE COMING TO?..... 442
WHAT CONSTITUTES A PUNCH..... 404
"WHIRR OF THE SPINNING WHEEL, THE" (Hepworth) 407

TO ADVERTISERS.

CARBON IMPORTERS.
KIEWERT, CHARLES L., CO..... 504
RESINGER, HUGO 500

ELECTRICAL & MECHANICAL EQUIPMENT.
AMUSEMENT SUPPLY CO..... 502
BELL & HOWELL, THE CO.....497, 499
CALEHUFF SUPPLY CO..... 489
DETROIT ENGINE WORKS..... 503
FOOS GAS ENGINE CO..... 499
FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS..... 503
GENERAL ELECTRIC CO..... 501
HALLBERG, J. H..... 464
HOKE, GEORGE M. SUPPLY CO..... 488
KIMBLE ELECTRIC CO..... 499
MOORE-HUBBLE CO. 504
PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT CO.... 500
SMITH, L. C., & CO..... 502
STRELINGER, CHARLES A., & CO..... 494
TYPHOON FAN CO..... 500
WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC AND M'F'G CO. 458

MISCELLANEOUS FEATURE FILMS.
ALL STAR FEATURE CORPORATION..392-93
APEX FILM CO..... 471
BOSWORTH, INC..... 386
CELEBRATED PLAYERS FILM CO..... 504
CHICAGO FEATURE FILM CO..... 501
CONTINENTAL FEATURE FILM CORPORATION. 385
ELECTIC FILM CO.....388-89
ECLIPSE-URBAN FILM CO..... 477
EXCELSIOR FEATURE FILM CO..... 467
FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM CO.....378-79
FEATURE PHOTOPLAY CO..... 498
GENERAL FEATURE FILM CO..... 501
HEPWORTH-AMERICAN FILM CO..... 477
LASKY, JESSE L., FEATURE PLAY CO.. 382
LIBERTY MOTION PICTURE CO..... 481
MEXICAN WAR FILM CORP..... 384
NASH MOTION PICTURE CO..... 465
NEILSON, F. O..... 502
OZ FILM MANUFACTURING CO..... 377
PASQUALI AMERICAN CO..... 475
SAWYER, A. H., INC.....390-91
SOUTHERN STATES FILM CO..... 501
STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO..... 479
TWENTIETH CENTURY FEATURE FILM CO. 481
WARNER'S FEATURES, INC..... 473
WORLD FILM CORPORATION.....394-95

FILM BROKERS.
WESTERN FILM BROKERS..... 501

FILM EXCHANGES.
APEX FEATURE SERVICE..... 470
BRADENBURGH, GEORGE W..... 489
ECONOMY FILM CO..... 488
GREATER NEW YORK FILM RENTAL CO. 492
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE..... 466
NORTHERN FEATURE FILM EXCHANGE 501
STANDARD MOTION PICTURE CO..... 501
WENIZ, ISADORE 488

INDEPENDENT FILM MANUFACTURERS.
AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO. 491
GAUMONT CO. 383
MAJESTIC MOTION PICTURE CO..... 506
NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION 380-81
THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION..... 370
UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTRING CO. 372-73-74-75-76

LENS MANUFACTURERS.
BAUSCH & LOMB 489

LICENSED FILM MANUFACTURERS.
BIOGRAPH COMPANY 457
EDISON, THOMAS A..... 399
ESSANAY FILM MANUFACTURING CO.. 371
KALEM CO. 390, 402
KLEINE, GEORGE 396
LUBIN MANUFACTURING CO..... 400
MELIES FILMS 397
PATHE FRERES 387
SELIG POLYSCOPE CO..... 507
VITAGRAPH CO. OF AMERICA..... 401

MISCELLANEOUS.
ARMY & NAVY STORE CO..... 466
AMUSEMENT SALES CO..... 499
BIOSCOPE, THE 502
BOTANICAL DECORATING CO..... 482
BURROUGHS ADDING MACHINE CO.... 489
CENTAUR FILM CO..... 493
COMMERCIAL FILMERS 482
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS 496
CORCORAN, INC., A. J..... 498
DADMUN CO. 498
EASTMAN KODAK CO..... 493
GUNBY BROS. 504
INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE CO..... 502
KRAUS MANUFACTURING CO..... 493
MECCA REALTY CO..... 489
NATIONAL MOVING PICTURE CO..... 494
NATIONAL TICKET CO..... 490
NATIONAL X-RAY REFLECTOR CO..... 498
RAW FILM SUPPLY CO..... 497
SMALLWOOD FILM CORPORATION..... 489
STANDARD MOTION PICTURE CO..... 502
THEATRE BROKERAGE EXCHANGE..... 488
J. SPAULDING & SONS CO..... 499
THEATRE SPECIALTY MFG. CO..... 458
TRADE CIRCULAR ADDRESSING CO.... 489
UNDERWOOD TYPEWRITER CO..... 504
WYANOAK PUBLISHING CO..... 493

MOTION PICTURE CAMERA MANUFACTURERS.
SCHNEIDER, EBERHARD 503

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
AMERICAN PHOTOPLAYERS CO..... 495
DEAGAN, J. C..... 501
SEEBURGH, J. P., PIANO CO..... 483
SINN, CLARENCE E..... 503

OPERA CHAIR MANUFACTURERS.
AMERICAN SEATING CO..... 505
ANDREWS, A. H., CO..... 505
BENNETT SEATING CO..... 505
HARDESTY MANUFACTURING CO..... 505
STEEL FURNITURE CO..... 505
WISCONSIN SEATING CO..... 505

POSTERS AND FRAMES.
AMERICAN SLIDE & POSTER CO..... 456
NEWMAN MANUFACTURING CO..... 468
THEATRE SPECIALTY CO..... 346

PROJECTION MACHINE MANUFACTURERS.
ENTERPRISE OPTICAL CO..... 502
PHANTOSCOPE MANUFACTURING CO... 498
POWERS, NICHOLAS 508
PRECISION MACHINE CO..... 455

PROJECTION SCREEN MANUFACTURERS.
GENTER, J. H., CO..... 350
DAY & NIGHT SCREEN CO..... 505
MIRROR SCREEN CO..... 503

SONG AND ADVERTISING SLIDES.
ERKER BROS. 499
UTILITY TRANSPARENCY CO..... 502

THEATRICAL ARCHITECTS.
DECORATORS' SUPPLY CO..... 503

Features Wanted.

Responsible Philadelphia Exchange would like to hear from reputable manufacturers who desire to work their shows on percentage. If interested, address

MR. EXCHANGE MANAGER,
2925 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

GO INTO THE MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS

MAKE MONEY FAST!
BE YOUR OWN BOSS!
$30 TO $50 PER NIGHT CLEAR
No Experience Needed
We furnish you with machine, film, curtain and complete outfit ready to go to work with ON OUR EASY PAYMENT PLAN.
Write Now for Our Large FREE Catalogue.
NATIONAL MOVING PICTURE CO.
Dept. M. P., Ellsworth Bldg., Chicago

THE CATALOGUE OF BRUSH ELECTRIC LIGHTING SETS
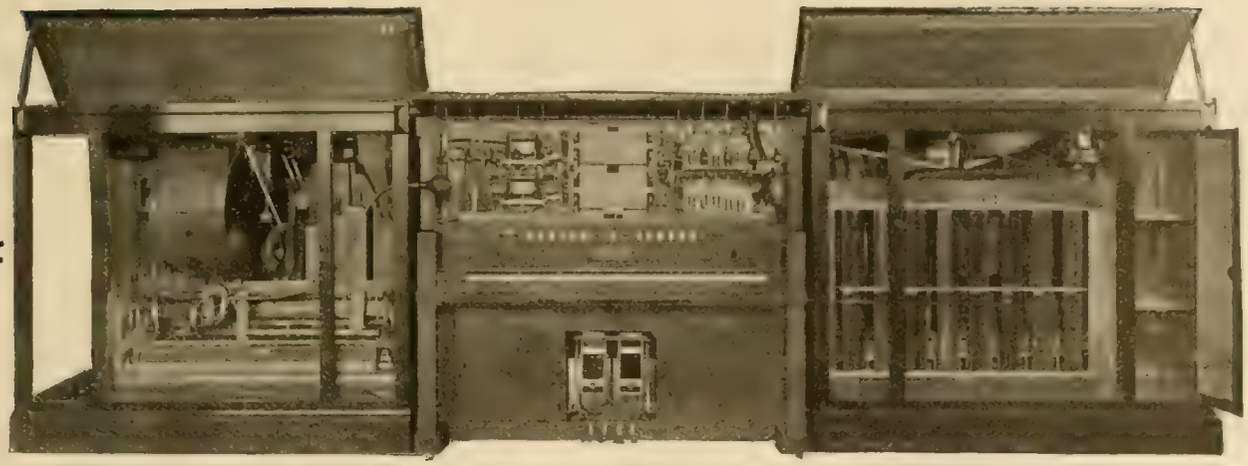
contains much that is valuable about electric lighting in general, and moving picture work in particular. Send for it.
THE CHAS. A. STRELINGER CO.
Box MP-2, Detroit, Mich., U. S. A.

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"
The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT



STYLE 40—OPEN—SHOWING PIPES, TRAPS, SWELL BOX AND PIANO PARTS.

THE FOTOPLAYER

Designed and built expressly for Motion Picture Theatres
May be played manually or with Roll giving Instant Change of Musical Selections

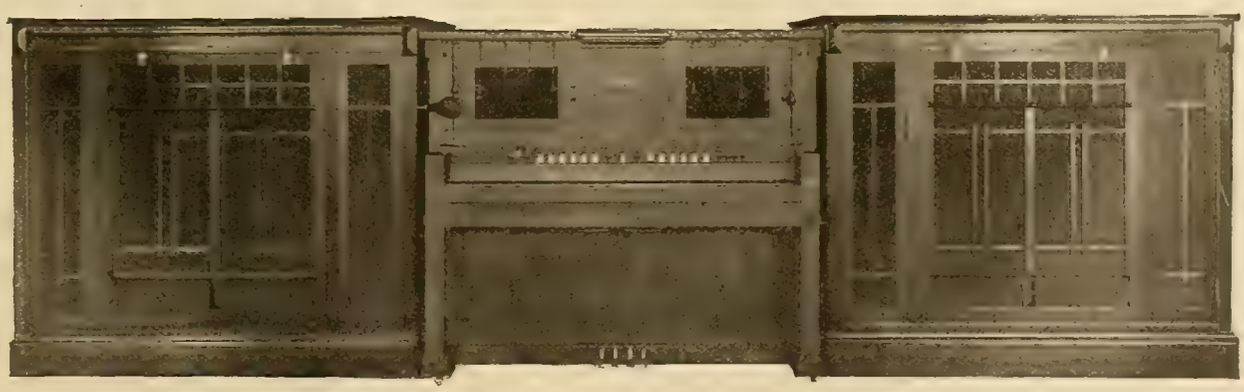
PLAYER PIANO, REED ORGAN, PIPES, DRUMS, CYMBALS, BELLS, WIND SIREN, LOCOMOTIVE WHISTLE, AUTO HORN, HORSES' HOOFS, CASTANETS, TAMBOURINES, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR PRICES AND TERMS



THE FOTOPLAYER READY TO PLAY—"THE INSTRUMENT THAT SUPPLIES THE UNSPOKEN WORDS IN THE PICTURE" Design Patented

The American Photo Player Co.

62 WEST 45th STREET, NEW YORK CITY

FACTORIES AT BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA AND NEW YORK, N. Y.

Agents Everywhere We Ship Anywhere

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS

Classified Advertisements, three cents per word, cash with order; 50 cents minimum postage stamps accepted :: :: :: ::

SITUATIONS WANTED.

MOTION PICTURE. Machine operator, long experienced, married, steady man, desires position Greater New York. O. Clauss, 98 Huntington Ave., Woodhaven, L. I.

CAMERAMAN.—Expert photographer (sixth year), understanding own laboratory work, wishes to make immediate connection with responsible firm or one just starting. First class offers only considered. J. J. P., care Moving Picture World, N. Y. City.

AT LIBERTY.—Moving picture operator; have had 5 years' experience. Address H. H. B., 420 Beech St., Warren, Pa.

CAMERAMAN desires position. Good photographer. Frank E. Artz, 1712 W. Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

PICTURE PIANIST.—Sober and reliable. Orchestra experience. Cueing pictures a specialty. Best references. Lester H. Ransberger, Marshall, Mo.

MANAGER.—Fourteen years' experience. Six years in New York and Boston. At present employed. Want to make change. Open for position as manager for some reliable theater. Missouri or Kansas preferred. Others also considered. Expert on ventilation. In touch at all times with things pertaining to picture business. I can and do get the business for you summer and winter. Reference. Address L. Wire, 800 Main St., Evanston, Ill.

OPERATOR.—Thoroughly experienced all machines, wants position Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa. J. W. Farrell, 2968 Prairie Ave., Chicago, Ill.

CAMERAMAN.—Experienced, references, wants steady or temporary work, with or without camera. A. L., 131 West 10th St., N. Y. City.

OPERATOR.—Wants position, married, 12 years' experience, sober, reliable, competent. Am also good advertiser. Address R. E. Gooden, Deandi Theater, Amarillo, Texas.

MOTION PICTURE CAMERAMAN.—(Have best camera. Desires position with reliable firm. Understand laboratory work and am expert on projection. Have worked for large concerns. Reliable, care Moving Picture World, N. Y. City.

HELP WANTED.

AGENTS WANTED—For atlas work, map work and Mexican War map; unusual opportunities for intelligent men with ability to sell. Write for particulars, Rand McNally & Co., Dept. B, Chicago, Ill.

WANTED.—Summer months, directors of experience. Must be thoroughly proficient. Also cameraman with A-1 outfit. For particulars address Feature Producer, care Moving Picture World, New York City.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

PARTNER WANTED.—Operator with fifteen hundred dollars to invest in live picture house in growing Central Iowa city of eight thousand. This is a good proposition for the right man. Address Box 124, Ames, Iowa.

WANTED A PARTNER.—To go through Holland. Have machine and films. Luback, 1109 Manhattan Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

FOR SALE.—498 shares of a total capitalization of 1500 in the largest moving picture house in Denver. Have too many interests and must let loose of some. Address F. O. Browne, 25 Larimer St., Denver, Colo.

THEATERS WANTED.

WANTED—To buy modern equipped picture theater, Illinois or Iowa. Must be bargain. State all first letter. Address P. M., care Moving Picture World, N. Y. City.

THEATERS FOR SALE OR RENT.

FOR RENT—Beautiful new theater in New Jersey; one thousand seats. Deposit of one year's rent required. H. Williams, 660 Riverside Drive, N. Y. City.

THEATER.—300 seats, family patronage, in growing Chicago neighborhood. Clearing $75 week; no competition; good lease; $5,000. Open to rigid investigation. P. S., 428 So. Harvey Ave., Oak Park, Ill.

FOR LEASE.—Theater 500 seats, stage, fully equipped, 16 miles from N. Y. town of 40,000. Apply for further particulars to M. Siedlitz, 11 W. 116th St., N. Y. City.

PRETTY NEW THEATER.—Just opened. Owner cannot operate. Only one in town; $500 cash. Postmaster, Roswell, Ga.

FOR SALE.—Picture theater in Southern town of 8,000. Only two shows in town. Well equipped for playing vaudeville. F. Y., care Moving Picture World, N. Y. City.

FOR SALE—Crystal Theater; five-year lease and full equipment. Only theater in college town, population two thousand with students. Owner going east. Investigate quick. Twelve hundred fifty dollars ($1,250) cash. F. W. Dorland, Peru, Nebraska.

THE VERNON THEATRE.—Corner 4th St. and Vernon Ave., Long Island City, is for sale. New Steinway tunnel next door opens soon, factory and apartment houses erected daily. Big boom expected. Property fireproof brick 55x100. Fully equipped, 2 machines, Gold Fibre Curtain, Wurlitzer Orchestra, will seat 600. Everything the latest. License new, business good all year. One hundred per cent investment. Ten cents, stage attached fully equipped. $10,000 cash required. Call if you mean business.

EQUIPMENT FOR SALE.

EQUIP your stage with a complete outfit of fire-proofed scenery at no expense to you. Write us, giving dimension of stage. We will mail you photographs and full particulars. All scenery is fully mounted ready to install. Boon Scenic Studio (Dept. H), Hicksville, Ohio.

EXHIBITORS.—All for 50c prepaid, bottle "Magnetic" film cement, oil and 3 bottles (assorted colors) "slide ink." National Theater Co., "Supplies," Brookville, Ind.

LATEST.—Phantascope complete for sale, with 100 carbons, $50. Address R. H. Co., Lock Box 21, Schenectady, N. Y.

DEALERS.—Send for the trade price. Brass slides 25 cents, clock slides 50 cents, special slides up to 75 letters 50 cents. Brass one, three and six sheet poster and photo frames. Exit signs. Send for price list. R. Buettner, 110 West 34th St., N. Y. City.

BUILDING.—Has been leased to government for post office, buyer has till Sept. 1 to move. Used less than year, 336 seats, Powers 6a machine, screen, 5 sets scenery and rigging, motor, piano, etc. W. C. Krabiel, Winterset, Iowa.

BRASS POSTER FRAMES—1½-inch moulding, 1 sheet, $3.00; 3-inch moulding, 1 sheet, $4.50; without glass easel, 75c extra; 3 sheet, $8.00. Check must accompany all orders. C. A. Buettner, 10 East 14th St., N. Y. City.

POWERS NO. 5.—In perfect condition, suitable for traveling showman, complete $95. Address P. T. E. Co., 21 East 14th St., N. Y. City.

POWERS NO. 6.—Complete mechanism, overhauled and in perfect condition, $110. Address P. T. E. Co., 21 East 14th St., N. Y. City.

BRAND NEW.—Phantoscope complete, $50 C. O. D. Frank A. Holmes, Brewster, N. Y.

FOR SALE.—Model A. Williamson Perforator. Shipped for examination. Charge guaranteed one way. Charles Simons, 405 11th St. N. W., Washington, D. C.

BRASS POSTER FRAMES.—For one, three and six sheets. Also brass easels, brass railings. Write for complete catalog. The Newman Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, O. 101 4th Ave., N. Y.

FOR SALE.—Any part of my moving picture theatre; opera chairs 65c each, Simplex machines $125, Power's 6A $100. All goods used three months, have many other bargains in other fixtures. A. Glen, Room 200, Houser Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

FOR THEATER EQUIPMENTS.—Such as seats, picture machines, etc., see Lears Theatre Supply Co., 509 Chestnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

EDISON EXHIBITION MODEL.—And Powers No. 5 picture machines complete with upper and lower magazines, new 110 volt Rheostat and Bauch & Lomb lenses, also rewind, everything ready to operate. Used only a few months. Guaranteed first class condition. Will take $75 for either machine, will ship subject to inspection. Howard, 204 Houser Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

FILMS WANTED.

FILM WANTED.—The American & European Film Co., 43 Cedar St., N. Y. City, will purchase single reels and features at rock-bottom prices for spot cash. Must be good morally and physically.

WANTED.—Single reel also 3 and four reel features with posters. Federal F. F. Co., 220 West 42nd St., N. Y. City.

FILMS FOR SALE OR RENT.

FOR SALE.—100 single reels, also 2 reel features with posters. Federal F. F. Co., 220 West 42nd St., N. Y. City.

CAMERAS FOR SALE.

PROFESSIONAL MOVING PICTURE CAMERAS.—Two sizes. Tripods, Zeiss-Tessar 50 m lenses, $150, $225. Special cameras to order. Repairing all makes. R. W. Pittman, 50 West St., N. Y. City.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE.

NEW SELF-PLAYING.—Self-interpreting pipe organ for picture show. Can deliver in thirty days. Pipe Organ, care Moving Picture World, Chicago, Ill.

GREAT CHANCE.—To add grand music and special attraction to your moving picture theater. An Orchestrelle by the Aeolian Co. Handsome instrument in perfect condition. Can be played by hand or with perforated music rolls. Taken for debt. Cost $1,800, will sacrifice for $650, including $200 worth of music. Address for further particulars and photograph, Quick Action, care Moving Picture World, N. Y. City.

ELECTRIC PIANOS.—With keyboards $140. Orchestrian pianos with pipes $250 all guaranteed. Closing out electric piano business. Every picture show has use for one. Send for circular. J. F. Herman 1420 Pa. Ave., Washington, D. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SEE ME FIRST.—Before building your theater. Moving picture theaters a specialty. T. John Folks, Architect, Second National Bank Bldg., Paterson, N. J.

PHOTOPLAY WRITING.—Evening course of three months' instruction in the theory and practice of scenario writing. American Photoplay School, 243 West 125th St., N. Y. City.

Mirroroide Is the World's Best Screen, Bar None

Over 7500 In Use

IT DOES NOT TAKE EITHER SPACE OR WORDS TO SELL AN ARTICLE OF MERIT TO A MAN OF BRAINS

Over 7500 In Use

Let Us Send You Our Large Free Samples.

Test: Compare with any screen on earth—seeing is believing—your own eyes the evidence.

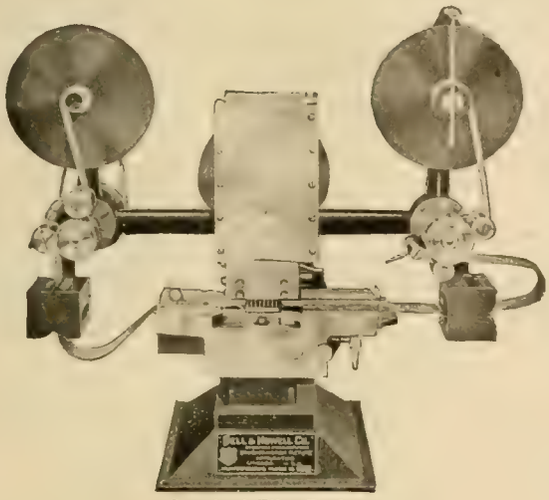
Made in Silver White, Pale Gold and Silver. Flesh in a medium or heavy matt finish. Sold the world over under a positive 5-year guarantee at 33 1-3 to 36 1-9 cents per square foot, $3.00 to $3.25 a square yard—and it's canvas.

AGENCIES IN ALL PRINCIPAL CITIES

THE J. H. GENTER COMPANY, Inc. - - - Newburgh, N. Y.

The B. & H. Film Perforator

Established New and Higher Standards of Accuracy—Uniformity—Speed—Durability



Standard Film Perforator

HAS NO EQUAL IN DESIGN WORKMANSHIP—PERFORMANCE

Used and indorsed by the following:

American Film Manufacturing Company, (3); Centaur Film Company, (3); Crystal Film Company, (2); Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, (10); Eastman Kodak Company, (9); Thos. A. Edison Company, (8); Eclair Film Company, (3); Evans Film Manufacturing Company, (2); Horsley Laboratories, (3); Kalem Company, (7); Kinemacolor Company of America (2); G. Melies, (2); New York Motion Picture Company, (5); Pathé Freres, (2); Reliance Motion Picture Company, (2); Solax Company, (2); Thanhouser Film Corporation, (2); Universal Film Manufacturing Company, (9); Willat Film Manufacturing Company, (12); and many others.

Orders are now being received for Perforators for July and August Delivery. Write for Prices and Further Information.

The Bell & Howell Company, 1803 Larchmont Avenue CHICAGO, ILL

-:- FIRE -:-

IS IMPOSSIBLE WITH

"AGFA" NON-FLAM STOCK

can be shipped either in the raw or finished state through the United States Mails

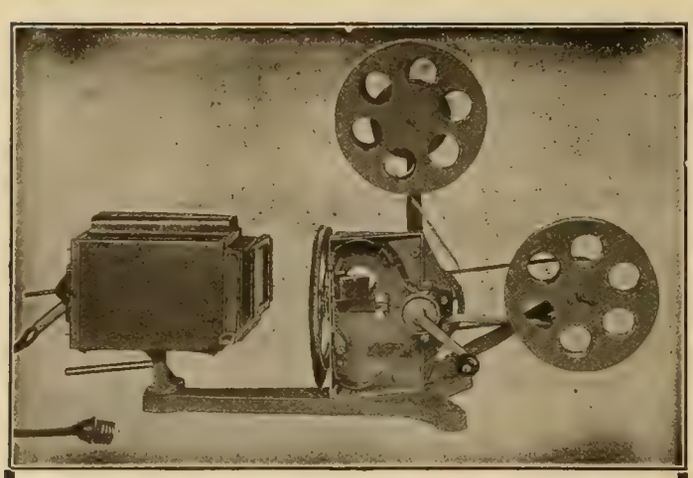
Superior Photographic Qualities

Long Wearing Base Non-Peeling Emulsion

Formulae Book, Samples, etc., Gratis

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO.

Sole American Agents 15 East 26th Street, New York City



THE PHANTOSCOPE

Motion pictures for demonstration and instruction.

They buy it for the service it gives them.

American Tobacco Co.
American Coal Products Co.
Al Bartlett Film Mfg. Co.
Atlantic Screw Works.
Barber Asphalt Paving Co.
Barret Mfg. Co., N. Y.
Barret Mfg. Co., Ala.
Barret Mfg. Co., Chicago.
C. R. Baird Co.
The Battle Creek Sanitarium.
Columbian Optical Co.
Cincinnati Motion Picture Co.
Cellulose Planchon, Inc.
Comet Film Co.
The C. R. Film Co.
C. & I. Film Mfg. Co.
The Coburn Trolley Track Mfg. Co.
Columbus Theatre Equipment Co.
The Claric's Shop.
The Columbia Feature Film Co.
Daines & Nickels.
Eyton Kinetograph Co.
Educational Film Co.
Farish Art Store.
General Film Co.
Grand Trunk Pacific Ry.
The Holt Feature Film Co.
Harold Ives Co., Inc.
Industrial & Domestic Film Co.
Industrial & Educational Film Co.
Knickerbocker Film Mfg. Co.
Laemmle Film Service.
Larkin Co., Buffalo.
Lehigh Portland Cement Co.
Magnet Film Mfg. Co.
Mutual Film Corporation, N. Y.
Mutual Film Corporation, Canada.
Advertisers' Motion Picture Weekly.
Oshkosh Feature Film Co.
The Pastime Amusement Co.
Pacific Film Mfg. Co.
Papier Brothers.
Pennsylvania Ry. Co.
National Lead Co.
Phelps Can Co.
Progressive Film Co.
Royal Photo Film Co.
Runyan Advertising & Sales Co.
Raths & Seavolt.
Repass, Harries & Co.
Superior Film Mfg. Co.
St. Louis Motion Picture Co.
The Social Service League of Mont.
Smallwood Film Corporation.
Theatre Supply Co.
U. S. Film Co.
United Shoe Machinery Co.
Washington Film Exchange.
Washington Railway & Electric Co.
Young's Studio.
Alabama Polytechnic Institute.
Agricultural & Mech. College, of Texas.
Culver Military Academy.
Georgia State College of Agriculture.
Howard University.
Iowa State College Mech. Arts.
International Health Commission.
Kansas State Agricultural College.
Lewiston State Normal School.
Louisiana State University.
Michigan State University.
North Dakota Agricultural Col.
Ohio State University.
N. Y. State College of Agriculture.
Oregon Agricultural College.
Purdue University.
Pennsylvania State College.
State University of W. Va.
South Carolina State College.
University of Oregon.
Utah Agricultural College.
University of Alabama.
University of Nebraska.
University of Wyoming.
Agricultural Experiment Stations.
Virginia Agricultural Exp. Sta.

Phantoscope Mfg. Co.

Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

THE DADMUN FEATURE READY

Exclusive U. S. or State rights for the big three-reel

"Nancy Mine, or Where Life's Cross-Roads Meet."

Fine line pictorial paper.
Write or wire Dadmun, Boston.

In Preparation: "THE SPIRIT OF THE YAQUIS," a series of astounding adventures, enacted with the assistance of the Kolb Bros., the famous explorers of the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

FEATURES OF MERIT

FEATURE PHOTOPLAY CO.

220 West 42nd Street New York City

WANTED

by an independent New York Company a

COMEDY DIRECTOR

who has had experience and who has original ideas

MANUFACTURER XYZ

Moving Picture World
New York City

EYE COMFORT Lighting System

So necessary to the success of every Motion Picture Theatre that we engineer 60 Theatres a month.

This is a free service to Motion Picture Theatre Managers.

Distance Screen to Rear of Auditorium .....
Ceiling Height .....
Width of House .....
Height Under Balcony .....
Distance Rear Auditorium to Front of Balcony.....
Name .....

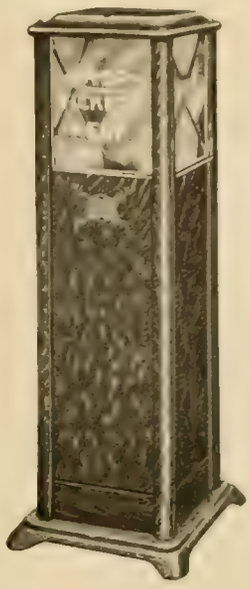
NATIONAL X-RAY REFLECTOR CO.

Chicago—229 W. Jackson Blvd. New York—6 E. 39th St.

Security Ticket Chopper

Yes, Here We Are Again!

and here we will be again and again and again—and, take it from us, we couldn't be here again if we did not have the right stuff, and we would not be here again if we did not sell our stuff, and we would not be here again if the live theatre owners did not recognize the right stuff, and the theatre owner will not be here long if he does not get the right stuff.



Security Ticket Box

The theatre owner who has a carpenter make a rough box for his patrons to drop their tickets in will be laid to rest in a rough box while the man who buys the right stuff will be put to rest in a soft cushioned one with silver trimmings, up-to-date men carrying it and a band to play the lead. The lead—That's it. The live one leads and the others try to follow but they can't for by-n-by they get decrepit and finally with one foot in the hole and the other on a banana peel a live one gives him a little shove and over he goes, and 'tis better so, for we don't want dead ones anyhow. Now, almost dead one, if one of your feet is in the hole and the other is not yet on that banana peel there is still a chance.

Get busy and write us. We will give you the chance

AMUSEMENT SALES CO.

WOODWARD AND WARREN AVENUES, DETROIT, MICH.

Erker's

"The House to tie to"

Every Exhibitor Needs Supplies

We Have Them—Everything You Need

We've Got the Goods—Waiting for Your Orders

Our Catalogues will explain all

E R K E R ' S

608 Olive Street St. Louis, Mo.

KIMBLE FANS

The only alternating current fan that reduces electric current consumption (and consequently ventilating cost) in direct proportion to every speed reduction. Run it at ¼ speed for a small "house" and it uses up only ¼ as much current as when you run it full speed for a packed house. Kimble Ventilation is the most economical—also the most efficient. Write for the Red Catalog and get the facts.

Kimble Electric Co.

633 North Western Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

The Best--TERMINAL--The Bell

Simple in Construction

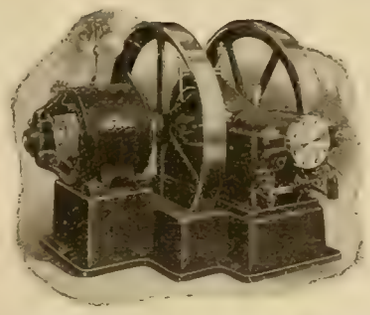
Easy to buy or use

As efficient as terminals costing twice as much

At your exchange or write to manufacturers

THE BELL & HOWELL COMPANY

1803 Larchmont Avenue, Chicago, Illinois



PUT in your own lighting plant and pay for it with your Central Station bills. A Foos generating set will produce current for less than 3 cents per kilowatt, and is more reliable than service from a Central Station.

Ask for Bulletin 98.

The Foos Gas Engine Co.

Springfield, Ohio.

J. SPAULDING & SONS CO.,

Manufacturers of Metal FIBRE LINED Film Cases

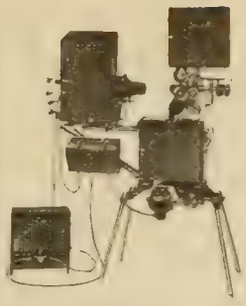
Meet all new requirements of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Prices on request. Address all correspondence A. B. Hodges, Manager, Film Case Department, 448 Broome Street, New York City.

We have facilities to fill all orders promptly.



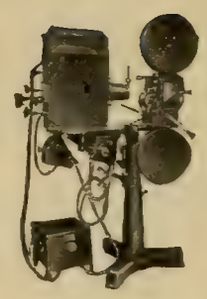
POWERS

You Can't Drive a Nail

with a Sponge no matter how much you soak it.

Don't run that old, eye-straining, business losing machine and keep soaking new parts in it

Be Economical



SIMPLEX

We Equip Motion Picture Theatres Completely

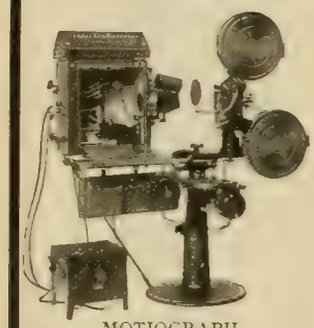
Obtain one of these Modern Machines and save money
We can show you How. Make us prove it
Write, wire or call and

ASK ABOUT THE

Power's 6A
Simplex Projector
Motiograph 1914
Edison's New Model "D"

Headquarters for the Mirroroide Screen

A. C. to D. C. Generators Converters Rectifiers, etc., etc.

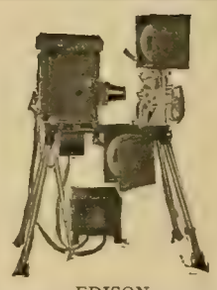


MOTIOGRAPH

Picture Theatre Equipment Co.

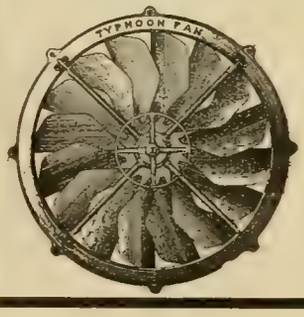
21 East 14th Street, New York City

The Largest Motion Picture Supply House in America



EDISON

VENTILATION COOLING HEATING



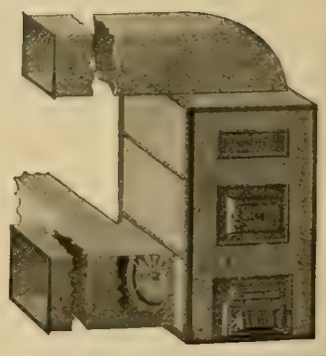
Heating and cooling problem revolutionized by Typhoon System.

You keep cool in front of a desk fan and not in back; apply this common sense and blow the air into your theatre.

A 48" Typhoon Multiblade Blower has sixteen blades, an ordinary exhaust fan has six; it is the blades that do the business.

A Typhoon Tubular Air Warmer will heat and ventilate at the same time.

The low price of effective apparatus will surprise you. Catalogue "W" gives information.



TYPHOON FAN CO. NEW YORK CITY 1544 BROADWAY

THE CARBON FOR PERFECT PROJECTION

ELECTRA

HUGO REISINGER, 11 Broadway NEW YORK

Bargain Prices in State Rights
FOR THE
3 Reel Feature
[WITH LECTURE]

U.S. INVASION OF MEXICO

Pictures taken at Vera Cruz, Puerto and Tampico, since April 22, 1914. A combined educational and war feature that gets the crowds. Shows the havoc war has created—the modes and customs—the beautiful and barbarous.

Southern States Film Company
27 West 7th
Oklahoma City, Okla.

Booking now for
ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN
"Vampires of the Night"
(A Greene photoplay)
In five reels
General Feature Film Co.
5 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Deagan Unaphone
Deagan Octaphone
Deagan Marimbaphone
Deagan Xylophones
Deagan Cathedral Chimes
Deagan Organ Chimes
Deagan Bells
ARE A FEW OF THE MANY MUSICAL ELECTRICAL NOVELTY INSTRUMENTS WE MAKE FOR MOVING PICTURE THEATRES.

All our instruments are played from a piano keyboard. Any piano player or drummer can play them. Easy to install and cheap to maintain. Better than any vaudeville act and costs less. Just the thing to stimulate dull "summer-months-box-office-receipts." Better write today for our Catalogue "F."

J. C. DEAGAN
Deagan Building
1776 Berteau Ave.
CHICAGO, U. S. A.

BEST OF CAMERA MEN
Furnished for all Occasions
CHICAGO FEATURE FILM CO.
4108-22 Lincoln Ave., Chicago, Ill.

PRINTING and DEVELOPING FILM TITLES
Give us a trial. All work guaranteed.
Prompt service. Prices right.
If there is any event that you want photographed, we can furnish expert camera men.
STANDARD MOTION PICTURE CO.
Phone, Central 2853, 5 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

We Buy and Sell Second Hand Films and Moving Picture Machines
WESTERN FILM BROKERS
37 So. Wabash Avenue - Chicago, Ill.

TYPE W FLAME ARC
Powerful LAMPS Economical
For brilliantly illuminating the outside of your theatre
General Electric Company
General Office, Schenectady, N. Y.

Northern Feature Film Exchange
Suite 405, Schiller Building, Chicago
Phone Central 6229

Please Tell Them You Saw it in
THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD
When Answering Advertisements

THE MOTIOGRAPH 1914 MODEL IS A LEADER for Rock Steady Pictures, Long Life, and Small Up-keep

MR. EXHIBITOR—Y u cannot take a chance on a machine that is not made of the best material and with parts hardened. Competition is too keen. Every nickel and dime counts. You want a machine that is on the job at all times. The Motiograph is a money saver as well as the best picture projector made. Let us prove it.

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 West Randolph St., Chicago.
Eastern Office: 21 E. 14th St., New York City. Western Office: 833 Market St., San Francisco.

BOOKINGS AND OPEN TERRITORY FOR

"THE SPOILERS"

For the States of

OHIO, WISCONSIN, MICHIGAN, INDIANA and ILLINOIS

(EXCEPT COOK COUNTY)

WRITE OR WIRE

F. O. NIELSEN, 720 Schiller Building CHICAGO, ILL.

WE EQUIP YOUR THEATRE COMPLETE

Edison, Powers, Simplex, Motiograph and Edengraph Machines and Genuine Parts.

Photo and Poster Frames, Indirect Lighting Fixtures, Curtains and Screens, Rebuilt Machines, etc. Cash or Time. Send for catalog today.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY
160A No. Fifth Ave. - - - Chicago

DEVELOPING and PRINTING

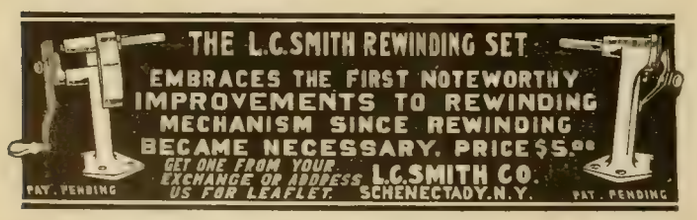
carefully done for professionals and amateurs
The largest factory in the world devoted exclusively to
Manufacturing Commercial Moving Pictures
Prices and factory description sent at your request

INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE CO.
Watterson R. Rothacker, Gen. Mgr.
223-233 West Erie Street, Chicago

THE BIOSCOPE

Oldest Moving Picture Paper in Great Britain and the Best Advertising Medium, Bar None.

Yearly Subscription, $3.50. Single copies, 10 cents, Post Free
85 Shaftesbury Avenue LONDON, W., ENGLAND



THE L.C.SMITH REWINDING SET
EMBRACES THE FIRST NOTEWORTHY IMPROVEMENTS TO REWINDING MECHANISM SINCE REWINDING BECAME NECESSARY. PRICE $5.00
GET ONE FROM YOUR EXCHANGE OR ADDRESS US FOR LEAFLET.
L.C.SMITH CO. SCHENECTADY.N.Y.
PAT. PENDING
PAT. PENDING

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

UTILITY TRANSPARENCY CO.
1733 West 9th Street Brooklyn, N. Y.

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"

The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

Orchestra Music
FOR MOVING PICTURES

The Orpheum Collection of dramatic and descriptive music for Piano and seven orchestra parts. Piano can be used alone. In two series:

No. 1 and No. 2

Piano, 58 cts. each. Both series, $1.15. Violin, 40 cts. each; both 75 cts. Cello-&-Bass same price as violin. Flute 35 cts. each. Both series, 65 cts. Clarinet, Cornet and Trombone same price as Flute. Drums, 30 cts. each. Both series, 55 cts.

Send for free sample page and further discounts; 3d series ready for piano only; 58 cts.

CLARENCE E. SINN
1501 SEDGWICK ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

FILM MAKING OUTFITS

for Professional Film Work, for the Manufacturer, Traveler, Explorer, Scientist and Private. The well-known fool-proof Junior Camera, 200 feet capacity; Tripods, Tilts, Printers, Developing Outfits, Projectors, Lenses, Polishers, Measurers, Menders, Winders. Special Film Work. Quick, reliable repair.

Establ. 20 years. Largest Inst. in U. S.
EBERHARD SCHNEIDER
219 Second Ave. New York

Ornamental Theatres
PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs.

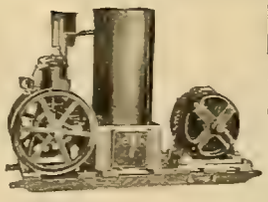
THE DECORATORS SUPPLY CO.
Archer Ave. and Leo St., CHICAGO, ILL.

COMPENSARC

That's the device that saves Moving Picture men two-thirds on their electric light bills, and yet gives better light. Did you see our ad last week? Well, don't look it up. Just write for our

BOOKLET 15918

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
of General Electric Company
1402 Broadway
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA
733



MOVING PICTURE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT

Used and highly endorsed by the United States Army. Biggest Sensation in the Moving Picture World. Can be operated by a boy 10 years old. One customer writes:

"Plant running like a top and delivering the 'juice' right along every day for our moving picture house. Costs us about one-tenth as much as public service. Also pumps water to all our buildings, 2,000 gallons per day."

Write today for Bulletin 101. It is a mighty interesting booklet.

(163) DETROIT ENGINE WORKS, Dept. 102, DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A.

Manufacturers of the Wonderful
REMBUSCH PATENTED GLASS MIRROR SCREEN

And all other kinds of Curtains for Moving Picture Projection, White Opaque, Glass Transparent Screens for Rear Projection, Goldcloth Fibre Screens, Mirrorcloth Fibre Screens, Seamless with Stretchers or Rollers.

Phone Seven-Eleven F. J. REMBUSCH, Pres.

MIRROR SCREEN COMPANY, INC.
SHELBYVILLE, INDIANA

"The first big Mirror Screen went into the Empire Theatre in Detroit, Mich. It is in use yet and I will forfeit $1000.00 if you can beat it. It is six years old. Think, six years old."

Nine different finishes. For wide or narrow houses.

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"

The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature

IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

THE BRIGHT WHITE LIGHT

(CALCIUM EFFECT)
so Desirable for Moving Picture Projections is ONLY produced with

BIO CARBONS

They Are
"The Carbons You Want"

Charles L. Kiewert Co.

NEW YORK 165 Greenwich St. | MILWAUKEE 114 Huron St. | SAN FRANCISCO 143 Second St.

OUR TERRITORY
ILLINOIS
WISCONSIN
NEBRASKA
INDIANA
KENTUCKY
MICHIGAN
OHIO
IOWA

OUR FEATURES

Sealed Orders
Neptune's Daughter
Brewster's Millions
The Squaw Man
Love Everlasting
Harry Lauder
The Three Musketeers
The Banker's Daughter
A Message From Mars
The Battle of Waterloo
Rainey's Hunt
Victory
The Divine Appeal
A Paradise Lost
Life of Richard Wagner
East Lynne
Mystery of the Fatal Pearl
The Vicar of Wakefield
Fatality and Mystery

Special Prices During July and August.
Some Excellent Territory on Some of These Features Is Offered.

Celebrated Players Film Co.

LEADERS IN FILMDOM'S PROGRESS
64 W. RANDOLPH STREET, Schiller Building CHICAGO, ILL.

Purchasing an UNDERWOOD TYPEWRITER means
A satisfied operator — Distinctive work
A pleased employer — And a short day
Speed — Accuracy — Stability
Exclusive features, proved by winning every International Contest, stamp the UNDERWOOD as supreme

UNDERWOOD
"The Machine You Will Eventually Buy"

Your negative developed, printed and titled complete
5c. per foot
Delivered within 12 hours
Titles 6c. per foot
GUNBY BROS., Inc., 145 West 45th St., N. Y. City.

NO SATURATOR · NO ETHER · NO OXONE
NO EXPENSIVE CHEMICALS
EXHIBITORS BEST FRIEND
NEVER FAILS
OZO-CARBI
BRIGHTEST MOVING PICTURE LIGHT
1/3 Brighter THAN CALCIUM AT HALF THE COST
PATENTED
GREATEST LIGHT OF THE AGE · A SCIENTIFIC FACT · OLD LIGHTS IN EXCHANGE
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 714 MASONIC TEMPLE · CHICAGO.

"PAVE WITH CONCRETE—NOT WITH GOOD INTENTIONS"

Your intentions are not right if you are looking for the cheapest you can find. If your intentions are not right you're doomed. This is the day of real things. The "make believes"—the substitutes—the cheap things—are left for the cheap. The "road down the hill" is strewn with them.

"IF YOU'RE GOING DOWN HILL—SEE THAT YOUR BRAKES ARE WORKING."

"THE PEERLESS" —THE DAY and NIGHT SCREEN— "THE PIONEER"

—IS—

THE ONE SCREEN OF QUALITY—THE ONE REAL SCREEN—
"THE HONEST SCREEN FOR THE HONEST EXHIBITOR"

YOU CAN BUY IT ON YOUR OWN TERMS!

MAIN OFFICE, 291 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. TELEPHONE 1951 WORTH

Branch Offices and Distributing Centers at
PHILADELPHIA, NEW ORLEANS, ATLANTA, EL PASO, MEMPHIS, KANSAS CITY, DES MOINES, SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES, SEATTLE, PARIS, BERLIN, LONDON

Non-Breakable and Sanitary STEEL — HIGH Quality
LOW Price — and CAST IRON

Opera Chairs
immediate shipment on many styles; Second Hand Chairs; out-of-door seating. Send measurements for FREE SEATING PLAN. Mention this paper.

STEEL FURNITURE CO.
Grand Rapids, Mich.; New York, 150 Fifth Ave. Pittsburgh, 318 Bissell Blk.; Boston, 69 Pearl St.

REAL QUALITY CHAIRS
FOR QUALITY REEL SHOWS

Ask for FREE booklet V-2 upholstered Veneer Seating V-3

If you are interested in Motion Picture Theatre Seating

send ground sketch and we will draf for you FREE seating plan showing the most economical arrangement of seating for your theatre.

American Seating Co.
Display Rooms and Installation Service
14 E. Jackson Blvd., CHICAGO 15 E. 32nd St., NEW YORK
Pittsburg, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Forty Other Large Cities

---

Steel Standards will not break

STEEL OR IRON STANDARDS

AGENCIES:
H. S. Ansley, 1476 B'way, Long Acre Bldg., New York City. 'Phone 5619 Bryant
California Seating Company, 720 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, Cal.
H. A. Johnson Seating Company, 1214½ Third Ave., Seattle, Wash.

THE WISCONSIN SEATING COMPANY
New London, Wis., U. S. A.

OPERA CHAIRS

FOR EVERY PURPOSE
1,000 STYLES
ESTABLISHED 1865
WRITE FOR CAT. NO. 31

The A. H. Andrews Co.
115-117 So. Wabash Ave.
Chicago, Ill.
Branches in all Leading Cities
New York Office
1472 Broadway, Long Acre Bldg.
Seattle Office
508-10-12 First Ave., So.
San Francisco Office
782 Mission St.

OPERA CHAIRS
Latest and Best in Seats

SEND FOR OUR PRICES BEFORE BUYING
BENNETT SEATING CO
537 West Market St.
LOUISVILLE, KY.

The "Standardized" Theatre Chairs

Do you want a life-saving chair?
Do you want a space-saving chair?
Do you want a sanitary chair?
Do you want a scientifically built, double standard chair?

We operate the largest exclusive theatre chair factory in the world, AND SELL DIRECT TO YOU. WRITE US

The HARDESTY MFG. CO., Canal Dover, Ohio

Thousands Have Convinced Themselves
That the Best Way to Sell Any Motion Picture Commodity Is to ADVERTISE IN THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD
A WORD TO THE WISE IS SUFFICIENT!

"THE BLACK TRIANGLE"

The Powerful Five Reel Detective Feature
IT'LL MAKE YOU FORGET THE HEAT

The Majestic Motion Picture Company

Will Release Sunday, July 26,

An Unusual and Thrilling Detective Story

In Two Parts

The Mystery of The Hindu Image

COMING SOON

Mae Marsh

and

Robert Harron

in a two part drama

"MOONSHINE MOLLY"

By H. R. DURANT

whose short stories appear regularly in the magazines.

Paul West's "Bill the Office Boy" series are announced for release as "KOMIC" features as follows:

No. 1—BILL'S JOB, Sunday, July 5

No. 2—HOW BILL SQUARED IT FOR HIS BOSS, Sunday, July 19

No. 3—BILL TAKES A LADY TO LUNCH, Sunday, Aug. 2

Others to follow

MAE MARSH
Who appears exclusively in Majestic releases and "Griffith" special features.

The Majestic Guide for Exhibitors

(In which we endeavor to tell only the truth about all Majestic releases)

THE OLD DERELICT (1 reel) release date Tuesday, July 14. An extremely appealing story by Mary Rider Mechtold (author of "The Mountain Rat" and many other motion pictures and magazine short stories), fairly well presented by the director, but not quite as well done as we should have liked.

THE PAINTED LADY (2 reels) release date Sunday, July 19. Featuring Blanche Sweet and Dorothy Gish in a well-produced drama of unusual strength, adapted from Charles S. Thompson's short story in "The Cavalier" magazine.

A RED MAN'S HEART (1 reel) release date Tuesday, July 21. Adapted from Walter Archer Frost's short story. A picture of telling strength well presented with a strong cast of Majestic players.

LEST WE FORGET (1 reel) release date Friday, July 24. Well acted and rather interesting, though not quite equal to what we would like Majestics to always be.

THE MYSTERY OF THE HINDU IMAGE (2 reels) release date Sunday, July 26. We believe this release will prove a remarkable offering but will tell you more definitely next week.

D. W. GRIFFITH supervises all Majestic Productions

STUDIO
4500 Sunset Blvd.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Majestic Motion Picture Co.

BUSINESS OFFICES
29 Union Square West,
New York City.

THE HOUSE OF SELIG

SELIG LEADS OTHERS FOLLOW

SELIG CREATES OTHERS IMITATE

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial

SEMI-WEEKLY SERVICE

FIRST IN WAR,
FIRST IN PEACE
FIRST IN POPULARITY

All Big News Happenings All Over the World in Pictures

Special Lithographed Posters

Released Mondays and Thursdays

ORDER FROM YOUR EXCHANGE

A Woman Laughs

RELEASED JULY 20th.

And Now "The Spoilers"

Biggest money maker on the market.

Biggest success in the biggest cities.

Biggest crowds ever congregated.

Biggest photoplay from Rex Beach's biggest book.

Desirable territory still open. Write for particulars at once. Do not miss this chance.

NOTE: We are booking "THE SPOILERS" direct. Address: The Selig Polyscope Co., General Offices 20 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

IN TWO REELS.

A WOMAN LAUGHS

Mockery of a Coquette

FEATURING KATHLYN WILLIAMS AND CHARLES CLARY.

RELEASED JULY 20th

A big SELIG two-reel drama, in which a woman's mockery of an honest man causes a tragedy.

The Lure of the Ladies

Astonishing Adventures of an Idler.

RELEASED JULY 21st.

A jolly comedy, full of laughs, telling the adventures of a club fellow and idler, who wants to marry every pretty girl he meets.

The Substitute Heir

It Was Surprisingly Black.

RELEASED JULY 24th.

One of humorist Roy L. McCardell's funniest comedies, depicting the laughable incidents which take place when a black baby is substituted for an heir to a millionaire.

The Sealed Package

A Mystery of Missing Diamonds.

RELEASED JULY 22nd.

The story of a mistake, which almost cost a young man his lady-love, but which ends happily when a missing package of diamonds turns up.

Footprints

The Trail of a Somnambulist.

RELEASED JULY 25th.

Relating the astonishing events which follow the taking of a diamond necklace by a sleep-walker. A particularly interesting and enjoyable story.

ALL RELEASES THROUGH GENERAL FILM CO.

4-Color Posters for Advertising

SELIG posters the brightest and best for publicity. Artistically printed in four colors. One-sheets on all releases; one-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets on all multiple reels.

ORDER THROUGH GENERAL FILM CO.

"The Adventures of Kathlyn"

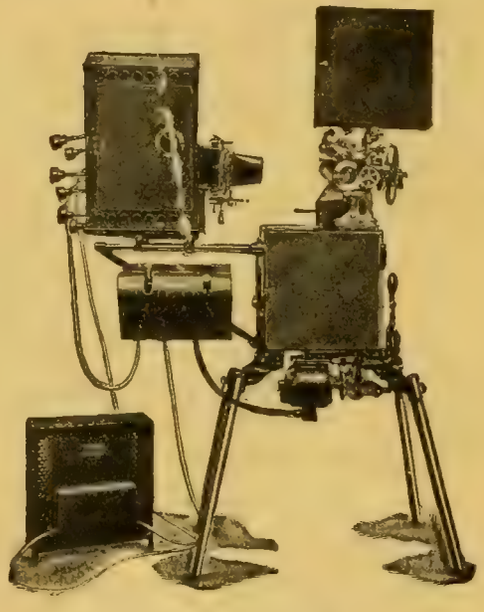
If you have not used this picture, the most extensively advertised production the world has ever seen, write at once for full printed story, full book-size, FREE.

SEND YOUR REQUEST AT ONCE

THE WORLDS FOREMOST PRODUCER

Perfect Picture Projection

For over seventeen years we have given our undivided attention to the scientific building of motion picture projecting apparatus with the result that over seventy per cent of the entire trade use



Power's Cameragraph No. 6A

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH

No. 6A

The Perfect Projecting Machine

Send for Catalog G

Nicholas Power Company

Ninety Gold Street, New York City

Vol. 21, No. 4 July 25, 1914 Price 10 Cents

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

THE FILM INDEX

EXHIBITORS' GUIDE

Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale" (All-Star).

Post Office Box 226
Madison Square Station

NEW YORK

17 Madison Avenue
Telephone Madison Square 3510

Flo LaBadie as the heroine in "The Million Dollar Mystery."

Intensely Dramatic

Every episode—every scene—of The Million Dollar Mystery throbs with human emotion. The intensely dramatic situations cleverly portrayed by beautiful Florence LaBadie are exceptional examples of the motion picture art.

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY

By Harold MacGrath

Thanhouser's Million Dollar Motion Picture Production

The most exciting thrills in this stupendous production are still to come. Under-water pictures, Flo LaBadie's dive off an ocean liner, a fire at sea, the dash of an automobile over a cliff—these are a few of the thrills coming. Remember, $10,000 will be paid for the best 100-word solution of The Million Dollar Mystery.

2-reel episodes of The Million Dollar Mystery are now being released every week. The Million Dollar Mystery is an independent release and may be obtained regardless of the regular program being used.

SYNDICATE FILM CORPORATION

71 W. 23rd St., New York 166 W. Washington St., Chicago

or Syndicate Film Corporation Representative at Any Mutual Exchange in the United States and Canada.

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

Sunday, July 19th—"Harry's Waterloo." A side splitting comedy in which Harry Benham plays all the parts.

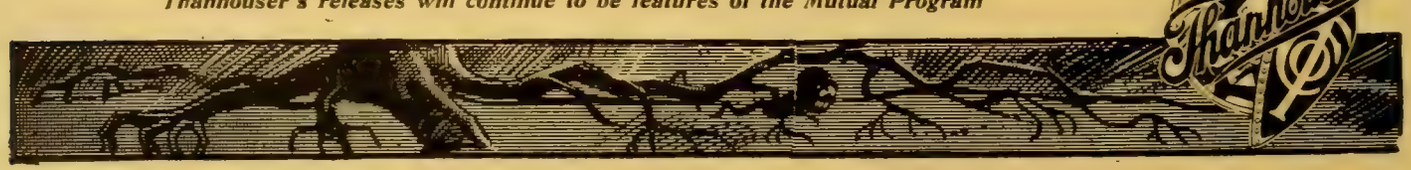
Tuesday, July 21st—"The Pendulum of Fate." An exceptionally good two-reel drama bringing out the talents of the Thanhouser Twins, Marion and Mandeline Fairbanks. Also included in the cast are Mignon Anderson, Ethyle Cooke, Morris Foster, Dave Thompson and Riley Chamberlin.

36

THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION, New Rochelle, N. Y.

Head European Office, Thanhouser Films, Ltd., London, W. C., England

Thanhouser's releases will continue to be features of the Mutual Program



ESSANAY

Superlative and Aristocratic Features

MILLIONS ARE LAUGHING

GEORGE ADE'S

photoplay comedy series is being enjoyed by every person who attends the motion picture theatres.

The Fable of

"THE COMING CHAMPION WHO WAS DELAYED"

will be released July 29th. Your audiences are waiting for it.

Released Monday, July 27th

"SWEEDIE AND THE LORD."

One of the funniest of the "Sweedie" series.

Released Tuesday, July 28th

"A CLASH OF VIRTUES"

A drama of Wall Street. Adapted from The Munsey Magazines.

Released Thursday, July 30th

"SNAKEVILLE'S HOME GUARD"

One of the funniest of the Snakeville photo-farces showing "Slippery Slim" as a "reel" hero.

Released Friday, July 31st

"THE SEVENTH PRELUDE"

(In Two Acts)

By Lillian Bennet-Thompson

An unusually interesting detective story adapted from The Munsey Magazines.

Released Saturday, August 1st

"THE SQUATTER'S GAL."

A dramatic story of love and the battle of a squatter for his Western home.
Featuring G. M. ANDERSON.

THE GREATEST PHOTOPLAY DRAMA OF THE DAY

"ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT."

(In Four Acts)

(RELEASED THROUGH THE GENERAL FILM COMPANY'S FEATURE DEPARTMENT SATURDAY, JULY 18th)

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

is at his best in this wonderful mystery play of heart throbs and dire deeds. Thousands read the serial novel written by Louis Tracy. It is the biggest feature of its kind ever produced in a photoplay.

Essanay Film Manufacturing Company

521 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Factory and studio: 1333 Argyle St., Chicago, Ill. Branch offices in London, Paris, Berlin, Barcelona

The Two

(Now on the

Here's a pair of heroes of the juvenile world that w swarms! This is the first effort made by the film n loving youth of America, and, as usual, it is the Univ

MATTY ROUBERT

"THE UNIVERSAL BOY"

"Little Matty" has been known as the most precocious photopl actor on the American screen. For over two years he charm Universal patrons by his delightful delineations of juvenile charact in Powers comedies. Now the Universal is featuring him in a ne series of pictures, entitled "THE UNIVERSAL BOY," which m best be described as a Comedy-Travelogue. The first installment released under the Imp brand on Thursday, July 16, and shows Mat at the ball game at the Polo Field in New York City, hobnobbi with John McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, and lat he meets Annette Kellermann, queen of the sea.

In the forthcoming series, which will be released every ot Thursday, Matty will meet all the celebrities of the day, including Ba ney Oldfield, Col. Roosevelt, Oscar Hammerstein, the Secretary War, Lindley M. Garrison; the Cornell rowing crew; the leaders the Boy Scouts, and all of the personages that are nearest the hea of the wideawake American boy. They will hold the boys in breat less interest.

Book These Great Attra

Don't wait until your competitor has frozen you out, bu particulars about "The Universal Boy" and the Ch

Universal Film Manu

Carl Laemmle, Pres. The largest film manufacturing concern in the univer

Matties!!

Universal Program)

"Young America" into your theatre in never-ending acturers to cater particularly to the manly, sport-that Leads the way!

CHRISTY MATHEWSON

"PREMIER PITCHER OF THE WORLD"

"Matty," or "Big Six," as Christy Mathewson, the star pitcher of New York Giants is affectionately called, is the popular idol of ry American boy between the ages of six and sixty. The tre-ndous drawing power of the originator of the "fadeaway" has n well demonstrated during his appearance in vaudeville. Besides ng an all-round athlete, he is an actor of no mean ability.

After much persuasion, and strong financial inducement, the Uni-sal has finally obtained his contract to appear upon the screen lusively in Big U attractions. Matty will begin to pose immedi-ly, for a series of photoplays dealing with incidents in his life as mpion athlete. Everyone will want to see them. Remember, they appear exclusively on the Universal Program.

ons For Your Patrons

ire now to your nearest Universal Exchange for full Mathewson Series.

acturing Company

00 Broadway at 48th Street, New York City

WEATHER
Always Fair

Every City Daily

UNIVERSAL MOVING PICTURES

Every Paper—everywhere will carry the story of

THE TREY O' HEARTS

By Louis Joseph Vance

70 Million People will see it —
Will your Theatre be one to accommodate the Crowd?

The Nearest Universal Exchange will book you Now!!

"Use the Brains God Gave You"

Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

Carl Laemmle, Pres.

1600 Broadway New York

KAY-BEE

KAY-BEE FEATURES

The Sheriff of Bisbee - - 2 parts, Friday, July 24th
An Eleventh Hour Reformation," " " " 31st
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

KAY-BEE

DOMINO

DOMINO WINNERS

Jim Cameron's Wife, 2 parts, Thursday, July 23rd
The Curse of Caste, " " " " 30th
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

DOMINO

BRONCHO

BRONCHO HEADLINERS

Shorty and the Aridville Terror, 2 parts, Wed., July 22d
The Long Feud, - - - - " " " " 29th
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

BRONCHO

KEYSTONE

KEYSTONE COMEDIES

Three comedies a week

Monday, Wednesday and Saturday release days

MACK SENNETT, Director-General

KEYSTONE COMEDIES

KEYSTONE

Photos 8 by 10 Photos of players mentioned below can be had by sending to the Publicity Dept. 15 cents for one; 50 cents for sets of four; $1.00 for sets of eight.

MACK SENNETT
MABEL NORMAND
CHARLES CHAPLIN
ROSCOE ARBUCKLE
HARRY G. KEENAN
"BARNEY" SHERRY
RICHARD STANTON
J. FRANK BURKE

THOS. H. INCE
GRETCHEN LEDERER
MARGARET THOMPSON
TSURU AOKI
SESSUE HAYAKAWA
ROY LAIDLAW
CLARA WILLIAMS
JAY HUNT
JOHN KELLER
WEBSTER CAMPBELL
W. S. HART
WALTER EDWARDS
GERTRUDE CLAIRE
MILDRED HARRIS
"SHORTY" HAMILTON
CHARLES RAY
WALTER BELASCO
FRANK BORZAGE
THOS. CHATTERTON
LEONA HUTTON
RHEA MITCHELL
JEROME STORM

A set of 8 by 10 Photos of Keystone Mabel, in four different poses, 50 cents

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORP.

LONG ACRE BLDG., 42nd STREET and BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

ALBERT BLINKHORN PRESENTS

A THREE-REEL PHOTOPLAY DRAMA ENTITLED

THE TRAGEDY OF BASIL GRIEVE

THE STORY OF AN AMBITIOUS WOMAN WHO MARRIES AN AUTHOR FOR HIS NAME AND MONEY
A TRAGIC STORY TOLD IN A GRUESOMELESS MANNER

THREE PARTS

SOME TERRITORY STILL OPEN

THE CRY OF THE CAPTIVE

A PLEASING PRODUCTION OF HEPWORTH EXCELLENCE

TWO PARTS

WELL RECEIVED WHEREVER SHOWN

A THROW OF THE DICE

A STIRRING DRAMA OF INDUSTRIAL STRIFE

TWO PARTS

SPLIT REEL COMEDIES

ONCE ABOARD THE LUGGER — POORLUCK MINDS THE SHOP

HEPWORTH AMERICAN FILM CORPORATION

110-112 West 40th St. — A. BLINKHORN, Pres. — NEW YORK CITY

ECLIPSE-URBAN FILM COMPANY

PRESENTS

TO THE STATE RIGHT BUYER THE TWO-PART DRAMA ENTITLED

THE JOKE THAT KILLS

A VIVID PORTRAYAL OF LIFE BEHIND THE FOOTLIGHTS AND A STORY THAT INTERESTS THROUGHOUT

TWO PARTS

A SINGLE REEL BARNET-PARKER DRAMA!

WHO WAS THE THIEF?

A CLEVER SOLUTION OF A PROFOUND MYSTERY
FEATURING THE RENOWNED DETECTIVE OF FICTION, BARNET-PARKER

THIS SINGLE REEL COMEDY IS A SCREAM

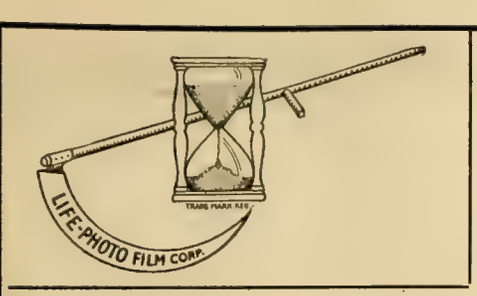
FAINT HEART NEVER WON FAIR LADY

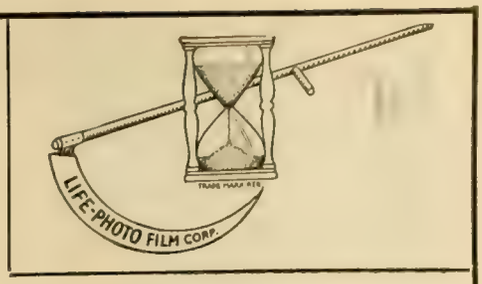
THE EXPERIENCES OF A BASHFUL BUT DETERMINED SUITOR

SOME TERRITORY STILL OPEN FOR THE TWO REEL DRAMAS,
"THE MYSTERY OF GREEN PARK" AND "THE BIRD OF PREY"

ECLIPSE-URBAN FILM COMPANY

110-112 West 40th St. — Telephone 3095 Bryant — NEW YORK CITY





THE GREYHOUND

FIVE PARTS

By Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner

Scenario by Louis Reeves Harrison

the dean of photo playwrights.

An unusual drama produced on a realistic and massive scale.

Reports from exhibitors show that this feature is bringing box office returns in excess of any 5-part feature on the market today.

Read the criticisms.

State rights now selling—the best territory still unsold.

Beautiful lithographs, heralds, lobby display and other advertising matter.

Wire territory interested in and we will wire our terms.

OUR NEXT PRODUCTION

NORTHERN LIGHTS

We produce only plays that have created a success on the legitimate stage.

LIFE PHOTO FILM CORPORATION

Executive Offices, 220 West 42nd Street, New York

European Office: 7, Rupert Ct., London W. Studio and Laboratory: Grantwood, N. J.

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

"The Scales of Justice," with a notable cast and excellent mounting

DANIEL FROHMAN
Presents
The Famous Drama of Love, Duty and the Law,

"THE SCALES OF JUSTICE"

By John Reinhart,
With
PAUL McALLISTER,
Supported By
JANE FEARNLEY

A serious drama, with terrific action, impelled by a mighty motive.

IN FIVE REELS RELEASED JULY 20th

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

FAMOUS PLAYERS

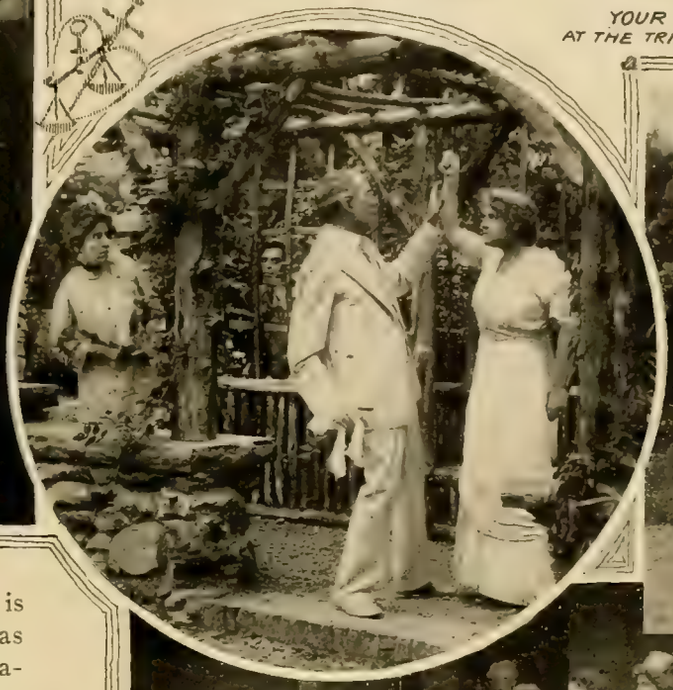
EXECUTIVE OFFICES
213-229 W. 26th STREET
NEW YORK

COMING:
"The Better Man"
with
William Courtleigh

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

"IF YOU MARRY ME, I WILL CONCEAL THE EVIDENCE AGAINST YOU!"

THE UNSEEN OBSERVERS.



"I WILL PROVE YOUR INNOCENCE AT THE TRIAL TO-MORROW!"

THE ACCUSERS

"he Scales of Justice" is of the strongest dramas woven about the legal ma- ery that sometimes fastens oils upon the innocent and nits the guilty to go un- cted. The story, in which young district attorney ws honor, position and in the scales against a an's love, is distinctly l. How love conquers a nd is stronger than death, rillingly developed in the re.

FILM COMPANY

ADOLPH ZUKOR, President

DANIEL FROHMAN, Managing Director EDWIN S. PORTER, Technical Director

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

WORLD'S LARGEST

SAWYER INC.

FILM MART

1600 BROADWAY-NEW YORK

It's an old saying:

"Lightning never strikes twice in the same place."

Don't know about that, but WE DO KNOW that the

LIGHTNING

CONDUCTOR, WITH DUSTIN FARNUM,

STRUCK

THREE DIFFERENT AND WIDELY SEPARATED PLACES AT ONCE,

KANSAS

AT TOPEKA,

ARKANSAS

AT FT. SMITH,

CONNECTICUT

AT STAMFORD,

AND, IN ALL LIKELIHOOD, IT WILL STRIKE TWICE IN THE SAME PLACE—RETURN DATES!!

LOOK!

Sawyer, Inc.

Dear Sirs:—We desire to inform you "The Lightning Conductor" gave the utmost satisfaction to our people, and we want you to give us a return date soon. * * *

Yours very truly,
EMPRESS THEATER,
July 7th, 1914. Ft. Smith, Ark.

LOOK!

Sawyer, Inc.

Gentlemen:—We take it for granted that you will be very much pleased to learn that "The Lightning Conductor" made a decided hit at our theater. We played to capacity at all showings and hundreds were turned away. Many of our patrons are asking for a return showing, about which I will see you later.

Yours very truly,
COLONIAL AMUSEMENT CO.,
July 13th, 1914. Stamford, Conn.

LOOK!

Sawyer, Inc.

Dear Sirs:—"The Lightning Conductor" is a splendid picture and universally pleased my audiences. Yet the receipts failed to pay my expenses by $7.55. I am not complaining, however, as I am trying to build the Iris up to a high standard, and I feel that my loss was a good investment. I will take the matter up soon for a return date. Yours truly,

H. Grady Montgomery,
IRIS THEATER,
July 8th, 1914. Topeka, Kan.

Hundreds of Letters on file in our offices from tickled Exhibitors everywhere.
[Regards to all the wiseacres]

BOOKED DIRECT TO EXHIBITORS FROM ALL SAWYER OFFICES

WORLD'S LARGEST

SAWYER INC.

FILM MART

1600 BROADWAY-NEW YORK

NOW READY!

The first Mexican war story dealing with the all too well-known deadly Mexican "Snipers" whose treacherous methods of warfare have startled the civilized world

"The Mexican Sniper's Revenge"

IN THREE PARTS

A most wonderfully interesting and extremely exciting feature, full of go and action through every foot of film.

FULL LINE OF PAPER THAT WILL PACK ANY THEATER

THE LAMBS GAMBOL
3 Parts
A Topical Feature, showing this celebrated actors' organization on their recent whirlwind tour. Nine stars that have never before been seen in any one picture, and is rightly termed The Million Dollar Feature. Produced at the Strand Theater, New York.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

NELL GWYNNE
5 Parts
Featuring Nellie Stuart, Australian leading emotional actress. Miss Stuart was paid the largest cash bonus ever given to any individual to pose for one picture.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

Sir Henry Irving's Greatest Success
THE BELLS
4 Parts
As played by this eminent actor for forty years.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

JOSEPH and His Coat of Many Colors
6 Parts
Without question the most intense biblical photo play ever produced. Beautifully photographed. We do not hesitate to pronounce it the equal of, if not better than any other. John Sainpolis as "Joseph."
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

THE QUEEN OF THE SMUGGLERS
4 Parts
A melodramatic story taken from real life and founded on fact.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

SAVED BY THE BOYS IN BLUE
3 Parts
A rattling good picture full of action every minute with Uncle Sam's Boys "Johnny on the Spot" as usual.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

THE CONVICT HERO
3 Parts
A thrilling photo play of the life and adventures of Rufus Dawes, showing the whipping post, the capture of the ship by the mutinous convicts, and the drawing of lots by the castaways as to who shall be sacrificed for food.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

BATTLE OF VERA CRUZ
2 Parts
The first picture ever taken of a real battle. Not an inch of this film is faked. A very wonderful picture.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

THE BUSHRANGER'S BRIDE
3 Parts
An exciting feature of wild life in Australia.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

LATEST SOCIETY DANCES
Featuring All the New Steps by the Favorite Society Dancers
A. BALDWIN SLOANE and GRACE FIELD
One Reel Topical
Showing all the latest dancing steps and teaching same by moving pictures. A decided novelty.
BOOKING ONLY.

WHITE DOVE'S SACRIFICE
3 Parts
A fine western with a very exciting scene in which the heroine is pursued and treed by a grizzly.
STATE RIGHTS or Rental.

TO BE RELEASED IN AUGUST
THE MYSTERY OF THE HANSOM CAB
3 Parts

NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND
4 Parts

BOOK DIRECT WITH SAWYER

Write or wire SAWYER now. Get on SAWYER'S books. Book your features direct, and save the middleman's profits. SAWYER'S System Saves the Exhibitor Money.

OFFICES BEING ESTABLISHED EVERYWHERE.

There is a thrilling touch, an artistic value to Eclectic features which give them that added something necessary to make them stand head and shoulders above the ordinary so-called features. Eclectic features make friends wherever shown.

5 PARTS

WHEN ROME RULED

5 PARTS

This is an exceptionally strong dramatic story of the trials of the early Christians in the land controlled by the priests of the gods worshipped by the Romans. The story has different plot to any other and is rich in situations that will make your patrons sit up and take notice. Especially is this true where the lion jumps down from the rocks and carries off a live sheep from the herd. This is a Pathe-made drama featuring some of the best Pathe artists in a very beautiful scenic and historical feature.

ECLECTIC FEATURE FILM EXCHANGES FOR YOUR USE.

ATLANTA
Rhodes Bldg.
NEW YORK
115 E. 23rd St.
SALT LAKE CITY
68 South Main St.
SEATTLE
810 Third Ave.

BOSTON
3 Tremont Row
PITTSBURGH
715 Liberty Ave.
CLEVELAND
622 Prospect Av.,S.E.
OMAHA
1312 Farnam St.

CHICAGO
5 So. Wabash Ave.
SAN FRANCISCO
67 Turk St.
PORTLAND
392 Burnside Ave.

DALLAS
Andrews Bldg.
ST. LOUIS
3210 Locust St.
PHILADELPHIA
1235 Vine St.

LOS ANGELES
114 E. 7th St.
SYRACUSE
214 E. Fayette St.
WASHINGTON
7th & E Sts., N. W.
DENVER
Nassau Bldg.

MINNEAPOLIS
4th & Hennepin Sts.
CINCINNATI
217 E. 5th St.
NEW ORLEANS
910 Gravier St.
KANSAS CITY
928 Main St.

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

This Is The One Serial Film Which Has Lived Up to Every Advance Notice

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

The acid test has been applied to The Perils of Pauline many hundreds of times and under the most adverse circumstances, and every time this great serial has more than proved its worth. It has been the means in many cases of turning a losing season into a big money making one. We know because we have the letters in the office telling us of it. You are the one to suffer if you do not book it.

PAULINE PULLS PEOPLE * * * SHE'S A GOLD MINE

I LOVE THE NURSES

A One Reel Pathe-Produced Screaming Comedy which is different from what you have been used to.

ECLECTIC FEATURE FILM EXCHANGES FOR YOUR USE.

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.	BOSTON 3 Tremont Row	CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.	DALLAS Andrews Bldg.	LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.	MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts.
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.	PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.	SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.	ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.	SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.	CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.
SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.	CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av., S.E.	PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.	PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.	WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.	NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.
SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.	OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.			DENVER Nassau Bldg.	KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

Three of the season's greatest features

The infinite variety of Warner's releases makes for success on unusually broad lines. Below are described three new Warner's Features. Each one is entirely different in character from the others, yet all three have the big human appeal that sways audiences and builds business.

WARNER'S FEATURES

Natalie de Lontan in the great production

UNDER FIRE IN MEXICO

A thrilling, stirring story of Mexican warfare, to the staccato accompaniment of hair-breadth escapes, dark conspiracies, wholesale massacres, daring rescues and the crash of battle. This great feature was produced by the U. S. Film Corporation, under the direction of J. Arthur Nelson.

RNER'S FEATURES

Marion Leonard in the beautiful romance

The ROMANY RYE

A beautiful gypsy, dainty, winsome and capricious, is the heroine. Around her centers the whole romantic story, and the love she awakens, and the tragedy she causes, will make any audience thrill. There is a young farmer in love with her, a jealous gypsy lover, a sweet old mother, and plenty of fighting and romancing.

WARNER'S FEATURE

Dot Farley in the thrilling story of Indian vengeance

The LUST of the RED MAN

An out-of-the-ordinary frontier picture that makes the red blood tingle and puts every nerve on the "qui vive." It grips the interest from the first—and the grip tightens as the tale unfolds. An especially tense scene is the night vigil of John Brent and his wife in their lonely cabin with the Indians stealthily approaching.

Book these powerful features now! Write your nearest Warner's Exchange

WARNER'S FEATURES, Inc. 130-W-46th St., New York

Good Light Is An Attraction

Brilliant light has a wonderful "pulling power." Flaming arc lamps outside your theatre help attract the crowd; your house is recognized 'way down the street.

Good illumination also shows up the signs, making them brighter, more easily seen and read.

Further, a well lighted exterior is one of your most telling advertisements, giving your theatre a cheery, inviting appearance. Install

Type W
Long Life Flame Arc Lamps

These powerful units are especially adapted to illuminating the outside of theatres, being substantially constructed and weatherproof. Type W Flame arc lamps are easy to install and economical to maintain—they give a long period between trims and require the minimum of attention. The operation in service is so satisfactory that there are thousands now in use all over the country.

Make your theatre the "brightest spot on the street." Write to our nearest office for further particulars.

General Electric Company

Largest Electrical Manufacturer in the World

General Office: Schenectady, N. Y.

ADDRESS NEAREST OFFICE

Atlanta, Ga.
Baltimore, Md.
Birmingham, Ala.
Boise, Idaho
Boston, Mass.
Buffalo, N. Y.
Butte, Mont.
Charleston, W. Va.
Charlotte, N. C.
Chattanooga, Tenn.
Chicago, Ill.
Cincinnati, Ohio
Cleveland, Ohio
Columbus, Ohio
Dayton, Ohio
Denver, Colo.
Des Moines, Iowa
Detroit, Mich.
(Office of Agent)
Elmira, N. Y.
Erie, Pa.
Fort Wayne, Ind.
Hartford, Conn.
Indianapolis, Ind.
Jacksonville, Fla.
Joplin, Mo.
Kansas City, Mo.
Knoxville, Tenn.
Los Angeles, Cal.
Louisville, Ky.
Memphis, Tenn.
Milwaukee, Wis.
Minneapolis, Minn.
Nashville, Tenn.
New Haven, Conn.
New Orleans, La.
New York, N. Y.
Niagara Falls, N. Y.
Omaha, Neb.
Philadelphia, Pa.
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Portland, Ore.
Providence, R. I.
Richmond, Va.
Rochester, N. Y.
St. Louis, Mo.
Salt Lake City, Utah
San Francisco, Cal.
Schenectady, N. Y.
Seattle, Wash.
Spokane, Wash.
Springfield, Mass.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Toledo, Ohio
Washington, D. C.
Youngstown, Ohio

For Texas, Oklahoma and Arizona business refer to Southwest General Electric Company (formerly Hobson Electric Co.), Dallas, El Paso, Houston and Oklahoma City. For Canadian business refer to Canadian General Electric Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

4932

"The CURSE of the SCARABEE RUBY"
SHIPPING DATE
JULY 25th
GAUMONT COMPANY
110 West 40th St. NEW YORK.

JESSE L. LASKY

PRESENTS

THE POPULAR ROMANTIC ACTOR

MR. ROBERT EDESON

IN THE ROLE HE CREATED AND—

MADE FAMOUS IN HIS MOST ATTRACTIVE PLAY

5 PARTS

317 SCENES

THE CALL OF THE NORTH

BY GEORGE BROADHURST

FROM THE THRILLING NOVEL "THE CONJUROR'S HOUSE" BY STUART EDWARD WHITE

ATMOSPHERICALLY PERFECT TO THE MINUTEST DETAIL

RELEASED — AUGUST 10th

JESSE L. LASKY FEATURE PLAY COMPANY

LONG ACRE THEATRE — W. 48TH STREET

JESSE L. LASKY, PRESIDENT — N. Y. C. — SAMUEL GOLDFISH, TREAS. & GEN'L MANAGER

CECIL D DeMILLE, DIRECTOR GENERAL

Paramount

Daniel Frohman, Charles Frohman and Henry W. Savage
In association exclusively with

MARY PICKFORD.

Famous Players Film Co.

David Belasco
In association exclusively with

DUSTIN FARNUM.

Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.

Jack London's Film Stories
Made by

HOBART BOSWORTH.

Bosworth, Inc.

The Productions of these three foremost

Paramount Pictures

Distributors, 110 West 40th St.,

Program

Releases for First Three Months:

DATE	MAKER	PLAY	STAR
Monday, Aug. 31	Famous Players	"Lost Paradise"	H. B. Warner
SEPTEMBER
Thursday, Sept. 3	Bosworth	"Odyssey of the North"	Bosworth
Monday, 7	Lasky	"Virginian"	Dustin Farnum
Thursday, 10	Famous Players	"Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch"	Henrietta Crosman
Monday, 14	Bosworth	"Burning Daylight"	Bosworth
Thursday, 17	Lasky	"Bobby Burnit"	Edward Abeles
Monday, 21	Famous Players	"Such a Little Queen"	Mary Pickford
Thursday, 24	Bosworth	"Pursuit of Phantom"	Bosworth
Monday, 28	* * * * *
OCTOBER
Thursday, Oct. 1	* * * * *
Monday, 5	Famous Players	"Marta of the Lowlands"	Bertha Kalich
Thursday, 8	* * * * *
Monday, 12	Lasky	"The Rose of the Ring"	Charles Richmond
Thursday, 15	Famous Players	"Aristocracy"	Star to be announced later
Monday, 19	Bosworth	"The Hypocrite"	Smalleys
Thursday, 22	Lasky	"The Battle"	Star to be announced later
Monday, 26	Famous Players	"County Chairman"	Maclyn Arbuckle
Thursday, 29	* * * * *
NOVEMBER
Monday, Nov. 2	Famous Players	"Behind the Scenes"	Mary Pickford
Thursday, 5	* * * * *
Monday, 9	Famous Players	"Strictly Business"	John Barrymore
Thursday, 12	* * * * *
Monday, 16	Lasky	"Rose of the Rancho"	David Belasco's Famous Success
Thursday, 19	* * * * *
Monday, 23	Bosworth	"Chechako" or "Smoke Bellew"	Bosworth
Thursday, 26	Lasky	"Texas"	Star to be announced later
Monday, 30	Famous Players	"Wildflower"	Margaret Clark

 This space being reserved for selections of equal quality from productions of the open markets of the world.

manufacturers distributed exclusively through

Corporation

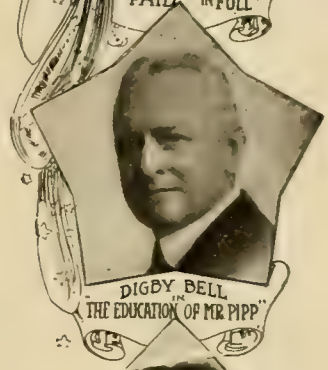
New York City

Exchange Managers

High class, experienced Exchange Managers are invited to correspond regarding twenty-six distributing offices which I am about to open in the principal exchange centres of the United States and Canada. Must be familiar with specific territories.

David Horsley

Centaur Film Co. Bayonne, N. J.



Public Idols

Names coupled with master photo-play productions which spell positive success and mean "crammed houses."

LEW DOCKSTADER

In a Stirring Comedy Drama of Civil War Days

"DAN"

By HAL REID

5 ACTS

COMING!

ETHEL BARRYMORE

In an Original 5-act Play

By AUGUSTUS THOMAS

"The Nightingale"

With a Tremendous All-Star Cast.

ALL-STAR-FEATURE-CORPORATION

HARRY R. RAVER
PRESIDENT

EXECUTIVE OFFICES
220 W. 42nd ST., NEW YORK

AUGUSTUS THOMAS
DIRECTOR GENERAL OF PRODUCTIONS

EXCLUSIVE AGENTS IN PRINCIPAL CITIES OF THE WORLD

A MYSTERY TALE OF TREMENDOUS INTEREST. FULL OF THE ESSENTIALS THAT MAKE THE STORY THAT PEOPLE TAKE TO THE EVIL EYE
4 PARTS
HUGH HOFFMAN

WHEN IN DOUBT TRY APEX FEATURES

THE DEVIL'S EYE—The Story of a Great Diamond and its Travels—4 Parts
THE SECRET SEVEN—A Big Detective Story with a Great Punch—4 Parts
AN ALPINE TRAGEDY—A Novel Drama of a Royal Household—5 Parts
THE MIDNIGHT MARRIAGE—From Walter Howard's London Success—4 Parts
THE DAREDEVIL DETECTIVE—Detective Hayes, the Movie Marvel—4 Parts
BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER—A Fine Real Russian Drama—4 Parts

APEX FILM CO.

145 W. 45th Street—NEW YORK—P. P. Craft, Manager.
European Office—H. Winik, 35 Little Newport St., London

EDISON

THE LIVING DEAD

Ninth story in "The Man Who Disappeared" series

A drama by RICHARD WASHBURN CHILD

When John Perriton and Mary Wales fled to Albany to escape the detective who sought to arrest Perriton on a supposed murder charge, they planned to escape across the border to Montreal. Finding this futile they took the river boat back to New York and supposed they were safe, till at supper the detective spied them and ordered Perriton locked up in his stateroom. How he escaped through the partition into Mary's room adjoining and then jumped overboard and finally landed in New York safe and sound is an exciting episode. Released August 4th—1000 feet

COMING EDISON RELEASES

Saturday, August 1st
Farmer Rodney's Daughter
Drama 1000 feet

Monday, August 3rd
A Tango Spree
Comedy 1000 feet

Wednesday, August 5th
A Change of Business
Comedy 500 feet

Wednesday, August 5th.
Faint Heart Ne'er Won Fair Lady
Comedy 500 feet

Friday, August 7th
The President's Special.
A new version of the celebrated Edison drama. In TWO Parts 2000 feet

Saturday, August 8th
One Touch of Nature.
Comedy 1000 feet

WATCH FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF "MY FRIEND FROM INDIA"
H. A. Du Souchet's famous comedy-drama with Walter E. Perkins in the title role. To be released on August 15th through the masterpiece service of the General Film Company.

Order Edison posters of the MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO., Cleveland, Ohio, direct.

TRADE MARK
Thomas A Edison

Thomas A. Edison, Inc.
239 Lakeside Ave., Orange, N. J.
Makers of the Edison Kinetoscope, Model "D."

There was an old Woman who lived in a Shoe,
She had so many Children she didn't know what to do,
Until one day she saw a Show
Which made her laugh and forget her woe.
Her mind was set to keep the Ranch,
And send a son to each WORLD FILM branch!
CHICAGO
INDIANAPOLIS
BUFFALO
NEW YORK
CINCINNATI
DETROIT
WASHINGTON
HOME OFFICE
130 W 46 ST.
NEW YORK
PHILADELPHIA
ATLANTA
BOSTON
ST. LOUIS

ALL ABOARD FOR WORLD FILM
CORPORATION
DALLAS
DENVER
LOS ANGELES
MINNEAPOLIS
SEATTLE
TORONTO
PITTSBURG
KANSAS CITY
SAN FRANCISCO
COMING
PROTEA II
4 ACTS
JULY 15TH
LIGHTS
O'LONDON
5 ACTS
JUNE 28TH
THE WORLD
THE FLESH
AND THE DEVIL
5 ACTS
THE GREAT STROKE
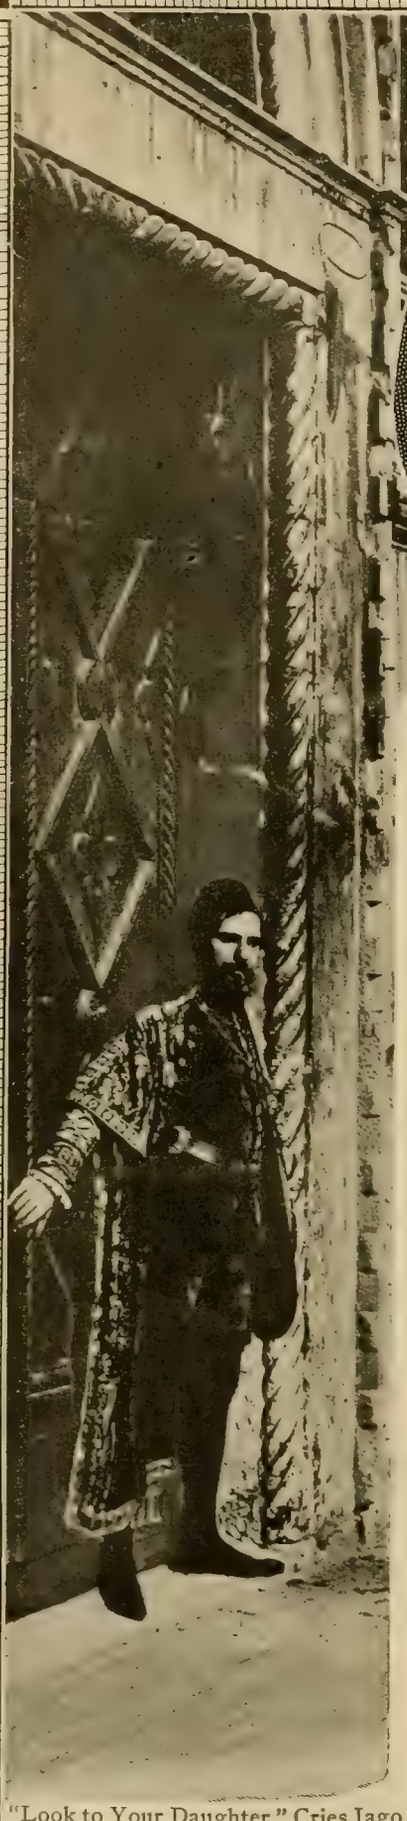
FIVE ACTS.
READY



"Look to Your Daughter," Cries Iago

Othello

RELEASED
THROUGH SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

or, THE MOOR OF VENICE

FIVE PARTS

THE DIVINE SHAKESPEAREAN DRAMA

Made at Venice, Italy!!!

By the Photo Drama Company. THE SUPER FILM—By All Odds the Most Pretentious, Beautiful and Accurately-Screened Version of Shakespearean Stories!

MADE AT VENICE, ITALY. That's a Tremendous advertising Feature in itself! VENICE, rendezvous of the modern tourist—A very fountain-head of Romance and Adventure! The waterways of Historic Venice with its tales, ten centuries old, of Passionate Loves and Fierce Vendettas—the indolent, dreamy sweep of these Gondola-ridden highways are scenes of the quaintest stories in any language!

FOR THE MAKING OF OTHELLO the City Fathers declared a half-holiday—canals were closed to modern commerce, leaving only the aged palaces, the gayly-costumed players and the clicking cameras of the Photo Drama Company.

In OTHELLO, we offer a real masterpiece. It is the first of Shakespeare's stories filmed in its proper environment, as the Master would have wished.

For Release Through

SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

General Film Company

WEEK OF JULY 6th

Complete Line of Lithographs, Press Stories, etc.

GEORGE KLEINE

166 N. State St., Chicago

THREE SPLENDID MONEY-GETTING SUBJECTS YOU CAN HAVE RIGHT NOW!

They're making money every minute—these three!!! Call up any General Film Office (Special Feature Department) and make a date!
We vouch for them absolutely! From the standpoint of story, photography and general dull-season possibilities, we believe them to have no equals in inexpensive summer attractions.
Let us suggest you try them.

ANNE BOLEYN

A story of the Second Wife of Henry VIII. Every School Child Knows the History of Her Ill-Fated, Doom-Laden Marriage. Anne deposed Queen Catherine, only to give way in time to the new Court Beauty, Jane Seymour. The Courtship, Marriage and Death of Anne Boleyn is one of the Cruelest, Weirdest incidents in the annals of English History. As a Picture, It's a WINNER! THREE PARTS

A KINGDOM AT STAKE

The Pretty Child Queen is Marked by Anarchists for Murder. But, Luckily, her Native Sweetness wins the Heart of the Chief Conspirator, Her daily Companion and Instructor. How the Plot failed.....How the well-meaning but misguided revolutionists were condemned to Die, only to be pardoned at the Eleventh Hour by their childish, loving little Monarch, makes, we firmly believe, the most pleasing, dainty, thoroughly-charming hot weather offering we have seen this summer. Already many theatres have cashed in on "A Kingdom at Stake." Have You? THREE PARTS

OTHELLO

Truly a wonderful subject, made from the Divine Shakespearean Tragedy of that Name. Staged at Venice, Italy, in the environment of the Original, Following Closely the Thread of Shakespeare's Beautiful Story. But—And Here's a Vital Point—You Need be no Shakespeare Student to enjoy the wonders of his written story. All its dramatic power and intensity have been retained three-fold in the film version. Again we say, A Truly Wonderful Subject. You will find in it great box-office possibilities. If you haven't booked it, Do It Now! FIVE PARTS

BOOKING NOW THROUGH

SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

GENERAL FILM COMPANY

Complete line of Lithographs, Heralds and Photographs

GEORGE KLEINE

166 N. State Street, Chicago.

Positively the Last Step

The PATHÉ

Every exhibitor in the country can get THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS direct by mail every day from our branches---no delay ---direct from us to your theatre. The exhibitors who have already secured THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS are more enthusiastic than we had expected. It has proved to be what every one has been looking for, and has created a widespread and an enormous increase in revenue, which sho is the greatest--- "News When It man first commun

The Public Want To See THE PATHÉ

- - - SHOW IT

FOR FURTHER PARTICULARS ADDRESS YOUR NEAREST BRANCH, OR

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS

1 Congress Street JERSEY CITY, N. J.

in the Distribution of News

DAILY NEWS

most perfect---most prompt method of distributing IS News" ever used by humanity since Prehistoric conceived the sign language as a means of icating his thoughts and actions. THE SAME DAY the daily papers, with all their facilities for gathering news, are telling people their opinion of events, THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS will give your patrons an opportunnity to form their OWN opinion by showing them the interest events as they actually hapws that pened.

DAILY NEWS

TO 'EM - - -

PATHÉ DAILY NEWS OFFICES

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.	BOSTON 3 Tremont Row	CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.	DALLAS Andrews Bldg.	LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.	MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.	PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.	SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.	ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.	SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.	CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.
CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av.,S.E.	PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.	PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.	WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.	NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.
SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.	OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.	SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.	DENVER Nassau Bldg.	KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

LUBIN

LUBIN MASTERPIECES

"THE WOLF" 6 Reels By Eugene Walter
(Now obtainable through the General Film Masterpiece Service)

TO BE RELEASED SOON

"THE HOUSE NEXT DOOR"—5 Reels. By J. Hartley Manners

NOW IN PREPARATION

"EAGLE'S NEST"—5 Reels. By Edwin Arden.
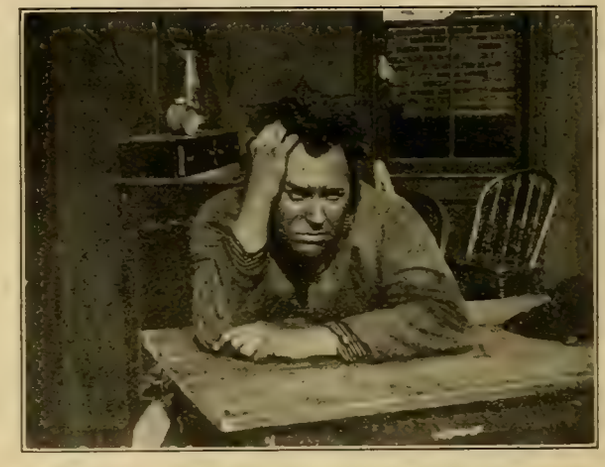
Now being produced in Colorado, with Edwin Arden, Broadway's popular actor, in the leading role.

"Who Seeks Revenge"—2 reels—Wednesday, July 22nd.



"The False Shadow"—2 reels—Thursday, July 23rd.

FIVE RELEASES EACH WEEK

"TEMPER AND TEMPERATURE"
Split Reel Comedy.....Tuesday, July 21st
Very funny mother in-law story with sorrowful experiences for the poor hen pecked husband.

"WORMS WILL TURN"
Split Reel Comedy.....Tuesday, July 21st
Fierce engagement between a bunch of hoboes and the rural police, in which the tramps bravely win out.

"WHO SEEKS REVENGE"
Two Reel Drama.....Wednesday, July 22nd
A dramatic story of the Frontier. An Indian raid on the Army post, in which two mothers are killed and the infants changed.

"THE FALSE SHADOW"
Two Reel Drama.....Thursday, July 23rd
A drama based on the theory of eugenics. A dishonest physician examines a rival's blood and falsely pronounces it diseased.

"A TRAITOR TO HIS COUNTRY"
Drama.....Friday, July 24th
Very exciting incident, with military and insurgent atmosphere; a story of Hearts and Arms.

"A MATTER OF RECORD"
Comedy.....Saturday, July 25th
Very funny domestic comedy in which the dictaphone plays a star role, a huge twenty minutes' scream.

A Comedy Every Tuesday and Saturday

A TWO-REEL FEATURE Every Wednesday and Thursday

A Drama Every Friday

LUBIN POSTERS

By Our Own Staff of Artists—One and Three Sheets with Single and Split Reels. One, Three and Six Sheets with all Multiple Reels.

Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
Chicago Office - - - 154 West Lake Street

VITAGRAPH

"Love, the Clairvoyant"

Comedy-Drama, Monday, July 20

It finds a way to teach the husband his jealousy is the obstacle to his happiness. His wife's disguise completely unmasks his besetting fault. MAURICE COSTELLO and MARY CHARLESON in the leads.

"Bread Upon the Waters"

Two-Part Drama, Tuesday, July 21

The practice of his high ideal imparts soul to his art, bringing him fame and fortune. Experience is a great teacher. ETIENNE GIRARDOT and an all-star cast.

"Buddy's Downfall"

Comedy, Wednesday, July 22

With the loss of his trousers, he makes a bad impression. When he recovers them, he sallies forth and his revenge is sweet. PAUL KELLY in the title role.

"The Apple"

Drama, Thursday, July 23

The woman tempts him with her finery. His eyes are opened and he is glad to plead for his wife's forgiveness. DOROTHY KELLY, JAMES MORRISON and an all-star cast.

"The Winning Trick"

Comedy, Friday, July 24

A young wife believes money is the root of evil. The lack of it she finds is very inconvenient. She is more than glad when she learns she has married a wealthy man. LILLIAN WALKER, ARTHUR ASHLEY, CHARLES ELDRIDGE and MRS. KIMBALL are the cast.

"Romantic Josie"

Two-Part VITA-LAUGH Comedy, Saturday, July 25

Even the house afire and the presence of the firemen can not destroy her love of romance. Drenched to the skin and surrounded by flames, Josie Sadler continues to read her book.

SIX A WEEK

"HIS KID SISTER"	"OFFICER KATE"	"PRIVATE BUNNY"
Drama .....MONDAY, JULY 27	Comedy .....WEDNESDAY, JULY 29	Comedy .....FRIDAY, JULY 31
"JOHN RANCE, GENTLEMAN"	"THE GREATER MOTIVE"	"THE VIOLIN OF M'SIEUR"
Two Part Drama .....TUESDAY, JULY 28	Drama .....THURSDAY, JULY 30	Two-Part Fantasy SATURDAY AUG. 1

VITAGRAPH ONE, THREE AND SIX SHEET POSTERS

The Vitagraph Co. of America, E. 15th St. and Locust Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES

PRODUCED BY THE Vitagraph Co. OF AMERICA

5 RELEASED

5-PART DRAMA A MILLION BID

3-PART COMEDY GOODNESS GRACIOUS

6-PART DRAMA MR. BARNES of NEW YORK

3-PART COMEDY LOVE, LUCK and GASOLENE

RELEASED 5

6-PART DRAMA OF THRILLS CAPTAIN ALVAREZ A TENSE WAR TIME STORY

COMING

Shadows of the Past

3-Part Drama with a Sensational Climax

COMING

Mr. Bingles' Melodrama

3-Part Comedy—Broadway's Favorite

As Presented at the VITAGRAPH THEATRE New York City

For Terms and Particulars Apply GENERAL FILM CO.'S SPECIAL SERVICE

By Arrangement with Broadway Star Features Co.

STATE RIGHTS STILL AVAILABLE FOR "THE CHRISTIAN"

APPLY VITAGRAPH-LIEBLER FEATURE FILM CO. 116 NASSAU ST., N. Y.

KALEM'S FIVE-A-WEEK

THE VAMPIRE'S TRAIL

A Two-Part Feature of the Alice Joyce Series

The strongest story of its kind which Kalem has produced since "The Vampire." Alice Hollister, Tom Moore, Robert Walker and Harry Millarde in the cast supporting Miss Joyce.

Released Monday, August 3rd — Striking Scenes on 1, 3 and 6-sheets

The Chief of Police

A strong sociological drama. How a man, imprisoned for another's crime, finds justice at last, fills this with heart interest.

Released Tuesday, August 4th. Eye-catching 1 and 3-sheet Posters

The Operator at Black Rock

Helen Holmes is featured in this Two-Part Drama. The holdup of the Fast Mail; the runaway train, and the leap on horseback from a fifty-foot cliff, among the stirring scenes.

Released Wednesday, August 5th
1, 3 and 6-sheets that attract attention

Don't Monkey With the Buzz-Saw

One of the Marshal Nielan-Ruth Roland farces. Hypnotizing his wife and her mother, Henpeck goes out on a high old time. His downfall will make you laugh for week.

Released Friday, August 7th

Grey Eagle's Revenge

Shooting blindly, the redskin slays his best friend. The manner in which he expiates his crime will hold observers wide-eyed.

Released Saturday, August 8th
Superb 1 and 3-sheet Posters

KALEM

KALEM COMPANY, 235-9 West 23d St., NEW YORK

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
THE FILM INDEX
EXHIBITORS' GUIDE

J. P. Chalmers, Founder.
Published Weekly by the

CHALMERS PUBLISHING COMPANY
17 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY.
(Telephone, 3510 Madison Square.)

J. P. Chalmers, Sr.....President
E. J. Chalmers.....Secretary and Treasurer
John Wylie.....Vice-President and General Manager
The office of the company is the address of the officers.
WESTERN OFFICE—Suite 917-919 Schiller Building, 64 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill. Telephone, Central 5099.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and Philippine Islands .....$3.00 per year
Canada ..... 3.50 per year
Foreign Countries (Postpaid)..... 4.00 per year

ADVERTISING RATES.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING—no display—three cents per word; minimum charge, 50c.
DISPLAY ADVERTISING RATES made known on application.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

All changes of address should give both old and new addresses in full and clearly written.

NOTE.—Address all correspondence, remittances and subscriptions to MOVING PICTURE WORLD, P. O. Box 226, Madison Square Station, New York, and not to individuals.

(The Index for this issue will be found on page 626.)

Entered at the General Post Office, New York City, as Second Class Matter.

Saturday, July 25, 1914.

Facts and Comments

RUMORS are rife to the effect that the early part of autumn will see a fourth program in the field. The rumors seem to be well founded. They will be eagerly discussed and commented upon by exhibitors all through the country. By many the idea of a fourth regular program will be received with dubious shakings of heads, while others will welcome such a program. We state the rumors not to make them the subject of speculation but to call attention to the continued unsettled conditions in the film markets both here and abroad. Six months ago the thought of putting out a fourth regular program would have moved the laughter of the experts; today it is thought possible to put it out and make a success of it.

*

Various inferences will be drawn from the probable appearance of a fourth regular program. Many will argue that the domination of the long film is nearing its end, while others will point to defects in the present regular services as the probable cause of a fourth venture. Both theories may be right and both theories may be wrong. There is no question that both exhibitors and the public are getting sick and tired of the padded multiples with which the market is flooded at present. It must not, however, be inferred that the public will not welcome a genuine feature even of great length, provided always that the greater length is justified by proper dramatic action. There is ample evidence right here in our big motion picture theaters that the multiple reel of genuine quality is still the backbone of every successful high-grade program.

* * *

While on this subject we wish to call the attention of all our readers to the very remarkable fact that the English market cuts the length of many features imported either from here or from the Continent. In looking through the files of our British contemporaries the writer noticed a dozen instances of long films, which appear in greatly reduced footage whenever they get into the English market. Features for which the exhibitor on this side of the water pays at the rate of four thousand feet melt away to three thousand on the other side. This fact again emphasizes the power of the exhibitor in England. He simply will not take padded stuff, and rather than lose his whole feature the producer or importer makes the excisions which the exhibitor insists upon. How often have we heard the cry of the exhibitor: "This feature is not bad, but it ought to be boiled down to three thousand feet; there is a thousand feet of padding in it." Well, the British exhibitor is not content with merely voicing his protest in an academic way. He takes the knife and makes the cut. We hope that similar radical measures will ultimately prevail on this side. Padding is an evil that hurts the popularity of the whole motion picture entertainment, and we must fight it relentlessly.

* * *

WE are moved to remark once more upon the high value of a competent staff of assistants in every good-sized motion picture theater. There is no doubt that the public after a while become familiar with the faces and the characteristics of the employees and eventually they become attached to faithful and courteous ushers, doormen, etc. Of course, it is the business of the competent manager both to instruct and to inspire his employees to intelligent service. But recently a little usher in the biggest theater in the city was severely and most unreasonably "heckled" by a disgruntled patron who probably didn't know his own mind. The usher having been trained to courtesy and having the example of his chief before him never lost his patience nor changed his courteous demeanor. He bore the outburst of the scolding patron, assured him that they were always doing their best and bade him goodbye in the military style of salutation, which he had been told to observe. Such a spirit can only breathe in an atmosphere of real success.

* * *

READERS of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD have no doubt read the new regulations for the transportation of moving picture films. These rules are prescribed under a recent act of Congress and are more stringent than those heretofore in force. The older and more liberal regulations we are sorry to say have been poorly observed and this laxity no doubt was responsible for these later and sharper regulations. It ought not to be necessary to point out that these latter regulations may be made more stringent if there is any disposition to evade their faithful observance. All those who are practically interested in this matter ought to remember this and observe the new rules with care and in all details. A further step in the direction of stringency will mean more loss of time in transportation and more expense.

Decency Pays

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

"I AM carrying out the original hunches of B. F. Keith," said the Little Giant of the Big Time in a New York Globe interview. "When A. Paul Keith and I succeeded to the Keith circuit, we were wise enough to see that B. F. knew a great deal about human nature, and that he had this business of making his theaters particularly attractive to women down to a fine science. We have only gone on with it. At the Monday rehearsal each week, for instance, the house manager cuts out of every act any suggestive business or lines. Men sometimes like that sort of thing—women almost never. Contrary to public opinion, the red light plays and risque acts are not popular with women."

These statements are from a man of proven success, who crowds his favorite house twice a day in summer without the aid of a roof garden. He protects women in the audience from what may be offensive to refined tastes, so that his place may be safely frequented by men who take their wives, sisters and mothers with them to an entertainment. He secures public confidence by respecting the public. He is not cited as an example for publicity purposes. His marvelous success is confessedly the result of a policy long advocated in the production and exhibition of moving pictures, and it is on that account of high illustrative value. Cleanliness of auditorium, of stage, of dressing room are in harmony with cleanliness of his offerings to those who frequent his places of amusement. Decency pays

In business, in friendly intercourse, in all personal relations between human beings, indecency never succeeds in a large way, so much more to the credit of men and women who make up the body of organized society. We are society. Our entire civilized body of men and women, having common interests and aims, constitute what is known as "society" in its broad sense. That we are capable of being united in a great body for the common good proves our tendency and indicates unmistakably that we are organized to better our interests, decide our questions and settle our problems in a manner that shall conform to the best in all of us. That is obvious. It is so obvious that one wonders at the lack of common sense on the part of many picture producers who incline to degrading or demoralizing portrayals, and on the part of those who show them to women and children.

A man who starts out to make an individual success among his fellows finds it necessary to be frank and companionable in a becoming way, to wear suitable clothes, to avoid indelicacy of act and word. If he aims to command respect, he will try to keep obscenity out of his conversation, and rare is the intelligent man who would write what would be regarded as a publication of his own low tastes. Does not the man who permits moving pictures to be released for widespread circulation among men, women and children also publish the character of his taste when he goes against the popular demand for cleanliness in such presentations? In opposing the prevailing custom among right-minded people, is he not proclaiming his own unfitness for production?

A number of reliable producers are turning out photoplays that delight all classes at the little theaters and, at the same time, inspiring confidence in both the exhibitors and the entire art of moving pictures. It is that confidence which fills the small places of entertainment with millions of patrons every day. Are not the occasional promoters of film indecency injuring the whole business by thrusting emanations of their own personal nastiness upon the attention of a general public? Who is buying their degrading output? Who is spoiling the business as a whole for the sake of appealing to a comparatively small number of immature minds, weaklings and decadents? They exist—otherwise censorship would be an unimportant formality.

When a policy of decency becomes a heritage among successful theater managers, when the brightest and most successful handlers of vaudeville talent in such a city as this, men who weigh and measure public taste with extreme care, decide, as has been illustrated, to eliminate profanity and anything that even suggests what is low and degrading, when improprieties are relegated to the garbage can in New York, it is folly for exhibitors in smaller communities to present screen indecency, however veiled. No man can draw a straight line between morality and immorality in any art of expression, but the line between decency and indecency is another matter.

While the most successful manager of vaudeville shows finds that decency pays and the manager of New York's biggest motion-picture theater insists on decency, there is a bigger issue than is involved in the success of this or that individual. The few producers of moving pictures who turn out what is low and suggestive, and the few exhibitors who permit such screen portrayals, are guilty of injuring the whole business to their temporary interests and off-color tastes. It is not generally believed to be a wise policy to permit politicians to take a hand in eliminating the unfit because of the menace of tyranny and indiscriminate censure that might easily follow their efforts. It is, however, possible for those exhibitors who stand for what is best in the new art to do all the purifying that is necessary.

"The day is coming," says Mr. Aitken in his admirable article on quality, "when the open program will prevail, and it is coming soon. The exhibitor will then insist on seeing the pictures he offers to his patrons before he books them. Then will the death-knell of the inferior picture be sounded, and there will be no resurrection. The intelligent and honest manufacturer will not look upon this reform as a hardship, and the intelligent and honest exhibitor will welcome it as a godsend." Manly words, and so much to the point that they deserve repetition. Add to them the pointed observations of Paul H. Cromelin in the same issue and we have a highly valuable prophecy. He says, "It is interesting to observe that the exhibitor is emerging from his quiescent and passive attitude. He is coming more and more to recognize that he has a duty to his patrons and to himself to see that his program is the kind required." The kind required by intelligent and honest audiences is obviously not the indecent play.

The ethical effect of an art creates its position in general culture. The place it takes in the formation of character is of tremendous interest to people whose aims are those of our own families. The problems of idealism and realism and all the other "isms," while they may be solved in many cases by contrasting what is low in human nature and methods of living with superior traits and conditions, the aim is spiritual purification. What is indecent has no other aim than an appeal to morbid tastes in the minds of lop-sided weaklings. Moving pictures are not "The World's Newest Plaything." Their production and exposition constitute an art. Though a young art, its health and energy are already well assured. It is destined to live well and live long. It is being built out of ourselves, and what is built out of the universal human heart is built forever.

Censors and Supercensors

By W. Stephen Bush.

MORE meddling and more disregard of the ancient wisdom of letting well enough alone is threatened through the office of the Commissioner of Licenses in this city. Relying on a section of the Moving Picture Ordinance, the Commissioner proposes to establish a sort of post-graduate censorship in addition to the work now done by the Fifth Avenue Board. The section on which the Commissioner bases his activities reads as follows:

> "Through its inspectors, the Department of Licenses shall inspect the character of exhibitions in motion picture theatres, and said inspectors shall report to the Commissioner of Licenses any offense against morality, decency or public welfare contained in said exhibitions."

The Moving Picture World has fought for clean pictures from the first day of its publication until this hour and always will be found advocating clean pictures and likewise favoring measures for the legal suppression of immoral, indecent or obscene pictures or so-called crime pictures. Our view has always been that public opinion crystallized into law was amply competent to deal with objectionable pictures, and we always pointed out that the existing statutes were sufficient to abate any of the evils now existing. In addition we looked with favor upon a method of voluntary supervision and control by a body of men and women representing civic societies and organizations for social betterment. It is hard for us therefore to understand what good purpose is to be served by a second Board of Censorship, which practically censors the decisions of the first board. It is one of the inherent absurdities of censorship of all kinds that you are bound to start an endless chain the moment you begin censoring.

We are told by the Commissioner that his office has received "numerous complaints against moving pictures, most of which have been submitted for proper criticism, but a few of which have been passed by the National Board of Censorship." In the very next sentence the Commissioner says that "the National Board of Censorship does its work well, and only in rare instances is it that the Department has found something which has slipped through their rigid criticism." What a contradiction in terms! When pictures slip through a censorship it ceases to be rigid.

Now behold how elaborately the stage is set for the work of this semi-official and extra-censorial board.

In order to deal with these "wild-cat films," which the Commissioner tells us constitute but five per cent. of all the moving picture films exhibited in this city, a subsidiary board of censors is to be created. The committee of seven which the Commissioner has named for this purpose are highly estimable and representative men and women, but it is not at all apparent by what subtle process or hidden virtue they are qualified to re-censor what has already been censored. The Commissioner goes on record as saying: "While some improper films may not be withdrawn for two or three days under this method it is believed that the practice of exhibiting improper films will cease almost entirely just as soon as it is found that the loopholes in the work of the National Board of Censorship have been filled up."

We will not pause to inquire here what legal authority the Commissioner has for making such appointments; for the sake of argument we will even go further and concede that he has such authority. The question is, does not his work supersede the work of the old censors, voluntary and experienced? He himself says that the O. K. of the old board is no longer an absolute guarantee to the exhibitor that a film thus approved may be shown without molestation. Of course, there never was any legal assurance to that effect, but it has always been well understood that the "imprimatur" of the Fifth Avenue Board was to be respected. This feeling of certainty which greatly helps the exhibitor to get his best judgment to bear on his daily program is now gone. There are censors and supercensors.

The Commissioner believes that his plan has "the added advantage that improper films will not be advertised before their withdrawal, as in the old plan, which involved court procedure." We cannot quite grasp the full meaning of this last sentence. As he himself admits, a film may be showing for three or four days before his extraordinary vigilance committee are able to locate it. Now a run of two or three days does enough harm if the picture is bad enough to come within the legal inhibition. His action then in the case of such a film would be no quicker and no more effective than the old plan "which involves court procedure." He surely will not deny that he is subject to being enjoined by the Supreme Court. He may by an ill-advised step advertise a bad picture and stimulate public curiosity and then find himself served with an injunction restraining him to interfere.

We must confess that the present plan, which leaves mere questions of ethics and taste to the voluntary Fifth Avenue Board and which relegates all objectors on the ground of immorality, etc., to the law and the police, seems good enough to be let alone. The plan has worked well. About two years ago the late Mayor Gaynor went on record as saying that the pictures were passable morally with negligible exceptions. He said so at a public hearing, declaring that the sources of his information were reports of fair and reliable investigators. No one dared to challenge the statement of the Mayor. No one will care to deny that since then the pictures have advanced rather than gone back in their morals.

Another fatal defect in the Commissioner's plan is his assumption, implied rather than expressed, that the exhibitor is either unwilling or incapable of cutting bad films out of programs which may be offered to him. Now we are in a position to assure the Commissioner that the exhibitor is the very first to object to an objectionable film. Let him remember that the worst offenders in the matter of the "white-slave" and the "drug-terror" films were theatrical men rather than motion picture men. If his inspectors come across any films which are bad enough to invoke the law against them it is their duty to lay the facts before the District Attorney and proceed against such exhibitors and producers in the criminal courts. Such a method of procedure is not only most consistent with both the letter and the spirit of the law, but it is the fairest way to all.

The worst of this censorial mania seems to be its epidemic character. Everybody wants to play at it. Now that we have censors and supercensors, the latter re-censoring the former, we cannot escape the question: Who will re-censor the supercensors?

Censorship is a dismal swamp with no exits. Whoever attempts the dreary paths eventually finds himself in a barren wilderness or in a cul de sac. The choice is entirely his. We do not know how long censors and supercensors will continue to rage. Crazes and superstitions are among the things that the human heart is heir to. All we can do in the meantime is to pray for light.

PEACE WITH HONOR

Amalgamation of Warring Factions Accomplished At Eleventh Hour—Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America Meets International Motion Picture Association on Friendly Basis—Every Prospect Now for Strong United League

GOV. COX, OF OHIO, PRINCIPAL SPEAKER AT SPLENDID BANQUET

THE fourth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America came to a close at Dayton, Ohio, on Saturday, July 11. The delegates had been in session the entire week. The two principal events were the declination of a renomination by President M. A. Neff and the ensuing election of Mr. Pearce, of Baltimore, on Wednesday, and the agreement between the league and the International Motion Picture Association, which was represented at the convention city by President Phillips and a committee of seven. The action of the league in ratifying the terms of amalgamation was unanimous. The association will be given four members on the executive board of the league. The association asked for no other recognition. The convention closed with the best of feeling prevailing between those who during the past year had displayed so much animosity. There is every reason to believe that the result of the Dayton Convention, following closely upon the association meeting in New York City and amicably concluding the negotiations at that time initiated, will be an organization of exhibitors that will be cohesive, large in numbers, and strong in influence.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 7.

Afternoon Session.

The session of Wednesday afternoon was largely occupied with routine business. The meeting came to order at 3:15 o'clock. On motion President Neff appointed Orene Parker of Kentucky, Otto Ludeking of Ohio, O. G. Murray of Indiana, C. J. Law and Fulton Brylawski of the District of Columbia, as a committee on constitution and by-laws.

To select the next place of meeting J. M. Kaufman of Ohio, Dee Robinson of Illinois, J. G. Stamper of Kentucky, N. Gates of Minnesota, and Dr. William Herbst of the District of Columbia were appointed.

Secretary Wiley handed to President Neff a draft for $1,620.57, the same being payment of salary in full for the past year.

A motion was offered by Peter Jeup and discussed at some length, to admit the delegates from the International Motion Picture Association. Max Stearn of Ohio, L. W. Brophy of Oklahoma and A. J. Diebold of Iowa were appointed a committee to escort the gentlemen, who afterwards addressed the convention, expressing their appreciation of the courtesy.

A delegation of manufacturers making exhibits at Memorial Hall were also admitted and given the privilege of the floor. Remarks were made by F. J. Rembusch, Joe Brandt, Tom Moore, Joe Farnham, H. B. Coles, Mr. Charnass and Mr. Kane.

Marion A. Pearce,
President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.
Photo by Bachrach Baltimore.

After listening to the remarks of the several speakers a committee was appointed to meet with the manufacturers' committee at the Hotel Bechtel in the evening.

At this point in the proceedings Treasurer Parker presented President Neff with a purse, made up by the delegates, amounting to $274, as a slight token of appreciation of his long and arduous services to the league. In accepting the purse President Neff declared that he would use the money to purchase some lasting memento of the friendship and good will expressed thereby.

A resolution adopted by the executive committee at Cincinnati last Januaray authorizing the president to investigate the question of establishing a trade paper for the league, to be owned and published by the league, was brought up. In reporting President Neff said that he had arrived at the conclusion that he was unable to ascertain whether or not such a project could be financed. The matter was laid upon the table upon a motion to that effect by M. E. Cory of California.

Before adjournment President Neff announced the following committee to meet with the manufacturers' committee: L. H. Ramsey, J. R. Carter, W. W. Watts, T. P. Finnegan, W. R. Wilson, M. A. Pearce, Peter Jeup, M. E. Cory and F. Brylawski.

Conference with the Manufacturers.

The conference between the manufacturers' committee and the committee from the exhibitors was held at 10 o'clock Wednesday evening at the Hotel Bechtel. There was a good representation of manufacturers present to meet the committee of exhibitors and there was considerable discussion upon the subject as stated by the following resolutions:

July 8th, 1914.

Resolved, Whereas the motion picture industry is now one of the foremost in the world, it is proper that an exposition of motion picture art be held annually or semi-annually.

To serve the best interests of all concerned it is deemed advisable that this exposition shall be conducted under the joint auspices of exhibitors, manufacturers and jobbers.

In view of the above it is resolved by the various representatives of the manufacturers, distributors and jobbers at the Dayton convention that:

An organization be formed for the purpose of conducting an annual or semi-annual exposition of motion picture art.

At such exposition organization shall be composed of the various manufacturers, distributors, jobbers and representatives of all allied lines of trade to the motion picture industry as a whole, and also of the motion picture exhibitors, either as a national body or individual.

That in the perfection of the plans for such an organization and in order to bring about the successful promotion of an annual or semi-annual exposition we desire the co-operation of any and all exhibitors collectively or individually, granting to them the fullest rights and privileges in the promotion and conducting of these expositions.

That a corporation shall be formed for the purpose of conducting these expositions, incorporated at a nominal figure and each manufacturer or jobber or distributor shall be entitled to purchase not more than one share of the stock, the balance being deposited as treasury stock.

That such exposition company desires the exhibitors to hold the national convention or meetings at the place selected for such exposition, and that the profits from a block of treasury stock of not more than 50 per cent. shall be devoted to the reception and entertainment of the exhibitors at such conventions; further that a portion of the net profits or a block of treasury stock of not more than 50 per cent. shall be given to the national league or association.

There was a feeling of resentment among the exhibitors that the manufacturers should contemplate running the expositions of the future, and while the manufacturers present, of whom Mr. F. J. Rembush was the principal spokesman, declared that the purpose of the meeting was merely to discover some basis for mutual co-operation, they got little comfort out of the conference. It was declared that the project would work to the benefit of the exhibitor and it is possible that some good may come out of the matter.

The manufacturers represented were F. J. Rembusch of the Mirror Screen; E. E. Fulton of the E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago; D. M. Sachter of the Searls Engine and Manufacturing Company, Sheffield, Pa.; H. B. Coles of the Precision Machine Company, New York; Ernest Glantzburg, Typhoon Fan Company, New York; F. W. Swett of the Nicholas Power Company, New York; Jacob Ring of Menger & Ring, New York; A. H. Byrd and Tom Moore of the Wyanoak Company, New York; Robert Kane of the Atsco, Inc., New York; R. D. Hanish of the Rex Film Renovator Company, Columbus; George C. Dwyer of the Theater Equipment Company, Columbus; G. W. Armstrong of the Theater Specialty Company, New York; H. Charnass of Warners Features, New York; A. M. Brally, Cosmograph, Morehead, Ky.; J. H. Hennegan of Hennegan Company, Cincinnati, O.; F. A. Nolan of the Cincinnati Theater Supply Company; S. J. Newman of Newman Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati; L. J. Gardiner of the American Slide Company, Columbus, O.; M. A. Kraus of the Kraus Manufacturing Company, New York; W. G. Maxey of the Bartola Organ Company, Oshkosh, Wis.; W. J. Johnson of the Moving Picture News and Fred Beecroft of the Dramatic Mirror.

New Officers of the M. P. E. L. of A.

Left to Right—T. P. Finnegan, Dallas, Tex., first vice-president; M. A. Pearce, Baltimore, president; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, treasurer; M. E. Cory, San Francisco, second vice-president; W. R. Wilson, Columbus, Ohio, secretary.

THURSDAY, JULY 9.

The Parade.

The parade of the delegates and manufacturers scheduled for Thursday morning lost some of its novelty through lack of interest on the part of the manufacturers, who failed to prepare decorative floats as had been announced, but there was a good turnout in automobiles which supplemented the delegations of exhibitors on foot and a very good showing was made. Two bands of music helped to enliven the event, and though it was held at 9:30 o'clock in the morning a fairly large crowd of Dayton's citizens lined the streets to witness the affair.

To create interest in the parade prizes were offered for various qualifications, as follows: Tallest exhibitor, won by P. J. Raburg of Dayton; heaviest exhibitor, won by G. W. Hill of Cincinnati; shortest exhibitor, won by A. B. Pother of Dayton; lightest exhibitor, won by T. P. Finnegan, Jr., of Dallas, Texas; oldest exhibitor, won by J. J. Rieder of Jackson, Mich.

Many of the automobiles in the parade were tastefully decorated and the Bartola Company really captured the event by supplying everyone who took part with a small balloon upon which the advertisement of the firm was printed.

A bit of comedy was injected into the parade by Tom Moore of the Wyanoak Company, who secured a street sprinkler and labeled it the "water wagon," supplemented by sundry other inscriptions, upon which rode a number of fellows with soothing bandages about supposedly aching heads. This got many laughs from the crowds.

The marshals were James Bamber and L. O. Shank, on horseback, the latter riding a very handsome "high school" stepper, Grace S., attracting considerable attention.

Pictures of the parade were taken in motion and in the evening projected upon the screen at Memorial Hall.

Afternoon Session.

President Neff announced that the Honorable John J. Lentz, who had given his services free of charge for the past three years as counsel for the league, had tendered his resignation, the same to be accepted at once, owing to the fact that he is running for the United States Senate on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Phillips of Texas, after President Neff had read the letter to the convention, moved that the resignation be accepted and that the sincere thanks of the convention be conveyed to Mr. Lentz through the national secretary. The motion was seconded by W. W. Watts of Illinois, and was carried unanimously. Mr. Neff also announced that ex-Senator Foraker, chief counsel for the M. P. E. L. of America, who had also given his services to the league for the past three years without charge, had notified him that such services would be rendered until August 1st, the date of the expiration of Mr. Neff's term as president. Mr. Neff stated that Senator Foraker had notified him that he would be glad at any time to give counsel and advice to the league as he was greatly interested in the future progress and advancement of the organization.

The reading of the report of the committee of resolutions was next in order.

A communication from several outside sources requesting the support and assistance of the league for the protection of dumb animals in the making of moving pictures, received attention from the resolutions committee, which had framed a resolution conforming with the requests. After much discussion a resolution granting the assistance and co-operation asked was accepted and adopted by the convention.

That too many multiple reels were now being placed on the market, whereas the exhibition business had been built on the variety of the programs offered to the public, and that more good single reel subjects are required, also that the padding of multiple reels, as now practiced by several manufacturers, be severely condemned, was suggested in a resolution, and passed by the delegates.

The present expensive plan of conducting the business of the league and some changes in the constitution and by-laws were referred to the constitution and by-laws committee.

A resolution referring to the able services rendered the league for three years by M. A. Neff, with great good to all, was adopted as read, with sincere appreciation of the services rendered.

The retiring national secretary, George H. Wiley, and retiring National Treasurer Orene Parker were also subjects of eulogistic resolutions, for the zeal and ability shown in the discharge of their duties.

The report of the special committee appointed by the convention to meet the mediation committee of the I. M. P. A. created the most important discussion of the afternoon session. T. P. Finnegan, chairman of the special committee, after briefly recounting what had been done at the meeting, made a motion to elect four members of the I. M. P. A. to the executive board of the M. P. E. L. of America, the understanding being that the suspension of the members of the I. M. P. A. should be lifted and that they should enter the state organizations of the M. P. E. L. of America in the usual way. After a heated discussion in which Lem Miller of Cincinnati, Abe Stern of Columbus, Dr. Herbst of Washington, D. C.; Mr. Brophy of Oklahoma, Mr. Hubbard of New York, Mr. Payne of Maryland, Mr. Rieder and Mr. Jeup of Michigan, Mr. Phillips of Texas and others participated, the following motion by Mr. Phillips of Texas, moved as a motion as a substitution for the whole, was carried unanimously and succeeded by great applause:

"That the suspension of any and all expelled members, whether they be of the I. M. P. A. or otherwise, be lifted and that they be reinstated to the M. P. E. L. of America upon application to their respective state locals for initiation, the dues of such re-instated members to begin on their reinstatement, and that from the members of the I. M. P. A.

so re-instated the incoming president is hereby instructed to appoint two as members of the national executive board of the M. P. E. L. of America."

President Neff congratulated the convention on arriving at this decision, which he considered liberal and an important step towards the adjustment of differences between the two organizations. Abe Stern, who had opposed going so far in making concessions, approved of the motion and remarked that the I. M. P. A. mediation committee should be satisfied, as they will have the opportunity, if their present claims are correct, to secure a majority of members in the national executive board at the next national convention.

The report of the good and welfare committee was next read. Among the matters treated of were:

That the national executive committee be empowered to appoint a national organizer for the league.

An amendment that the by-laws be revised so as to cover the change of location in the national president's place of residence, the new president residing in Baltimore, whereas the outgoing president resides in Cincinnati. It was shown that the M. P. E. L. of America is a corporation and that it must have an active office in the state of Ohio, the state of incorporation, and that the president could have his office in any state in the Union.

Automobile Parade of Exhibitors at Dayton.

That exhibitors have the right to book as many reels per week as they wish, from any exchange they wish, ten days' notice to be given to the releasing exchange in case the exhibitor changed his place of renting.

It was then moved that the report be accepted and not adopted, but that the various sections should be discussed and afterwards accepted and adopted, which was immediately done as follows:

The secretary and treasurer's bond to be placed at $5,000, a reliable bonding company's bond being required.

That the president's salary be reduced to $250 per year. This was done as the incoming president, Mr. Pearce, requested such action.

That more truthful advertising methods be adopted by manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors.

That more single reel subjects and fewer multiples be manufactured.

That it be recommended that moving picture programs shall not exceed three reels for five cents and not more than five reels for ten cents.

That exchanges be condemned for their present system of charging for posters returned in damaged condition.

That all regular moving picture theaters are to be given preference by exchanges in furnishing film service, as compared with airdomes, dramatic theaters, etc.

That it be recommended that manufacturers discontinue all serial stories in film form, unless placed on the regular service without extra charge.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.

Morning Session.

Although the question of censoring pictures had been scheduled for Friday morning that matter was laid aside to enable the delegates to give further consideration to the all-important matter of amalgamation. It was thought when the delegates voted on Thursday to give the I. M. P. A. a representation of two members of the executive committee that such arrangement would be satisfactory. But the mediation committee wanted four and put up a very strong argument for that further concession. Many of the delegates who had voted on the proposition on Thursday had returned to their homes; those remaining favoring the proposition to allow four committeemen to the mediators, the whole matter was opened up and discussed at considerable length and with some fervor. The discussion ended finally in granting the two additional members and there was renewed rejoicing.

The discussion of the question of cenorship was disposed of in a most summary manner. The time was short and the delegates were impatient to get to other business. A few addresses were made, but none of the speakers advanced any real arguments either for or against censorship. In the end this resolution was adopted which, though rather poorly constructed, and indefinite as to its meaning, seems to express the feeling of some of the exhibitors regarding the matter:

Baltimore Delegation.

Left to right—William Fait, Jr., Baltimore; Mr. List, Frederick; Harry Klein, M. A. Pearce, Harry Lewy, Harry B. Cook, and Frank H. Durkee, all of Baltimore. (Photo by Mayfield.)

Whereas, The censoring of motion pictures is illegal, undesirable, un-American and an insult to our business; and

Whereas, The submission by the motion picture exhibitors to censorship in any form is unmanly and un-American, therefore be it

Resolved, That at this time the Motion Picture Theater Exhibitors' League of America go on record as opposed to censorship in every form and that its executive officers be instructed to combat censorship whenever and wherever it may be attempted.

L. E. Miller, H. E. Vestal, M. A. Neff of Ohio and Dee Robinson of Illinois spoke against the resolution. It was supported by Peter Jeup of Michigan, L. H. Ramsey of Kentucky, M. E. Cory of California and L. W. Brophy of Oklahoma. W. R. Wilson attempted to amend it by having the word "again" inserted just before the word "attempted" in the last paragraph, but the insertion was not permitted and the resolution was adopted by a vote of 18 to 7 against.

At this point Mr. Wilson said that under the circumstances he would be obliged to resign his office as secretary of the league. This was not taken seriously by the members present, but it transpired later that Mr. Wilson was about to be offered the vacancy upon the Ohio Board of Censorship, which would place him in an untenable position under the instructions of the resolution.

Peace With Honor.

Once the censorship matter was disposed of the matter of amalgamation was taken up. On motion of Peter Jeup of Michigan the constitution and by-laws were amended to increase the executive board from seven to nine members and the action of the previous day to grant the I. M. P. A. faction a representation on that board of two was reconsidered. A new motion was then moved the adoption of the report of the committee on amalgamation, which was to the effect that the returning faction be given a representation on the board of four members. The vote on this question stood 23 to 10 in favor of the adoption of the report and it was declared carried and a committee was appointed to notify the representatives of the I. M. P. A. to that effect.

During the afternoon session the question of fixing the time and place of the next convention was brought up and referred to the executive committee for adjustment.

The ways and means committee through its chairman, Mr. Ramsey of Kentucky, offered some tentative figures on the receipts and expenditures. The committee's recommendation that the salaries of the officers be changed was adopted as follows: President, $250 per annum; secretary, $1,200; treasurer, $300.

An amendment to Article 5, Section 1, making the representation of states three delegates at large and three alternates at large, with one delegate for each twenty-five members was adopted. This materially increases the representation of each state at the annual convention.

A resolution that all schemes, country store propositions anr coupon plans be eliminated from picture theaters was adopted. Another amendment was made that officers should hold their offices till their successors were elected and qualified, and members of the executive board were authorized to give proxies to other members of the board if they could not attend meetings of that body. Someone made a motion permitting state delegates to give proxies, but that was not adopted.

The I. M. P. A. delegation were present and took part in the proceedings of the afternoon. Adjournment was taken until 10 o'clock Saturday.

SATURDAY, JULY 11.

The Wind-up.

A brief meeting of the convention was held on Saturday morning. Nearly all the delegates had left by that time so that barely a quorum was assembled when President Neff called the meeting to order.

W. R. Wilson, the newly elected secretary, who had resigned in a rather informal manner the day before, reiterated his desire to be relieved of the office. By a unanimous vote of those present his resignation was accepted.

When it came to filling the vacancy there was some difficulty met in finding a suitable man. A proposal to re-elect George H. Wiley, the retiring secretary, was rejected upon the ground that he was ineligible and had declared publicly that he would not accept the office for another year. A proposal to permit the executive committee to fill the vacancy was also rejected.

The matter was finally disposed of by rescinding the previous action accepting Mr. Wilson's resignation.

A resolution was adopted thanking the press for the kind treatment of league matters and the convention adjourned without a day.

Later the friends of Mr. Wilson prevailed upon him to accept the secretaryship of the league and he at once secured the necessary bond of $5,000 and will take over the books and records of the organization.

BANQUET ON ROOF.

Governor Cox Guest of Exhibitors and Utters Prophetic Words Regarding Censorship—Much Good Eats.

A BANQUET was given on the roof of the Algonquin Hotel, Dayton, Ohio, on the evening of Friday, July 10, by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. About one hundred persons were present and the affair was dignified and pleasantly informed by the presence and speech of Governor James M. Cox of the State of Ohio. After the aforesaid entirely edible banquet had been duly and satisfactorily consumed by the guests, the toastmaster, Judge Rollin W. Baggott of Dayton, introduced a number of speakers, who paid various compliments to the exhibitors and the city of Dayton. Governor Cox was then introduced. After indulging in the usual amenities he said:

"I understand that you passed a resolution against censorship today. I feel complimented because I know that you did not want any example of inefficient censorship to be set up in another state in comparison with ours. I am reminded by your action of a story of the Texas lawyer whose brother wrote to him saying that he proposed to come to Texas to practice law; that he intended to be an honest lawyer and that he was a Republican. The brother immediately replied, urging him to come at once; as an honest lawyer he would have no competition and as a Republican he would be a bird of such rare plumage that the Game Warden would protect him. And so I feel that Ohio is a bird of such rare plumage that you want to protect it.

"Nevertheless, I am going to talk frankly to you: I don't know as much about showing pictures as you do, but I do know ten times as much about censorship as you do, and I want to say to you that it will not be long before you will be begging Congress to protect you. I want to preserve your business, but you never will preserve it unless you regulate it. Motion pictures is one of our most useful activities and unless you regulate that business you will soon be put out of business, every mother's son of you."

Governor Cox called attention to the effort that had been made to regulate the railroads and declared that the railroads today would not go back to the old days and the old methods, for they know that if those methods prevailed government ownership would certainly follow.

"If you do not regulate your business," he continued, "you will have government ownership of motion pictures. No new law is perfect; it must be tried out by experience; but I will say to you that as long as I am Governor of this state no appointment that will be distasteful to the exhibitors will be made. I want to see the picture shows properly run so that any man, woman or child may see them. The law is here to stay; it is a well intended desire to conserve your business by formulating a plan to bring about the salvation of your business."

Group of Well Known Exhibitors and Film Men on the Steps of Memorial Hall, Dayton, Ohio.

Delegation from Washington, D. C.

Left to right, standing—Fulton Brylawski; Harry Crandall, John Payette, Dr. W. B. Herbst; sitting, Morris Davis and J. P. Morgan

Governor Cox paid a high compliment to M. A. Neff and later, in reply to something on censorship by another speaker he added: "It is apparent that other states will not act as Ohio does. A federal board ought to be established, for it can do the work best. Manufacturers ought not to be put to the expense of peddling their films to censor boards. I predict that you will have a federal law within a few years."

In the course of his remarks the Governor announced it as his intention to appoint W. R. Wilson of Columbus, Ohio, who was elected secretary of the league, to fill the vacancy on the Ohio censorship. This was the first authoritative announcement from the Governor on this subject and it was greeted with cheers.

ROTHAPFEL'S BIRTHDAY REMEMBERED.

Mr. Samuel L. Rothapfel, the general manager of the Strand theater celebrated his thirty-second birthday a few days ago. He had no idea that the fact was well known to everybody connected with the Strand, but it was made aware of it when a committee of his employees waited upon him and after congratulating him on being so young in years and so old in experience presented him with a valuable cigarette case, finely chiseled and engraved. On the inside were words of dedication and Mr. Rothapfel's famous motto: "Go get them." Mr. Rothapfel was astonished for once in his life, but as usual soon found the inspiration demanded by the moment and made a neat address of appreciation.

Some of the Maryland Exhibitors Attending Their State Convention at Baltimore, June 25.

Trigger Talks of Amalgamation

The Chairman of the Association's Mediation Committee Sees a Bright Future for the Exhibitors' Organization.

SAMUEL H. TRIGGER of New York, chairman of the mediation committee on behalf of the International Motion Picture Association, returned to the local headquarters of the exhibitors at the Hotel Marlborough on Sunday, July 12. When seen by a World man later Mr. Trigger was in a satisfied frame of mind.

"Amalgamation? Why, there was nothing else to do," he said. "Ninety per cent. of the exhibitors present in Dayton were strongly in favor of it and would have nothing less. Oklahoma was pledged for Neff, but the delegates announced that they would break away unless amalgamation was assured. So, too, did Texas. What about the constitutional ineligibility of Judge Tugwell to serve on the executive board by reason of there already being one man from California on the board? Why, I haven't heard of it. Our nominations were accepted by the league. However, if the story prove to be true another man can be named. Here is the report of the mediation committee representing the association, and it is now being sent out to all branches:

To the Members of the International Motion Picture Association:

Pursuant to a resolution passed at the New York Convention, the members of your committee elected with full power to bring about an amalgamation of the two national organizations met at the Dayton Convention of the M. P. E. L. on Monday, July 6, and proceeded with the business in hand with the following members present: Samuel H. Trigger, New York, chairman; F. J. Rembusch, Indiana; Sam Bullock, Ohio; Judge Tugwell, California; Fred J. Herrington, Pennsylvania; William J. Sweeney, Illinois. Charles H. Phillips, president of the I. M. P. A. (ex-officio member of the committee), made up the full committee of seven, Delegate Thomas Furniss of Minnesota being delayed en route.

A proposition was made at the first joint committee meeting with the M. P. E. L. of A. committee in the form of a resolution presented by Delegate Bullock that this committee cannot amalgamate with any organization under the terms of the resolution by which we were elected unless the said organization is opposed in toto to all forms of legalized censorship. The second resolution by Delegate Herrington provided "that it be to the best interests of all concerned we recommend that the only method of amalgamation possible will be by the elimination of the officers of both organizations, and the control of the amalgamated forces should be vested in a National Executive Board comprising the membership of the executive boards of both organizations."

The above resolution opened the way for consideration of amalgamation plans by the convention body, and after several days' earnest effort by the committee with counter propositions from the convention, it was decided to insist upon four representatives upon the Executive Board of the M. P. E. L. of A. and to recommend a cessation of hostilities between the two bodies. This proposition was rejected and returned with an offer of two representatives to be appointed by the incoming president. This proposition was, in turn, rejected by your committee, and at a final meeting, on Thursday, previous to the departure of Delegates Herrington and Furniss, it was agreed to insist upon having four representatives or no amalgamation. This was finally agreed to by the convention body on Friday, and our committee nominations for the new Executive Board of the M. P. E. L. of A. were accepted by vote of the convention. They are as follows: Charles H. Phillips, Wisconsin; Wm. J. Sweeney, Illinois; Judge Tugwell, California; Fulton Brylawski, Washington, D. C.

Messrs. Herrington and Furniss stated before leaving that they had no desire to serve, but agreed to maintain the demand for representatives. Chairman Trigger said New York did not seek any honors. The committee succeeded in having the convention indorse the principal measures passed at the I. M. P. A. convention, including the National Board of Censorship resolutions, and every member of the new Executive Board of nine is a stanch supporter of the New York National Board.

The result of the work of your committee and the convention body at Dayton means that the object for which we have fought so long has been accomplished. "Principles," not "individuals," is our future watchword. From now on we get a new deal in everything. It is no longer "Let's get together." We are together, and, such being the case, legalized censorship is doomed; a National Board of Trade is in sight and a membership of ten thousand united exhibitors is quite possible by the time the next annual convention is held. Let every friend of the cause put his shoulder to the wheel. There is no longer any excuse or reason for remaining out of the parent body, or unattached. Let us again unite, co-operate, and fight against the common enemy.

SAMUEL BULLOCK.
Secretary of the Committee on Amalgamation.

"It was Friday morning when our committee for the first time overcame the objections to allowing us to sit in the sessions," continued Mr. Trigger. "Then we were given the privilege of the floor. We told them that we had traveled thousands of miles, had remained in Dayton for a week, and we felt that that proved we were sincere in our desire to have amalgamation. We only asked what was just and fair. On Friday afternoon word was brought to our hotel that the league unanimously had passed a resolution giving us four representatives on the executive board. We replied that we would immediately send notice to all association members that we were to join the parent body. The committee attended a session of the league, and speeches were made by Messrs. Fugwell, Sweeney, Rembusch and myself. We told the new president that we were with him, that all of us believed a better man could not have been chosen. Personally, I think Mr. Pearce's election was the best thing that could have happened.

"It is my intention to call a meeting of the New York State organization; a good, big meeting. I will ask to attend that meeting President Pearce and also Mr. Brylawski of Washington. I sincerely believe we will have a thousand members in New York State before the year is over. You know there are many exhibitors at the present time who do not realize the benefits of national and state organization. Just as an illustration here is a letter I received this morning from Binghamton." Mr. Trigger went on to explain that since the break last year the Binghamton exhibitors have affiliated with neither one side nor the other. He said that just as soon as the men up there heard of the amalgamation they asked the state organization to do something for them.

The letter is self-explanatory:

Mr. Samuel H. Trigger, New York City.

Dear Sir—You no doubt will be surprised on receipt of this letter, but we are in trouble and we need your assistance. We have been open Sundays in Binghamton for the past ten months, and now the Mayor has notified us to close up Sundays on the advice of his Corporation Counsel. We have decided to fight the authorities and are determined to keep open, and we are willing to do all we can as a unit, but don't you think that the League ought to be willing to come along and help us fight this battle? You know if we can win this it will mean victory for the exhibitors of the whole state, and if we lose it, it will mean a loss to all the exhibitors of the state. Kindly advise me on receipt of this letter what your league would be willing to do, as this is your opportunity to show the actual benefit of the league. Kindly advise me if you would care to come up to Binghamton, or would you want me to come down to see you and see what can be done in regard to this matter?

Please do not delay in answering, as this Sunday we will be forced to close up and we have to get right in the harness and try to do what we can to stop interference with our business. NED KORNBLITE.

"Now," continued Mr. Trigger, "we are going to send a committee to Binghamton, and with it we are going to send our counsellor. You may be sure we are going to try to keep those houses open. Right here is the first fruit of amalgamation. This letter from Binghamton indicates to me that the exhibitors of the United States will have more confidence in the power of organization than they have ever had before.

"The National League a year ago, according to the statement of President Wiley before the bolt took place, had a paid-up per capita tax on 2,860 members. At the convention held in Dayton the number of members was 1,216, showing a lack of confidence all over the United States. New York, with 1,600 exhibitors, was credited with 80 members. The International had only 460 in the whole state. Now with the two combined and with the prevailing confidence that is bound to result, we ought to have a convention here which will be the largest ever held in any state in the Union. New York City and State will work for the new president as we have never worked before. Mr. Pearce is a high-class exhibitor and a man of the strictest integrity. That I know from a knowledge and acquaintance that is personal. He took the presidency only after he was assured that he would be satisfactory to all parties. We have a right to expect much from him."

CONVENTION FLICKERS.

They were ALL there.

* * *

Everybody thought Joe Farnham contracted poison ivy or was stung by a bee.

* * *

In his usual big hurry style, Charles Feature Abrams made a quick jump from St. Louis to Dayton to say hello to the boys. In less than half an hour he was out of town again. They have some train service in that town.

* * *

Harry Reichenbach, displaying his indomitable Irish spirit, rushed into Memorial Hall and claimed a front row booth at the last minute, and after transplanting all the movable furniture and potted palms from the reception hall to his booth, he sat on the furniture and made ready to receive all the State Rights buyers, but he didn't come.

* * *

Joe Universal Brandt was very much on the spot. He started the rush for Palm Beach suits and by the time I got there Tuesday morning there was none left. I had to take one that Babe Farnham didn't buy and have it made over. After the next shower it will fit perfectly.

* * *

Ex-President Neff of the National League denied the rumor that he would retire from active business, and is ready to accept a good position with a salary.

One of the features during the meeting was a luncheon party out at the Olt Brothers Brewery (no adv.). William M. Seeley, one of the well-known showmen of the Middle West, and at present managing the picture entertainment at Soldiers' Home, in Dayton, was host. The luncheon party was a huge success. It reminded one of the old-fashioned boarding house lunches. "Nothing to eat" as in the accompanying cut, the eats were noted by their absence. However, we were not to be denied our mid-day privilege, for James Eagan, the gentleman on whose right shoulder rests another man's hand, took the crowd in hand and provided a real chicken dinner with all the accessories, after which we were photographed for the gallery.

The Bill Seeley Relief.

* * *

Miss Gerda Holmes, the charming Essanay leading woman, was seen very little, owing to the fact that she almost always was in the center of a large and admiring crowd of picture fans.

* * *

Doc. Travers, of the Essanay company, was very entertaining in his many impersonations, especially that of the Bleed Hound (his special).

* * *

Vernon R. Day, general manager of the Essanay company, was there with the usual happy face over the round front. Day's faculty of making himself liked at the conventions has not left him yet, and they all hated to say good-bye to him.

* * *

M. A. Kraus, of the Kraus Manufacturing Company, New York, was the very busiest little man there. He was sorry that he went to the convention, because he opened up some new accounts which will claim so much of his attention that he won't be able to catch the early train each night for his summer sea shore residence (more than two rooms, hence residence).

* * *

Mr. Byrd, vice-president of the Wyanoak Publishing Company, made a good representation of Buffalo Bill on parade with his two Indian aids.

* * *

Al. Lichtman, lately identified as sales manager of the Famous Players productions, but now president of a new feature film producing company, stopped in long enough to say howdy.

* * *

General Booster Blair, of the Eastman Kodak Company, was there with a big booth and a little fan.

* * *

There was quite some excitement in the hotel lobby Tuesday night when the sudden drop in steel was announced. One of the passenger elevators in which Harry Reichenbach was riding dropped one and a half stories. Outside of a good shaking up locally and internal fright he was all right.

MAC.

GOOD PICTURES SHOWN AT DAYTON.

One of the most interesting features of the Dayton exposition and the one that appealed to the public, was the advance display of pictures by several of the manufacturers represented. The subjects shown were:

Warners Features—"Tricking the Government," three reels; "Bringing in the Law," three reels; "Facing the Gatling Gun," three reels; "Daughter of the Tribe," three reels; "A Born Warrior" and "Exiled," a six-part subject divided into two three-reel parts, and "The Light Unseen," a six-reel subject featuring Marion Leonard. Also "Children of the West" and "Twilight," each three reels.

Universal—"The Return of Twins Double," three-part Gold Seal; "Snooker's Flirtation," one-part Sterling; "When Fate Disposes," two-part Rex; "Prowlers of the Wild," two-part 101 Bison; "Helping Mother," two-part Rex; "The Love Victorious," three parts; "The Oubliet," three-part 101 Bison; "When the World Was Silent," Three-part Imp.

Selig—"In the Days of the Thundering Herd," five parts; "In Tune With the Wild," three parts; "Willie," two-part Western comedy.

Essanay—"Snakeville's New Waitress," one part; "Stolen Fortune," two parts; "Slippery Slim's Inheritance," one part; "Broncho Billy and the Gambler," one part; "The Fable of the Coming Champion," one part; "At the Foot of the Hills," one part.

Pathe—"The Stain," six parts; "Detective Craig," five parts; "A Royal Imposter," five parts, hand colored; Salem fire and the Pathe Daily News. At the Keiserhof Roof Garden, in connection with the Partola organ display, these Pathe pictures were shown: "Colonel Heeza Liar, Farmer"; "The Man Higher Up," "The Tramp," three parts; "Antony and Cleopatra," two parts; "Conquest of Claire," two parts; "The Phantom Thief," three parts.

KRAUS MFG. CO'S. EXHIBIT AT DAYTON.

This display was of great interest to the Exhibitors as it contained all the publications this concern make for the moving picture industry. The large hand colored pictures of the individual actors created a widespread interest as well as the colored enlargements of the scenes of some of the important feature productions. The smaller pictures as well as the real photographs of the players and the various styles of players post cards, which latter were liberally distributed to the visiting exhibitors, was the cause of a large gathering of people almost continually during the entire time of the exposition.

KING BAGGOT ENTERTAINS HIS BROTHER.

Thomas Gantt Baggot, a younger brother of King Baggot, was entertained over the Fourth by the head of the Screen Club. Mr. Baggot, who represents Bradstreet's in Terre Haute, Ind., was on his first visit to the metropolis—and he admitted that he had enjoyed the trip.

JOHN C. DAVIS DEAD.

Treasurer of the New York State Branch of the International M. P. Association, Passes Away at His Home.

JOHN C. DAVIS, treasurer of the New York state branch of the International Motion Picture Association, died at his home in Saugerties on Sunday, July 5. Mr. Davis was fifty-eight years old. He leaves a wife, two daughters and six sons. The immediate cause of death was septic pneumonia, which followed an operation for stomach trouble.

John C. Davis.

Mr. Davis was the manager of the Orpheum Theater of Saugerties. He was educated in the old Saugerties Academy and Eastman's Business College, in Poughkeepsie. He entered the shoe business with his father, and in 1877 he became the sole owner. Later he was in the clothing business. Mr. Davis was postmaster during the term of President McKinley. He was a member of the Village Board and of the Board of Education. He was also a Freemason and an Odd Fellow. He was a large real estate owner.

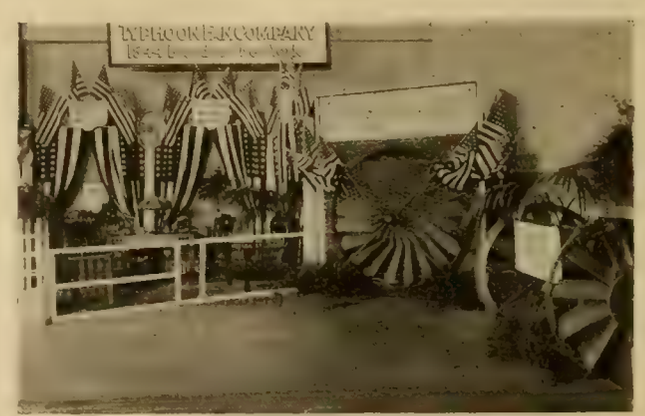
Several years ago Mr. Davis turned his attention to theatrical affairs. He built the Orpheum Theater, which proved a success from the first. Mr. Davis has been assisted in the management of this house by his sons. He was as popular with his patrons as he was with his fellow-exhibitors. He was an exhibitor who made it a point to know and personally to meet each night those who attended his house. His death will be widely regretted. The funeral of Mr. Davis was attended by representatives of the I. M. P. A. from Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Utica, Albany and New York City, on Wednesday, July 8th.

NEW BILL AT VITAGRAPH THEATER.

"My Official Wife," in Five Parts, and "Uncle Bill," in Three, Make a Strong Program.

THE Vitagraph theater on Monday, July 13, made its regular monthly change of bill. The features of the program were the five-part drama of Russian life, "My Official Wife," and the three-part comedy "Uncle Bill." A large audience enjoyed the presentation and was most liberal with its applause. The drama is an adaptation bv Marguerite Bertsch of the story by Richard Henry Savage. It is of unusual strength. Clara Kimball Young is featured in the role of Helene Marie, a Nihilist leader. Supporting her are Harry T. Morey, Rose Tapley, Mary Anderson, Arthur Cozine, L. Rogers Lytton, Eulalie Jensen, Charles Wellesley, Louise Beaudet, Earle Williams and Helen Connelly. The picture is produced by James Young.

Ralph Ince produces "Uncle Bill," a melodramatic farce in three parts. The fun is continuous. In the cast are Donald Hall, William Humphrey, Julia Swayne Gordon, Constance Talmadge, Billy Quirk, Anita Stewart, Albert Roccardi, Jack Brawn and Anders Randolph. The Vitagraph theater has a program that ought to pull heavily even in the hottest weather.



Typhoon Fan Co.'s Exhibit at Dayton.

"A Tale of Old Tucson"

One-Reel Edison Drama Adapted from Eugene Clancy's Story of the Same Name. Adapted and Directed by Richard Ridgeley.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CAST.

Sanchez.....John Sturgeon
His Daughter.....Mabel Trunelle
Mexico Williams.....Bigelow Cooper
Ned Shannon.....Herbert Pryor
Pedro.....Yale Boss

OF finished workmanship, "A Tale of Old Tucson" owes much to Mr. Ridgeley's fine instinct for telling a story in pictured form rather than his ardent love of scenic beauty. The scenes are not made inconsistently beautiful

Scene from "A Tale of Old Tucson"—(Edison)

in this screen portrayal—they are chosen well and have the right atmosphere even though vegetation is occasionally implanted for the occasion. There is a fidelity to what is required that really constitutes the finest kind of artistry in motion picture production. Mr. Ridgeley is fortunate in his company. Mabell Trunelle gives intensity to any role she assumes and without sacrifice of dignity. She does not mouth and mince and strain for effect—her methods are quiet and subtle, but they are none the less effective. With comparatively little dramatic opportunity as the daughter of Sanchez, she enlists attention and holds it by a natural endowment, a fine personality.

Scene from "A Tale of Old Tucson"—(Edison)

The story is not particularly new, nor has the author gone deeper than excellent construction, not far enough into characterization, but it holds up through skilled treatment and strong interpretation. The plot might easily stand amplification. Sanchez is in debt to a gambler, Mexico Williams, and the latter is willing to take the daughter of Sanchez in liquidation. The story opens at a point when Sanchez must lose his ranch or sacrifice his daughter in a marriage to a man she dislikes. This story is brightened by the absence of a true but impecunious lover—the daughter of Sanchez is heart-free—but a stranger is on his way to reach her heart by a roundabout course.

Riding over the hills in search of adventure or fortune, as the case may be, is Ned Shannon, prospector, and he comes upon Sanchez at a critical moment. Sanchez has disposed of a property which will enable him to pay Mexico Williams, and is carrying home the coin, when he is stricken with fatal illness. His dying request is that Shannon shall pay the gambler and save the ranch. Shannon and his faithful Pedro bury Sanchez and start out with good intentions. Shannon stops on the way, is lured into a game of chance and loses the fortune entrusted to his keeping.

Senorita Sanchez rides in quest of her father and is directed to a house which proves to be the gambling establishment of Mexico Williams. Senorita dares the God of Chance, and is soon supported by Shannon. The latter, directed by the invisible force of destiny rescues Senorita from dangerous perils and recovers by courage what he lost in a moment of weakness. Faithful Pedro is nearly murdered by Mexico Williams, but the villian gets his deserts, and all ends happily.

The girl of spirit and moral decency, living in a rude environment, is a favorite character with the tellers of screen stories, but one would hardly think it suited to one of Miss Trunelle's exquisite methods. She fills the bill, however, in dashing style, acts with vigor, rides as if to the saddle born, and rises to all her opportunities. Pryor, also, does well and Yale Boss, but Bigelow Cooper is reverting to theatricalism. His movements and gestures are those of the stage, so obviously artificial that it must be a relief to see him in a self-revelation. He is covering an interesting personality with over-acting. These stories record a phase of life that is passing away, one that most of us have never seen, and it takes a good plot, superior direction and fine interpretation, such as that of "A Tale of Old Tucson," to make them of value.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL FOR HIMSELF.

Will Manufacture Blackwell Films to be Distributed Through Alco Film Company.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, the popular photoplay star, has recently been supplying the trade with a quantity of startling news, but his most daring news was disclosed this week when it transpired that he had left the Famous Players Company to manufacture his own brand of film.

About three months ago, Carlyle Blackwell, one of the most prominent and popular film stars in America, left the Kalem Company, with whom he had been associated for over three years, to go with the Famous Players, in whose current release "The Spit-Fire" he starred.

Mr. Blackwell intends to produce a three-reel feature once a month with himself in the leading role. The subjects that he will produce will be well-known works by famous authors. He has big plans in connection with his newly-formed producing company which will be announced shortly.

Carlyle Blackwell

Mr. Blackwell will leave New York about the 18th of July for his studio which is now in course of construction at Los Angeles, California. He will travel by motor and stop long enough in the largest cities to say a few words to his many admirers.

Mr. Blackwell's productions will be released through the newly-formed Alco Film Company, of which Al. Lichtman, former sales-manager of the Famous Players, is president and general manager. Mr Lichtman has big plans for the Alco Company and will shortly announce his new policy by distributing quality films throughout the world.

"The Silent Bell"

Pasquali American Offers a Four-Reel Picture of Times When Italy Was Struggling for Independence.

By Hanford C. Judson.

TO ONE born and brought up in Italy and come to this or any other country, as many of our citizens have, these films made in the home land, dealing with its history, and filled with glimpses of its streets, typical buildings and the very home ground, must have a special and strong appeal. The subject matter of this particular offering, namely, the struggle of patriotic Italians to throw off the galling yoke of oppressive Austria, is one likely to stir in Italian hearts feelings of no small compass or shallow depth. The picture is called "The Silent Bell," and tells a story of the devotion of a courageous child who saves his father by the same method used in Cromwell's time in England by the sweetheart of a condemned royal adherent, she who clung to the tongue of the curfew bell that was to give the signal for execution. The hero of this picture had to get up before the dawn, work his way through lines of sentries and climb to the bell tower. His was not the good luck of the English girl; for the bellman was not deaf, and he must have felt that his efforts must necessarily be in vain. He clung to the bell in full sight of the courtyard beneath where his father stood with fellow conspirators waiting to hear it ring and knowing that the signal would be quickly followed by the command to fire bullets that would bore their way through flesh and bone and bring them to the stilly darkness of the grave. Yet this boy, too, was fortunate; they tore him from his perilous hold upon the swinging bell and brought him down to the officers in charge of the execution. But it so happened that just at that time peace had been declared and also that the order to free all political prisoners had been sent. The delay served only to hold off the execution till this order arrived at the fortress and so served to save the condemned wholly.

Scene from "The Silent Bell"—(Pasquali)

Scene from "The Silent Bell"—(Pasquali)

The subject matter of the offering has this strong appeal. Of its story we can safely say that it will interest. It is not strong in any true sense when compared with the best pictures that the Pasquali Company has sent from its studio. It never holds us in that tight grip when all our feelings are awake and at the service of our minds in its eagerness to get all the meaning of the story. The acting of the chief conspirator, father of the hero who is a child of about five, is excellent. This part is taken by Signor Capozzi. The Princess Ruspoli, a very pretty woman, takes the role of the boy's mother. Her acting has the qualities of good breeding and personal dignity to be expected in one of her social station. The boy acts his part well enough and will satisfy. For most of the lesser figures in the picture we have only the warmest praise and commendation. There are many soldiers and other figures who are perfectly natural in their business. Perhaps the weakness of the picture lies in the fact that the scenario often fails to discriminate between what is essential to the story, the thing that we are interested in greatly, and that which is of secondary and passing interest only. The four reels have many wholly delightful scenes, bits of some Italian city, gardens, the entrance of some beautiful palace, a prison, the court where the execution is about to take place and other places of great interest and beauty. The photography is of high grade throughout.

H. OLIVER BODINE.

H. OLIVER BODINE, advertising and sales manager of the Raw Film Supply Co., New York, became interested in photograhy twelve years ago, doing special photograhic work for National publications and large corporations in the Middle West. In three years he located and built up one of the largest photo supply businesses in the country in Racine, Wis., a city of 40,000. After that he was three years in charge of advertising and sales of the Wollensak Optical Co., at Rochester, manufacturers of photographic lenses and shutters. Mr. Bodine has been in charge of sales and advertising of the Raw Film Supply Co. for the past six months. He is thoroughly posted on photographic chemistry and has large acquaintance in the photographic trades. He is the author of many articles on various branches of photography, an authority on pictorial photography and has won many cups, medals, etc., awarded throughout the world. Mr. Bodine leaves shortly for an extended trip through Europe, taking up while there the technical end of the motion picture industry, being accorded special favors by the famous German company, Actien Gesellschaft fur Anilin Fabrikation, and the Belgian company, L. Gevaert & Co., as well as other large producing companies of France, Italy and Germany. This experience will round out a knowledge of the photographic branch of the motion picture business. Upon his return to the United States, Mr. Bodine can say in all truth that he is thoroughly posted on all branches of the business, both from a technical and practical standpoint.

H. Oliver Bodine.

JOHN S. EGAN GOES TO CANADA.

A man who has made himself felt in the busy field of motion pictures since his entrance some six months ago is John S. Egan, manager of the Kineclair and educational departments for the Eclair Film Company, Inc. His activities with the latter company ceased on Monday, July 20, at which time he left to become manager of the Ramo exchanges in Montreal and Quebec. Mr. Egan, while with the Eclair Company had much to do with getting the Kineclair home projector in saleable shape and did much to establish the repute of educational films.

Mr. Egan will make his headquarters in Montreal. It is expected through his energy and ability Ramo productions will go through with a rush in the Canadian territory. The new manager is a brother of Agnes Egan Cobb.

"The Angel of Contention"

Two-Reel Majestic—Written by Will Levington Comfort and Directed by John O'Brien.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CAST.

The Angel.....Lillian Gish
Her Daddy.....Spottiswoode Aitken
Sheriff Magoon.....George Seigman
Jack Colter.....R. A. Walsh

THE dominant note in "The Angel of Contention" is very clearly indicated in the title. Lillian Gish is the angel in a rough settlement of cattle men. They are hard drinkers, hard fighters, of lawless tendency, yet possessing enough inborn honesty in their make-up to show deference to the helpless little woman in their midst. The demure little angel is loved by the big and manly sheriff. A sheriff must possess unusual courage to enforce law in a community where men make laws for themselves, more or less according to the demand of conditions under which they live; and the laws in this sheriff's community are to get the drop on your enemy after giving fair warning, and to string up a man who shoots under other conditions.

Scene from "The Angel of Contention"—(Reliance)

In one case it is murder; in the other, it is simply shooting quicker or straighter than the other fellow. Such is the simple code in Sheriff Magoon's small community when he falls in love with "The Angel" and decides to propose. He has the diamond ring all ready and shows it to the boys in the saloon where they meet, drink, gamble and shoot. The proposal thereupon becomes impersonal—it is an affair of the community. The whole gang goes with him. The big sheriff is not averse. Notwithstanding that the "Angel's" father has died, and she is wholly unprotected at his cabin, the big sheriff is afraid to go alone. Even as he approaches the cabin, he weakens and tries to escape; but he is encouraged by the others until he reaches the door. His courage vanishes at the crucial moment, and he makes a break for liberty.

Scene from "The Angel of Contention"—(Reliance)

A few stiff libations at the bar start him over again, and this time he encounters the angel outside her cabin. He induces her to wear the ring, and the community gives three cheers. Now the angel has contracted a habit of her sex, that of helping the helpless. She has tied up the wounds of some of the toughest characters; has nursed them through illness; has been what she is named. The tenderness in her nature which would lead her to care more for a drooping flower than for one carefully nourished is her dominant trait; so, when Jack Colter comes along and is badly wounded by a renegade Indian intent on revenge but a bad shot, as he hit the wrong man, "The Angel" nurses Jack back to life and health and falls in love with him.

The Sheriff gives up, like the big-hearted fellow that he is. The Angel marries Jack Colter and bears him a little replica of herself in due time, but the boys never forgive Colter for stealing the Sheriff's girl. The renegade Indian, still intent on his deferred vengeance, reappears at about the time Colter has a quarrel with the man the Indian intends to kill. The Redskin aims better the second time, kills his man by firing through the window of his cabin. Of course the innocent man is accused and lynched—that is the regulation thing in hundreds of Western photodramas—and the boys will not even believe the Angel when she swears that Colter was at home when the murder was committed. She rides for the Sheriff—also the regulation thing—and they reach the scene of hanging just in time to save Colter. It is the big-hearted Sheriff who shames the gang into recognition of their many obligations to the Angel, and the father of her child is saved.

Miss Gish, in her exquisite characterization and mental revelations, lifts this old melodrama out of its class into a play of deeper human interest, and George Seigman aids materially with his delicious comedy work. To their delicacy of interpretation is due an atmosphere of feminine sweetness and masculine nobility that beautifies and warms the whole play.

VITAGRAPH STAG DINNER AT SCREEN CLUB.

About fifty of the male members of the Vitagraph Company studio forces gathered together on July 11 for what was called the "Initial Reunion and Dinner." The affair took place in the summer garden of the Screen Club, New York City. A regulation banquet table was spread for the stars, under the stars, while numerous vaudeville performers working on the "open time" looked on from adjoining hotels and boarding houses.

The Vitagraph party arrived from the Brooklyn studio in thirteen motors, all owned by various members of the party. With Vitagraph pennants flying they cut quite a dash as they came along the Rialto where it seemed everyone on the street knew them and waved a salute of kindly recognition.

According to the original plan there was to be no toastmaster and the first man attempting to make a speech was to be serenaded with vegetables and other food as a reminder of early days. If Jack Bunny had not been there there probably would have been no toastmaster, but whenever J. B. sits at a table, no matter how small the party, all hands look to him for the cue. He just naturally becomes toastmaster without a word being said, because he is a born toastmaster, in the Gus Thomas class. Anyhow, Bunny did what presiding there was to be done. His first utterance was a "General Order" for the removal of coats.

Amid mirth and music (the latter by three Ethiopian rag dispensers), the dinner proceeded until some of the party, regardless of the vegetable edict, and with the hardihood of early days, felt the craving for speech stealing over them. There were many funny speeches and stories pulled during the dinner. At 8 P. M. the party adjourned to the Winter Garden in a body and enjoyed the show while dividing honors with the actors on the stage for public recognition. After the theater the party returned to the Screen Club and had another feed at the same tables. Arthur Leslie presented the Vitagraphers with a large floral horseshoe, which turned out to be a good meal ticket, because the Vitagraph boys pulled him in and made him eat. A list of those at the spread follows:

John Bunny, Maurice Costello, Wallie Van, Arthur Leslie, James Young, Bernard French, A. Victor Smith, Charles Chapman, James Morrison, Jack Harvey, Theodore Marsden, Nicholas Duncan, Van Dyke Brooke, Billy Quirk, Lee Beggs, Bert Dorris, John Rankin, Dick Leslie, Tefft Johnson, Darwin Karr, Paul Scardon, George Baker, George Cooper, Charles Wellesley, Joe Curran, Arthur Ashley, Mr. Mills, William Shea, Edward Thomas, Walter Ackerman, Charles Eldridge, Frank Lawrence, Wilfrid North, Earle Williams, Harry Morey, Charles Stratton, Gladden James, Harry Waldron, Hughie Mack, Arthur Cozine, Charles Gaskill, Eugene Mullen, Dwight Cleveland, Pete Le Grasse, Captain Cochran, Charles Fisher, Bob Gaillord, Jack Bulger, Mr. Bellmore, Mr. Amant, Sam Spedon.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

THE "NEW FOURTH."

THE Fourth of July is now quite distinct from that of our fathers so far as its observance is concerned; while the object in view is the same the methods are different. To call it "safe and sane" certainly does not convey the idea that former observances were not either safe or sane, but it does mean that by the common heritage of man whose tendencies are not uplifting, it is possible to wander away from not only the original purpose but also from the original methods. In this wandering away celebrations of joy had become excuses for noise, and when noise runs riot it spells danger; the great nuisance of unbridled power, the attendant loss of many young lives, added to which were the still larger number of maimed and disfigured, caused thinking observers to call a halt on such dangerous patriotism. The public thought was turned by the very force of circumstances in the opposite direction, in the place of danger there must be safety and in the stead of a wild riot there must be a sane and thoughtful observance; thus, there was born the "safe and sane" idea of celebrations.

There was, however, a great lack of that something which would fill out the time, be sufficiently entertaining, give a possibility of incorporating the idea of the day with complete satisfaction; there was something needed; what would supply the need? In this crisis comes the most timely moving picture, instantly it was seen to possess all the desired qualifications of the occasion. Pleasing to children, entertaining to adults, instructive to the patriotic and full of pleasure to all, the moving picture has made complete the "New Fourth" and now patriotism can only run riot in profitable directions. The orator of the day may appear everywhere, speaking in the universal language of the picture; the new citizen as well as the old may see again upon the screen those scenes which gave birth to the day and occasion, the birth of the world's greatest republic.

Nowhere has educational kinematography become at once the most powerful, popular, instructive and entertaining force than in its place on the program of the New Fourth which it has made. It was the writer's privilege to attend the open air services and series of entertainments in a suburban town on the Fourth of July in which the moving picture had its proportion of space in the plan and scope of the occasion, and it is within the range of truth to say that it was the greater part of the whole; it literally made the day, without it even the "safe and sane" program would have been quiet to the extent of dullness, and tame to the ultimate extent of weariness; in a few years of such days there would soon be a return to the old degraded methods. With the moving pictures added all is different, there is tone, power, attraction and interest of the non-flagging kind, people saw again the scenes of old, history repeated itself, patriotism was newly awakened; music, speech and picture, with appropriate illuminative fireworks, produced a holiday of the most perfect kind, fulfiiing the object in view in the highest and best possible way, without noise, riot or danger; but on the contrary, with intelligence and pleasure, to the highest satisfaction of all, marking another triumph for the powers and possibilities of the educational pictures.

THE PLAYGROUND EXHIBITION.

Perhaps one of the most beneficial uses of the moving picture at the present time is the free outdoor or playground exhibitions for children. It is becoming one of the best opportunities for city authorities to solve the problem of the street playing troubles, while at the same time it is taking occasion to give instruction through pleasure. New York and other large cities are by these means finding time passing amusement for the children, while teaching them such helpful subjects as "safety first" and "spotless town," besides dealing with subjects of "disease by flies" and then branching out into all kinds of sports, nature subjects, scenes and travel; of course there is always a plentiful supply of the comic without which a series of pictures would be a hardship on the child mind, children's pleasures must be well seasoned with good rollicking fun. For the benefit of the rising generation, for civic betterment, use the moving picture. Use the moving picture; the moving picture cannot be used too much.

OPPORTUNITY AND PRIVILEGE.

Never before in the history of the world have the greatest opportunities and best privileges been so linked as in the powers of the moving pictures. In America every one is appalled at the stupendous scope which kinematography is taking in its widespread capabilities. When it is found that 16,000,000 people daily see the pictures and that of this number more than half are children, or to make a striking comparison, the moving picture attracts and entertains more children than do the Sunday schools, libraries, or indeed all sorts of institutions intended for juvenile instruction or betterment. These are facts which have come before Congress through the House Committee on Education, and which have brought to the front the great responsibility resting upon authorities in the handling of the privileges and opportunities of the moment. As go the pictures of to-day, so will go the men and women of to-morrow. The best use of this opportunity is not locked up in censorship, that is a secondary matter; the primary work is in the nature, class, and making of the picture; it is here where the best men, the best ideas and methods are required. There is no doubt that for the best educational results, the makers of the pictures will be compelled to have directors capable of meeting the occasion, men who know what is wanted and how to meet and supply these wants. The question has to be met squarely. Kinematography is here as a new, capable and sufficient power, its scope is overwhelming and, like a mighty ocean, we must either ride upon its surface or be engulfed in its depths; those who are wisely equal to the occasion will render noble service in taking every opportunity to fill the privilege offered.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

There has been received at the office of the Moving Picture World during the last few weeks some forty or fifty notices from newspapers in all parts of the country, announcing that the moving picture equipment is being installed in as many churches. This is a good sign. From the beginning churches have taken the lead over the schools, chiefly due to the enterprise of the pastor and local church workers. This does not mean that the schools are behind, a school-master is not as free as a pastor who is able to go ahead with any advantage. The school-master must wait the pleasure of the authorities, and such large and weighty authorities move slowly; the time will come, however, when these large bodies will themselves have been moved by the moving pictures, because they are moving everything and everbody, and when these authorities act, they will put the pictures in all the schools at once; then they will be ahead of the churches.

RIVALS.

For some time we have been reading how the moving picture house is becoming the rival of some other force, power or habit. About the first to complain was the saloon; they lost the poor man's nickel, they lost the young man's patronage, they lost the home trade; they admitted that the pictures were better temperance workers than all the human reformers in all ages put together; the pictures have practically killed half of the worst part of the liquor traffic.

The cigarette was the next to groan; the departing nickels were not going up in smoke any longer, they were feeding the mental and pleasing faculties of the former smokers, who now realized that there was something better than either the cup or the smoke. The cheap pool-rooms next fell in line and joined the Society of Howlers; they evidently had lost their cue, for the two and a half cents per was no longer attractive. The cheap music hall is almost a thing of the past; they did not howl and go out of business, they wisely converted themselves into picture houses and became successful. The policeman on the street complained with gladness that loafing was a thing of the past in a large measure, the district attorney of a very large city said the picture house had taken the undesirable idlers from the street, and found them somewhere to go and something to do.

The latest rival has appeared in the daily newspaper; the press began to complain that they were feeling the effects of the new channel open for the flow of the small coins; with noted press wisdom, however, they did not complain, they knew very well that the power of the picture was a righteous one, so they fell in line, although at first they tried to conquer by abuse. A New York paper which was the first to complain about the pictures when it found that the cents were going from them has now allied itself with a large picture house and they are working together in the gathering and publishing of news. Other papers are falling in line and the press and the pictures are working in partnership with great mutual profit. It has been said that kinematography is the greatest discovery next to that of printing; here it would seem there is a common relationship, and it is well fitting that they should work together, there cannot possibly be a better partnership; the Press and the Pictures can educate the world.

POWER'S INSTALLATIONS IN NEW PLACES.

The constantly broadening field of motion pictures is indicated by the following list of recent sales provided by the Nicholas Power company, which is busily engaged in marketing its Cameragraph 6A projecting machine:

The First Christian Church of Ashland, Ky., and the Presbyterian Church in the same city have each purchased a machine of the latest model, with dissolving view attachment, through the Picture Theater Equipment Company, of New York City.

The Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, have installed a motor driven 6A at the Central High School of Minneapolis.

To provide pleasure and instruction for the American fighting men, 6A installations have been made on the United States Receiving Ship "Hancock," the U. S. S. "Delaware" and at the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. in New York City.

The following interesting sales to the trade are also recorded: Variety Film Company of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands (2); Eclair Film Company, for its new studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey; Moorish Gardens at 110th Street and Broadway, New York City; Fox Airdome at Atlantic City (2); D. R. Faunce, theater at Atlantic City. The United Odd Fellows of Ilion, N. Y., have also purchased a 6A.

OF INTEREST TO DEAF-MUTES.

The Rev. John Henry Keiser, pastor of St. Ann's Church for deaf mutes, recently assembled his parishioners, at the church, 511 West 148th Street, New York, and narrated to them, in the sign language, the story of "Cabiria," and his impression of this photoplay, after seeing it at the Knickerbocker Theater, the past week.

Albert V. Ballin, a member of the Deaf Mute's Union League, narrated his version of the story to the members of the league, at their headquarters, 139 West 125th Street.

Rev. Keiser and Mr. Ballin, after witnessing an exhibition of "Cabiria" were so impressed, that arrangements, as above, were made, in order that the deaf mutes of the city might be made aware of the fact that the masterpiece of photoplays is being presented, motion pictures being one of the few amusements that really appeal to the deaf and mute.

A Studio "Exterior" for "Thou Shalt Not," Being Taken at the Rams Studio, New York.

J. P. SEEBURG.

J. P. SEEBURG, president of the J. P. Seeburg Piano Co., of Chicago, has won an important position in the automatic piano, orchestrion and motion picture player field of the United States. Not only for his creation of the "Art and Design" on the automatic instruments is he entitled to much credit, but the character of the Seeburg instruments throughout, and the innovations of a practical character which are being continually embodied in them, together with the policy of constant improvement in the smallest detail, wherever possible, stamp their maker as a progressive of the highest type.

J. P. Seeburg.

Mr. Seeburg has been identified with the piano trade practically all of his life. In 1880 at the age of fifteen he became engaged at a western piano factory where he mastered the technical points of piano making in all of its phases. Possessing the natural ability and inclination for his chosen trade, and conscientiously devoting his attention to the work, especially detail, Mr. Seeburg's genius asserted itself, and won for him foremanship and finally superintendency.

In 1895 he went to Rockford, Ill., and became one of the organizers of the Kurtz-Seeburg Co. After a few years he sold his interest in the business and returned to Chicago where he founded the company engaging in the manufacture of automatic pianos. This company in 1907 was organized as the J. P. Seeburg Piano Co. In this comparatively short time the latter has developed into the largest exclusive manufacturers of automatic pianos, orchestrions, and motion picture players west of New York. The company is now shipping the Seeburg Motion Picture Player to all parts of the country.

Mr. Seeburg is a man of ideas, and is responsible in no small degree for the progress made in the field in which the name of Seeburg has become a by-word. Inaugurating a firm business policy at the outset, and adhering thereto with a fixity, he has placed his business on a safe sane basis. He believes in the square deal for everyone, as employees and customers alike can testify. In the trade generally Mr. Seeburg enjoys an enviable reputation, and is looked upon as a practical man who is progressive in the true sense of the word, and knows his business from the ground up.

Recognizing that a perfect product must be the result of a perfect organization, Mr. Seeburg spared no expense in getting together the best workmen to be had. Pains-taking attention, even to the most minute detail, is the slogan of the Seeburg factory in all departments, and that the policy is closely followed is best demonstrated by the Seeburg instrument itself. As nearly perfect as an automatic instrument can be it is a "producer" for the live dealer as it can be depended upon to give satisfaction at all times. This point is essential to automatic success.

While personally devoting all of his time to his business, Mr. Seeburg takes an interest in matters pertaining to the piano trade, and commercial affairs generally. He is a member of the National Piano Mfg. Association, National Association of Piano Merchants of America, Chicago Piano & Organ Association, Chicago Association of Commerce, and Illinois Mfg. Association.

The company has just settled in their new large factory building, and are prepared to turn out their goods better than ever before.

A CORRECTION.

On page No. 213 of the World's July 11th issue there is a picture of a group of Edison Players. George Lessey was the director of this Bermudian party and not C. Jay Williams, as stated in the caption under the cut.

New California Producers

The Santa Barbara Moving Picture Company Will Release Its Subjects Through Sawyer, Inc.

THE first production of the new producing company recently formed in Santa Barbara, Cal., and known as the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, promises to be one of the big novelties in the motion picture field.

The picture will be released about August 1, and will be shown in New York shortly before that date. The entire output of this new company will be marketed by Sawyer, Inc., and the initial showing will be made at that company's offices.

The title is "The Envoy Extraordinary," and is in four reels. The story was written by Lorimer Johnston, and Mr. Johnston has brought to bear on the subject all his experience and knowledge of motion picture craft. In these times of threatened and in some countries actual war the subject will be particularly timely.

The picture was intended for a six-reeler, but upon the advice of Sawyer, Inc., the story has been condensed into four stirring reels, which teem with action and thrills. A beautiful love story runs throughout, and the situations are all very unusual.

Miss Caroline Frances Cooke.

The central theme deals with diplomatic machinations, but the old stereotyped methods of using stolen plans and papers as the motive have been avoided. The action is sustained by the interest in the declaration of war between some of the most prominent European nations, the story taking place in 1916, which enables the author to use his imagination in utilizing the advanced inventions of war engines, etc. Sensational situations abound throughout and include among other things a real international polo match, a wonderful fight and stirring scenes on an ocean steamer.

One scene that will attract universal attention is the reception to the Foreign Ambassadors given by the Prime Minister of one of the foreign powers. In this scene are many society women of California, who appear in the gowns worn by them on the different occasions when they were presented at the foreign courts. Over six hundred persons appear in the production, numbering among them prominent players.

Many of the scenes were made in Montecito, a beautiful town near Santa Barbara which has been overlooked by other moving picture companies. As some of the stockholders of the Santa Barbara Company have beautiful homes in and near Santa Barbara, they have placed at Mr. Johnston's disposal their homes and furnishings.

The climax of the picture will afford a rare thrill. Mr. Johnston's plan is not to feature any particular player, but to make his productions stand on their merits, and to attain this end he has secured some wonderful dramatic scenarios that will win out on the merits of the stories and not on an artist's name.

The second release will be started the last week in July and will be an American drama of the people.

Mr. Johnston has with him as his cameraman one of the most successful of the early men in the game, Roy Overbaugh.

As leading woman with the Santa Barbara Company there has been selected Miss Caroline Frances Cooke, widely known in the photoplay world for splendid work with the Selig Polyscope Company. Miss Cooke's early stage experiences were with the Frohman companies in New York. Her first photoplay work was with the Selig Polyscope Company at the Chicago studios, and she later headed the company which Selig sent to Florida. Just before joining the Santa Barbara company, Miss Cooke was with the American Film Manufacturing Company. She is the wife of Mr. Johnston.

The officers of the company are Elmer J. Boeseke, president and general manager; G. W. Boeseke, vice-president; H. M. A. Postley, treasurer; A. R. Edmondson, secretary.

UNIVERSAL IKE, JR.

UNIVERSAL IKE, JR., in the Universal release of that name, has a four-decked name, Wilhelm Robert McBain Feuhrer, but no one around Universal City, California, knows it. "Bobby" Fuehrer it is with Universalites from the general manager to the newest cowboy.

Bobby was born in New York City fifteen years ago and early imbibed a knowledge of the American language as it is spoken by the boys of that metropolis.

Bobby Feuhrer.

Bobby is first of all an actor—then boy, in which he differs from the usual movie hero.

"Naw," says Bobby when questioned regarding his attitude toward the great American game, "naw, baseball is all right, but it's me for dis actin' bizniss any day in de week.

"O' course, I jes as soon be a pitcher like some of dem guys or a batter like Wagner, but then, it's working, jes like movie actin' and what's the diffrunce? Say, I gotter git back to the scene. Them bears is gitten' narvus."

Bobby went to public school—for a while—but teachers had a terrible habit of expecting one to study, and when a feller spelled "cat" with a "k" there was always a holler, so he decided that he'd rather be on the stage anyway. Then followed a series of child parts which gave the boy excellent experience in dramatic lines. His last engagement was with Maude Adams. Then pictures grabbed him and it looks now as though he will be a movie actor indefinitely.

$100,000 THEATER FOR TERRE HAUTE, IND.

Maurice Less, proprietor of the Lyric Film & Supply Co., Terre Haute, Ind., his wife and S. Uffenheimer, recently filed articles of incorporation at the capital of that state for the incorporation of the American Theater Company. The purpose of the company is to build a number of moving picture theaters, the principal one of which will be that which is being erected in Wabash avenue, Terre Haute. The building will have a 50-foot frontage and a length of 162 feet. It has been estimated that the structure will involve an expenditure of $50,000. The interior will be handsomely furnished and appointed. The seating plan calls for the accommodation of 1,100 persons, and there will be fifty boxes. Mr. Less is also the owner and manager of the old American Theater. Work on the new theater was begun on July 1 and will be kept at high pressure until the house is completed.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

ONE of the local newspapers devoted half a page last Sunday to a semi-humorous article on the film mart undertaking in this city. The writer stated that as there is an army of scenario writers and companies by the hundred turning out millions upon millions of feet of screen stuff, there is a glut and the selling of films outright at auction has been decided upon by some wise men as a method for working off the surplus and easing the market.

* * *

There is a prevailing opinion in the motion picture field directly adverse to all that has been said in favor of the auction idea, notably from the regular exchange men and exhibitors, who declare that the scheme only fills a long-felt want on the part of irresponsible people who should never be allowed an opportunity to get into the business. As exhibitors their competition is not feared. It is the injury they do to the trade as a whole that occasions the resentment. Irrespective of claims that may be made by those behind the auction business, and others, there is no glut of real, good, up-to-date subjects in the film market, and the interests of all legitimately concerned in the motion picture business would be better served if films having only the auctioneer's block as an outlet were consigned to the iunk heap and not placed in the hands of what may quite properly be called barnstormers.

* * *

It may be interesting to the promoters of the auction idea to learn that possibly among the most interested spectators and inspectors, presumably as buyers, have been people working in the interest of the United States government. Naturally many will ask, "Why?" The answer is that for some time Uncle Sam has felt that he has not been getting all the revenue he should from the film business in the form of duties, and his representatives have been quite active in trying to find the cause. Every branch of the business is being closely watched and several people who have become quite extensive handlers of films are under surveillance. The motion picture business all over the world, as all know, has grown to amazing proportions and the importations to this country run into millions of feet. For several years the government looked upon the business as thousands of people did, giving it comparatively casual notice, but now films are receiving as much close attention as any other line of goods imported. It is stated that activity on the part of the government officials received its first incentive through the operations of certain people whose identity with the picture business, upon investigation, did not size up to the amount of importations they were making. The conclusion reached was that if the small fry were handling so much it was time to sit up and take notice, so that now the film branch of the customs house department has grown in importance second only to the very high grade of importations.

* * *

In view of the fact that the percentage of foreign made films exhibited in the United States is quite small compared with the home make it may surprise many to learn that the importations are so large and that the government should feel called upon to press operations. The explanation is that the government is satisfied there is nothing wrong in connection with importations made by established and legitimate concerns. It is concerned regarding other importing operations, two classes of which are under marked suspicion.

* * *

People who have not been connected with the importation business presumably do not know that there is a Federal law which permits return to this country, free of duty, goods that have been made here and exported to foreign countries, provided they have not been improved upon, or otherwise handled on the other side so as to alter them in part or whole so as to make them other than purely American made goods.

* * *

Uncle Sam suspects that some people have been trying to put one over on him in taking advantage of the American goods returned provision. Official statements have not been made, but there is sufficient information at hand to warrant the conclusion that Uncle Sam is not on a wild goose chase. It is said that certain renters and exhibitors have gone over to the other side and bought up large quantities of films said to have been made in the United States and exported. These goods are bought second hand. Under these conditions the purchasers would be entitled to get the goods back to this country free of duty. But Uncle Sam has found that certain domestic and foreign companies manufacturing here also manufacture the same subjects on the other side, and he suspects that many of the second hand goods purchased abroad and bearing the names of companies manufacturing in the United States, and sought to be brought back here as American goods returned, are really made from negatives sent to or made in the foreign country, and if such is the case the government wants duty paid.

* * *

When spoken to regarding this phase of the importation business some of the makers of films in this country have treated the matter quite indifferently. Among the statements made was "Such business cannot hurt us as it would have done years ago, and under existing conditions it would not pay us to try to stop such traffic if it really exists. Goods bought second hand on the other side cannot enter into serious competition with us here, because they are old issues and generally show usage after they have gone over the foreign circuits. Our market requires a constant supply of new stuff. The second hand stuff goes to a cheap trade we do not supply or reach and accounts for the advertisements frequently offering our subjects at less than what it costs us to make them. Still, we hope the government is correct in its suspicions, as the exclusion of second hand stuff from the market is at all times desirable, and if the officials can suppress their importation it will be a great service to the legitimate makers, renters and exhibitors who are trying to maintain a high standard of exhibitions."

* * *

The second class of importations under suspicion is that of negatives made in foreign countries and brought to the United States presumably for exhibition to the market and to pave the way for sales when the positives are sent from the other side. A bond is furnished for return of the negative within a certain period and it is admitted without payment of duty. Nine out of every ten men in the film business reading this will declare it ridiculous. They will say that for such purposes dealers would naturally bring over a sample positive print and the duty on positives is so small that no one would try to evade it by resorting to such red tape as has been outlined above. All of which is quite true. But the writer is reliably informed that negatives have been brought over for that declared purpose, bonded and returned. And, after all, the statement is not as ridiculous as many may think. For this reason: There is a strong suspicion that the positives that are supposed to come to this country on the strength of the preliminary exhibit of the negative never come to this side. Why? Well, it may be that the exhibit was a faliure and no sales could be made. And it may be that before the negative under bond was returned enough positive prints to fill orders were made from it, thereby saving the duty on the negative and on the positive prints that might have been made from it upon its return to the other side. This is the most serious of the two suspected cases. It is not known that the game has been worked. At least no direct accusation has been made, but from what has been learned it is believed that government officials are not satisfied that the evasion has not been made.

* * *

A man well known in importation circles said a few days ago: "I have been engaged in custom house work for a long time and, believe me, there is no line of business that presents a more shrewd, scheming class of people than those who come to us. I have met the best of them, but none have surpassed an element that has come to the front since the moving pictures have attained their tremendous growth. But I do not wish to be misconstrued. The element I speak of, as a rule, strikes me as being of the piker stripe. They seem to be a class of people who sit up nights figuring how they can get into the film competition at minimum rates, and I think they are about at the end of the rope. The government people have waited and watched and I guess you have the right dope when you believe Uncle Sam has something up his sleeve. My experience has taught me there is nothing in the customs business he cannot reach when he goes after it. I am confident, from what I have heard, that the government looks upon the motion picture business as among the most legitimate and important of our industries, and that none of the suspicions in mind attach to the companies of established reputation. The game sought is the piker element I have spoken of, and I don't mind telling you that I think the officials have the number of more than one of them."

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

"Look Who's Here."

WILL H. BRYANT, once leader of an orchestra in Indianapolis, now in charge of the Varieties Theater, Terre Haute, Ind., makes his little bow. It has been some time since cousin Bill has had anything to offer, but he says he has been busy. Let's forgive him and hear what he has to say for himself:

> Your synopsis for "Quo Vadis?" and the arranged piano score gave me sufficient ideas by which to lay out a nice program. We have had several good features since, but none so meritorious as "Les Miserables." Playing this feature twice daily, and playing every reel, I determined to lay out a program that would not be tiresome to use. Am enclosing a synopsis which may be of some use to others—at least giving an idea of the general sentiment.

[Unlike the ordinary releases, "Les Miserables" will be exhibited for a long time to come; for that reason this musical program may be of interest to many.—Ed.]

"Les Miserables."

(1) "Affection Idyl" (by Himan) until Jean breaks in window.
(2) Continued "hurry's" through several prison scenes until title: "A Chance for Me to Escape."
(3) Mysterious until Jean takes rope, then:
(4) Continued "hurry's" until Jean is seated in churchyard.
(5) Semi-plaintive ("Garden Matinee" by Friml) until Jean enters wall door, then:
(6) "Boreas" (Trinkaus) or religioso p. and f. according to action until end of reel, where Jean kneels under tree.
(7) "Southern Reverie" (or Gavotte) until Fantine in factory office;
(8) Plaintive until title: "Fantine Sells Her Hair."
(9) "Cupid's Caress" (Witmark) or "Charme de Amour" p. and f. according to action until end of hospital scene. Then
(10) "Heart to Heart" (Witmark pub.), increasing the tempo and repeating agitato, then continuing through scenes until title: "Shall I Allow Another to Suffer for My Deed?"
(11) "Madame Butterfly Selection" (eliminating the Star Spangled Banner and following Allegro Moderato) repeating the moderato in D, until Jean grabs chair; then into next movement, repeating andante in G. until Jean leaves Fantine's body, then proceeding until Jean escapes from jail and runs away.
(12) Neutral lively until Cosette sent for water; then:
(13) Waltz Lento p. and f., according to action until Jean gives Cosette the doll.
(14) "Cavalieria Rusticana" selection, playing through to Intermezzo, after which play
(15) "Sneaky" hurry's until title: "In the Convent Garden."
(16) Neutral melody until vision of wagon breakdown; back to
(17) "Heart to Heart" (agitato movement) once, then
(18) Semi-plaintive until scene with nuns.
(19) Religioso until next scene. Waltz, gavotte and waltz to fill in scenes until title: "Rebellion 1832."
(20) "Marseillaise Hym" p. and f. until soldiers kneel and fire.
(21) "Hurry's" continued through several scenes p. and f. until Marius laid on bed. Plaintive until title: "Javert Commits Suicide."
(22) Selection from "Pagliacci" repeating Intermezzo melody (in E.) until title: "Wedding of Cozette and Marius."
(23) Then into Minuet (slow). Allo. for scene with Thernardier and into sob song for death scene and end.

(N. B.—These tempos and strains are based on the operator's running each reel in fifteen minutes with two machines, consequently there are no delays in changing reels.)

I want to call attention to the manner in which Mr. Bryant "humors" his music to fit the action, and cuts or repeats movements to fit the lengths of scenes. He uses selections from "Madame Butterfly," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," and such movements as are inconsistent with the sentiment or action, he eliminates. Mr. Bryant says of "The Spoilers:"

> This is one of the most difficult to lay out a program for I have found. Opening with a boisterous popular rag or march and changing to a plaintive at title: "Glenister Breaks Off With Cherry Malotte," then back into the first number for finish of prologue. From first to last have plenty of hurries and marches, saving the longest hurry for the big fight scene in the last reel, with a love melody from title: "Convalescent," until end.

Stock Music for General Work.

Miss Florence L. Currier, Barton Vermont, says:

> I am quite gratified to find you deem my articles on photoplay music worthy of a place in the Moving Picture World. I have had a large number of inquiries from the smaller up-country theaters asking about music. Several have asked what I considered a good safe musical program for a four-reel program where nothing other than a brief synopsis is known beforehand, and I have forwarded the enclosed selection which I believe will take care of any four reel program, and at least be not disconcerting. I have assumed that the pianist would have some of your agitato, weird and creepy stuff memorized. With that and these numbers I think any good pianist can make the gentleman who is getting disgusted with picture music, forget about the music and become interested in the pictures. And, after all, that is what we want. Here are the numbers:
>
> (1) "In Merry Merry May" (from Baron Trenck).
> (2) "Madrid," a Spanish intermezzo (Jentes).
> (3) "Take a Step" (from "The Quaker Girl").
> (4) "Red Man," Indian Intermezzo (Longboat).
> (5) "The Montenegran Patrol" (from Winsome Winnie), very old.
> (6) "Nights of Gladness Waltz" (Ancliff).
> (7) "The Kiddies March" (Evlyn Bloom).
> (8) "Cupid's Garden" (Max Eugene).
> (9) "In the Shadows" (Finck).
> (10) "Reverie" (C. J. Bond).

Miss Currier further says:

> I believe with these ten numbers and a little dramatic music any good pianist can handle a full week's program and produce a setting for photoplays that will bring the management the congratulations of his patrons, and that it will actually afford several weeks good stuff if used in a discriminating manner.

I presume Miss Currier means by "discriminating manner" that the pianist is not supposed to confine himself (or herself) exclusively to these ten numbers for the entire week.

Miss Currier is a new friend to the department, but a diligent one. This is her third communication within a few months, and I am sure the readers will join me in trying to make her feel welcome.

TWO NEW THEATERS FOR DETROIT.

The Calvert Theater Company, Detroit, Mich., of which David King is president, will build two big picture houses in that city. One of them, to be known as the Kenilworth, will have a seating capacity of 1,500. This house will cost $75,000, and is expected to be ready for occupancy by October 15. The other house is to be erected by the Kahn Realty Company and will be leased for a long term of years by the Calvert Theater Company. It will seat 1,200 and will be open by October 1. Both houses are situated in North Woodward avenue.

Doings at Los Angeles.

THE annual bathing girl's automobile parade at Ocean Park was a great affair, and was seen by close to 50,000 people. Miss Margaret Gibson, who has been starred in so many Vitagraph western releases, was the lucky winner of first place, which brought a prize of $50 in cash and a pretty gold and silver loving cup. W. H. Clune and Eddie Dillon were two of the five judges who had to decide on the beauteous one. The weekly cameramen were there and snapped some good pictures of the long parade.

* * *

And next came the dog show at Venice, a sister city of Ocean Park, and another sister of Santa Monica, the three located on the shore of a crescent bay about 16 miles from Los Angeles. Bosworth entered his "Snookums," a dog that has been a hero in "Burning Daylight" and other northern London stories. Lucius J. Henderson and wife entered Dido and Pico, two beautiful Maltese terriers, and they both won prizes—firsts, too. The youngest dog was sold to Richard Bennet, the actor, who is here on a vacation, having closed at one of the theaters. Mr. Henderson is now organizing a company and will soon start making films.

* * *

And again on the beach at Santa Monica, the local companies of the New York, Vitagraph, Kalem, Universal, and several others not entered, will be parading in the Fourth of July procession which will be four miles long. This is a great event and all kinds of decorated floats and automobiles will be seen. Prizes will also be awarded to the best ones. The moving picture companies will be there hundreds strong.

* * *

J. P. McGowan, of Kalem fame, and his leading lady, were mixed up in a runaway last week and J. P. passed up the chance of a good press story by catching the team and wagon in which the actress was riding. He averred a real accident, anyway. They were on their way to a small oil city where a film was being made. They journeyed 60 miles each day to this location.

* * *

When asked how much film went out of the tanks at the Balboa, H. M. Horkheimer said: "Well, at the present time we are running full blast, and three shifts; we want to double that, but the film that goes out amounts to about 6,000 feet of negative film a week, and 150,000 feet of positive film in the same time, the latter being the finished product that is run on the machines in the theaters. We are the only company in the west to print all positive film on the grounds."

* * *

Quinn's Superba Theater is nearly ready to open, and probably by the time this paragraph is printed the elegant new coast theater will be playing to full houses. This new photoplay theater is one of the best in the city, and is finished in the latest style.

* * *

There is not much real news from the Tom Nash-Big Otto animal farm-studio, but everywhere around the place is something doing, and animals are working in the pictures everywhere. They are making some good films.

* * *

Cleo Madison, directed by Wilfred Lucas, has finished a very good scenic-picture taken in Bear Valley, one of the remote settings that attracts all directors. It took five motor cars to haul the principals, a large cast being taken to the mountain location.

* * *

It is funny that so many beach pictures are being put on during this time of the year. It must be that the players are either hankering for a vacation, or else they like to do stunts in the water. It is generally admitted that Los Angeles is pretty warm in the summer, and the beaches are nice and cool. Splash!

* * *

Selig has put on many wild animal pictures, but in none has Adele Lane appeared, but she did the other day and, much to her surprise, and the surprise of others, said she was "not afraid in the least." Some people seem to make friends with animals, while others are never able to approach them.

* * *

If the Lasky studio continues to outgrow its quarters and expand so rapidly, the company will have to build a new concrete studio near the Bosworth place, for the plot of ground now used by Lasky is pretty well covered with roadways, stages, buildings, and everything. An addition to one of the stages is being put on. Robert Edeson and James Neil are jointly directing "Where the Trail Divides." Everything is humming here.

* * *

Richard Spencer, who was editor of scenarios for the N. Y. M. P. Co., has departed for the east to remain there for some time to enjoy a well-earned holiday. He left on the first of July.

* * *

Edna Maison and Ray Gallagher are being directed by Loyd Ingraham, late of Essanay, in a series of comedies. Ray has had good luck with the comedy part, but to get good comedy he had to have a few mishaps. While doing a funny actor's stunt, he fell off the stage and sprained his ankle and was hobbling around for two days. At the beach where they made a summer comedy, the unlucky leading man was stung by a stingaree on the sole of his foot. This put his pedals out of order, and he has been looking sort of wry. Mr. Ingraham is taking over the old Power's company.

* * *

"The Clansman" is being produced by David W. Griffith at the Mutual studios. A full company is being used in this big film, which is said to be extraordinary.

* * *

"Damon and Pythias," the four-reel feature film done by Otis Turner, of Universal fame, was run off to a private audience of about 1,000 people at Clune's auditorium. Although not present, reports came out that the film was a decided success and Herbert Rawlinson had done excellent, and William Worthington as well. Flank Lloyd was one of the hits in the film. Cleo Madison was also good.

* * *

Peggy Hart, who plays leading parts in Hartigan's Pathe company, is a good swimmer, and for a woman, is excellent. Recently the company was at the beach, and Miss Hart actually helped to save a man from drowning.

CLARKE IRVINE.

British Notes.

THE announcement has been made this week that one of the leading music-hall and variety syndicates is to experiment with a mixed programme of artistes' turns and moving pictures. Oswald Stoll (whose principal establishment is the London Coliseum) will shortly exhibit for the first three days of the week an up-to-date programme of moving pictures, and the remainder of the week will be devoted to the usual programme of theatrical turns. It is expected that the innovation will be met with a torrential protest from the music-hall artistes' trade unions. The officials of one federation have already worked themselves to a fever pitch of excitement about it.

* * *

Subjects strong in sentiment and human nature, not necessarily of a sensational or even of a mildly exciting nature, are always popular in England. About two years ago the Selig Co. released here a short picture, entitled "Me and Bill," which was an allegory with a modern setting upon the seven ages of man. So great has been the clamor for a reissue that the producing company is shortly to place upon the market an enlarged version of the same picture.

* * *

Walter MacNamara, formerly of the Universal Co., and the author of the film, "Traffic in Souls," is at the moment directing a few productions of his own in London. He is very reluctant regarding the nature of these, but it is safe to predict that the most notable of his pictures will be modeled along the lines of the one above named.

* * *

A small, but enterprising, Manchester film company took a number of remarkable scenes during the past few days in connection with a version of Sir A. Conan Doyle's story, "A Study in Scarlet." One of the scenes taken at Southport on the sand dunes was a representation of a march of 400 Mormons under the leadership of Brigham Young.

* * *

A private company is preparing an 8,000-foot industrial film of British industries. The film is being compiled in sections, each taken in one of the centers of the industry or trade it illustrates. Last week the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce visited a local picture house to see the length of celluloid depicting Birmingham industries. When completed, the film will be exhibited in the 100 leading cities of the world.

The Parliamentary Bill promoted by the City of London to impose far-reaching restrictions upon celluloid stores, and in particular film warehouses, has been defeated.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

JUST what are you—a manager, an accident or an offense? Do not write and tell us, but figure it out and tell yourself. George Carpenter, in Real Reels, the house organ of the Notable Feature Film Company, leads us up to this question with this editorial from his gingery little four page mustard plaster. Read this three times, please. Once will not be enough.

IF NOT, WHY NOT?

"Caprice," with Little Mary Pickford in the title role, was put on at a Curtis street theater in Denver last December for a nickel. Subsequently it was taken to a suburban theater, the York, in Denver, where it went to capacity for all three shows in one night at ten cents. It is now being brought back to the Princess theater on Curtis street in Denver for ten cents next week.

Times do change!

The question that arises is, why was it ever put on for five cents. It played capacity at five cents, again capacity at 10 cents and is coming back at the latter price when it will undoubtedly go to capacity again.

And yet there are exhibitors who claim they must play for five cents because the other fellow makes that his price.

Now has it soaked in? Here is what has always been considered a pretty fair play. If Mrs. Brown Potter plays "For Love," and Mrs. Potter Brown plays "She Said She Did," it is not always easy to tell who is the better player, but put them both in Caprice or A Scrap of Paper or Divorcons or something like that and you can judge them both. Miss Pickford played this test piece and it was put out. A big theater in the center of what might be called "cheap and picayunish Denver" (will Jim Noland please write us a letter) didn't have the nerve to charge ten cents. It put it on for a nasty little nickel and it remained for a man out in the suburbs to get ten cents for it. Now it is being brought back to the center for ten cents, but what makes the manager think that it would not bring fifteen cents?

Until about seven thousand exhibitors (not managers) get it through the coagulated conglomeration they call brains, that the picture is no longer a five or ten cent proposition, we are going to keep on talking in this tone of voice. When a dead head for twenty odd years is willing to walk up to the box office and plank down half a dollar or a dollar for something that is worth the money, can't you figure that the fans will be willing to go above a ten cent limit?

Of course you must do a little something for the extra money, perhaps a couple more strings in the orchestra pit, and more carefully rehearsed music, but can't you realize that you'll get more than the $14 two extra pieces of music will represent, and even if you don't, that the fact that you have gotten away with a twenty-five cent proposition will bring it back to you on the next deal? If we had to buy some of that extra fine Kraus stuff to get the audience into the house, we would divide the Kraus bill between that show and the next and still figure a profit.

Catch Up.

The man who still thinks that a picture cannot possibly be worth more than a dime is so far behind the procession that he can no longer hear the music. He will have to run to catch up or he cannot even know whether he is in the step or not. Mind you, there are lots of features that are not even worth the twentieth part of a nickel, but there is enough really good stuff to permit the live wire to charge double his usual price of admission twice a week and still be entitled to stand in the door as they go out and expect to be thanked.

England is waking up to the fact that what they have been doing is rotten, and now some of the companies are trying to suit the American market and are doing it, American companies are doing more good work and there is no longer the question of "what" but of "which" in spite of the thousands of feet of junk turned out. Keep in touch with what is good, offer only that, and if you keep on charging ten cents and no more, you deserve what is coming to you. More than this, the man who does not now offer seats reserved a week in advance is not getting what is coming to him either, and is not giving what his patrons are entitled to. Lots of people are not willing to stand in line who will gladly pay an additional ten cents a seat to have their chairs reserved. If you run two shows a night you can reserve them twice. But get away from the idea that you are still catering only to the five-cent people or the quarter man will come along, settle down beside you and leave you only your nickel patrons. There is not much money in the five-cent man alongside the quarter man.

Right now with business bad in many quarters there is a chance for the ten cent man to jump up and with reserved seats coax the former two dollar man to like the quarter picture better, but it cannot be done without an advance sale. Think it over. We have.

Is It Friendly?

A western house sends in an odd pass with the statement that this is given out by an opposition house with the dates punched to validate the pass only on the nights that the other theater shows features. Naturally the other manager thinks that this is done on purpose, and argues that as the giver is the state vice-president of the Exhibitors' League it is not a good example. If this is the purpose of the pass it is certainly not nice, but the idea may be used in cleaner fashion by others. Here it is:

FRIEND PASS

"A Friend Is Nature's Masterpiece"

I have noticed that you are a regular patron of the Lyric Theater. To show my appreciation of your patronage, it gives me pleasure to offer you this Friend Pass that will Admit you free of charge MON., TUES., WED., THURS., FRI., OR SAT. Week commencing.....Week ending.....1914

All I ask in exchange for this complimentary is, that you write your name and address on the back of this card and return to me after it has expired, so that I may have a correct record of you on my Friend List.

Used in its legitimate employment of building up a mailng list, the idea is good, but underhand fighting is seldom advantageous in the long run, and all is not fair in war as in love.

Using Locals.

This picture shows the Rex theater, Nebraska City, Neb., with two animal features being advertised, the Judgment of the Jungle and The Divine Appeal. It is interesting in that two pictures of animals, apparently borrowed from the local art dealer are used to supplement the regular paper. The result would have been better had these been placed on easels, and at the same time they would have been safer from the attack of the tobacco chewer, but possibly they are featured down front for the sake of the photograph the same way the reel case has been added to the decoration for no apparent reason. The painting above the box office seems to have come with the reels. Very often the straight paper can be helped out by some local stuff and a credit card will frequently cut the rental to nothing. An announcement that the picture is "Loaned by Smith's Art Store" will not turn trade away and may help Smith and the house management. The lion's head over the box office is another special that seems to go with the film but which might have come from a local taxidermist where there happen to be taxidermists.

Plenty of Postals.

The Lotus theater, West End, N. J., is going in heavily for postcards. They get out two or three a week and they seem to be getting better all the time. One of the most novel is an adaptation of the contagious disease matter so many exhibitors have used. This time it is printed as an extract from a paper and the matter is set in regular column width. On either side is a fragment of another column, as though a part of the whole page had been lifted and reproduced. The last paragraph is new and worth while. It runs:

DON'T HURRY—we don't—that's why we get such good projection. We take the proper time and give the acting its fullest value. You are entitled to the best projection and the best Photo rlays.

WE GIVE THEM BOTH.

They run only features—big features with seats reserved in advance, and make a noise like a regular theater. Every card carries a catchline and we think that this constant plugging will have a strong effect on the summer residents of the Long Branch section.

Here's the Haynic.

We've said a lot about the Haynic theater, Fairmount, Minn., and here is a photograph of the home of Hay and Nicholas. It is the sort of place you can imagine would house two such hustlers and it is evident that they draw the automobile trade. Here is their bill of particulars, taken from a recent door knob special.

WE HAVEN'T AND WE HAVE.

WE HAVEN'T the largest theater in the northwest. We haven't the most elegantly equipped theater ever built. We haven't all of the modern conveniences that we hope to have some day. But

WE HAVE a large, high, airy room that is flooded daily with sunlight, the greatest disinfectant known.

WE HAVE a cooling system that is simply great. We are forcing 13,000 cubic feet of cool air into the room every minute. We do not merely stir up a breeze by means of fans and thus give an impression of coolness, but we supply you with plenty of fresh, clean air that is taken from the outside and cooled before being forced into the room.

WE HAVE screens on all doors and windows, which add much to the comfort of our patrons.

WE HAVE the best pictures that money can buy. We are buying the cream of the output of nearly all of the makers and our programs are not excelled anywhere.

WE HAVE the latest and best projection machinery made and our pictures are clear, distinct, flickerless and steady.

And here's a sound argument in favor of the new prices that we hope you can use in your own advertising. It is intelligent, intelligible and convincing.

FUNNY, ISN'T IT?

Have you ever heard your neighbor grumble a little because the tendency in the picture show business is toward a slightly higher admission price? If so, did you take the trouble to tell him why? He argues that a picture show is a picture show and he ought to be able to buy it for ten cents. He probably never stopped to consider that a little while ago a picture show for which he paid his little dime consisted of three reels of old, scratched, rainy, blurred, dilapidated film that ought to be on the junk heap. Today for that price we give him four reels of new, bright, clean, up-to-the-minute pictures that are carefully chosen from the output of the best studios of the entire world. Sometimes we add a high priced special feature, making a program of six or seven reels, and then we charge him an extra nickel.

Now this good neighbor of yours wouldn't expect one of the Fairmont stores to sell him two bushels of new potatoes for the price of one bushel of last year's crop. Oh, no, nothing of the kind. But he does expect the picture show to do just that with the commodity it has to sell. Funny, isn't it?

They seem to have settled on a four-page doorknob done in ten point type with 24 and 36 point black lines that are clear and readable. Perhaps they'll send you one if you ask, and please ask them. We'd like to reply to all the requests we get for samples, but we have not the time nor the space to be in the sample business, no matter how willing we may be.

Some Do.

Some people find it possible to get out the invitation form advertising without using Old English or all capitals. C. R. Blubaugh, of the Vaudette theater, Fort Scott, Kan., seems to have gotten good results without the recourse to either of those offenses. As he has some left he will be glad to send them to those who will enclose a stamped and addressed envelope. His offering was for Brewster's Millions and he writes that 250 mailed out brought results. Next time he is going to use the papers for Paid in Full. He is looking for the most effective medium and wants to know what we think. We would put it in about this order: A really readable house program, one containing something more than merely the program, a door knob special, the straight house program, blank back postcard portraits with the ad on the other side, the newspapers and throwaways. This, of course, for a town of 10,000. For a smaller town the perambulating novelty advertisement would come about third. In any case the answer is wholly dependent on the cost of newspaper advertising, which varies too much to be figured accurately.

Mr. Blubaugh's invitation is set in monotone type, upper and lower, and a more attractive face might have been chosen, but it can be read and read easily, and that is the main point of any advertising. Next time he should not permit the printer to stick to one size of type. The name of the attraction, for example, should be much larger than the body type, as well as the name of the house, and the name of the house should not share the line with the address, but rise above it, though the address should be given in all cases, even where the whole town positively knows that the theater is at the corner of Broad and Main streets. It at least gives the "big city" air to the matter and creates the unrealized but comforting feeling that the town is big enough for street addresses.

Mr. Wall Has Been Thinking.

S. E. Wall, of Plain City, Ohio, has been doing some thinking, and while he suggests that it may belong to Mr. Richardson, it doesn't, and anyhow if it did we would not give it to him because he is trying to kill us by coaxing us to ride in the hind saddle of his motorcycle. Mr. Wall writes:

I am herewith submitting my latest stunt, which in some respects might properly be under the department conducted by Brother Richardson, but it is advertising, and mighty good advertising, especially in a "tank town" where ventilation has never been looked after as closely as it might have been.

I had the tinner make an air shaft of galvanized iron 24 inches in diameter and 12 feet long, running it from the alley window in with the mouth at the side of the curtain. In the end next to the alley we put a 16-inch exhaust fan and 2 feet in front of this exhaust we put a water spray similar to a garden hose spray and connected it to the hydrant with a rubber hose. I had him make a dam across the shaft between the fan and spray and by tilting the shaft a little and arranging the overflow plug accordingly we have a pond of water 3 inches deep and about 4 feet long directly in front of the fan. In soldering the spray the nozzle was directed toward the fan and the force of the fan prevents the water from striking it, making a sort of mist directly in front of the fan. A curve in the shaft prevents the water from being carried out into the room, making it delightfully cool and damp and besides that, making ONE OF THE BEST TALKING POINTS imaginable. I placed another fan in a 24-inch shaft over the front entrance to draw the air out, and Wall's WATER-COOLED-AIR is the sensation of the season; the cost of installation was very moderate, labor and material on the shafts amounting to less than $10 and aside from actually cooling the room so that it really is comfortable on hot nights, it not only gives me something to talk about but causes OTHER PEOPLE to talk in a favorable way about the house, which is the best kind of advertising you can get. According to one of the enclosed door knob weeklies I was seemingly very mad at a remark I overheard, but as a matter of fact I wasn't the least bit ruffled, but only wanted to "reiterate with increased vehemence" that we have WATER-COOLED-AIR and can prove it.

Possibly it is a little late in the season now for others to install water-cooled-air but I wanted to try the plan out before saying anything about it and I find that it works fine, the only thing to guard against is being careful that your water is not turned on too strong or you will give your audience a shower bath; but that can be adjusted very easily at the faucet.

Herewith enclosed find a few of my recent issues of the doorknob weekly; if this stuff gets by the waste basket, I will oil up my 1901 model Remington about Nov. 1 and tell you about our heating system.

A Kick and a Comeback.

Here are the two door knobs Mr. Wall speaks of. He is not the first to supply the kick and the comeback. But we want to warn him that if he does not get busy before Nov. 1 we shall have to advertise for him. Meanwhile make note of this scheme for next season if it is too late for this. The scheme is unique and more attractive than the straight water curtain generally used.

WATER-COOLED-AIR, sounds good, don't it—it feels fine too—that's the kind of a ventilating system we're installing—a 24-inch airshaft, in which is a powerful EXHAUST FAN drawing in pure air at the rate of 1,200 cubic feet per minute, passing through a spray of water cooling it while passing through this shaft into the room. Another EXHAUST FAN with the same capacity draws the air out of the room, CHANGING THE AIR ENTIRELY every seven minutes, which is a decided improvement over the ordinary fan, which only stirs up the hot, breath-laden air, and leaves it to be breathed over and over again.

Pictures changed daily—but the air is changed EVERY SEVEN MINUTES.

We Are All "Het Up."

One night last week, while the house was packed to its utmost capacity we overheard someone sarcastically remark, "I wonder where the water-cooled-air is he has been talking about?" At the time the remark was made there were nearly twice as many people in the house and lobby as we could seat, and under those conditions we are frank in our admission that the ventilation is inadequate, in fact it is not within our province or means to install a ventilating system that would take care of an audience that doubles our seating capacity, but when anyone insinuates that we have no ventilating system, we will gladly take him by the hand and lead him or any other Doubting Thomas to where the 1,200 cubic feet of water-cooled-air is injected into the theater every minute—we said it last week; we are saying it this week and we can say it any other week, without fear of contradiction, that the air is absolutely changed every seven minutes.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Just Work.

ABOUT every so often we get a letter from someone who wants to know the secret of success and we write that it is hard work and we know about half the time that we are getting ourselves disliked if not actually hated, for lots of seekers after the secret know perfectly well that it is not work but some sort of trick that the big fellows jealously guard from the little fellows to keep them down. They know that there is something that makes it easy to write and sell scripts and they want to know what it is, and when they are told work and nothing but hard work, backing up a foundation of intelligence, they feel that they are being cheated.

This may sound foolish to you, but there are hundreds of people who actually feel that way, who cannot or will not understand that work is the foundation of it all. We've had two letters lately from a Y. M. C. A. superintendent. In the first he spoke of the aid given him by a western writer and adds that he thought that the Y. M. C. A. had all the red blooded men, but that he is delighted to find the spirit of comradeship so strong among the photoplay writers. That is not astonishing. We do not believe that in any line of work will the man who needs and who proves that he deserves help go helpless. Turning to the other point, he has several correspondents, and lately he has epitomized the sum of their advice and finds it works out into the four letters that spell W-O-R-K. He writes:

> I wrote my fellow New Mexican, Edwin Ray Coffin, and asked him what was the key to his success and back came the word, WORK. I wrote my friend Shannon Fife, who was a cub reporter in Dallas when I was assistant general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. there, and came the one word, "WORK, old man, WORK and lots of it." Then when Fielding was here in Las Vegas I backed him up in his study one day and asked for a one-word description of the secret of his success and smiting the perfectly good arm of his easy chair he said with an emphasis which only Fielding seems capable of, "WORK, d—— hard WORK." Now you come along and tell me what I can work up to with a little or rather a lot of "WORK." Work must be the answer and so it's me for "Travaco" (the Mex for work).

Work is the answer to it all, and "work" is the answer that any man who has arrived will give because he knows that he got there through work and that all those he knows got there through work. If you waste your time looking for short cuts, stop it. There is no short cut.

And if you are willing to work you'll be helped to work in the right way and along the proper lines, but so long as you sit on your haunches and yelp no one will have any disposition to help you. Take off your coat and go to work and you'll find that work will not only help you to the point where you can write plays, but in the meantime you'll find that your work, your mental effort, will better fit you for your regular vocation. That, too, may sound foolish, but it is not. You exercise your brain with plots and scenes and your brain instead of getting tired will become more alert, more responsive to your daily thoughts. Foolish as it may sound, you can sell ribbon or real estate better if you try to write plays or indulge in any other mental exercise, and so, if you never do write a play that sells, you will at least have gained a better chance in your own business. Think that over.

Will Be Better.

A number of correspondents who have written in complaint of the methods of a certain studio are advised that the matter has been taken up with the proper persons who promise an immediate investigation.

Back to the Old Home.

Miss Jessie Simth, who used to be leader editor for the Vitagraph, and who switched to the North American, has been coaxed back to the old job in the cellar of the Flatbush plant. Miss Smith has a positive genius for sub-titling, a somewhat rare accomplishment.

Pupils.

Because we occasionally speak of the work of our pupils, we get all sorts of applications for positions as pupils. As we have explained, we believe that we can best keep in touch with the troubles of the beginner, and so make this department useful, by overseeing the work of one or more beginners, but we prefer to pick these pupils personally and it is a waste of stamps to write in, whether you are willing to pay for the service or not. We have no pay pupils. Please make a mental note of this and save us writing a letter the next time you see the word in this department.

A Double Punch.

It may help the student of the real technique to study the climax of Long May it Wave, a Lubin comedy scheduled for release June 20th. This is a rather good example of the double climax. A man takes his wife to see a play in which the American Flag waved overtime, as used to happen in the palmy days of melodrama. The climax of each act is salvation through the flag. A few nights later he comes home late with two flags, and defies his wife. This is the natural and expected climax. It is funny but it is not startling, for several scenes back you saw him pick up the flags. You knew then how it was going to end. A moment later the wife offers him a drink, apparently to celebrate the victory. He lays down the flags for a glass. She grabs him. No one expected that. It will get more laughs after the laughs would seem to have been exhausted, but it should be borne in mind that this second kick must come like a flash to have any real value. It must not be something requiring elaborate explanation. It must seemingly be unpremeditated and must come as a total surprise.

Just About That Way.

Arch Macdonald contributes a sane analysis of the synopsis published for copyright purposes, when he writes:

> Just a line to voice my opinion in regard to the magazine publication of a photoplay synopsis with the intention of having it copyrighted. I believe that this tends to do the author more harm than good. As soon as an author writes a script he will send the synopsis to the magazine for publication. The magazine is put out and the story is read by most all the editors and hundreds of photoplaywrights, near and real. In the course of a few days, but more likely weeks, the script arrives at a studio and is read. Somewhere in the past the editor remembers of having read of the same idea or story before. Perhaps it was in some other script, a short story, or a produced photoplay. Maybe he recalls of having read it in synopsis form in a magazine and maybe he does not. Anyway, he has read or heard of the idea or story at some previous time and considers "it has been done before." Again, he may also leave the script alone, knowing that the synopsis has been published and has been read by hundreds, some of whom may be unscrupulous enough to draw ideas very much similar therefrom and perhaps a couple may copy the main idea or plot into their own stories, thus flirting with the copyright law. In either case the editor would be open to believe that some other company might beat him out with a shady imitation of the same story.

Very few editors remember where they have seen a story. It is enough that they have seen it, and most editors know that the published suggestion will be used.

Printed Scripts.

A linotype operator sends in a printed cast and synopsis, explaining that it is easier for him to run a type machine than a typewriter. There are many printers who do this and they cannot understand that editors are prejudiced against the practice. With the type standing there is always the suggestion of more than one copy going out, and this is in every way a bad plan. Just in passing the author submitted the story, a comedy, in a photoplay contest. Most contests give the decision to dramas, so the effort is wasted.

The Vitagraph Contest.

The Sun-Vitagraph contest was decided while we were out of town, but the decision of the judges has already been published. It is worth noting that most of the money went to people who have already written for Vitagraph; not through prearrangement, but simply because these had learned to write Vitagraph stuff. It does not, as one or two writers have sought to suggest, indicate that there was any collusion. To the contrary it seems to show positively that the award was made absolutely on merit and merit alone since the award went to those who wrote Vitagraph stuff. Undoubtedly many writers were thus introduced to the Vitagraph and sold stuff at the regular rates of payment. It is this and this feature alone that really offers the outsider a chance.

Daniel Frohman Teaches.

Daniel Frohman has an article in the July Woman's Home Companion on "How to Write a Moving Picture Play." There is much meat in the story, which is recommended to all readers. The best point, perhaps, is the statement that in the stage play the story starts before the rise of the first curtain, part of the opening act being taken up in explanation, where the photoplay shows the first essential action, but even meatier is this paragraph:

> Action, however, is not the thing within itself that makes a moving picture play a success. Unless the adaptor or the writer keeps constantly in mind the ethical purpose and the dramatic character of his story, he is likely to run amuck. His scenes must not be extraneous to this important principle; there must be no "padding," no filling out with scenes that have no connection with the story. If the continuous chain of episodes is broken by some extraneous incident, merely for the sake of picturesqueness, the effect is weakened, just as it is in a play.

One Copyright Question.

Grant Maxwell offers a new angle when he asks: "Can an author copyright an actual happening?"

This is a matter that may interest others. An actual happening is common property and cannot be copyrighted. On the other hand a distinctive treatment of that happening can be copyrighted. For example no one could copyright the San Francisco earthquake. It was, however, possible to copyright Will Irwin's story of the earthquake that appeared in the New York Sun and allied publications. The earthquake could not be copyrighted, the facts could not be copyrighted, but the story as a whole was literature and could be copyrighted; not only "could" but "was."

A Human Document.

Often the experiences of the outside writer are more important than the writings of the veteran and we believe that the average reader will derive both profit and comfort from this letter from the Rev. Clarence J. Harris, who wrote in some time ago to tell how he had mastered the two reel idea. He says:

> It has been so long since I invaded your sanctorum, I am taking the liberty to write you, with many thanks for what you and the "Moving Picture World" have been to me. I realize nothing can be done with photoplays outside of work. I am visited and written to by a good many, since I received several friendly, well-meaning writeups. I probably see one to your scores, yet I see enough to convince me that too many expect to write photoplays without work. "Why, that's work!" gasped a woman one day as I showed her a carbon copy. She acted real provoked with me and failed to understand why one had to put so much technique into the work. The last visitor, a young man, I asked to leave my study three times, and then I had to open the door and say good-bye twice; yet he, not knowing enough to go home when told, expected to write dramas that would keep an audience of thousands from going home.
>
> Here is what I have done during the past four weeks, which I tell you to show I am working and if work can do anything for me, I shall "get over" some time. I worked seven years before I placed a single drama, as I have told many; but the seven years were spent in the study of story writing. But back of that I had twenty years of literary and ministerial work.
>
> During the past four weeks I rewrote a novel of 50,000 words
> Wrote one five-reel photoplay.
> One three-reel from a MS. story.
> Four two-reels.
> Three one-reels.
> Rewrote five two-reel stories with new plotting.
> Gave one lecture, "Relation of Art to Literature."
> One lecture on Browning.
> Preached every Sunday.
>
> I have read every moving picture paper available here, which includes most of them I think. I always buy at least fifteen literary and story magazines a month, read two daily papers and my church papers. I always attend the motion picture theater at least five times a week, and when my own pictures come here I see them usually several times, study my carbon and if there is a change, find out why it is there. I have a large family and many social duties, I do not work nights and I am growing fat and they tell me my preaching and lecturing has doubled in value and my audiences seem to bear out the statement. I consider my greatest returns from photoplay writing in my increased worth as a preacher and lecturer. Everything relating to writing seems changed. My sales are very satisfactory and many encouragements come to me from various sources. A New York editor who knows how to encourage wrote me yesterday, among other things: "I selfishly wish you'd send me all of your scripts because I enjoy reading them, whether we can use them or not. They are good because they always carry a message." This pleased me greatly and doubled my zeal and ambition. One thing I determined not to do; to let no produced picture of mine be a standard and with every sale, I study the sold article and then re-write all I have on hand. Three times out, unsold, if properly submitted means rewriting for me, and my best sales have come from rewritten stuff.
>
> You do not know it, but one two-line paragraph of yours in the "World" set me right several months ago; I rewrote every drama I had written after reading it. It related to the author's position with the audience. I could never tell until then how far to take the audience into my confidence and how to keep up a suspense. You say tell all, show all and let the audience enjoy the suspense of the characters and not have to worry over what it did not know itself.
>
> I could tell you a good many things I have learned from the "World" and your "Technique," for all of which I am grateful.
>
> I keep a great deal of stuff ahead: one drawer full. Often I "feel" more like writing in one line than another; often several dramas are nearing completion at the same time. A two-reel drama a week does not seem like over-doing it, but in re-writing I find I get help for new plotting. A mailing day once a week I like, as suggested in your column. Looking a MS. over several times after it is ready to leave gives a chance for many changes of value.
>
> I work very hard over titles, and being a great reader and admirer of Browning, I draw heavily on him for inspiration and help in title making. Any one to read "Pauline" alone will get a great fund of material. No poet plays so beautifully with words as Browning, and strikes chords which, brought out in drama, are beautiful. Titles like these I got by such suggestion. "Treading the Purple." "The After-Glow," "The Morn-Blush," "The Help-tune," "The Shadowy Third," "The One Word," "The Crag's Sheer Edge," "The Sun Road," and a limitless number of others are in this great poet's work.
>
> I have taken a good deal of your time and promise not to write again for a good while. I read my "World" from cover to cover every Tuesday morning with religious precision, but strange as it appears, though many have called on me and written me, I haven't found any of the over-zealous yet who have seen the "World" at all and I tell every one I will talk only after "Technique" and the "World" are in his hands. I am a student, and I am working hard, I am astonished with my financial returns but most gratified over the general uplift the work is to me in my profession.

Mr. Harris is by no means the only minister who has found the screen helpful, but he is one of the few who also helps to make the screen helpful by giving to the screen what will help the pulpit. What that is is this. It is stories that carry a lesson in the guise of an attractive story. Most ministers who try to write scripts try to write sermons. Sermons are all well enough in the pulpit, but the less a screen story looks like a sermon the more helpful it is apt to be. He does not write stories "with a moral." He writes stories that are morals and yet not preachments, and editors welcome his output.

And read what he said about work. That in itself is a story with a moral. Like all who have arrived, he has arrived through work.

Working from Synopses.

All methods of working are interesting. Here is what is a new idea to us:

> Would you kindly advise me through your columns if you consider the following plan practical for acquiring technique?
>
> I am in a position to secure the "Vitagraph Bulletin" each month, and this paper, as you know, gives a very full synopsis of each play. Now, would it be a good plan to take the synopsis of a story and write a script from it, keeping to the plot as given and then when the film is released, compare your script with the one turned out by the author (as far as it is possible to do so), seeing where you have fallen down in suspense, new business, etc. In the future the errors made in that script could be avoided and another one built up and compared the same way. One writer need not be used altogether, but a different one could be used each time, so that there would be no danger of acquiring a style which in itself might not be very good. Of course, it is not intended that the idea or scripts so handled ever be offered for sale.
>
> I have been writing for the past five months, but have confined myself to plotting and synopsis, never venturing to turn out a finished script. I wrote one, my first one, one-half hour after I had learned the form scripts should be submitted in. I hope that when I send in my second it will not make the trip to and from New York in five days as the first one did.

This scheme, in a sense, will be helpful in determining the value of the student's plot development, but it does not seem to us that it will possess great value. The trouble is that what is needed to be studied at the first is less the development of the idea than the creation of an idea. The Vitagraph synopses run pretty full. They give a reasonably good idea of how some author has treated a certain theme. It may be valuable to see how close you can come to the author's treatment, but it would be of infinitely more use to try and do something wholly different. Take the Vitagraph comedies and make them into dramas and vice versa and more good will result than an effort to see how closely one can copy the Vitagraph author's style.

One man has made a real name for himself in photoplay by copying as well as he could the stories he saw, writing in the business of each scene, the inserts and leaders, but he has a prodigious memory, and this scheme is to be commended principally as a study of form. It would be better, we think, if our correspondent took his Vitagraph bulletin and instead of studying the development tried to study out just what it was that made the story a story and not a failure, and for this the back part of this paper each week provides much more material than the publication of any company.

Plots.

Did you ever hear the old story of the man who was to die unless he told a story that would last forever? He started in by telling of a granary with a knot hole in the room and a locust came and took a grain of corn "and another locust came and took another grain of corn," and so on for about eleven nights when they found out he was going to build another granary as soon as he had emptied this one and so they put him to a horrible death. Lots of alleged plots run the same way. They can be cut off into a thousand foot lengths or run on to a million feet without getting anywhere. The thing to do is to know where you are going to stop before you start. If every script sent into the studios was a plot and not merely a collection of incident, the percentage of acceptance would be vastly larger. If Uncle John started to drive Aunt Mary from Hicksville to Hohokus and got robbed on the way, it is not a story. If he knew he was going to be attacked by robbers and took means to defeat them, it is the story of how he defeated the robbers, and the interest lies in exact proportion to the charm with which you invest Uncle John and the suspense you use in telling the story.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Address all Orders to

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of the Moving Picture World and of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until such articles have been demonstrated to a member of our staff. In case of apparatus pertaining to projection this means the editor of this department.

Question No. 42.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Permission to use the contributor's name must accompany each answer, otherwise only the name of the city will be used. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Suppose the engine purchased to be capable of using kerosene or gasoline. What steps would you take to determine which is best, all things considered? Suppose it was finally decided to use gasoline, tell us how you would arrange your supply to insure safety, using diagrams to illustrate, if necessary. What kind of oil system you would prefer for the plant, and why?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 36.

There is just one man entitled to be on the Roll of Honor on question 36, and that is Joseph H. M. Smith, Forth Worth, Texas, who has sent in correct reply to the whole question, but he did not go into details on the first part of the question nearly as much as did friend Gates of Brooklyn, and I would have been obliged to redraw all the sketches and that would have taken more time than I could spare, so that while I am publishing a portion of the replies of Gates and Dobson, Smith is the man entitled to the credit this time. And I want to say right here, that while, unfortunately, brother Smith is not a very good draughtsman, and is not so fluent with language as some, his replies to the questions, taken as a whole, have been as good as those of any man on the Roll of Honor. The reason that none of brother Smith's replies have been published lies wholly in his lack of ability to set forth his ideas fluently, and in a proposition of this kind the editor does not like to do too much revising.

Answer to Question No. 36.

The Question:

If you had no rheostat and wanted to control the speed of a small d. c. motor, what would you do? Show, by sketches, the correct connection for regulating rheostat of a shunt wound motor, including best location in the circuit; series motor; compound wound motor; other motors.

John Gates, Brooklyn, New York, replies to the first part of question 36 as follows:

If I had no field rheostat and wanted to control the speed of a small d. c. motor I would proceed to make one. I would get some small wire, about No. 22, preferably German silver, though ordinary iron wire would do. I would secure a speed indicator and, after having stretched my resistance wire in insulators on some convenient wall or on the floor, I would connect one end into the field circuit, and then would scrape off the insulation an inch or so from the other end of the broken field circuit. I would attach the load to the motor and touch the raw

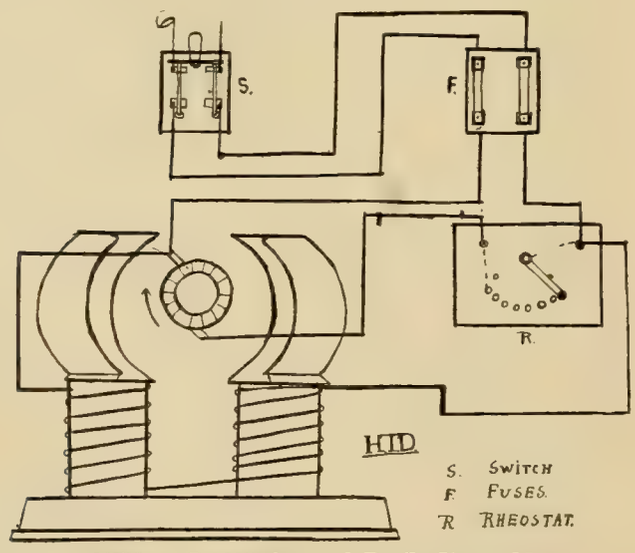

Fig. 1—Wiring Connections of D. C. Shunt Motor.

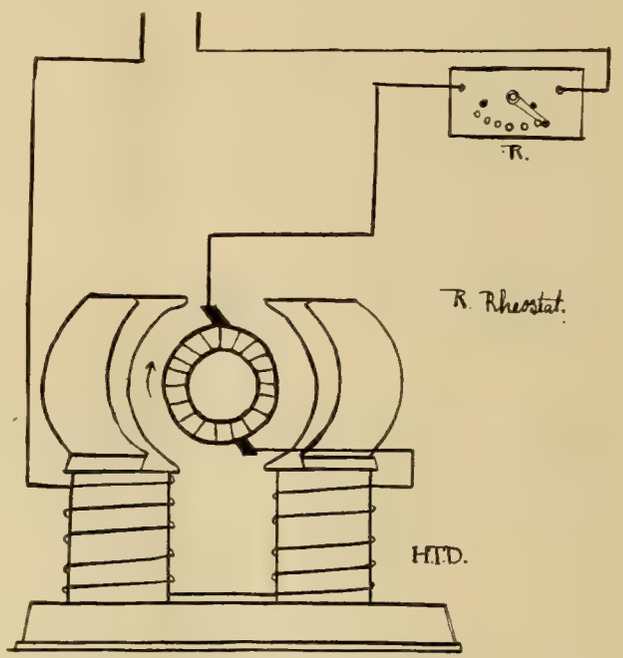

Fig. 2—Wiring Connections of a Series Motor, D. C. No Fuses or Switch Shown.

end of the field circuit wire to the end of the resistance wire opposite the end connected to the other end of the field circuit, at the same time having somebody to work the speed indicator on the armature shaft and ascertain the speed. I would then slip the wire along the resistance until the motor attained the lowest speed desirable, whereupon I would cut off the remainder of the resistance. I would then coil up the resistance wire by winding on a mandrel in a lathe, or in some other convenient way, and cut it into as many pieces, or coils as I wanted speed variations, and would build it into an adjustable rheostat, which I presume any competent operator knows how to do. I would then attach this rheostat in series with the field of the motor, and this resistance would then regulate the speed of the motor from minimum to maximum simply by moving the lever in the usual way.

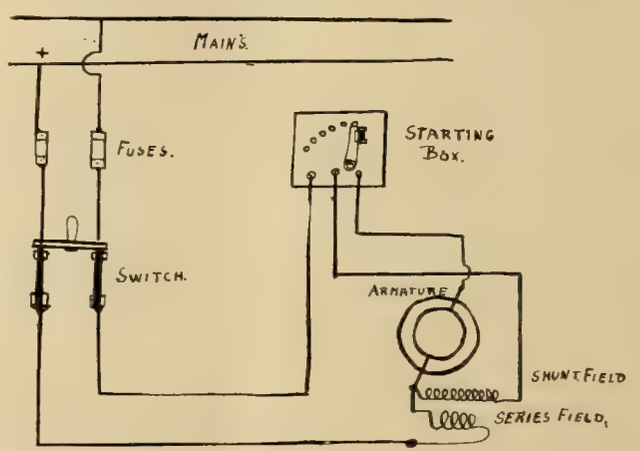

Fig. 3—Wiring Connections of Compound Wound Motor.

The second half of question 36 is replied to by Harry T. Bobson, Toronto, Canada, as follows:

> On a shunt wound d. c. motor the speed may be changed by inserting variable resistance in the armature circuit as at R, Fig. 4, leaving the field circuit unchanged. This method has the advantage of simplicity, cheapness and wide range, but has the disadvantage that the voltage consumed in the resistance represents waste power; also when the load is fluctuating the speed will increase as the load increases and vice versa. (This latter would also be true with resistance in series with the field.—Ed.) The second method is to vary the strength of the field by inserting a variable resistance in series therewith. By varying the resistance in the field of a shunt motor, the density of the field is varied, hence the speed is controlled to a very great extent. The method is simple, and there is little > energy wasted. The speed may be adjusted by small steps, but the field must not be weakened below the point of satisfactory commutation. These methods are also available for use with the series motor.

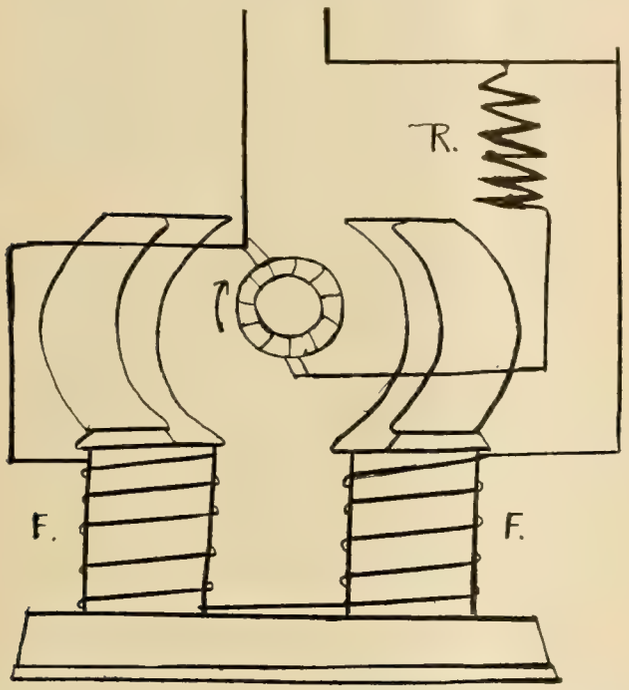

Fig. 4—Speed Control by Resistances in Armature Circuit.

>
> Sketches 1, 2 and 3 are of shunt, series, and compound wound d. c. motors. They are self-explanatory.

Brother Dobson's reply leaves considerable to be desired. It would be unnecessarily wasteful to control a shunt wound motor by means of resistance in series with the armature, also the same thing would be true of a compound wound motor. As to the series motor, why this would be, so far as I know, the only method of electrically controlling its speed. On account of the great waste involved I would not regard it as practical to control the speed of a series wound motor by resistance. If I am wrong in the foregoing I am perfectly willing to be set right.

New York Local No. 306.

At the time of the last convention the then auxiliary to Local Union 35 was in debt to the national organization in the sum of almost $1,000. The editor was a delegate to the convention, and while he firmly believed a direct charter ought to be granted, he was somewhat in doubt as to the advisability of the operators striking out for themselves just at that time, due to the aforesaid condition. However, his fears proved groundless, as Local Union 306 has, since its inauguration less than a year ago, literally performed wonders. It has now a membership of over six hundred in good standing. It has paid off the aforesaid indebtedness, and now has practically $1,000.00 to its credit in the bank, all of which is some record. It forever answers the oft-made statement that the New York operators are unable to properly attend to their own affairs. In addition to paying off this debt, and accumulating a bank roll the union has constantly maintained a business agent in the field, and has also maintained offices in the heart of the theatrical district, where the secretary-treasurer or business agent is constantly on hand to attend to the business of the organization.

Just what effect the recent introduction of a former band of dissenters into the union will have remains to be seen. Unquestionably there were many good men among them, but we are informed that although this element was only admitted about a month before the last election its leader proposed to run for president, and was only prevented from so doing by being declared ineligible. The union has advanced sufficiently that it is possible it might even succeed with this man at its head, and it is certainly a credit to the membership that I am able to say this, for ordinarily his leadership would prove ruinous.

The editor of this department has nothing but good wishes for Local Union 306. He stands ready to do anything, within reason, to forward the interest of that organization, because he is firmly of the opinion that a thorough and effective organization is necessary if the projection of moving pictures in this city is to be raised to a uniformly high plane of excellence.

The present plan of organization is not, however, I believe, the best possible. The jurisdiction of Local 306 extends over all that vast territory called Greater New York. This includes Staten Island and the Bronx, the extremities of which are, at a guess, nearly fifty miles apart. In any event, in order to cover Greater New York City in any effective way, Local 306 will have to have at least four business agents, and probably five. In the judgment of the editor it would be a much better plan if the city were divided into sections, and each section have its individual business agents, answerable, however, to the central office as well as to his section. This is, of course, only the roughest kind of a crude outline, but something along these lines would, I think, be preferable to the present arrangement, though this is only an expression of my own individual opinion.

At the risk of seeming officious I wish to offer the local this advice, which I have already proffered many times to its officers: Don't take in any and every body, simply because they are running, or trying to run, a projection machine. In the long run I firmly believe the organization will be more powerful, and receive greater respect from the managers if it only accepts into membership operators of genuine ability.

Something Worth Studying.

In the old days when the editor was a callow youth, just beginning to sprout a moustache and notice the beauty of the poultry, you could scarcely enter a single home without seeing upon its walls a nicely worked motto, in worsted, reading: "God Bless Our Home." Now, regardless of whether or not that particular home was justified in asking a blessing from the Creator, it was a good motto, but in this later day we have mottoes which are more to the point when it comes to practical every day affairs, and here is one to which I desire to call the particular attention of operators.

"DO IT JUST AS THOUGH THE BOSS WAS AROUND."

In how many operating rooms do you find men who will, in the parlance of the street, work their fool heads off while the boss is right there on the job watching things, but just let Mr. Boss go down town, or across the street, or anywhere out of the theatre, and the operator is aware of that fact; what happens? Why the "work your fool head off" idea is immediately abandoned, and for it is substituted "do as little as you can."

The moving picture operator who wishes to succeed in any large way must establish for himself a reputation for reliability and high class work, and there is only one possible way in which that can be done, viz: By the production of excellence in results on the screen, not sometimes, but all the time. The absence of the boss does not make any difference to that kind of man. He works just as conscientiously when the boss is away as when he is there; in fact he religiously follows the motto: "Do It Just As Though the Boss Was Around."

I do not want to go into any long winded dissertation on this particular topic, because I am going to spring a few more on you from week to week, but operators will do well to give this matter a little serious consideration, and hold a heart to heart communion with themselves. If you want to remain in the "just-barely-get-by-class," and barely receive the union scale, if there is one, or the lowest figure going if there is not one, then this matter will not interest you, but if, on the other hand, you want to get up to the head of the classes, and establish for yourself a reputation which will get you more than the union scale purely by reason of the excellence of your work, or where there is no union scale will get you the highest figures paid, then you have got to work conscientiously and produce excellence, not simply because the boss is watching you, but because that is the only kind of work that will advance you in your profession.

From New Mexico.

F. J. McCarty, Clovis, New Mexico, orders a question booklet, and makes the following pertinent remarks.

> The projection department and the Handbook have been a great help to me, and will, I am sure, continue to be. I am enclosing a few patches which speak for themselves. If the operator (?) making them puts up the same grade of projection, as no doubt he does, it is a cinch he is not an owner of the Handbook. And now to top this off, I have just got to give the exchange a dig, since our service comes direct therefrom. And now, I defy you to come to Clovis and get anything on me—because the distance is too great for that motorcycle of yours, but when the heat becomes too great in Gotham you might try a trip to this land of sunshine, where you will always find the latch string hanging out.

Yes, brother McCarty the patches speak for themselves, and some of them fairly scream. One is five eighths of an inch wide, and seems to have been put together with tobacco juice, but the operator failed to match the sprocket holes. Another has the holes mismatched, and there is about half-a-picture stub on each end. Certainly it is the exchange that ought to get the hardest dig. An exchange which allows films to go out in such wretched condition is simply trying to murder the goose that is laying its golden egg. I am well aware of all the arguments the exchange man would put up against this, but to my way of thinking there is no possible valid excuse. Glad to know the Handbook and department have helped you. It will, I am sure, help anybody who wants to be helped.

Change in Powers Motor Drive.

Something like a year ago the Nicholas Power Company placed on the market the first friction motor drive. The innovation was accepted by the trade as being correct in practice, and excellent in operation. Like most first improvements, however, the drive was found to be in some ways susceptible to improvement, and that improvement has now been made as follows:

In the old model the large friction disc was on the motor shaft and revolved therewith, driving the friction where on a countershaft carrying the belt pulley which supplied Power to the mechanism. In the new model this arrangement has been reversed, the large friction drive being on the counter shaft which carries the belt pulley driving the mechanism, and the leather disc wheel on the motor shaft, the same being stationary, and the friction disc movable, so that the same relative speeds are attained by shifting a lever located in front of the lower magazine, horizontally instead of vertically. One of the objections of the old model, or rather one of the imperfections which developed through use lay in the tendency to vibration, which operated to loosen up the joints of the stand. This was due, in some measure, to the failure of operators to handle the device correctly. In the new model this tendency has been entirely done away with. One of the best features of the improvement lies in the fact that, by means of set screws R-32, Fig. 3, and lock nut

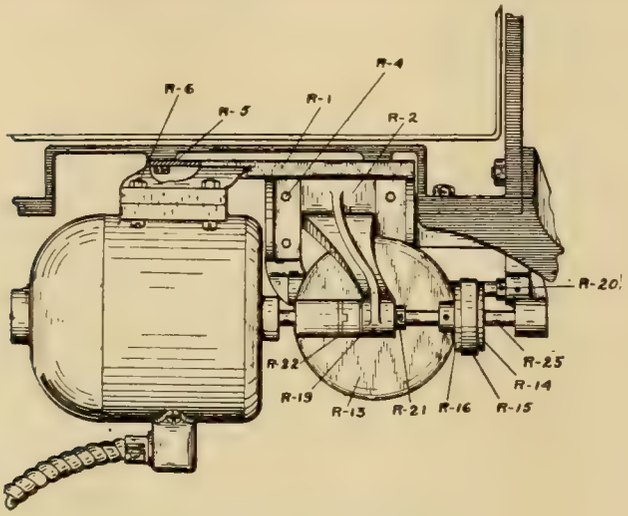

Fig. 1—View from Right Side.

R-33, Fig. 3, the operator is enabled to instantly regulate the amount of tension between friction wheel. R-15, Fig. 1, and disc wheel R-13, Figs. 1 and 2. This is an extremely important improvement, since by the old method of supplying this tension by means of springs, the tension was fixed and was usually considerably greater than was necessary, which had a tendency to flatten the leather disc if the machine stood still with the wheel and disk together for any considerable length of time. The improvement in regulating lever R-29,

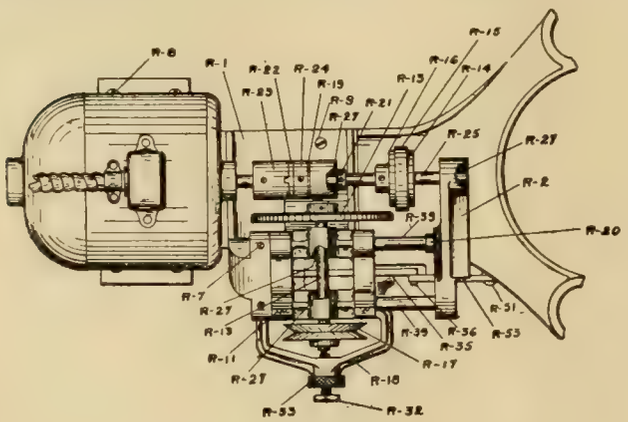

Fig. 2—Bottom View.

Fig. 3, is of inestimable value from the operator's standpoint, since with the new arrangement of the lever he can now make exact changes in speed by placing the thumb of his right hand against the magazine. This gives him a fulcrum to work from, and he can move the lever exactly as much or as little as he wishes to, a thing which absolutely could not be done with the old lever. Another feature lies in the fact that the device needs no oiling except a drop occasionally at point R-32, Fig. 2, where it butts up against the end of the spindle on belt pulley R-17.

Taken altogether there seems to be a very decided improvement in this device as against the old model. And by the way, another feature I nearly overlooked is that whereas in the old model the friction wheel moved toward the center of the disc to lessen the speed, in the present model the opposite obtains, and when the machine is at rest the friction wheel is entirely off the disc. The following list of parts is given for the convenience of our readers. It should be preserved as this is the catalog of numbers by which parts may be ordered.

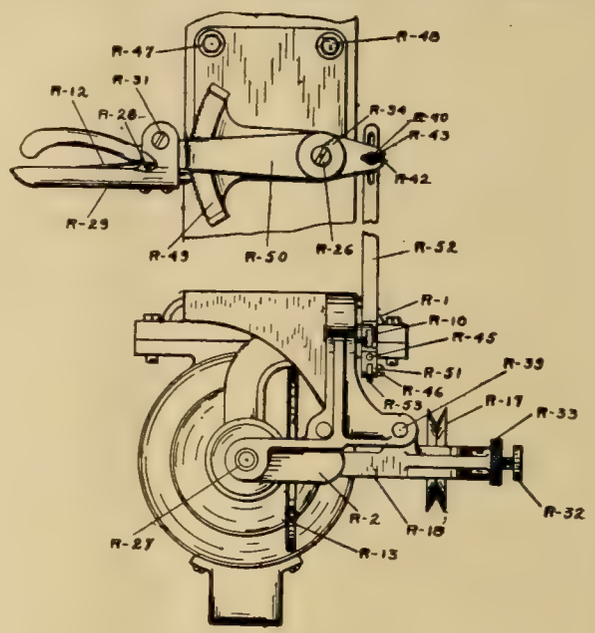

Fig. 3—Front View.

List of parts:

R-1 Base.
R-2—Adusjtable Support Bracket.
R-3 -Adjustable Support Bracket Bolt Washer (4).
R-4—Adjustable Support Bracket Bolt (4).
R-5—Base Support Hex. Head Bolt (2).
R-6—Motor Support Screw Nut (4).
R-7—Guide Rod Set Screw (5).
R-8—Motor Support Screw (4).
R-9—Base support filhead screw (2)
R-10—Bell Crank Stud.
R-11—Sliding Carriage Adjusting Screw.
R-12—Controlling Lever Spring.
R-13—Friction Disc and Shaft, not sold separately.
R-14—Friction Pulley Washer.
R-15—Friction Pulley Driving Disc.
R-16—Friction Pulley Hub.
R-17—Groved Belt Pulley.
R-18—Sliding Carriage.
R-19—Friction Pulley Shaft Washer.
R-20—Stop Collar.
R-21—Set Collar.
R-22 -Universal Flange.
R-23—Motor Shaft Coupling.
R-24—Friction Pulley Shaft Coupling.
R-25—Friction Pulley Shaft.
R-26—Controlling Lever Pivot Screw.
R-27—Bushing (4) (non-oiling).
R-28—Controlling Lever Spring Screw (2).
R-29—Controlling Lever Pawl.
R-30—Controlling Lever Pawl Pivot Screw Nut.
R-31—Controlling Lever Pawl Pivot Screw.
R-32—Thrust Screw.
R-33—Thrust Screw Lock Nut.
R-34—Controlling Lever Washer.
R-35—Bell Crank Link.
R-36—Bell Crank Screw.
R-37—Bell Crank Link Stud Nut.
R-38—Bell Crank Link Stud.
R-39—Guide Rod (2).
R-40—Lever Link Stud Washer (Cotter pin end).
R-41—Lever Link Nut Washer.
R-42—Lever Link Stud Cotter Pin.
R-43—Lever Link Stud.
R-44—Lever Link Stud Nut.
R-45—Lever Link Coupling Screw (link end).
R-46—Lever Link Coupling Screw (bell crank end).
R-47—Ratchet Casting Bolt Washer (2).
R-48—Ratchet Casting Bolt (2).
R-49—Ratchet Casting.
R-50—Controlling Lever.
R-51—Lever Link Coupling.
R-52—Lever Link for variable speed.
R-53—Bell Crank.

Screens.

A. J. B. Robert, Quebec, Canada, says:

> I have a cotton screen 18 feet by 14 feet on which I have put a coat of aluminum, but it does not give a good effect. The picture is not clear. What would you advise me to do to give a finishing touch to the screen? What is best to use for a home made screen suitable to roll up?

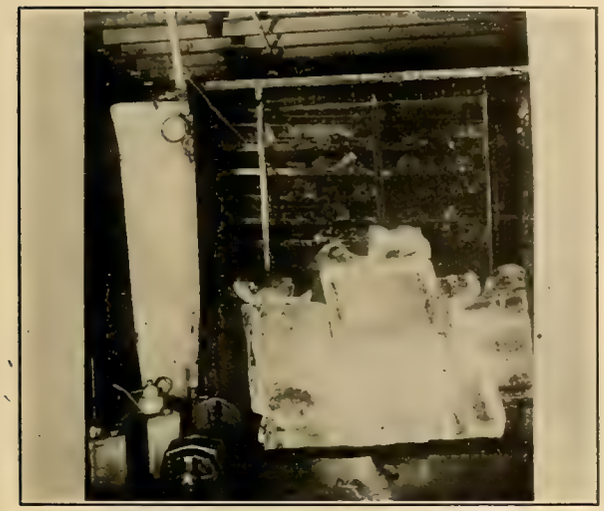
Coat your screen with alabastine, muralite or some form of white calcimine. You are not very likely to get satisfaction from a home made aluminum screen. As to a home made screen to roll up, I think you will find one painted, as per directions on page 338 of the Handbook, will be best. Now don't say I am trying to force you to buy a Handbook, although for your own good I would even do that if I could. I have given these formulas and directions in the department so often that I do not think it is right to consume valuable space in reiterating them when they may be had in permanent form by remitting $2.50 to the Moving Picture World for a copy of the Handbook, a four hundred and twenty-five page work which every operator and manager should own.

A Cooling and Ventilating Plant.

W. E. Doyle, Fresno, California, writes:

Am sending you photographs of our cooling and ventilating plant. It works and the airdomes had nothing on us when the thermometer stood around 102 degrees, and we started the matinee with 62 degrees and ran up to 78 during the evening. The thing is best shown pictorially.

Kinema Theater, Fresno, California.



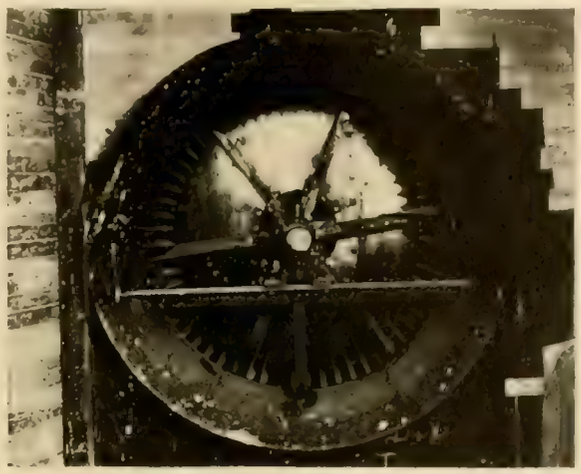
Photograph No. 2.

Photograph No. 1 shows the front of the theater. Lithographs are never used anywhere near the theater, with the exception of single sheets on the sides of the lobby; but stills are much in evidence.

Photograph No. 2 shows where the air passes through a spray of cold brine and over trays of ice.

Photograph No. 3 is the inside of the eight foot fan which sends fresh air into the house at the rate of 36,000 cubic feet per minute, changing the entire house every three minutes.

Photograph No. 4 is the other side of the fan with its 10 h. p. motor. This fan sets into the ground three feet.



Photograph No. 3.

Photograph No. 4.

Photograph No. 5—Floor of the Kinema Theater before seats were put in, showing Mushroom Outlets for Cooled Air.

In photograph No. 5 we see the mushroom outlets under the seats before the seats were put in. Since this picture was made many more mushrooms have been added. The body of the balcony forms a plenum chamber, letting air up to the audience from beneath the seats, and in the ceiling underneath the balcony through iron grills. Also this photograph shows our 24x28 plaster screen tilted back about two feet from the perpendicular, to the left of which is our beautiful organ, played from the pit.

This seems to be a very complete ventilating plant, and I have given considerable space to its illustration, because I think the matter will be of much interest to many managers. There is real dignity and quiet beauty in the front of this theater. Moreover, the absence of cheap posters and the substitution therefor of the excellent form of advertising shown is highly commendable. Let us have some data as to pounds of ice used per hour.

Results in Philadelphia.

Saturday, June 13th, I set sail (gasoline sail) for Philadelphia, arriving in that classic village at 5:30. It took over an hour to remove the some several coats of dust and poke some food into our countenance, so it was 7 p. m. when I entered the Casino, which has its pretty front very badly spoiled with many large posters. I sat me down directly beneath one of the side lights, an incandescent under a green shade having an open bottom. I found this light very convenient for making my notes, but exceedingly annoying to the eye when looking at the picture. Manager of the Casino take note. The projection light at this house was white and brilliant and in the main fairly well handled, though there was a constant tendency to a very slight yellow at the bottom of the picture, and at 7:10 there occurred a bad discoloration which lasted about five seconds. When I went in the first reel of "Daughter of the Tribe" was on. The second part of this reel came on out-of-frame, but throughout its length the speed was correct, and on the whole I can compliment George Elwell, chief operator, and his assistant, John Brown, on their work, when I take into consideration the fact that the observation ports, which are round in shape, are but little more than glorified knot holes—too small altogether; otherwise the operating room, while not what it could and should be by considerable, is not bad. The equipment consists of two Power's Six A.

At 7:55 I entered the Princess on Market Street. At first, although the light was brilliant there was an almost constant slight discoloration at the top. Afterwards the light became brilliant, and free from fault, except occasional discoloration which very evidently occurred at the time of adjusting the arc. I hunted up the manager, gave him my card, and asked if I might go to the operating room, but he evidently feared I intended to plant a stick of dynamite therein, or swipe the whole works; at least he commenced to make inquiries as to "what I wanted to go there for," so I relieved his mind by not going. All of which, I presume, means that the Princess operating room would have been found open to very decided criticism. That's only a guess, but——.

At 8:50 I visited the Stanley Theater, one of Philadelphia's best moving picture houses. The Stanley is a large beautiful theater, with a commodious balcony, a beautiful front, and a finely decorated interior. It has commodious and tastefully fitted up rest rooms, and all the modern conveniences found in dramatic theaters. At 8:58 a new reel came on with the title out of frame, also the title was so short that I was unable to read it, and there was a bad discoloration of the light at the bottom for a few seconds. This was the worst fault I found in the projection, and such other faults as were present were undoubtedly due to the fact that the port holes of the concrete operating room are only four inches wide, and after looking at the picture through them I feel sure that the operator would not always be able to distinguish faint shadows on his screen, particularly on that long throw. The operating room is eight feet deep by ten feet wide, and is situated away up at the back of the gallery far above the screen. The throw is long and the pitch is steep. The machine, two Power's Six A, had to be set very high for the light beam to miss the seats. The whole thing is badly planned and badly arranged, due, apparently, solely and entirely to the ignorance of the architect, and to the wonderful and marvelous brand of law makers Pennsylvania is blessed (or cursed) with. The operating room should have been located very differently, and could have been, with but little sacrifice of seating capacity. The advantage gained would have more than made up for any loss of seating the proper location may have caused. I was highly amused at one feature of this room. The "intelligent" law makers have fixed 4x12 inches as an allowance for observation ports, but they allowed a hole something like fifteen inches square to be cut in the front wall of this operating room for the spot light, although there is no spot light in use. In other words these idiots (I can call them nothing else in view of the facts), who make the laws of Pennsylvania, will deliberately hamper the work of projection, and by so doing injure the enjoyment of the people by lowering the standards of projection and add to the work of the operator unnecessarily by limiting the observation port to an opening 4x12, and then turn around and allow a hole twelve or fifteen inches square right beside the observation port. Piffle! And then some more piffle! But if Pennsylvania managers would exercise a little common sense, and examine the picture on page 78 of the Handbook, they could, by the expenditure of a very few dollars, overcome the idiotic restrictions imposed, and give their operators a port four inches high by twelve inches wide, and make this port adjustable to any height. If the Solomons of the Pennsylvania Legislature, or the city officials are so mortally scared that they insist on six inches of concrete, why, make the sliding shutter of concrete six inches thick. It could easily be done, and is simply a matter of a heavy counterweight and pulleys and a chain, instead of a rope. For the love of heaven satisfy those law makers you have down there, but some time when you have a chance, procure a diamond drill, and see if you cannot bore a hole into some of their skulls and pour in a little common sense. You would probably break several drills in the attempt, but it is worth trying nevertheless.

I know this is putting matters pretty strongly, but I, for one, am utterly disgusted with this kind of legislative drivel. There is no reason in the 4x12 restriction. A shutter twelve inches wide will drop just as quickly as one four inches wide, and a hole four inches wide will show smoke just as quickly as one twelve inches wide would, and it is the smoke which creates the panic. But the really amazing part of the whole thing is that the Pennsylvania legislators enact into law a purely silly observation port size restriction, and then take absolutely no adequate means for insuring the quick closure of those ports when a fire occurs. Is it any wonder that we get discouraged and disgusted with this sort of tomfoolery? The work in the Stanley Theater is injured by those little, narrow slits, miscalled observation ports, and the work in practically all other Pennsylvania theatres is injured by the same thing; or at least the work of the operator is made doubly hard. I must compliment the work in those theaters I visited, in view of the difficulties under which the operators labor. Projection in the Stanley is in charge of H. D. Cheney and Silcox Goldberg.

I had intended remaining until about 3 p. m. Sunday, but when I arose Sunday morning it looked very much as though the skies were going to weep, so I lost no time in getting at least a few miles nearer home before the storm broke; but after all it was a false alarm, and I might as well have remained. However, I'll come again some other time, and try and stay longer. I would suggest that the Philadelphia union see that marked copies of this article reach the authorities responsible for the legislation named, whereupon I will doubtless be invited by the aforesaid law makers to visit the City of Brotherly Love again—not.

Six Years an Operator, but Still a Student.

William A. Bantle, Camden, New Jersey, orders a Handbook, and says:

> I have been at the operating game for almost six years. I have always followed the projection department closely and have found it of great benefit. I am working in one of the largest houses in North Camden, and have one of the best bosses I ever had. Any supplies I need I can get without having to use a nail puller or a corkscrew. I certainly feel sorry for the boys who have to work with nothing to work with, as set forth by one of the brothers a few weeks ago. Expect to visit New York in the near future and want to stop and see you.

The latch-string is always hanging out, brother. What you say merely shows that your manager is a man of good sense, and one who is wise in his generation. While I believe a manager should keep close watch over expenditures, still, as this department has time and again pointed out, it is not true economy to scrimp on operating room supplies. If you have an operator whom you can trust not to waste supplies, then I would advise you to make a change and employ one whom you can. The man who does not possess judgment and good sense enough to be trusted with carte blanche to purchase operating room supplies, certainly is not the man whom you can trust with as important a matter as the projection in your theater. My own way of doing this would be to tell the operator to get whatever he needs for the operating room, but to render a weekly or monthly itemized report of all supplies on hand, and of all supplies purchased. The manager can then examine this report, and if he finds there is an undue consumption of any particular item, can take the matter up with his operator and see where the fault lies. This is the business-like way of doing things. It puts your operating room on a business basis, and when the operator knows he has got to make an accounting at the end of the week or month he is going to be careful what he buys, and be economical in the use of supplies. But, on the other hand, if you keep nagging at the poor fellow, and doling out supplies in minute quantities, if he is a man fit to handle your projection he will stand for it just about two days, and then tell you to go plumb to an unmentionable place—at least that is what your humble servant would do. The capable man—the man of brains, won't stand for that sort of business. He feels it to be an insult both to his intelligence and his integrity, and if he does stand for it he soon says to himself, well the manager does not trust me, and wants to run the whole business. "I should worry," and promptly proceeds to get careless. Frankly I do not blame him. My advice to managers is to employ an operator, pay him a good salary, leave him a clear field in the matter of supplies, and demand results on the screen, accepting no excuse for faults in the projection. If your operator cannot, or will not work that way satisfactorily, fire him and get one who will.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

The new second edition of the

MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK FOR MANAGERS AND OPERATORS

420 Pages Illustrated

By F. H. Richardson

$2.50 Each Postage Paid

will be the standard textbook on the subject for many years.

Address all orders and remittances to

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Comments on the Films

Licensed

HER SPANISH COUSINS (Edison), July 6.—A comedy by George A. Lessey with a first-class situation but not robustly developed. It got a scattering of laughs but never captured the whole house. The New England spinster, somewhat slangy by the sub-titles, is invited to Spain by her aristocratic cousins with the intention of fleecing her. She is simple enough to be easily buncoed but they are too foolish to be able to fleece her. There are interesting backgrounds and it is well photographed.

ALGIE'S SISTER (Selig), July 7.—A photoplay written by Edwin Ray Coffin, produced by Gilmore Walker, which tells how cowboys are sometimes easily tricked. The cast is made up of Barney Furey, Charles Wheelock and Lester Cuneo. Algie Rocks is too fond of the bright lights and his father sends him to his Western ranch. The cowpunchers attempt to make him the butt of their pranks in all sorts of stunts, but in the end Algie not only turns the tables on them but also on his father, and wins out gloriously. This is good comedy.

FOOLING FANNY'S FATHER (Lubin), July 7.—On the same reel with "While Auntie Bounced." Very much ridiculous but laughable.

WHILE AUNTIE BOUNCED (Lubin), July 7.—On the same reel with "Fooling Fanny's Father." This introduces a circus acrobat who works on the bounding net. He is in love with a niece of a maiden aunt who does not like circus actors. The sweethearts entice auntie to examine the bounding net and throwing her on it start her to bouncing and while she is going up in the air they hunt up a minister. There is real humor in this offering.

A NIGHT WITH A MILLION (Essanay), July 7.—This is a Francis X. Bushman release which has been adapted from a magazine story embracing the strange adventure of a clerk who is supposed to be a broker and entrusted with a million dollars in bonds. After going through many adventures, serious, tragic and amusing, on trains, automobiles and so forth, he eventually finds that the bonds belong to a crank and have been void for twenty years. This is a very good picture.

KAINTUCKY BILL (Kalem), July 7.—A moonshiner's story that is about on a par with many others that fill the films. The characters are made up of a sheriff, who is the worst moonshiner of the lot, but is brought to the realization of his duty after he has sworn to uphold the law. Revenue officials, moonshiners and the sheriff's sweetheart, Annie, daughter of old Zeb, a member of the moonshiner's gang, make up the cast. The usual stirring events occur.

FACE TO FACE (Edison), July 7.—The seventh story of "The Man Who Disappeared," directed by Charles J. Brabin, with Marc MacDermott, Miriam Nesbitt and a strong cast. This is really one of the most interesting of this series, embracing in its plot methods of bribery and graft, in both a political and business sense. Obviously, the proofs optically obtained which embroil several members of the legislature, seem to be far fetched. Many thrilling scenes occur in the development and in the end the escape of the girl is exciting.

CARYL OF THE MOUNTAINS (Selig), July 8.—The plot of this photoplay is laid in some isolated district among the "moonshining" people. It is, however, an interesting story and contains many beautiful scenes in the backwoods and mountains, which are artistically photographed. Kathlyn Williams, Thomas Santschi, Harry Lonsdale and Roy Watson have the leading roles.

DOCTOR SMITH'S BABY (Vitagr aph) July 8.—It is a delightful privilege to view a real and legitimate comedy at all times. In this exceptionally fine offering, no horse play, chases or slap-stick elements predominate. It very plainly pleased a big audience and was received with great laughter. The acting and all the details are adequate. Maurice Costello and Mary Charleson have the leading roles.

ANDY HAS THE TOOTHACHE (Edison), July 8.—This is the eighth of the "Andy" series, and does not lose anything by comparison with the others; it is so literally human. Not only much comedy pertains but sympathy cuts a figure also. The old draw-the-line episode, and I dare you knock a chip off my shoulder "kid thing" takes the greyheads back to the back-lot and country life. Andy through a "scrap" loses the offending tooth, after escaping the dentist. This is a laughable comedy.

A BOARDING HOUSE SCRAMBLE (Essanay), July 8.—This is a broad and almost absurd number, which gains nearly continuous laughter. It certainly is a scramble, as far as eggs are concerned. Its rural atmosphere lends a pleasurable smack, especially to those who have experienced life in country boarding houses. The photography and acting are commendable.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NEWS, NO. 38 (Selig), July 9.—This is a very interesting number and covers almost the entire world with its topical views. The audience evinced great interest.

ROMANCE OF PUEBLO (Biograph), July 9.—This is a comedy drama photoplay which might also lay claim to be educational, from the fact that it contains many beautiful scenes in the historical Pueblo country.

SLIPPERY SLIM—DIPLOMAT (Essanay), July 9.—A decidedly amusing comedy with the scenes laid in the west. Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd get in their usual good work. Slippery Slim is in love with Sophie Clutts, as is also Mustang Pete and a gang of cowboys. Slim is postmaster of Snakeville and uses his position to win Sophie, and the way he does it furnishes the comedy.

PROSECUTION (Vitagraph), July 9.—Written by J. Herbert Welch and directed by Ulysses Davis. The leading parts are played by Alfred D. Vosburgh and Margaret Gibson. This is a pictureplay that contains much heart interest, intermingling sorrow and joy, and it also contains much intensity. The plot is laid among the miners in a Western camp where a strike is in progress. The photography is excellent, as is the acting.

THE VASES OF HYMEN (Vitagraph), July 10.—This is a real comedy by Russel E. Smith and directed in a superior manner by George D. Baker. John Bunny and Flora Finch, assisted by William Shea and Ethel Corcoran, make this a most delightful and laughable photoplay. The theme of the plot hinges on the fact that both are lovers of antiques and discover twin vases in a shop window. Flora buys one and Bunny the other and through the shopkeeper they become acquainted and after many amusing situations the two ornaments prove to be veritable vases of hymen.

DID SHE CURE HIM? (Selig), July 10.—This is a somewhat amusing comedy wherein the husband is addicted to associating with old John Barleycorn and the wife is advised to try the apple cure. She coops him up and feeds him with apples until the supply is exhausted, then she tries raw potatoes, at which he balks. Whether the cure was effective or not the picture fails to demonstrate; however, it is quite laughable.

THE TRIBUNAL OF CONSCIENCE (Lubin), July 10.—A very interesting offering, wherein a retired wealthy banker, realizing that his son has become a worthless spendthrift, adopts a novel expedient, suggested by a faithful old family servant, to bring him to a sense of his shortcomings. In the plot the son is informed that the father has committed suicide through impoverishment. Nothing is left him but a picture of his mother, the sight of which brings him to realize his weaknesses and places him on the path to manhood. In the finale he finds his father is alive and ready to welcome his boy as a man.

IN OLD ENGLAND (Kalem), July 10.—On the same reel with "Rube, the Interloper." The firing of the King's salute, a Rugby football game, Scotland vs. Ireland, southern cross-country run, at the Royal Ascot races.

RUBE, THE INTERLOPER (Kalem), July 10.—On the same reel with "In Old England." The first part of this comedy gives promise of a very laughable number, and throughout there are amusing complications, but the introduction of absurdly madeup policemen spoil an otherwise could-have-been-made comedy.

HIS FIGHT (Selig), July 11.—The theme of this plot embraces the everlasting triangle of a wife, a husband and another man. The wife is fascinating but faithless. She is discovered and divorced by her husband and comes to grief through another marriage. There is much heart interest in this offering and a surprising story is unfolded.

MANDY'S CHICKEN DINNER (Lubin), July 11.—On the same reel with "How He Lost His Trousers." A colored preacher is invited to a chicken dinner. Unfortunately the chicken escapes. Another chicken must be obtained so the preacher will not be disappointed. The owner of a poultry farm and a constable help along the comedy and the usual chase occurs. It is quite amusing.

HOW HE LOST HIS TROUSERS (Lubin), July 11.—On the same reel with "Mandy's Chicken Dinner." The unfortunate adventures of a young naval officer who upon arriving in port attempts to visit some friends, on invitation, but is mistaken for a harmless lunatic. Several funny situations occur, but in the termination all ends happily.

LAME DOG'S TREACHERY (Kalem), July 11.—An Indian drama full of the usual intrigues, treachery and so forth, of the Redman. This is not a pleasant photoplay to view. The scenes and photographs are the best part of it.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SHERIFF (Essanay), July 11.—This contains the usual cast: G. M. Anderson, Carl Stockdale, True Boardman and Marguerite Clayton. This is a Western drama concerning a cowardly sheriff and a heroic cowpuncher. There is a love theme running through it and also an intrigue, concocted by the sheriff, who fails in his schemes and Broncho Billy wins not only the office but the girl in the finale.

DOLLY AT THE HELM (Edison), July 11.—This is the eleventh of the series of the active life of Dolly. Acton Davies is the author and Walter Edwin is the director. Mary Fuller, supported by Charles Ogle, Carlton King and Yale Boss make of this newspaper story a most interesting offering. The cast is a large one and the newspaper office scenes are well presented. Dolly makes a "scoop" and wins out against long odds.

THE PRIMITIVE MODEL (Biograph), July 11.—There is no gainsaying that this is an original plot in every respect. It concerns a girl artist who is competing for a prize at an art exhibition. She selects as her model an athletic young blacksmith and horse-shoer. There is a surprise at the ending of this picture that is gratifying.

THE SOUL OF LUIGI (Vitagraph), July 13.—A fairly interesting story, a bit unconvincing, is told in this picture. There is nothing especially noteworthy in it and one feels watching it that its author turned it out merely to do a day's work and that he himself was not overly interested. It is pretty well acted and fairly staged. It is one of those average offerings that don't add to its maker's reputation.

QUALIFYING FOR LENA (Edison), July 13.—A burlesque farce that made some laughter, but that cannot safely be counted with the best funny pictures. It seems to be a commercially put-together piece but well acted. Little credit belongs to its author, Torrey Ford, for its fun comes from such things as the unusually big smoke of the automobile. C. Jay Williams produced it.

THAT BOY FROM THE POORHOUSE (Biograph), July 13.—The story of this picture fails to make a deep impression on us. That boy lacks what would make us sympathetic and we cannot give to his adventures the attention that a really interesting picture would excite. It is clearly photographed and has interesting backgrounds.

Licensed Specials.

THE MOONSTONE OF FEZ (Vitagraph), July 7.—This two-part photoplay was written by Robert W. Ritchie. Maurice Costello and Robert Gaillord directed it. The mysterious disappearance of a woman in Algiers furnishes the plot. Its solution is rather astonishing. Mr. Costello plays the lead and Constance Talmadge plays opposite. The theme of the plot deals with the black plague and also contains inconsistencies. To tell the plain truth, this offering has many faults in its construction and although interesting is not up to the usual Vitagraph release.

THE INCOMPETENT (Lubin), July 8.—A two-reel dramatic picture that has been staged with a great deal of care, concerning detail and selection of cast, location and photography. It tells a story of a young man devoid of business ability, who marries an heiress and then endeavors to speculate, using his wife's money. Dire results occur, financially and otherwise. This is an interesting number and really superior to the ordinary.

A STRING OF PEARLS (Kalem), July 8.—A two-part detective story featuring Helen Holmes. It contains many stirring scenes which are well produced. The plot of this offering is rather unusual—it keeps you guessing during the final scenes, and thus holds a gripping interest to the close.

THE DEBT (Lubin), July 9.—This two-part photoplay depicts the sad experiences in the life of a girl, who has been brought up in the country but comes to the city (rather a conventional theme), to obtain a position. She meets with many adventures, finally becoming a chorus girl. This is an interesting and gripping number which contains many beautifully photographed scenes. The two leading people accomplish some thrilling stunts. The ending is original and beautiful.

IN THE SHADOW OF DISGRACE (Edison), July 10.—This two-part photoplay was written and produced by Richard Ridgely. It is a sort of Maud Muller story boiled down; in theme, however, it has been cleverly written and directed. Mabel Trunnelle is the lovable Norah and is ably supported by Bigelow Cooper, Anna Leonard, Yale Benner, Herbert Prior and Allen Crolius. There is much heart interest in the plot and suspense as to the outcome, which eventually results in a satisfactory ending. The photography and scenic effects were extraordinarily beautiful.

NIGHT HAWKS (Essanay), July 10.—This is a melodramatic photoplay in two parts that is certainly filled with punches and grips enough to satisfy those who are given to such phases. Ruth Stonehouse, Francis X. Bushman and Rapley Holmes furnish the thrills. The action in this offering got over the orchestra leader's head in fine shape. Rapley Holmes is certainly a heavy villian. This is a superlative feature.

LILLIAN'S DILEMMA (Vitagraph), July 11.—Special feature in two parts. George Ridgewell is its author and it has been ably directed by Wilfred North. The cast is made up of Lillian Walker, Wally Van, Paul Kelly, Albert Roccardi, Kate Price and others. The plot is located in a boy's school. Lillian gets herself into all sorts of predicaments which are extremely amusing. This photoplay is greeted with spontaneous laughter. It is a well acted and photographed legitimate comedy.

A DIAMOND IN THE ROUGH (Kalem), July 13.—A two-part offering that is, we think, decidedly the best and most interesting on today's list. There is nothing great about its situation or about it as a production. But it shows a quality of good workmanship all through that keeps the spectator wakeful and concerned as to the outcome. A very fair offering.

THE WILDERNESS MAIL (Selig), July 13.—The opening situation of this two-part picture is obscure. The spectator cannot tell what it is about and is not deeply interested. The second reel and the closing scenes of the first, however, have action that can be understood and that interests. There are many fine scenes with deep snow under the bright rays of a clear sun, or shadowed; in open spaces and in the woods, and these the camera sets effectively before us, though we cannot at all times see faces clearly enough to distinguish characters. It is better than fair as entertainment

Independent.

THE LAND OF LIBERTY (Majestic), June 26.—Not a story, but an extremely interesting and instructive series of scenes taken in and near Ellis Island, New York City, and showing immigrants entering the Land of Liberty. It shows, for example, how the immigrants are fed on Ellis Island while they are waiting to be passed through and what they are given to eat. It also shows many interesting faces of grown-ups and children. The photographs are clear and the whole is an offering that is very likely to be popular with the average patron born in America.

THE SUFFRAGETTE BATTLE OF NUTTYVILLE (Majestic), June 30.—A farce very like the Keystone comics, but showing a lack of the wealth and fertility of incident found in offerings of that brand. Dorothe Gish keeps it from being dull by the quality of her playing, but there is too much sameness and too many palpably reasonless tumbles in it. Christie Cabanne is the producer.

LOVE AND BULLETS (Keystone), July 4.—A farce in which a comically contrived mystery mixes a tough of bugaboo feeling with its fun in a way that helps not a little. It is a somewhat different kind of offering from what we have been used to from Keystone or any other studio and will, we think, be amply acceptable. A good offering.

A ROWBOAT ROMANCE (Keystone), July 6.—This farce is not up to the standard of this studio. We were not able to see anything funny in it, but believe that it will find many who will laugh over its doings. Keystone farces are (of this ready and rough kind) the very best that have been given us. But the peculiar Keystone faculty of freshly and constantly varied sameness loses its convincing liveliness in this offering. Perhaps it is because there is no perfect clown among the players, the character on which the fun most depends is not comical enough.

A GIRL OF THE SEASONS (Princess), July 10.—A picture of Muriel in winter, spring, summer and autumn. In each season she gets a new lover and they come the same night to propose so she introduces them all at the same time to her elderly husband. It is too slight to be really effective, but has pretty scenes and makes a fair offering.

A WIFE FROM THE COUNTRY (Reliance), July 10.—An acceptable offering telling a story that is made convincing by the excellent work of the cast, producer and others. A rich man's son is a drunkard and his father buys his consent to marry a girl in a country community in order to make him reform. Some time later she discovers by a note that her father-in-law and not love-at-first-sight has been the cupid of her romance, but it all turns out well.

MISTAKES WILL HAPPEN (Royal), July 11.—Good lively stuff a la Keystone. It is full of astonishing tumbles and rough play.

LOVE AND SALT WATER (Keystone), July 11.—A sea-side farce with a good situation and with business that brings out many a laugh. It makes a good offering and is a sure entertainer.

THE WORLD'S OLDEST LIVING THING (Keystone), July 11.—On the same reel with the farce is this, a beautifully photographed scenic giving us glimpses of some interesting things, some of which have been shown before. It is short.

WRONG ALL AROUND (Komic), July 12.—Wife sends for her mother to tame her "brute" of a husband. Mother comes, but gets into the wrong house and finds a poor hen-pecked man whom she begins on. The brute is listening through the wall and enjoying it. But explanations clear the mix-up and then there is a little time left to show what happens to hubby. A good release, light, but comical and entertaining.

ALMOST MARRIED (Sterling), July 13.—Rough farce that is a bit more vulgar than usual with this make. There is nothing offensive in it, but the business is rougher and broader. The gallery may like it very well.

THE OLD DERELICT (Majestic), July 4.—A not very likely situation hampers this picture from the start and it never becomes quite convincing. The story aims at sentiment and though it has a long moment of intense suspense, it is not effective. Franelia Bilington and others play it well as far as was possible.

A JOKE ON JANE (Beauty), July 14.—A lively farce that will be found freshly entertaining and good amusement. The plot is well constructed and does not depend on rough business, but on the fun in its one laughable situation. Marguerita Fisher and Harry Pollard play the leads. A good offering.

YOUTH AND ART (American), July 15.—With some very commendable and interesting scenes, this picture's story is too obscure to be effective as a whole. The scenario seems weakly put together. The players do well and the photography is clear.

HOW IZZY STUCK TO HIS POST (Reliance), July 15.—Izzy, a can of glue, a chair to be mended, make the situation. After spilling the glue, Izzy sits to get a good smoke before mending the chair. He remains seated all night till a yeggman comes. It is a well handled, slight incident, but is interesting, amusing and has a good laugh at the close. A good offering.

A BEACH ROMANCE (Sterling), July 16.—Robert Thornby produced this picture featuring "Billy" and three other youngsters who have become well known in pictures. The story is, of course, nothing; but the acting of the kids will delight spectators who like a little quiet amusement with their more vigorous offerings. It is a cute picture.

A GENTLEMAN FOR A DAY (Thanhouser), July 17.—A pretty picture, giving a dream that a little poor boy has in which he thinks that he is a rich boy. It has a thoroughly delightful comedy prologue full of poetry and childhood spirit and the dream scenes are graceful and filled with beauty. All the chief players are children and among them that most charming of child players, the "Kidlet," is prominent. A picture that will be wholly enjoyed.

THE RANGER'S REWARD (Frontier), July 19. This is a Western bandit story, and a good one. The character of Smiling Joe, the bad man, is particularly well portrayed.

TANGO VERSUS POKER (Eclair), July 19.—A farce of society life in a dry town. It has several not very convincing little things, dry, obvious moments, that keep it down, but there is some freshness in it, too. Only a fair offering.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL, NO. 24 (Reliance), July 20. There is certainly good stuff in this serial and it does credit to its author, Irvin Cobb, and to its producer, Jack Noble. It is a high-class offering, in which we find nothing that is cheap or stale.

GETTING VIVIAN MARRIED (Victor), July 21.—Pa and Ma want to get her married and introduce the candidates. To scare them off Vivian does astonishing things and cuts up capers enough to effect her object. The changing situation impresses one as always kept fresh, and there are many amusingly pictured jokes in it with enough rough and tumble work included to delight that large percentage of patrons, the average spectator. It is certainly not an elegant picture, but it is one sure to make laughter and has nothing very objectionable. The ending is weaker than the first two-thirds of it.

I LOVE THE NURSES (Eclectic), July 21.—Charles Arling sustains the fun in this comedy right to the end of his appearance. There is a bit of a drop when the successful rival is made to simulate mirth which cannot be described as infectious. A man looking at a picture always feels better when he selects his own time to laugh. The subterfuge by which the man smitten with the nurse is removed to the hospital gets over easily. The ensuing scenes in the room are provocative of laughter, especially the flirtation with the nurse, the burlesque operation and the escape and capture.

THE WOOING OF BESSIE BUMPKINS (Joker), July 22.—In this eccentric farm comedy Bess Merredyth plays the country girl wooed by two rivals. The humor is entirely of the horse-play type and never becomes genuinely amusing.

BY THE SUN'S RAYS (Nestor), July 22.—A Western number of about average interest. Murdock MacQuarrie appears as a detective in search of gold thieves. The looking glass signals give the rendezvous away, and this leads to a roundup of the bandits. Agnes Vernon is the girl in the story.

THE GATEWAY OF REGRET (Imp), July 23.—A one-reel offering of dubious character. Gwendoline Pates is the daughter of a woman who runs a house of ill fame. A man, for purposes of revenge, sends the girl to the house to see her mother, whose occupation she does not know. She finds the mother badly intoxicated. This is certainly not entertaining and has nothing whatever to commend in it.

AT THE FOOT OF THE STAIRS (Rex), July 23.—A crook story, with Robert Leonard and Ella Hall in the cast. The latter plays the maid. The story works up to quite an exciting situation at the foot of the broad staircase. The maid shoots the wife's admirer because of her own regard for the husband. Nothing extremely new in this, but it is put on well.

THE POLO CHAMPIONS (Joker), July 25.—A comical burlesque which closes with the King decorating the returning champions with the Noble Order of the Lemon. Each champion has an American heiress with him and the significance of this is doubtful. It is the kind of picture that will please people who are up-to-date more than the gallery—it would be a dandy offering for fashionable watering places, like Newport or their equivalent on the other side of the pond. The script is by Captain Peacock, and it is cleverly played. There is enough action to keep even the uninstructed amused.

BOBBY'S PLOT (Reliance), June 27.—Youthful lovers are helped by the girl's kid brother, Bobby, who "puts one over" on the station master, whom the cruel aunt wants the girl to marry. Bobby goes to the next town and sends a telegram (he had been taught by the lover) that makes the station master think the aunt is heir to riches. This elderly man marries her before he hands her the telegram and the youngsters are also permitted to wed. The aunt is well played to be comical; the other characters are more or less conventional. One can count the offering as fair. It is not "a real live picture."

Independent Specials.

BLUE PETE'S ESCAPE (Reliance), July 11.—From George R. Chester's story in Munsey's, this two-part picture starts out with a snappy incident in which a detective (Sam De Grasse) saves a gangster, foot-fast in a switch, from being run over by an express. He is palming himself off as Blue Pete in order to find one of the gang, a man he wants, called Chicago Red. Many of the scenes were taken along a railroad and the interest is kept at a high level while we watch the detective's adventures with the gang which accepts him, not without suspicion, as one of their kind. How the gang planned a safe cracking and how the cops, tipped off, were foiled by the toughs makes a very exciting picture and brings the action quickly to a tense, nervous climax in which, with the help of the detective's pretty sweetheart (Billie West), the criminals are rounded up. It is a good offering.

WHEN THE WORLD WAS SILENT (Imp), July 13.—A fine three-part picture by Harvey Gates and staged by Herbert Brenon. The thing that happened when the world was silent in the dead of night is new and startlingly sensational. For the cast-off sweetheart of a great musician, after chloroforming her victim, pours nitric acid in his ears and he never hears again. He was about to marry the other woman, but now this society girl thinks better of the bargain. The author has made the villainess who did this thing still love the musician and has made it plausible. He brings her back to the injured man and lets her marry him, yet holds a clue over her head. This clue is in the hands of the man's butler and will some time fasten the guilt on her. The author then complicates it by making the musician need the woman and love her. The butler now proves that she is the guilty one and the author, with a Hawthorne-like touch, starts out to make her live a "third degree" life in the house with the butler knowing all. Yet here he weakens by letting the husband into the secret at once and gets the happy ending by an expedient that is spoiled by conventional atmosphere. It is needless to say, well acted and excellently staged. Both author and producer have done praiseworthy work.

THE RENUNCIATION (Eclair), July 15.—A well-photographed two-reel offering, featuring Robert Frazer and Mildred Bright. The girl casts off her lover and he joins an order of monks. Later she comes to the monastery. The old monk's interest in her is at first very obscure and the story is poorly constructed here. Later her lover renounces his vows and marries the girl. In spite of numerous shortcomings this is an entertaining picture, with a setting in the giant cactus country.

THE VENGEANCE OF GOLD (Reliance), July 18.—Typically a Western picture, this two-part offering gives only fair entertainment. The story is not strongly convincing, nor is it one that stirs pleasant emotions. If it had been a powerful showing of real life, the latter shortcoming would not have mattered much. The girl refuses a poor lover for a man who soon fails. Time changes the financial status of the men and the once rich man now steals from the other. The thief dies in the desert and the once poor lover gets the girl.

LUCILLE LOVE, No. 15 (Gold Seal), July 21.—This ends the series, with the heroine at home with her rubies and the "papers" in the hands of "Washington." Lucille has found out the secret of Hugo's house (it is some house) and with this knowledge she is able to get those papers from him, by turning the tables (that is almost literal) on him. This part is sure to make a great deal of hearty laughter.

ALLAH-3311 (Eclair), July 22.—A three-reel offering in which the scenes are fragmentary and difficult to follow. Barbara Tennant plays the daughter of the ambassador from Roumania, pursued by some vindictive Turks. O. A. C. Lund appears as a novelist to whom the girl appeals for protection. His part in the story is apparently to get material for his novel, but the whole scheme of the production is hard to follow and uncertain in meaning. In the end the writer promises not to publish what he has written. This does not seem to be a very strong production any way and has many faults in construction.

LOVE AND LUNCH (Sterling), July 23.—A two-reel farce picture in which the many will find laughter even in the first reel which is, to a reviewer, rather dry from repetition. In the second reel, when the lunch cart is running away and the cops are in full chase, all will laugh and heartily, for it is very funny.

KATE WATERS OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Powers), July 24.—Charles Gyblin, producing this two-part picture with the help of a good cast, has made interesting a rather poor story and his picture is a very fair offering. It is a girl-detective story with an army life background. As a love story it is nil, the love part being dragged in by the heels, and there are no deeply popular elements in it except the triumph of justice, which makes the second reel acceptable. It has action aplenty, but it is not probable nor wholly logical. The heroine, sent from the secret service office in Washington, proves that a runaway lieutenant is innocent of the crime of murdering his colonel and that the guilty one is a captain. The acting, staging and photography save it as entertainment. The authors are H. G. Stafford and Calder Johnstone colaborating.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE (Gene Gauntier).—With its prologue that is somewhat of a hinderance, this Warner's Features picture makes a fair feature offering in three reels. The situation is not very deep or original, but is interesting and has been developed in a lively and entertaining way. The story is of modern life, but is a kind of reflex of such romances as Pelleas and Melisande developed in a more healthy and clean-hearted way. Gene Gauntier plays the young wife of a man (Jack Clark) who has married her out of pique. His younger brother (Malcome Sinclair) is the friend of the wife whom her husband soon neglects. Blinded by anger he accuses his younger brother while he himself is the only one who has done wrong; but the close sees everybody happy. The acting of all three of the cast will justly be popular. The photography and staging are good. Gene Gauntier is the author and Jack Clark the director of it.

THE WITNESS INVISIBLE (Film Releases of American).—A three-reel offering with excellent photography and very pretty scenes. The story will hold interest, for while it is weakly constructed and rather obscure in places, it has much that is of great temporary interest. There is a new situation in it, for instance, when a father finding his son whom he thinks a murderer, under the power of chloroform, goes through a struggle before he resuscitates him. Some of the acting is vigorous, some of it is weak. As a whole it will get by, but is not a sure feature offering.

STORMS OF THE HEART (Great Northern).—This four-reel picture of Scandinavian life will strike many as filled with Ibsenesque suggestions. It has a new and deeply human situation, well played by Betty Nansen, who is supported by an intelligent and skillful cast of players, one of whom (the young daughter of the widow) is every whit as vigorous and convincing as the great leading woman herself. It is a picture for thoughtful people, for it is substantial and presents a vivid criticism of life that is authoritative—that is, the author in picturing the tragic ending of a mother's sacrfice for her empty-headed and selfish daughter, shows a first hand and nerve-touched knowledge of the forces that underlie life. It is a big offering for the right audience and for the average audience it will be a good deal better than fair.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD (Louis Pennent).—An offering in four reels that we feel sure will "take" extremely well in places where people read newspapers and are wondering at those "wild women," the English suffragettes. It is the first picture, so far as we know, that has tried to put the inner qualities of this fanaticism before us. Suffragettes will probably think it an epic of their great cause, while others will see in it a clear-eyed showing of the truth about it. The heroine is the wife of the chief justice and she is so much a fanatic that she places a bomb in the cellar of her husband's house as a rebuke to his sentencing her to three months' imprisonment for complicity in an unsuccessful attempt on the prime minister. Looking in at a window she finds to her horror that her husband and child are at home. In the picture are many scenes of great interest aside from their place in the story that they make convincing. Of such are street scenes taken in London in which suffragettes figure and also one showing a beautiful church that is being burnt by the wild women. A very interesting number, and a good offering to liven things up where business is dull. It will start talk.

THE DAY OF RECKONING (U. S. Film Corp.).—This three-part Warner's Features offering gives Civil war-time scenes, with a big battle, and then switches to the frontier and provides wild west incidents. The plot is somewhat loosely connected. The first heroine dies and her daughter becomes the center of interest. The villain, who had made the first heroine, now dead, think her husband untrue during the war, has fled to the west and has her daughter with him as his own daughter. Her father, trying to find her, comes to the village and becomes very friendly with her. Her "father" gets the stranger suspected of cattle stealing—he is the culprit. The girl saves her friend and the incident is the means of bringing a general clearing up of the tangle. There is entertainment in it, but it cannot be called a sure feature offering.

LIFE'S CROSS ROADS (Nafcor).—The chief weakness of this three-part Warner's Features offering is the abrupt and inartistic way of registering its meaning. The sub-titles also are blunt in their statements of the picture's moral purpose and, now and then, make it even amusing, unconsciously. The banker's older son marries his stenographer and is disowned, yet becomes successful. The younger son marries the extravagant society girl the father wanted his older son to wed and in time comes to ruin and death. The old man wanders through the streets without means of support and the older son takes him in. There are some excellent things in it; but is too naive in setting its story before us.

THIS IS LIFE (Ramo).—A three reel farce a la Keystone with little plot (though it is kept fairly concrete) and depending strongly on its rough run-and-tumble business of a kind that is well known from other pictures of this type. The second reel contains a clear situation with enough complication to keep it funny. The offering is as good as, if not better than, the average picture of its kind and should, now that the craze for this sort of thing is in the air, take well.

MISS RUBY HOFFMAN.

A FORTHCOMING feature release by the Pathe is the five-part film, "The Taint," now in the making. Not only is the story one to arouse a great deal of interest—it is said to be one of the strongest ever handled by the Pathe—but the new picture will serve to introduce a new screen star, Miss Ruby Hoffman. Frank Powell, who is directing the new feature, is responsible for Miss Hoffman's entry into the motion picture world. She is a most beautiful woman, a brunette in type, and she makes an ideal subject. In addition to her personal charms, Miss Hoffman has a splendid reputation which she has made for herself on the legitimate stage and in vaudeville. It was her splendid appearance that first attracted Daniel Frohman two years ago when he produced "Detective Keen" in vaudeville, and Miss Hoffman stood out strongest in the cast of Frohman players. Like many others, she began as a stock actress and was leading woman for Eugenie Blair for several seasons. She then came under the notice of William A. Brady, that manager giving her an important role in the road company of "The Gentleman from Mississippi." This was followed by two engagements under Wagenhals and Kemper, playing in "The Woman in the Case" and in "Seven Days," doing Florence Reed's part in the latter play. Until lately Miss Hoffman has been seen in several vaudeville sketches along dramatic lines. But like many other clever folk of the stage the call of the movie camera sounded and she wisely harkened to the call.

Miss Ruby Hoffman.

PATENTS COMPANY FILES INJUNCTION AGAINST THANHOUSER AND UNIVERSAL.

Alleged Infringement of Edison Reissue of a Camera Patent Granted to Edison in 1902.

THE Motion Picture Patents Company has commenced an action in the United States District Court against Thanhouser Film Corporation to enjoin the latter from manufacturing and selling its films on the ground that the camera employed by the company has infringed on the Edison reissue patents controlled by the complainant.

Judge Hand issued an order directing the defendant to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be granted pending the determination of the issues raised in the litigation. George F. Scull, vice-president of the Motion Picture Patents Company, subscribed to an affidavit reciting that the defendant film company for several months past has been using a motion picture camera in the production of motion pictures which constitutes an infringement of the Edison reissue patents which have been controlled by the complainant for several years.

Not only has the Thanhouser Film Corporation been guilty of infringement of the Edison patents, Mr. Scull alleges, but he asserts in the affidavit that the corporation has anticipated the suit and the possibility that an injunction might issue by using the alleged infringing cameras to a large extent, thereby producing sufficient motion picture negatives to enable it to continue in business in the sale and rental of photo plays in the event the court enjoined the corporation from using the camera.

The complaint alleges that by reason of the alleged unlawful acts of the defendant the complainant has suffered and still suffers great and irreparable loss and injury and has been and is being deprived of great gains and profits which would otherwise accrue to it. In addition to the injunctive relief triple damages based on an accounting of the alleged profits are asked for by the complainant.

Heretofore the Motion Picture Patents Company has pressed a number of actions to protect its rights under the Edison reissue patents but has limited previous suits to motion picture cameras and their use. But in the present action the company has gone farther and seeks to virtually suspend the business operated by the defendant.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is named as the defendant in a similar suit filed simultaneously with the Thanhouser action. John R. Taylor represents the complainant in both actions.

The validity of the Edison reissue patents was only recently upheld by Judge Mayer, who issued an injunction perpetually enjoining the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Independent Moving Picture Company and the Imp Film Company from using the Warwick camera, which was held to infringe the Edison claims. An appeal has been filed by the defendants and a stay has been granted on their filing bond of $80,000.

K. & E. VS. BROADWAY PICTURE PRODUCING CO.

Injunction Sought Against Film Manufacturers for Producing "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Klaw & Erlanger commenced an action in the United States District Court on Monday against the Broadway Picture Producing Company, which recently produced "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" in motion pictures, and the Eagle Feature Film Company, which has been granted the rights to the photo play in New York State.

The complainants alleged that they acquired exclusive dramatic rights to the novel written by John Fox, Jr., and published by Charles Scribner's Sons prior to October 12, 1911, when they presented the play entitled "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" at Atlantic City with Charlotte Walker.

Since that time, the complainants recite, the play has been presented by two companies under the management of Klaw & Erlanger and has proven a popular and profitable play. In fact they assert they expect to present the production during the coming theatrical season in the anticipation of realizing further profits.

It is alleged the Broadway Picture Producing Company unlawfully conspired against the complainants to make or cause to be made for exhibition the moving picture of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" without the consent of the dramatic producers. As a consequence of the presentation of the production in moving picture theaters it is alleged the value of the play on the stage will be impaired.

An injunction restraining the producing company from manufacturing and leasing the films and a restraining order preventing the Eagle Company from exhibiting the films is sought in addition to an accounting of the alleged profits which may have accrued to the defendants.

"The Little Gray Lady"

Jane Grey Has the Lead in a Most Successful Adaptation by the Famous Players.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell

IN "The Little Gray Lady," the five part adaptation of Channing Pollock's story by the Famous Players, Producer Francis Powers has given us not only a splendid story but he has told it unusually well. It was shown at the Strand the week of July 12, where the writer was fortunate enough to see the initial running on Monday noon to the organ accompaniment. Jane Grey, as Anna Grey, the "little gray lady," has the lead, but really there are four principals in this story, and the work of this quartet as well as of the remainder of the cast is excellent. Hal Clarendon, who usually is seen in "heavy" roles, appears to decided advantage here in the part of a member of the Secret Service. Possibly we would have had a more popular ending of the story had the detective been the winner of the bride rather than that she should go to the weak, the vacillating Perry Carlyle, who displayed perseverence aplenty when studying for his civil service examination, but who forgot his sweetheart back in Ohio, and also his mother, when in Washington City he fell under the spell of the dashing Ruth Jordon.

Scene from "The Little Gray Lady" (Famous Players).

Scene from "The Little Gray Lady" (Famous Players).

James Cooley sustains the part of Perry Carlyle. He does well in a difficult assignment, the portrayal of an honest man, unable to withstand the lure of a pair of bright eyes and a myriad bright lights, turned thief as well as ingrate. Jane Fearnley, in the role of Ruth, the daughter of Mrs. Jordon, the keeper of the boarding house where are staged some of the most dramatic of the many good situations, is convincing, compelling. If many women who watch the unfolding of this story are inclined to condemn Ruth and revile her victim, the men will be disposed to bestow on the woman the harsher expression, and they will pity the man because they will better realize the strength of the alluring temptation he encountered.

There are other players who contribute to the making of this fine picture. Julia Wolcott is the gentle old landlady. Robert Cummings and Mathaleen Aamold portray Mr. and Mrs. Graham, the friends and benefactors of both Anna Grey and Perry Carlyle. Sue Balfour is the motherly Mrs. Carlyle, who never learns what a bad son Perry has been. Edgar Davenport is John Moore, the stern chief of the Secret Service.

The exteriors of "The Little Grey Lady" and some of the more impressive of the interiors are staged in the Capital City. It is said Mr. Powers received substantial aid from Government authorities in the making of the picture; certainly there is atmosphere. The large room representing a part of the Treasury Building is an unusual setting. Immediately there is wonder on the part of the observer whether it is Washington or the studio—there are so many great rolltop desks. Then, again, the matter-of-fact way in which the chief of the Secret Service marks the bills when setting a trap for the crooked clerk materially heightens the illusion. The locker rooms of the women and the men, and the employes passing out at noon time—all of them seriously bent on their own affairs—are minor but by no means inconsequential factors. Another detail deserving of praise is the accuracy with which the director has preserved the identity of the four rooms in the boarding house—all entered from the same hall. Much of the story is told in the rooms of Anna Grey, Carlyle, the detective and the Grahams. The cafe scenes are elaborate and well done; and so is all of the staging.

"The Little Grey Lady" is straight drama. The story holds through sheer strength of plot, and depends in no measure on the spectacular. Surely Miss Grey is fortunate in the medium through which she makes her bow to picture followers. She splendidly fits the character of the "little gray lady," the woman who sticks tight to the man she loves, despite his crimes, and ignores the love even as she recognizes the depth of the friendship and the self-renunciation of a better man. The production is one in every way worthy of the studio from which it comes.

ECLAIR FORCES GO TO TUCSON.

Players and Employes Will Remain at the Big Arizona Studio Pending Completion of Fort Lee Plant.

IT is announced this week by the general manager of the Eclair Film Company, Inc., that the entire producing force engaged in the making of American-Eclair films will be moved on Monday, July 20, to the spacious and modern studio erected by the company at Tucson, Arizona. The Eclair studios at Fort Lee, N. J., will be closed down temporarily. This move was necessitated by the fire which completely destroyed the laboratories of the Eclair Company last March and caused the company to start the erection of a complete new factory and studio building. Until this work is finished, American-Eclair films released on the Universal program will be produced at the Western Studio in Tucson. In a recent interview given by the general manager of the Eclair company he stated that the conditions for turning out good pictures at the western studio are ideal, both from the standpoint of weather and scenic locations, and some of the recent Eclair western productions shown will well bear out this statement. The mechanical and production equipment of the company at its Tucson studio is sufficient to take care of a large force of artists, mechanics and factory people, and improvements are constantly being added, which will make these studios the equal of the new buildings which Eclair is erecting at Fort Lee, N. J. It is announced that the players and employes will return to Fort Lee upon the completion of the company's building operations.

CAPT. A. J. ROSER, KINGSTON, JAMAICA.

The New York office of the World was favored last week with a visit from Captain A. J. Roser, an American exhibitor of Kingston, Jamaica. The Captain is a Spanish War veteran who made his first trip to the Indies with the army. He went back later to seek his fortune and is still there seeking his fortune. He was not overly optimistic about conditions down there; not that there is anything the matter with the Islands, but the trouble is with the natives themselves.

The native help is so unreliable and lazy that the captain is obliged to rely almost entirely upon automatic devices to operate his place of business. That is why he is now in the states looking for new things that work themselves. He says the electric current there is alternating, but that it is more intermittent than alternating. If it is possible for a live wire to do anything in the West Indies, Captain Roser is the man to accomplish it. He is a fine, big, handsome man full of resourcefulness and courage, with a never-say-die spirit about him that makes it a real pleasure to meet him.

Foreign Trade Notes

THE AMERICAN FILM INVASION IN ENGLAND.

By Edward M. Roskam, President Life Photo Film Corp.

ON MY arrival in London I had the good fortune of meeting an old friend of mine, Mr. J. Frank Brockliss, one of the most active and energetic film men in England, who unselfishly spent the rest of the day in taking me around the film district, especially to introduce me to the London film men whom I had not yet met. The offices of the majority of film manufacturers and feature film buyers in London are small and unpretentious looking, although the amount of business transacted is enormous.

I had the pleasure of meeting the heads of the following companies: Walturdaw, Ruffles, Cines, Gaumont, Pathe, Hepworth, Motograph, Charles Urban Trading Company, Mr. J. Frank Brockliss, Mr. Jury, Mr. Smith of the Viagraph Company, as well as Mr. Winik and his many friends.

Mr. Jury, possibly the hardest man to see in all England, gave me one hour of his very valuable time. Mr. Jury has had a few very unsatisfactory experiences with American film men, and when I met him he was very sore against them. One American representative who had been in his office the day before threatened that if Mr. Jury and the rest of the Englishmen did not take in his company's productions, that he would open up his own exchanges and theaters and put Jury and other film exchanges in Great Britain out of business.

The same man stated that it was ridiculous for the foreign trade to demand that five, six and even eight-reel subjects be cut down to three or at the very most four thousand feet The outcome of this meeting was a hasty and forced exit of the visitor.

This is decidedly the wrong attitude to take with respect to the foreign film market. The error committed by this American, who evidently determined upon impressing Englishmen with the force of American business men, lay in the fact that he did not reckon with different environment as well as social and business customs on the other side. Before even attempting to talk business I moved among men socially, visiting the various offices and places of exhibition in order to determine what manner of men I had to do business with. I found that their ways are not our ways and hence I was prepared to talk business with Mr. Jury and the others. I, for the time being, was an Englishman, and hence was received with all the courtesy possible and accomplished results otherwise impossible of attainment.

Mr. Jury then showed me a list comprising 5,000 of the biggest and best exhibitors in England, any one of whom will veto a production not favored by him or the rest of a film organization that is the strongest in Europe.

After a sixty-minute pleasant chat I left Mr. Jury feeling that I had changed his ideas regarding Americans and their productions.

I closed with the American and Continental Film Company of No. 7 Rupert Court, London, and have granted to them the exclusive European agency on all our past and future productions. The American and Continental Film Company's offices are situated in the heart of the London film district, and Mr. Bowden, the general manager, is well known and respected as highly as any film man in Europe. Mr. Bowden will either sell our negatives outright or will make up prints for the various buyers of exclusive films for England, France, Germany, Italy, Australia, South Africa and the colonies.

My refusal to sell outright was placed largely upon my observation which compelled me to form the conclusion that the time will come in the near future when the demands of the English and continental markets will be very similar to those in America. Until that time arrives the American producers can hardly expect to realize the worth of other productions on the other side, but above all things and at all times will it be necessary, in order to dispose of any release, feature or otherwise, to have perfect acting and a consistent story, consistently portrayed. The Englishmen and the Frenchmen are particularly keen in picking out inconsistencies and defects that would at times escape the eye or judgment of the American critic, and I have been fortunate, when showing the first two productions of my company, in having them express opinions that were laudatory.

I have spent four pleasant weeks studying the foreign market and now know exactly what kind of productions England and the continent are interested in. The length of a subject, of course, depends upon the story, but 4,000 feet is the maximum length that they will buy.

A low estimate of the amount of prints that can be sold in England and on the continent is twenty-four at the rate of eight cents a foot for sixteen and six cents a foot for the balance of the prints, which are sold in Germany, Italy and South Africa.

Upon my return I was more than surprised to find out that our studios and laboratory at 102 West 101st street were no more. The fire department were not all to blame, however, as the building had been condemned over two years ago. Twenty-four hours after our eviction all our machinery, studio equipment and negatives were safely stored in our new building at Grantwood, N. J.

SID OLCOTT AND PLAYERS IN IRELAND.

Sidney Olcott and company of photoplayers, etc., who left these shores a few weeks ago, are now located at Beaufort, Ireland, where they will remain indefinitely, producing the pictures that will be known as the "Sidfilms."

Sid Olcott and Co. En Route for Ireland.

Left to right—Patrick O'Malley, Will Reneck, Valentine Grant, Stanley Henderson, Mr. Olcott, Fred Gunning, Mrs. Lawrence Santley; Hal Young, cameraman.

On the trip over on the Adriatic the company made many scenes on shipboard, including the sports in which a number of prominent New Yorkers took part and also some scenes in the steerage.

Beaufort is in County Kerry in Ireland, which is in the Lakes of Killarney neighborhood, being between the village of Killarney and the Gap of Dunloe, through which famous mountain passage all the tourists pass to reach the lakes. The Gap is only a mile or so from where the Sidfilms studio will be erected.

Mr. Olcott has visited Beaufort before. and the entire countryside welcomed him back. Everyone in the vicinity is very much interested in the work and anxious to do what they can to help. This is especially true this year, since the natives have learned that Mr. Olcott is now at the head of his own company and so is more directly benefited by what they are able to do for him.

In London Mr. Olcott purchased a seven-passenger Fiat limousine which has been shipped to Ireland for the use of the company in seeking out the prettiest of the many wonderful locations thereabouts.

Film Conditions in China

Odd Experiences of a Returning Pilgrim Who Went to the Flowery Kingdom On Small Salary and Returns a Director-General.

By Hugh Hoffman.

THE Moving Picture World was recently favored with a visit from Mr. R. F. Van Velzer, formerly a journeyman camera operator, but now the active head of a Chinese company which has been organized in Hong Kong to manufacture photoplays for the home trade, using only Chinese actors, stories and settings.

Mr. Van Velzer's story is interesting from many points of view, and the good fortune that has opened up to him is typical of the windfalls that sometimes come into the paths of men who venture into strange lands.

It was only last September that Mr. Van Velzer was out of work in New York, looking for a position as cameraman. There was a China job on the tapis that none of the regular cameramen seemed to want. The salary seemed good and the prospects were painted in glowing colors, so he took a chance and started away to that queer land accompanied by his wife and their little daughter.

Mr. Van Velzer Making Sub-Titles—Drying Drums in Laboratory Are Visible Through Window.

He found out very quickly after arriving that it costs an American about ten dollars a day to live there if he would live like an American. There is no middle class in China, so far as an American is concerned. It is a case of live among the white people at high prices or live in the squalid native quarter at low prices, which at best is a wretched existence.

Mr. Van Velzer, having scanty funds, was obliged to quarter his family with the Chinese and set to work to save enough money to get back to America. He says that he went through a very depressing period of time among the Chinese during which he worked from twelve to sixteen hours a day building and operating a laboratory and training Chinese help.

After eight months he found himself worn out by hard work and a nervous and physical wreck. The filthy Chinese food had reduced his weight twenty pounds and was telling also upon his family. By this time he had saved enough for passage back to America and had handed in his resignation. On the night before he was to leave for America a party of wealthy Chinese merchants came to his dwelling and asked him to consider an offer to remain in China. As a result of this conference the South China Film Manufacturing Company was formed right there in the street beside his house, and the next day Mr. Van Velzer left for America with several thousand dollars to purchase the necessary equipment for a first-class laboratory and studio to be erected in Hong Kong. This strange burst of confidence on the part of the Chinese Mr. Van Velzer ascribes entirely to common little courtesies on his part toward the Chinese with whom he had come in contact during his daily work.

"The Chinese," said Mr. Van Velzer, "appreciate courtesy. The firm I was working for was unreliable and domineering. They treated the Chinese exhibitors in a contemptuous way at their film exchange and the Chinese were obliged to put up with this treatment or get no show. For my part I was promised everything to work with and got nothing. It devolved upon me to build my own studio and laboratory and find my own actors.

"I went across the bay to a suburb of Hong Kong and induced the members of a Chinese amateur dramatic club to do some of their plays before the camera. The salaries were ridiculous, as will be evident when I tell you that the leading man was engaged at $22 a month and second leads at $11.25 per month. But I found out later that they were all sons of Chinese merchants, some of whom were wealthy. They were a fine set of boys, well educated, and nearly all spoke English fluently. Some of them were splendid actors and we had many pleasant days together.

"We did first a native drama, entitled "The Defamation of Choung Chow." With my experience and guidance the picture turned out well and when shown in public proved to be wonderful drawing card. It packed theaters every night for a month, being the only picture on a European bill that held over from day to day. The reason of its great popularity was because it was a Chinese piece entirely. The news of it spread like wildfire and it was clearly demonstrated then and there that China is a virgin field for Chinese drama.

"We made three other subjects during my stay there. These were: "The Haunted Pot," "The Sanpan Man's Dream" and "The Trip of the Roast Duck," the latter a rough "chase" picture. All of these pictures had phenomenal runs at the native theaters. So pronounced was their success that the fathers of some of my boys took notice of them. But I was getting nothing out of it and the boys were poorly paid, so I decided to come home to America. It was then I discovered that I had gained the confidence of my boys and their fathers—hence the rapid organization of the South China Film Manufacturing Company.

The Mirror Dramatic Club of Hong Kong. Probably the First in Which Women Have Had a Part.

"Now, I am going back as director-general of the company to make films in earnest. I have a much better opinion of the Chinese than I had at first. I find that if they are treated right they are the fairest. squarest men to do business with that I have found anywhere. They never go back on an agreement and they never agree to do anything they do not intend to fulfill. I also find that they are intelligent and make good laboratory hands, the girls as well as the boys and men. It is the purpose of our company, not only to manufacture pictures, but to establish a circuit of theaters in which to show them.

"While there is no rule against it, the women of China have never acted. On this account I found it better to use female impersonators, but the women have talent; there is no doubt about that. At first they are camera-shy and inclined to giggle, yet they have fine facial expression and a little patience will bring it out.

"There are two classes of exhibitions in Hong Kong, or perhaps I should say, two classes of audiences. The first exhibition is given in the early evening for Europeans at prices ranging from fifty cents to $1.50. Later the same program is shown to the natives for prices approximating five and ten cents. The Chinese do not understand our society dramas but they do like slap-stick comedy and "cowboy" pictures.

"The water of Hong Kong comes from mountain springs and is so cold and clear that it is ideal for laboratory purposes."

Mr. Van Velzer is enthusiastic over his new prospects and is anxious to return to China. He allowed us to read some of the letters he has received from his boys. They are mostly all typewritten in good English by the writers and all of them express endearment for their director whom they beseech to come back to Hong Kong as soon as possible.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Congratulations Due on Dayton Outcome.

CONGRATULATIONS are in order; congratulations to exhibitors generally and to the other two great departments of the moving picture industry, because of the recent reconciliation at Dayton of the parent organization of exhibitors and the seceding faction.

Being present during the proceedings of the first four days of the convention, I know how tense interest was along the line of concessions, and how hard it was to make some of the conservative members budge. Luckily there were several on the liberal side who never lost sight of the vital importance of reamalgamation, and who saw not far off in the future the death of both factions should they fail to come together at this crisis. Reider and Jeup, of Michigan; Phillips, of Texas, and Brophy, of Oklahoma, were foremost among those who advocated "going the limit" to bring the seceders back.

The man who made reamalgamation possible, in the first place, by declining renomination as president when victory was in sight by a vote of nearly two to one, looms up bigger than ever as a member of the League. M. A. Neff will go down in the history of organized exhibitors as the founder of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America. His wise counsel will be at the disposal of the organization, and his services will be given without stint, if needed, during the ensuing year.

The hands of the incoming president, M. A. Pearce, of Baltimore, should be firmly upheld during his term. He will have many difficult problems to face, and their solution will be made easy by the united and earnest support of members of the League.

Now that peace and harmony and co-operation have been restored to the organization, there should be no place in the mind of any member for the dead past. It is decently buried. The steady growth of the League in membership and influence should be the aim of every member throughout the coming year.

For Safety in Chicago's Picture Theaters.

The fire in the Ashland Theater June 27 will result in a new picture theater ordinance which will minimize the danger of fire from burning films or faulty wiring. The ordinance will be ready for the consideration of the City Council immediately after the summer recess. After the fire in Ashland, Assistant Chief Building Inspector Kelling declared that the fault is not entirely that of the proprietors of such theaters, but in the lack of proper legislation. Mr. Kelling stated that the moving picture business had progressed so rapidly that legislation in the past few years had not kept pace with it, and that out of 630 or more picture houses now in the city not one of them failed to comply with present ordinances.

In many instances moving picture houses which are operating under the old Class B ordinance, and not affected by the new ordinance of January, 1911, providing for fire-proof construction, have voluntarily taken measures for the safeguarding of their patrons. The new ordinance, which became effective in January, 1911, required theaters seating more than 300 and not exceeding 1,000 persons to be fire-proof construction, with exits on each side leading to a street or ally of a minimum width of five feet.

The report of Theater Inspector A. F. Olsen submitted to Building Commissioner Ericsson after the explosion and fire in the Ashland Theater showed that the building proper was fire-proof and the safety measures governing exits and aisles were in excess of the law's requirements. According to Inspector Olsen's report the Ashland, required to have 4½ feet of exit and aisle space, has 14½ feet of exit and 5 feet of aisle space, an excess of 10 feet and a half-foot respectively. Inspector Olsen declared that in the case of the Ashland Theater it was purely a case of carelessness, an exposed film becoming ignited from the arc light in the machine booth.

Records on file in the Building Commissioner's Department show that the old style houses of the "store" type are gradually being eliminated, not through adverse legislation, but by the law of the "survival of the fittest." Of this type seventy-five houses voluntarily were abandoned last year, and an equal number are expected to leave the field this year. Commissioner Ericsson says of Chicago moving picture theaters that with the exception of a few of the cheaper kind they have done more than is required by law for the safety of the patrons. Danger still exists, Mr. Ericsson admitted, but he said his department was powerless to act until new legislation is passed. In the larger theaters the managers in many instances have gone out of their way to build fire-proof film pits absolutely apart from the rest of the theater so that the danger of a fire spreading is minimized. The changes suggested by Mr. Ericsson will be put into form by one of the assistant corporation counsel and then will be sent to the Council judiciary committee.

New Picture Theaters for Chicago.

Notwithstanding the large number of moving picture and neighborhood theaters already in Chicago, plans are under way for the erection of half a dozen or more new buildings devoted to kinematography. Building permits have been issued for the erection of a three-story structure at 551-559 Belmont avenue, to contain a theater, stores, and flats, and for the construction of a two-story brick theater at 2433-43 Lincoln avenue. The former will cost $130,000 and the latter $100,000.

Besides these, plans have been prepared for a one-story theater at 4030-34 West Madison street, to cost $100,000. A $150,000 structure is to be erected at East Seventy-fourth street and Cottage Grove avenue, which will contain a theater, five stores, and twenty-five flats. Another theater, for which plans have been prepared, will be located at 3435-41 Lincoln avenue. It will be two stories high and will cost $100,000.

Pictures to Revolutionize Teaching Methods.

At the recent convention of the National Education Association, held in Minneapolis, at a special meeting devoted to a discussion of the use of moving pictures, it was held that they are destined to revolutionize the present methods of teaching. It was the consensus of opinion that the pictures give visuality and quicken the imagination of the child to a far greater degree, in a few minutes' time, than the textbook would in days of study. Subjects covering the curricula from kindergarten to the graduate course already are in use, it was stated, in a few cases, and others are being prepared for use in every branch of science.

Lauder Film Lost.

The Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago announces the loss of the one-reel Harry Lauder film, entitled the "Comedy Golf Game." The picture was shown at the Regent Theater, 6746 Sheridan road, Chicago, on June 16, and was reported returned to the office of the Celebrated Players Film Company about 12:30 the same night. The employee of the Regent Theater who was intrusted with the film asserts that he left it in the elevator of the Schiller Building on the night above mentioned, since which time no one connected with the Celebrated Players Film Company has seen the film. All theater managers are warned to be on their guard against doing any business with this copy of the one-reel Harry Lauder "Comedy Golf Game," as the Celebrated Players Film Company owns the exclusive rights of exhibition for the entire United States.

Chicago Film Brevities.

William N. Selig sailed from New York for Europe on the "Imperator" Saturday, July 18. The Rev. Joseph Tonello will accompany him. Mr. Selig will travel throughout Europe during the trip, making London his headquarters. He will return to Chicago in about five or six weeks.

* * *

Ed Kohl, of Cleveland, who was appointed chief sergeant-at-arms of the Dayton convention, motored all the way from Cleveland to Dayton. He was accompanied by Miss Gertrude Kohl, Master Edward Kohl, and Miss Agnes Fox. The party stopped over at Columbus and Springfield while en route. Mr. Kohl tells the story that the machine ran over a chicken at Norwalk, Ohio, and that in its death throes it cried: "Cheep, Cheep trip," while a sad-eyed pig nearly grunted, "Oi! Oi!"

* * *

The story of the Kathlyn series has been syndicated in the Kellogg list of the Western Newspaper Union. About 15,000 papers in the association are using the story. The sale of the Bobbs Merrill issue of the Kathlyn story in book form has been so great that the publishers have been obliged to run their plants night and day to meet the demand.

* * *

Sol L. Lesser, general manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., of San Francisco, made a pleasant call at our office last week.

Al Rosenthal, formerly traveling representative out of Chicago for Warner's Features, is now traveling special representative of the World Film Corporation. Mr. Rosenthal recently made an extended trip through the South. He reports business very good in that territory, notwithstanding the hot weather.

* * *

Harry H. Young, formerly with Warner's Feature Film Company, is now traveling representative out of Chicago for the World Film Corporation.

* * *

William Buehler, formerly assistant director of Kinemacolor in Los Angeles, paid a call at the World office last week. Mr. Buehler has certain plans in view which will probably necessitate making Chicago his temporary home in the near future.

* * *

After three months' fight in the Federal Court of New York State for the possession of "Brewster's Millions," Alfred Hamburger gained the decision over the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Mr. Hamburger will show the celebrated comedy at the Ziegfield Theater for an extended engagement.

* * *

Annette Kellermann is still drawing crowds in "Neptune's Daughter" at the Fine Arts Theater. The business for ten weeks has been so remunerative that Alfred Hamburger has decided to continue the feature all through the summer.

* * *

The moving picture rights of "Diane of the Green Van," the best story of 1914, thus far, by Leona Dalrymple, have been purchased by William N. Selig. This is the ten-thousand-dollar prize novel selected by Miss Ida M. Tarbell, S. S. McClure and George N. Madison, appointed judges for the occasion, as the best of over 500 manuscripts submitted in the great novel contest, which brought out many stories of exceptional merit.

* * *

William Sievers, of the New Grand Central, St. Louis, paid a call at the World office during his recent visit to Chicago. Unfortunately I was not in at the time.

* * *

"Cabiria" continues to draw well-filled houses at the Illinois. It's pronounced success points to an all-summer run.

* * *

"The Christian" at the Olympic continues to draw large and well-pleased audiences.

* * *

C. A. Frambers, president of the Chicago Photoplaywright Club, with headquarters at 3223 West Polk street, this city, paid a visit to the World office recently. The club meets once a week in a downtown theater and the members criticise the pictures shown and one another's manuscripts. The members are Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, Harry S. Burton, Charles Buckley, C. J. Caine and Louis J. Bass.

APEX OPENS IMPORTANT EXCHANGES.

Dallas, San Francisco, and Los Angeles Territory to be Supplied by Apex Feature Service.

ENCOURAGED by the excellent results secured in Atlanta, the Apex Feature Service has opened exchanges in Dallas, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, renting their feature productions direct to exhibitors. The Southern states, with Atlanta as a center, have heretofore been considered undeveloped territory from a standpoint of the distributor of feature films. In less than four months' time the Apex Film Company has demonstrated that the Southern States are as good as any other section of America for feature productions, and the up-to-date exhibitors in that territory have been quick to grasp the opportunity of securing the feature service supplied by the Apex office in Atlanta, which handles not only the Apex productions, but also the Blache, Solax, Itala, Greene's Feature Photoplays, and other productions. Morris Levison, who rendered such excellent service in developing the Atlanta territory, is now in Dallas opening commodious offices for the Apex Feature Service in that city, and has been succeeded by O. P. Hall, one of the best known showmen and film men in the entire South.

Morris Winik, who came from London especially to open the Apex exchanges on the Coast, has fitted up spacious quarters at the Pantages Theater Building, San Francisco, and secured the services of Marion H. Kohn as manager of that office. Mr. Winik is now in Los Angeles, where he has just rented offices at 802 South Olive street, from which the Southern California exhibitors will be served by the Apex.

Joseph Simmonds, of the Apex Film Co., intends to visit his old home in San Francisco in a short time, taking time en route to visit the Apex offices in Atlanta, Dallas, and Los Angeles.

Hodkinson on Visit to Coast.

Tells What Paramount Picture Corporation Intends to Do For Exhibitor.

WILLIAM W. HODKINSON, the general manager of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, left last Wednesday for a tour on the Pacific Coast. He will visit Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where he expects to confer with the managers of his exchanges. He will be back in New York ready to devote himself entirely to the details of working out the plans of the Paramount Pictures Corporation in the middle of August.

"I want to emphasize," said Mr. Hodkinson to a reporter of The Moving Picture World, "that we expect to do more for the high-class exhibitor than was ever done before. We will make him the king pin of the amusement world in his own territory, and with such an organization back of him he may well consider himself the personal representative of the great names and forces that are arrayed within the ranks of our organization. He will be glad to help us in widening the gulf which even now divides the 'movies' from the motion pictures. We will give him the aid of a new and systematic method of national advertising, but of this I will tell you more later on as soon as our plans are perfected in every detail."

L. Frank Baum

THE president and general manager of the Oz Film Manufacturing Company, L. Frank Baum, is perhaps as well known to the children of the world as any other living man. He has written and published twenty-six books of fairy tales, the best known of which are the seven Oz books. His fairy tales have been translated and published in many foreign countries, exceptionally large sales being reported from Germany. In the United States alone over four million copies of his books have been sold during the last five years. From 1881 to 1883 Mr. Baum played the leading part in "The Maid of Arran," a drama written by himself, in which he toured the country. He also wrote "The Wizard of Oz," which was produced at the Grand Opera House in Chicago and ran for eight years. This was the first of the modern extravaganzas. "The Woggle Bug," his next musical comedy, was produced at the Dearborn Theater, Chicago. His latest musical extravaganza was "The Tik Tok Man of Oz," produced by Oliver Morosco at the Majestic Theater, Los Angeles, in 1913.

L. Frank Baum.

Mr. Baum made a successful tour throughout the country in 1908 and 1909, giving an illustrated lecture on fairy tales taken from several of his best known books. He organized the Oz Film Manufacturing Company in Los Angeles this Spring, realizing the tremendous field open to a company producing quaint fairy stories, full of clean comedy, love and adventure, teeming with transformations, illusions, appearances and disappearances. The first film will be a five-reel feature of "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," taken from his book of the same name. This subject has been under work since June 15 and will be ready for release very soon. Over nine thousand feet of film was taken to cover the first four reels, of which the very best photography and cleverest of scenes were selected. No expense has been spared to make this first picture a sensation, Mr. Baum spending all of his time at the plant.

The Vampire's Trail

Kalem Two-Reel Picture Gives Interesting Development to an Important Situation—An Intimate Story of Domestic Life.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A YOUNG mother wants to be with her child so much that she is cross to her husband when he asks her to spend a pleasant evening with him away from home. The husband in consequence seeking diversion and relief from business cares alone, drifts away from her. This is a good situation, and the authors of this picture, which makes use of it, (there are two of them, Benjamin Barondess and Michael Potter) have stated it in a simple, direct way that leaves no opening for melodrama, but a fine chance for true dramatic Scene from "The Vampire's Trail" (Kalem).

development. It will be noticed that both husband and wife are not drawn as all good or all bad nor are they presented in a way that compels us to sympathize one way or the other. They are merely set there in their home life with this little entanglement that they must either unravel or trip over to the destruction of the home. The average spectator will probably not see himself or herself in either of them. They will be to him acquaintances only, not wholly approved of as wise human beings, but decidedly of interest, they will be seen as in some things foolish human beings, good gossip material.

Alice Joyce and Tom Moore in "The Vampire's Trail."

When the second reel is opening we find that things have got to such a pass that the husband invites the singer, with whom he has begun a somewhat unsafe friendship, to attend a party at his house and there introduces her to his wife. The spectator's mind hesitates here, for a moment, thinking that it is a bit unbelievable and perhaps it is. But the author's intention is to get her in the house and in some natural and convincing way to have some contagious disease break out. The child gets sick while the party is in progress and the singer lingering behind, is quarantined and compelled to remain there for several days. This singer is the vampire, and it has been her intention to get nation-wide publicity by eloping with the man whom she doesn't love. She has been persuaded to take the step by her reporter lover. The queer trick thus played on her by chance (she had thought that he would elope with her that night) puts her in the frame of mind that makes her give her hacracter "away." She cares nothing for the sick baby and persists in playing rag time airs. Then her persuading the butler to play cards with her and to get out the wine bottle also makes her seem a most undesirable person. The reporter, wondering why he gets no definite news about the elopement, comes to the house and they, while talking through an open window, are overheard by the wife, who is thunderstruck to learn that she had been entertaining a woman whose sole object was to entrap her husband into an elopement. This is naturally all off now, and we are never sure that her scheme had appealed to the man. We prefer to think not, for if it had, the wife could have forgiven him, but how could she ever have respected his common sense or strength of character afterward? That she does take him back into her love and confidence makes it sure that he was not fooled so wholly as the adventuress had hoped or persuaded herself. The role of the young wife is taken by Alice Joyce; that of her husband by Tom Moore and that of the adventuress by Alice Hollister. All three of these have excellent roles and all capably fill the requirements of them. The production was put on the screen by Robert G. Vignola and has many lovely scenes. The photography is fine.

George Soule Spencer

GEORGE SOULE SPENCER is a native of the Badger State, born and raised in the City of Milwaukee. The University of Wisconsin is his Alma Mater and Delta Upsilon the Greek letter fraternity whose pin he fondly wears. Mr. Spencer is a grandson of Platt R. Spencer, the founder of the Spencerian system of penmanship. Mr. Spencer's father, Robert C. Spencer, is the founder of the great system of Spencerian Business Colleges. Leaving college, where he specialized in studies helpful to an artist profession, the stage, young George enlisted as a member of the Madame Modjeska Company, as juvenile man. Three years under her banner ('98-'99-1900) was a fine schooling for a boy fresh from the ranks of the aspiring amateur. For two years Mr. Spencer played Sir Edward Mortimer in Schiller's "Mary Stuart" to the Madame's hopeless queen, a role made famous in this country by Maurice Barrymore, Ottis Skinner and Jas. Haworth, and various other equally important roles. Since his first schooling Mr. Spencer has appeared in important parts with Kelsey and Shannon, Henrietta Crossman, Cecilia Loftus, Virginia Harned, Wm. H. Crane, Francis Wilson, Henry Miller, Bertha Kalich —several non-star productions—and was featured in "Lost River," "The Devil," and four of his own stock companies. The motion picture play is not entirely new to Mr. Spencer as he appeared in the first cast picture, by special engagement, produced by the Edison Company some four years ago, "A Victim of Bridge," by Richard Harding Davis; also Don Jose in "Carmen" with Pilar Morin, "The Rival Sculports," "Our Mutual Friend," and several others while appearing in New York on the stage.

George Soule Spencer.

Mr. Spencer is now one of the Lubin leading men at the home studio, Philadelphia, attached to the company directed by Barry O'Neil.

"Held for Ransom."

A Four-Reel I. S. P. Detective Story Release.

Reviewed by R. C. McElravy.

THE producers of this film have chosen a simple, straightforward plot and relied upon ingenious and exciting incidents to furnish the proper degree of novelty. In this they have been quite successful and the four reels contain much of an entertaining nature.

The daughter of Millionaire Brewster is abducted in the opening scenes and Byrnes, king of detectives, is called upon to recover her. The subsequent happenings follow in rapid-fire succession and perhaps in a little too mechanical way. But novel touches here and there keep the observer interested. The den of the crooks suggested the stronghold of Prof. Moriarty in William Gillette's production of Sherlock Holmes, but this film offering at no time possesses the tension of the well known stage drama.

Scene from "Held for Ransom" (I. S. Plaut).

The detective's impersonation of the gang leader—his capture—the pocket mirror signal—the dwarf in the mysterious bag—the message sent by a carrier pigeon—all of these devices are welcome in a yarn of this character. Such incidents often serve to hold the attention better than bald efforts at sensationalism.

The crooks are finally rounded up and the girl rescued, but not until the ransom money has been obtained. The entire fourth reel is given up to chase, the gang in a motor launch pursued by an automobile and motorcycle. This is conventional, but becomes genuinely exciting in certain respects. One thriller consists of a fall from a high bridge by one of the crooks, when the detective cuts the rope. Then comes the crowning sensation, in which the sleuth is seen climbing up Eiffel tower after the gang leader. The latter makes some perilous swings across the heavy steel framework and is last seen falling from the top of the immense structure—a dummy, of course, being providentially substituted in this instance.

Scene from "Held for Ransom" (I. S. Plaut).

For a story lacking any great originality of plot this works out in an entertaining manner. It is not a gripping production, except perhaps in the final scenes, but the incidents are fresh and pleasing. The photography is generally clear.

In the Land of the Lost.

Four Reels. Sterling Camera and Film Company.

EXCEPTIONALLY fine photography is the outstanding merit of this production. Next to this most commendable feature are the settings, all of them taken outdoors and chosen with a good eye for the fitness of things. The rockbound coast of Maine opens up great opportunities for a capable photographer, and the cameraman who did the practical work of this production is more than just capable; he has original ideas and knows how to make them tell on the screen.

Scene from "The Land of the Lost" (Sterling C. & F. Co.).

The plot is of the old-fashioned melodramatic school, with an exceptionally fierce and irredeemable villain. He plays the part of a scheming nobleman, Baron de Coverly (Oh shades of Addison!). By holding the lure of a title before the fascinated eyes of the heroine he wins the unsophisticated maiden's consent to marry him. Before the wedding takes place, however, the hero appears on the scene and at once becomes the object of the tender regard of the heroine and the victim of the uncompromising hatred of the baron. My, but how these two men do detest each other. Even when thrown together on a solitary island the villain keeps on pursuing. He was wicked when in his cups, but he was not a bit better when sober. Needless to say, Nemesis is right there pursuing the villain in turn and we rejoice at his destruction, especially after he had tried to get away with the old hermit's cash.

There are impressive moments in this melodrama, the incident of the old hermit being particularly worthy of mention. The double exposure work was fine throughout. The acting was in keeping with the nature of the subject.

ABRAMS TOURING COUNTRY WITH FEATURE CARAVAN.

Charles (Feature) Abrams left New York July 1 on a feature sales expedition which will carry him into nearly every state in the Union. He has taken several trunks full of film of varied brands, including "The Black Triangle" and subjects of the Great Northern Special, Great Northern Preferred and Film Releases of America.

Accompanying him as general aid will be little Louis Goldstein, the seventeen-year-old salesman, who, during his apprentice days, was known as the film business's "popular office boy."

Abrams's itinerary includes Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, Chicago, Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Wichita, Denver, Salt Lake, Los Angeles, San Francisco. On the way back he will stop off in Nevada, Texas and cities in the south. He will be absent between four and five weeks.

B. NICHOLS FINDS OVERPRODUCTION.

B. Nichols of London, who returned to England on Tuesday, July 7, following a short business trip, said, in the course of a pleasant call on the World just before sailing, that he had found the market in the United States suffering from the same disease at present afflicting the film industry in England—that is, overproduction. He added that in his opinion the longer subjects are all right if they are good, but—the longer the story, the better must that story be.

Two Big Productions Coming.

A Peep Behind the Scenes Where They Made "The Call of the North" and "The Virginian."

DUSTIN FARNUM, now of the Jesse L. Lasky hosts, has just returned from the sublime scenery of Southern California, where he took part in the filming of "The Virginian," playing the titular part of that widely-known and highly popular play. He saw some of the work on another coming Lasky production, "The Call of the North." Mr. Farnum gathered much good material in the way of film lore and he knows how to tell the story.

"The pictures of 'The Call of the North,'" said he to a representative of The Moving Picture World, "were made in the southeastern part of California, in and about Bear Lake, which is about 6,800 feet above sea level. The presence of the author of 'The Conjurer's House,' upon which the story of 'The Call of the North' is based, did much to help us. The author, as you know, is Stuart Edward White. The Director was Cecil De Mille. We had the services of Mr.

Dustin Farnum, a Permanent Lasky Star, in "The Virginian."

Buckland as artistic director. One of the pretty things with which we took infinite pains was the building of a stockade which is an exact reproduction of a trading post in the old days of the Hudson Bay Company. Mr. White drew the plans himself. Robert Edeson plays the leading part. The play is full of the atmosphere of the old days, when the man who dared to invade the domain of the gigantic monopoly was sent on the 'long traverse'—that is to say, sent to his death. He was plunged into the northern wilderness, and an Indian aptly named The Shadow of Death was sent to follow him and make sure of the invader's death, if by any chance he threatened to get out of the forest alive. The climatic changes in this section of the country are startling. Above the snow line the air is extremely thin, making breathing difficult and producing headaches and slight hemorrhages. Here you get into the tremendous pine forests, which give the play its realistic atmosphere. On the other side of the snow line often at a distance of a few miles you find the cactus, the sage brush and the rattlesnakes."

Scene from "The Call of the North" (Lasky).

Speaking of the production in which he himself is featured, Mr. Farnum called attention to the curious fact that the town of Newhall in that vicinity is the most typical old-fashioned western town in existence today because the inhabitants expressly keep it so for the benefit of the moving picture directors. It brings a lot of business to the town and pays. He spoke, too, of the curious fear and clumsiness of his real cowpunchers in the presence of water. They hated to get into a canoe, he said, and felt thoroughly out of their element, affording a lot of involuntary comedy. He said that while these men among themselves use a vocabulary beside which the most violent outburst of a longshoreman looks like chaste and classic diction they always honor the presence of a lady and never overstep the boundaries of Chesterfield within the sound of fair ears.

The Lasky Producing Staff in California.

From right to left—Robert Edeson, appearing in "The Call of the North"; Stuart Edward White, author of that play; Dustin Farnum, star of "The Virginian"; Max Figman, who plays in "The Man on the Box" for Lasky; James Neil, heavy man of the Lasky Company; Theodore Roberts, character man in "The Call of the North"; Thomas W. Ross, who played the leading role in "The Only Son," and Oscar Apfel, chief director of the concern, with Cecil B. DeMille, director general, seated at his favorite desk, and Pluto, the Lasky mascot. In addition to the stars shown in the picture, H. B. Warner, Rita Stanwood and Chas. Richman are also at the Lasky studios.

The Rescue from the Broken Stage Coach. Scene from "The Virginian."

Europe Hungry for Quality

Samuel Goldfish, Treasurer and General Manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Company, Returns from Abroad After Arranging for the Distribution of His Company's Productions—His Views and Observations on the Markets of Europe.

By W. Stephen Bush.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH a few weeks ago took a message of quality to the film marts of Europe and now he has returned with glad tidings of success. The treasurer and general manager of the Jesse L. Lasky Company had for some time past considered the problem of distributing the productions of his company in Europe in the most expeditious and advantageous manner possible. He finally decided to take a personal survey of conditions in Europe. It was his object to study the situation in the various countries of Europe and then to place the productions of his company within the reach of every first-class exhibitor in England and on the continent.

Mr. Goldfish is earnest, quietly but ceaselessly active, he is keen and persevering, but he is not talkative. Though his visit to Europe was unheralded, the objects of his coming and the gigantic plans of his company soon become known and in all his travels from the day of his landing on the coast of England to his return home he was besieged by reporters and by film men generally for information. It did not take Mr. Goldfish long to discover that his gospel of quality supported by many concrete examples he had brought with him fell on fertile ground not only in England, where eager high-class exhibitors insisted on bookings whether or no, but in every part of the European continent.

Mr. Goldfish not only knows how to understand a situation, how to dominate it or profit by it, but he is equally capable of describing it. He aims for the center of the target and generally makes the bell ring. His speech is always marked by a desire for brevity and conciseness, delightful qualities which make the interviewer's task rather easy.

He was immersed in work when I called on him, but this condition is normal and habitual with him and never interfered with our talk.

"We have held back releasing our productions in Europe," said Mr. Goldfish, "until I had a chance to go over and examine the European situation. When I reached Europe I found this situation: The productions sent over by most American manufacturers today are sold to buyers, who are something on the type of a state right buyer here; some of these men have exchanges, others had no exchanges of their own, but sold through exchanges, and thus a production often passed through three and four hands before it reached the man who actually booked it. We did not want such productions as ours handled in any such manner. We came to the conclusion that we would handle them over there as we handle them over here. I made arrangements with the J. D. Walker Films, Limited, of London, to distribute our entire product in England; in Germany we made similar arrangements with the Duesseldorf Film Manufacturers. These latter, called the 'Duesseldorfer Film-Manufactur,' are the largest renters in Germany and fully capable of doing our films justice. Similar arrangements for the handling and distributing of our productions have been made in France, Russia and other foreign countries. I feel this is the only way to create an incentive for producing high-quality films on a big scale. As to the assertion that England and Europe generally do no longer want the long films, let me say this: Long films must be able to stand the length, there must be action all the way through, action and quality. I had proof of this myself; some of our plays got immediate bookings. Indeed, I spoke to a number of exhibitors and when I explained our program of quality to them they all said that such productions as ours were the thing wanted in England. Some said, after viewing some of our plays, that they felt encouraged to build new houses, knowing that we will be able to give them a steady supply of high quality productions. I explained to them what we were doing to insure quality in every detail and told them that we had a special director, who does not take part in the actual work of direction but who merely takes care of the artistic details. They were delighted to hear that Mr. Belasco would give his personal attention to the production of his famous masterpieces and eagerly asked me how soon they might expect the release of 'The Darling of the Gods.' We will go all over the world to insure quality and variety. We feel so confident of the merits of our productions that we are willing to play to the public direct, we are willing to depend on the box office receipts, we think we can take a chance with the public. The men on the other side are begging for good stuff. I feel we have the materials and the organization to give them what they want."

Samuel Goldfish.

"How did you find conditions generally in Europe?" I asked Mr. Goldfish.

"I have been in England, France, Germany, Austria and Italy," replied Mr. Goldfish, "and have been in close touch with active film men of every country. Conditions in England are good, and as I have told you the long film of quality is sure of its market. Conditions in France are very poor. The French are behind us, but they are beginning to build bigger theaters all through the country; theaters of a kind that will be able to handle big high-class productions. There is such a theater now being built in Paris and it is approaching completion. The cheaper shows are dying out rapidly, the quality films are just arriving. Conditions in Germany are not very good. To be sure, they have some beautiful theaters, notably in Berlin, but here, as elsewhere in Europe, the public begins to sift the mass of productions and will only accept the best. They like good productions and rejoice in a full dramatic story, but it has to be legitimately dramatic, not merely a shooting or killing affair. We will begin releasing in Europe on the first of September. Our first picture will be 'Brewster's Millions.' In the beginning of the same month one of my companies will leave for Japan to stage and produce 'The Darling of the Gods.' Another company will be sent to Arabia to stage and produce Edgar Selwyn's 'The Arab.' We are sending two companies to England to produce two famous English plays. Let me say in conclusion that my visit to Europe has convinced me of our future successes there. I do not want to laud my own pictures exclusively; no, all pictures of high quality will find a profitable welcome throughout Europe."

"ALKALI IKE" BACK FROM ABROAD.

Augustus Carney, long known to photoplay followers as "Alkali Ike" and more recently as "Universal Ike," returned recently from his trip to the British Isles in less than a year. Mr. Carney seems to be acquiring the crossing-the-big-pond habit. Seen the other day at the Screen Club he said he was resting up a bit and casually looking over the field. He said he had not had a long stay in New York for so many years that it looked particularly good, and possibly if things came his way he might locate in the old town. The old-time comedian has lost none of his quiet, quaint philosophy.

Famous Players Acquire Big Subjects

They Are from the Pen of Sir Henry Arthur Jones, the Well-known English Dramatist.

SIR HENRY ARTHUR JONES, the celebrated English playwright, who arrived from London recently, presumably for the purpose of making a study of dramatic conditions in America, made an early visit to the studios of the Famous Players, which will shortly release in feature film a number of Sir Henry's more noted successes.

The distinguished dramatist, who singled out the Famous Players from a number of other concerns for the privilege of filming his works, took a keen interest in the activities at the West Twenty-sixth street studio, and became enthusiastic over a scene in the course of production from "Behind the Scenes," a play of theatrical life by Margaret Mayo, in the film version of which Mary Pickford plays the leading role. Sir Henry was visibly impressed by the degree of realism aimed at in the scene, which represented the interior of a metropolitan theater, with actors constituting the audience watching what purported to be an entire musical comedy company on the stage.

The visitor was taken through the various departments of the studio and factory, and expressed amazement at the wonderful manner in which the intricate mechanical agencies were co-related with the artistic branch of the huge plant.

Sir Henry Arthur Jones and Daniel Frohman.

In a conversation with Adolph Zukor and Daniel Frohman, respectively President and managing director of the Famous Players, Sir Henry said:

"It is more than amazing how elaborately and with what a wealth of detail these scenes are produced. That theater scene provides one answer for the phenomenal development of your company, here and in England, and for the general advancement of the film play. That scene, with the vast audience in the auditorium and the great number of people performing on the stage, is as much like a real theater as any I have ever seen. The people supposed to represent the musical comedy company are as elaborately costumed and carefully trained as if they were giving a performance at the Winter Garden. I anticipate with a great deal of eagerness the appearance of my plays in films. I have seen a number of productions of the Famous Players in England, and they have met with the highest appreciation. The camera can do many things that cannot be attempted on the stage."

Sir Henry Arthur Jones has for the past year been besieged by the leading film producers of the world for the film rights of his famous successes. As under similar conditions in the cases of Charles Frohman and Henry W. Savage, the Famous Players finally succeeded in securing these works.

Among the plays by Sir Henry Arthur Jones that will be produced in motion pictures by the Famous Players are "The Masquerader," "Saints and Sinners," "The Dancing Girl," and the most celebrated of all his works, "The Silver King," which has just been given a command performance before the King of England, and the film version of which is now being produced abroad under the direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford.

GREENSBORO, N. C., GETS NEW HOUSE.

A new moving picture theater was opened in Greensboro, N. C., on July 10, by Messrs. Smith & Burkhimer. The expenditure involved $3,000 in furnishing the house. N. C. Smith is the resident manager.

"After the Ball"

Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon Make Screen Debut in Photo-Drama's Six-Part Dramatization of Famous Song.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

HERE is a singular combination of society drama and thrill-filled melodrama. Portraying the former are the old-time stage stars, the couple inseparable off the boards as well as on, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon. In his interpretation of John Dale, the uncle who tells to the little girl on his knee the pathetic story of his love, the one-time matinee idol sustains the interest and sympathy to the end. Miss Shannon is charming as Louise, the older sister of the youngster whose indiscretions bring so much trouble to his parents and who is also the cause of the estrangement of Louise and her lover no longer youthful. For Mr. Kelcey plays his role as he is, his iron-gray hair untouched by the artifice of make-up. Furthermore, he accentuates this phase when in the humility of the love that has come to him in the strength of his prime he half-seriously, half-jocularly, wonders if Louise will have an "old duffer" like him. Surely, these two make a fine pair of lovers.

Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon in "After the Ball."

Supplementary to the main action in "After the Ball," which the Photo-Drama Company, Inc., has dramatized in six parts from Charles K. Harris' famous song of the same title, is an underworld story containing thrilling moments. These occur in the steadily downward career of Gerald, the brother of Louise. There is a hand-over-hand clothes-line escape from a house besieged by police; there is a -36-foot jump from a bridge into the water, the camera registering the entire course of the fall; and there is a pursuit of a train by a motormounted policeman, who jumps from his machine to the rear platform, only to lose his quarry when there is a jump into the river below as the train passes over a bridge.

There can be no question that the chief interest of production centers about the personalities of the two stage favorites, although it is possible that in houses where the sensational is liked this interest may be divided to an extent by the misadventures of Gerald. The picture is well staged, and there is a good supporting company. Pains have been taken in the working out of the story; for instance, in tre race-track scene, the principals were a part of the throng at the course, and not cut in by subterfuge. "After the Ball" should be a popular picture.

MRS. MAX ROTHBERT KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

Max Rothbert, the well-known and popular representative of the Acme Metal Ceiling Company of New York, met with a deplorable accident near New Brunswick, N. J., July 6, when his automobile skidded and turned over, killing Mrs. Rothbert and injuring himself so severely that it is a question whether he will recover.

Mr. Rothbert is an expert on theater equipment and has such a great fund of structural information at his command that the New York exhibitors look upon him as an indispensable citizen.

The funeral services for Mrs. Rothbert were held at the home of her mother, Mrs. Greenstein, 126 East 118th street, New York, where Mr. Rothbert now lies in a critical condition.

The Universal Boy

Matty Roubert, Now Appearing in a Series of Universal Comedies, a Most Interesting Youngster.

WHEN a political, social, theatrical or sporting celebrity goes on tour through this great country of America, as a rule one of the tasks he or she is forced to repeat time and again is shaking hands with some boy whose fond parent has dragged him forward to meet the great so-and-so. And ever afterward that boy's parents and perhaps the boy himself boasts of the wonderful event; it is a landmark in the boy's life. But there is one little fellow in this country whose daily work is to meet important personages, shake hands and talk with them. Matty Roubert is the boy's name—and he is just seven years old. Matty is known as the "Universal Boy" in the Universal series of comedies and dramas of that name, and as one of the main incidents in these plays he calls on persons whose fame is spread over the world and more than often becomes thoroughly acquainted with them.

Matty Roubert

Never before has a boy passed through the experiences that this little fellow is going through at the present time. He is meeting and visiting with people that other boys—and many grown-ups—would give their eye teeth to even get in speaking distance of. And while Matty enjoys it all highly, he takes it as a matter of course; it is all a part of the play he is appearing in; and that is what interests him most.

Matty as Ford Sterling

A short time ago Matty accompanied his father up to the New York Polo grounds. When the New York Giants were warming up Matty walked out on the field and hailed the world's most famous baseball club manager, John McGraw. He laughed and joked with him, and all the time the Universal's camera clicked away, taking the scene that was later to be a part in the first of the "Universal Boy" series. Then Matty joined Jimmy Ford, the mascot of the Giants, and played ball with him. Returning to town, he encountered Miss Annette Kellermann, the beautiful water queen; and this all in one day.

A few days later he visited Colonel Roosevelt at Oyster Bay; Barney Oldfield, the auto speed king; Lincoln Beachey, the brilliant aviator; Oscar Hammerstein, famous opera impresario, and others.

Matty is a well-managed son of William and May Roubert. This was the first thing we found out the other day when we visited Matty at the New York Imp studio, for Matty's parents are usually in the neighborhood when he is working for the screen. Matty had a few moments to spare and so came and lanted himself beside the writer, who was tingling the keys of a borrowed typewriter. Matty watched the manipulation with wide open eyes for a few moments and then demanded that he be given a trial at it. That's Matty—he has his eyes in every direction, always ready and aiting to learn something new—to have some new experience.

Another thing higly evident in the make-up of this young man of seven is an inordinate love of work—work of the kind that appeals to him. Every morning, so he assured us, he is up bright and early to take his usual exercises, talking with his parents the while about his day's work, which is always laid out for him the day previous. He is wonderfully active for a boy of forty-five pounds, and, what with his dark Buster Brown hair, snapping hazel eyes and round, rosy face, he will attract favorable attention wherever he happens to be. We watched him acting before the camera. While at this he is never precocious; he listens to instructions, never talks back, and while he is usually allowed to carry out his own ideas in matters of acting, he follows Matty's greatest ambition is to be a director of motion picture comedies when he grows up. He has traveled a great deal and has seen much, and he should know. When he was two years old he traveled over Europe. Later, he toured America and lived in many of the big cities. He first appeared in pictures with the Vitagraph with Mary Fuller in the first three-reel photoplay ever produced in this country. He also layed in Biograph productions and with several other companies, but the Universal will always be his home, he declares.

Matty meets Secretary of War Garrison and other notables.

New Feature Exchange in Boston.

The Phoenix Feature Film Corporation has recently entered the field of Boston, Mass., and is prepared to give excellent service to New England exhibitors from its offices at 164 Federal Street. The Phoenix Exchange will buy three and four reel features of reputable make on the territorial rights plan. The concern was incorporated in May, 1914, by F. J. Peters and E. P. Osborne.

In Front of White House.

Matty Meets Columbia Crew.

East Side Boys' Police Parade.

ILENE HUME.

DESPITE her age, Ilene Hume has the reputation of being one of the first of the photoplay girls to be a genuine picture stock actress. It was over three years ago when regular picture "stocks" were few and far between and what there were hadn't so many members at that. Ilene Hume, then hardly fifteen, was the stock ingenue with Irving Cummings and a mighty tiny company at the Champion Studio in Coytesville, N. J. Champion, it will be remembered, was one of the small group of Independent producers releasing through the then active Motion Picture Sales Company. Miss Hume later went with Eclair, switched to feature work and made a lasting hit in "Smashing the Vice Trust," shared vaudeville starring honors with Jessie Bushley in the latter's well-known shop girl sketch, and is now back at picture work with Kalem in Director Lawrence's Eastern Company. Her friends in the profession and admirers everywhere are expecting this little lady to rise to eminence shortly owing to her increased advantages where she now is.

Ilene Hume.

AMERICAN TO MANAGE AMBROSIO STUDIO.

F. J. Goldsoll, an American, residing in Paris, who has several theaters in Europe, formerly associated with A. H. Woods of New York, as well as with Cines of Rome, and to whom credit is accorded for a great part of the rapid rise of this film concern during the last two years, has just been appointed commercial director general of the Societa Anonima Umbrosio, of Turin, Italy. Mr. Goldsoll has immediately begun to install American push into the business by engaging numerous high salaried people in all departments.

QUIMBY PURCHASES THEATER.

The Jefferson Theater, at Ft. Wayne, Ind., which has a seating capacity of 1,250, has been taken over by the Quimby Amusement Company of Zanesville, Ohio. W. C. Dodds, formerly manager of the Quimby Theater at Zanesville, has been placed in charge of the new acquisition. A big pipe organ is being installed at a cost of $5,500. The house will be redecorated and remodeled. A ten-cent admission is charged.

"Our Mutual Girl" (Norma Phillips) visits Lieut. John C. Porte and Glenn H. Curtiss at Hammondsport. The picture shows the hull and engines of Porte's Trans-Atlantic Flyer.

N. A. M. SHOWING INTERESTING PICTURES.

Export American Industries, the official international organ of the National Association of Manufacturers, in its 132-page issue for July, contains two interesting and finely illustrated articles on motion pictures. Harold Burnett Gregory writes under the title of "The Motion Picture Mill," an informing story bristling with statistics. Arthur J. Lang of the Nicholas Power forces, in "Behind the Scenes of Motion Pictures," writes for the layman on the "mechanics" of the industry. He traces the history of projection from the beginning, describing the crude methods and machines of the early days and the watch-built devices of the present time.

WILLIAM H. RUDOLPH OFF ON TRIP.

William H. Rudolph, vice-president and general manager of Sawyer, Inc., left New York on Tuesday for an eight-day trip, traveling as far west as Denver. Mr. Rudolph promises that on his return he will announce the addresses of fifteen of the twenty-six exchanges which Sawyer, Inc., intends opening.

$40,000 PICTURE HOUSE FOR ST. LOUIS.

The Mound City Photoplay Company, of St. Louis, Mo., a newly organized $120,000 corporation, of which A. D. Stevens is president and manager, is to build a $40,000 moving picture theater at 117 North Sixth street, that city. The new house is scheduled to be open on October 15. The new structure will have a seating capacity of 800 persons. The dimensions of the new house are to be 28 by 140 feet, and its location is in the heart of the city.

THANHOUSER GROUNDS A PUBLIC PARK.

"Thanhouser Park," surrounding the Thanhouser studio, was dedicated by the residents of New Rochelle Tuesday, July 7. So proud are the New Rochelle people of their city's star industry that they turned out with bands of music to honor the man who is keeping the name of New Rochelle before the world, J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Company.

POCAHONTAS, IA., TO HAVE PICTURE HOUSE.

Messrs O'Donnell and Thornton, of Pocahontas, Iowa, have purchased a one-story brick building which they are to remodel into a first-class moving picture theater. The dimensions of the structure are 25 by 80 feet. During the summer season Messrs. O'Donnell and Thornton operate an airdome at Pocahontas.

NEW CLEVELAND HOUSE.

A moving picture theater, 127 by 164 feet, is announced to be erected at the corner of E. 103d street and Superior Avenue, N. E., Cleveland, Ohio. When completed the Doan Square Realty Company will purchase the house. It is to be built of brick, steel and concrete. The contract calls for a two-story house.

BURSTING GAS TANK ENDANGERS MADAME BLACHE.

While staging a complicated water scene recently for a new Blache photodrama entitled "The Mysterious Bride," Madame Alice Blache narrowly escaped serious injury when a large glass tank gave way under the pressure of the water and scattered broken glass in every direction.

Romaine Fielding Directing His Company at Colorado Springs, Col.

PATHE STOCK CO. TO BE DISBANDED.

So many capable directors have availed themselves of the opportunity of making pictures for Pathe under the new contract afforded by that concern that it is now unnecessary for them to make any films themselves except the "Perils of Pauline." That series Pathe has contracted to deliver to the Eclectic Feature Film Company, and as it seems to be growing in popularity as the story advances no one but the Eclectic Company can tell when this big serial will be finished.

As the new directors for Pathe and the old directors working under new contracts, of course, want to engage their own people, it has been found unnecessary to keep the Pathe stock company other than those engaged in the "Perils of Pauline." This condition will result in the releasing of a number of very clever actors and actresses.

The Pathe studio in Jersey City will be utilized by the Pathe Company only for the making of the "Perils of Pauline." At all other times it will be at the service of the directors working under contract with Pathe. When the "Perils of Pauline" have been completed in their entirety the Pathe studio will be utilized entirely by the contracting directors.

Henceforth the Pathe company will act in the capacity of a film publishing concern. This means that they will put out the subjects made by their contracting directors in the same manner that a book publishing house handles the books written by its authors under contract.

"HAVE TRIED MANY, BUT——"

Terrell, Texas, July 11, 1914.

Moving Picture World, New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Herewith attached you will please find our check No. 611 to cover another year's subscription to your valuable paper. We could not properly conduct our business without the valuable assistance gained from your great journal. I do not see how any exhibitor can afford to be without it. We have tried many, but none can replace the M. P. W. Wishing you every success, we are,

Yours truly,

GWYNN & BYAR,
By M. H. Gwynn.

Charlotte Burton, of the American Film Mfg. Co., in a scene from "A Man's Way."

ROBERT W. FRAZER.

AMONG the party of Eclair players who recently arrived in Tucson, Arizona, where the Eclair Film Company, Inc., has erected a new studio, was Robert W. Frazer, or, as he is familiarly known to "movie" patrons, Bob Frazer. It is the intention of the company to feature this well-known photoplay artist in a series of realistic and "somewhat different" Western productions. Since reaching the Western studios Mr. Frazer has done some remarkable work in a two-reel Eclair released Wednesday, July 15, entitled, "The Renunciation." In helping to carry out the plan of original Western productions, Mr. Frazer will endeavor to get away entirely from the over-dressed hero cowboy and give his characterizations with a touch of the true artist.

This Eclair player needs no introduction to photoplay fans as he has been playing leads before the camera for the last three years. His motion picture career has been interrupted two or three times by calls from the legitimate stage, during which period he played the lead in "The Million" and more recently delighted the hearts of the matinee girls by his work with the Cecil Spooner Stock Company. He has returned to his old love, however, and from now on will be seen exclusively in Eclair Western productions. He is young, married, ambitious in his work and claims New York City as the place of his birth.

BURTON HOLMES TRAVELETTES TAKE WELL IN CHICAGO.

There is every reason to believe that the Burton Holmes Travelettes, which began a season of five weeks at the Studebaker Theater in Chicago, Monday, July 6, following a long run of "The Spoilers," have come to stay. Owing to exceptionally hot weather they did not open to big business, but before the end of the week the Studebaker was selling to capacity every afternoon.

Jones, Linick & Schaeffer have taken an option on the next five subjects to be released in October. Mr. Holmes has forty subjects available for this purpose and creates five new ones every year.

NEW HOUSE FOR MILWAUKEE.

Dr. Oscar Strauss is having a picture and vaudeville house erected at Third and Center streets, Milwaukee, Wis., with a seating capacity of 850. The plans call for trimmings of terra cotta for the front which will be finished in marble, and for ornamental windows and a stained glass marquise over the entrance. Space will also be provided for a rest room.

THEATER OPENED IN AURORA, ILL.

The new Orpheum theater, Water and Main streets Aurora, Ill., has been opened. Harry Hargrave is the proprietor and manager. The front is well lighted by powerful lamps with an aggregate candle power of 12,000. A musical outfit has been installed at a cost of $10,000. The house is nicely furnished and appointed.

REMODEL AUDITORIUM INTO PICTURE THEATER.

The Auditorium theater, Galesburg, Ill., has been remodeled into a first-class moving picture house by the Baker-Dodge Amusement Company. The management has installed a new Power's machine. The pictures are projected on a screen 19½ by 15 feet. Prices of admission are ten cents for the lower floor and five cents in the balconies. Children are admitted for five cents.

LYDA BORELLI IN "SATAN'S RHAPSODY" (Kleine).

"Satan's Rhapsody" is the unique title of a new, splendid and costly film soon to be released by George Kleine. The story features the famous actress, Lyda Borelli, whose sensational work in "The Naked Truth," playing at the Candler theater, New York, proved a revelation to picture fans. The story of "Satan's Rhapsody" centers about a barter made with Satan to restore youth and beauty to an old woman. From title to tailpiece the allegorical scenes of the film are absorbingly interesting and magnificently staged. Special music has been written by the celebrated Italian composer, Pietro Mascagni.

Lyda Borelli.

THE ACTOR STILL LIVES, BUT——

James Keane, president, general manager and director-in-chief of the United Keanograph Film Company, recently took out his company to put on a scene near the First National Bank of San Anselmo, Cal. E. Alyn Warren, an actor depicting a rabid anarchist of the violent type, was told to peer through the glass doors outside of the office of the cashier of the bank, and, by a few manipulations of his Captain Kidd eyebrows, scare that official out of his habitual self-possession. It was intended as a joke, but it had an unforseen comeback. A few weeks prior a cracksman in all seriousness had robbed the bank of several thousand dollars, and the cashier and his clerks, apprehensive of a return trip, had practiced gunplay and become so proficient that they could hit a tree if it stood still. Consequently there were firearms behind the counters when Warren came a-scaring. Warren supplemented his instructions by climbing in through a back window, shoving a heavy-calibre pistol before him. Two shotguns and a revolver with three itching trigger-fingers were about to make a dead actor out of the live Warren, when Keane, running in, yelled: "Don't shoot—he's only an actor," and saved funeral expenses.

PHILLIP DWYER WITH EDISON.

Phillip Dwyer, well known on the legitimate stage for his portrayal of various animals, is now appearing in the role of the dog "Tige" for Edison in the "Buster Brown" series.

Mr. Dwyer has appeared at the New York Hippodrome as the "Lion" in "The Society Circus" and the "Yankee Circus on Mars." He has played "Tige" in the original "Buster Brown" production and is without a doubt the world's greatest impersonator of dogdom.

Motion Pictures as an Aid to Art

By Penrhyn Stanlaws.

THE bringing of a million persons directly into one's studio and permitting them to watch one at work on a canvas, comes as a somewhat startling thing when one considers its possibilities. And then when this million persons is joined by other millions, an artist may feel almost as though the whole world were looking on.

As a means of spreading the desire and cultivating a taste for art, the motion picture has possibilities beyond all other human inventions. One draws, let us say, a cover design for a great magazine. The circulation may be tremendous in a magazine way, but it is almost slight when the motion picture is contrasted with it. The motion picture makes it possible to show to the many, the processes through which the artist goes in arriving at the finished product. This tends to arouse a sympathetic interest in art and in artists. If they be skilful and their work meritorious, so, in proportion, will the sympathetic interest be increased.

It has now become trite to say that motion pictures are in their infancy but my own experience in drawing Miss Norma Phillips (Our Mutual Girl) before the lens of a motion picture camera gave me the suggestion that the motion picture art is limited only by the imagination of those who follow it. Thus its possibilities are certainly greater than can be definitely prophesied.

I confess that, when I was drawing, I had no thought that millions of persons were looking in at my studio door; otherwise I might have been the victim of some slight embarrassment. I proceeded naturally with my work though, of course, somewhat faster than is usual with me. I regard the experience and the result with considerable pleasure.

JAMES O'NEILL.

James O'Neill, of Solax and Blache features, will be recalled for his successes on the legitimate stage in such attractions as "An American Gentleman" with Rose Stahl and Helen Ware, "Up York State," with David Higgins, and "The Men of Jimtown," with Howell Hansell. He scored his greatest stage success, however, in "The Burglar," by

James O'Neill.

Augustus Thomas, in which he starred for ten years. As a motion picture star he received immediate recognition and has been appearing in Solax and Blache photodramas for the past two years.

Mr. O'Neill graduated from the University of Pennsylvania as a dentist where he was a fellow student of Fred Mace.

Among The Picture Theaters

SCOLLAY SQUARE OLYMPIA, BOSTON, MASS.

THE Scollay Square Olympia, Boston, Mass., is probably the most representative moving picture and vaudeville house in New England to-day. It was opened last November, and involved a big outlay. The plans were by Clarence H. Blackwell. The theater is reached from Scollay Square by a broad vestibule, approached through a high archway of Indiana limestone, thickly studded with lights. Above the entrance arch, which extends two stories, the building is carried in limestone to the top, and is crowned by a large clock with illuminated hands and dial, above which is an electrical display of announcements, supported by three tall poles. The other vestibule is crowned by a round vault, decorated with interesting paintings by Emil Pollak-Ottendorf, the talented Viennese artist. On one side is an allegorical figure representing "Romance," a beautifully draped figure swinging in a bower of roses, against a strong background, shaded from warm orange at the bottom up to a pale green at the top. On the other side is another allegorical figure representing "Dance," silhouetted against a background which picks up the pale green shades of the top of the other side, and strengthens down to a deep, warm purple. Each figure is bathed in moonlight, and the contrast of the cool tone of the figures, with the change in the background is a very striking and novel one.

In the center of the outer vestibule is an ornamental ticket booth, and beyond this, on the left, is the entrance to the moving stairway, from the ground floor to the gallery lobby. The inner vestibule has a handsome dado on each side of antique Breccia marble, and a ceramic floor. Toward the rear, the balcony stairs are taken off at one side, and the gallery stairs at the other, both leading by easy ascent to the various parts of the house. The auditorium is finished in mahogany and marble and the seating is ample in dimensions and arrangement. There are large boxes on each side of the proscenium arch at the different levels. The decoration of the Olympia was directed by Mr. Blackall, and is a very carefully studied adaptation of the Florentine Renaissance motifs. The box draperies are of deep, rich blue silk velour, heavily embroidered in gold. The same color is carried around on the top of the box, and balcony, and gallery railings. The main tones on the finish about the boxes are in shades of gray and gold. The stage is fully equipped. The space under the auditorium is used for smoking room, lavatories, ushers' rooms, and for ventilating chambers and dressing rooms. Under the entrance lobby, there is a large tea and cloak room. Dean W. C. Sabine, of Harvard, an expert on acoustics, was adviser in this field. No less important is the heating and ventilation. An artesian well was sunk nearly 600 feet, to obtain a source of pure, cold water. Fresh air is passed through a chamber, where it is washed, and where in summertime the air is cooled to a temperature from 10 to 20 degrees below the outside temperature. The ingress and exit is through Tremont Row, but for emergency, exit courts have been left on the sides of the auditorium. Provisions against fire are most complete. The theater is entirely of fireproof construction. All the windows are of metal, with metal sash glazed with wire glass.

Scollay Square Olympia, Boston, Mass.

The lease of the house is in the hands of the Scollay Square Olympia Company, a Massachusetts corporation consisting of N. H. Gordon, Max Shoolman, A. E. Lord, Frank J. Howard and Ernest H. Horstmann.

ISTRIONE THEATER, JACKSON, MISS.

THE Istrione Theater, under the management of H. A. Carleton, was opened on June 15. It was built by the Istrione Theater Circuit, which has in contemplation the construction of other photoplay houses in different cities in Mississippi. This is one of the most magnificent photoplay houses in the state, and also one of the largest. It has a seating capacity of 750 in addition to mezzanine boxes and a smoker's balcony. The interior decorative effects are very artistic, and the color scheme of green and brown is pleasing to the eye.

An up-to-the-minute heating and ventilating system is employed, and all air entering the theater, whether hot or cold, is absolutely pure. It is filtered outside the building, being passed through filtered water, so the air within the building is constantly changed. Each seat has a cooling box which is provided with a shutter, and the party in the seat can regulate the amount of cool or warm air passing through by pushing the shutter wide open, half open, or closed.

Istrione Theater, Jackson, Mich.

The musical equipment of the Istrione consist of a pipe organ, a Knabe concert grand piano, and a Seeburg "motion picture player."

The projection room is of solid brick, heavily lined with asbestos, all wires heavily insulated, and is equipped with two of the latest model Simplex projectors. This part of the theater is in charge of Clarence Cage and J. C. Landen, Jr.

The Istrione Theater Circuit, with headquarters in Jackson, Miss., is incorporated, the incorporators being H. A. Carleton, J. C. Landen and Z. Carleton. H. A. Carleton is also manager of the Dixie theater.

NORDLAND-PLAZA, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

THE Nordland-Plaza theater, now just nearing its first anniversary, is one of the handsomest and most consistently and continuously prosperous photoplay houses in Cincinnati, Ohio, largely by reason of the policy which has been pursued by the management of running only high-class pictures, and otherwise maintaining a tone which has proved attractive to a first-class clientele. The building was completed in July, 1913, succeeding a smaller house operated by the same interests on the same site, under the name of the Nordland.

It has a seating capacity of a little over 1,100, although this does not give an adequate idea of the size and roominess of the house, as economy in space was the last consideration, and comfort the first. The aisles are wide, and the seats so spaced as to give ample room for each person in the audience—another thing which has undoubtedly gone far toward making the house successful. The dimensions of the building, 60 by 198 feet, show a little more clearly its size; and the fact that it cost $75,000, exclusive of the value of the ground, which is worth another $25,000, indicates that no expense was spared in making the house all that it should be to meet the approval of the discriminating.

It is as nearly fireproof as it is possible to make a theater, in which a certain amount of wooden and fabric furnishings must be used. The floors, partition walls, stairs and foundation supports are all of concrete, the remainder of the structure being of fireproof hollow tile and brick. The operating room, which is situated on a roomy balcony, is entirely of steel, save for a concrete floor, with two ventilators piercing the roof. Three machines are used.

Nordland Plaza, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An unusually deep and well-equipped stage is a feature, as the management originally intended to run vaudeville. W. E. Brown, who has been the head of the house since the establishment of the little Nordland, four or five years ago, and is now president of the Nordland Amusement Company, the corporation which owns the property, soon decided, however, that it was a mistake to attempt to mix high-class pictures with vaudeville, and cut out the latter item entirely. The stage is about 30 feet wide and 23 feet deep, with 90-foot flies, and downstairs dressing rooms and toilets are provided.

Mr. Brown is especially proud of his ventilating system, which is operated by electric power generated in his own plant. A 40-horsepower engine, run by gas, furnishes current for this purpose, as well as for lights inside the building and on the street in front, for the projecting machines and for the motor by which the big Wurlitzer orchestrion is operated. In addition to the fan system, which draws out the foul air and supplies the fresh, a unique feature is a series of openings in the roof, six by eight feet, covered in winter and rainy weather by sliding doors which can be removed or closed in five minutes. The use of these openings in warm weather, in connection with the fan system, makes the house cooler and pleasanter than outdoors.

The interior of the house is furnished in rough plaster, panels in gray, increasing in size as the floor slopes toward the stage, and surrounded by a white finish, giving a quietly artistic effect. The same is true of the front, which is in white enameled brick, trimmed with stone. The $10,000 Wurlitzer instrument which furnishes the music has a vox humana attachment. It is cleverly operated by Miss Johanna Gross. John King is the chief operator. The other members of the force, including the superintendent and a neatly-uniformed corps of ushers, number about ten.

PALACE THEATER, NEW YORK CITY.

THE accompanying illustration is a view of the exterior of the Palace theater, 2404 Second avenue, New York. The structure is a new one and was completed in March of this year. It is one of the prettiest and well conducted exclusive picture houses on the upper East Side of New York City. The theater cost $14,000 to build, and is owned by I. Silverman and B. Marks.

The dimensions of the edifice are 60 by 100 feet, and the auditorium has a seating capacity of 600 persons. But a few seconds are necessary to empty the house through its seven large exits. The operating room is of concrete and is 10 by 17 feet in size. Two motor driven Power's 6a machines are used. The musical accompaniment is rendered by a symphony orchestra.

Palace Theater, New York City.

One of the many features of the Palace theater is its removable roof, making it an airdome in summer. This idea works out splendidly in the warm nights and the owners are very well pleased with their new house. Messrs. Silverman and Marks are experienced picture men, having owned the Nicoland at 768 Westchester avenue and the Gem at 368 E. 149th street, both of New York City.

TWENTY-NINTH ST. THEATER, KANSAS CITY, MO.

THE accompanying illustration is a view of the exterior of the Twenty-ninth Street theater at 2904 Brooklyn avenue, Kansas City, Mo. It is owned and managed by Edward Lefevre, a comparatively new entrant into the exhibition business. This house has a seating capacity of five hundred, and charges admission prices of five and ten cents. On each side of the stage is a box draped in velour One of these recesses is used by musicians. There is also an organ directly in front of the stage. The screen is surrounded by lattice work which in turn is festooned with rosettes. Greenery plays a prominent part in the interior decoration. Mr. Lefevre has abolished vaudeville from his programs, as he has found that good moving pictures are all which are needed to fill his house. He likewise has abandoned the country store scheme of soliciting business. "I believe we shall be better off by cutting out these things," says Mr. Lefevre.

Twenty-ninth Street Theater, Kansas City, Mo.

THE FAMILY THEATER, MONTREAL, CANADA.

THE Family Theater is owned by the Mark-Brock Amusement Co., of New York, and is ideally located on Notre Dame Street West. This handsome theater seats 1,950 persons and is under the management of Maurice West.

The exterior is of brown sandstone with terra cotta trimmings. The floor in the lobby is of white tile, the wooden furnishings being of mahogany. The color scheme of the interior is old rose embellished with graceful tracings in gold. Beautiful bronze candelabra are to be seen on the walls, set apart at equal distances. The boxes can seat fifty, and give an unobstructed view of the stage, which is thirty-five feet wide and twenty-five feet deep. Women's retiring rooms, men's smoking rooms, and the manager's office are all on the mezzanine. The gallery is very large and is capable of seating a thousand persons. It is supported by the cantilever plan. The projection room is absolutely fireproof. Two Simplex machines are used. A six-piece orchestra is employed.

Family Theater, Montreal.

The Family's policy is two shows a day. Five and ten cents is the price at matinees, and ten, twenty, twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five cents is charged in the evening.

THE REGENT THEATER, MASON CITY, IOWA.

THE Peoples Amusement Company, Inc., a corporation of Mason City, Iowa, of which P. E. Johannsen is president and general manager, opened on March 23 its big palatial moving picture theater at 208-210 South Main street, that city. The cost of construction was in excess of $60,000, and the dimensions of the structure are 45 feet by 186 feet. The Regent is situated in the principal section of the city, and is built of iron, steel and concrete, making the place absolutely fireproof. The entire front of the Regent, as well as the ticket office, is faced with white enameled terra cotta. The lobby has a mosaic tile floor with marble wainscoting.

The auditorium proper is reached through three large double mahogany doors, trimmed with brass, and the interior decorations are in various hues of Venetian blue. The seats are roomy and are upholstered in leather. The stage is a large one, and the screen is at least twenty-five feet from the first row of seats. The auditorium has seating accommodation for nine hundred persons. Music is rendered by a $10,000 Photoplayer, which is always appreciated by the patrons of the Regent. An entertainment consists of four reels, and the shows are changed daily.

The picture booth is separate from the theater proper, and is 8 by 44 and 10 feet high. As the Peoples Amusement Company, Inc., in giving the information about the theater did not mention where the operating booth is situated, we perceive from the accompanying illustration of the front of the Regent, that inasmuch as there is nothing there to indicate an operating room, it presumably is situated directly outside of the back of the theater, where it is most likely to find that important part of the picture house when it is not built in the inside. There are two machines, a Simplex and a Powers 6a, both of which are motor driven, a spotlight and a double dissolving stereopticon. Both the alternating and the direct current are used.

Regent Theater, Mason City, Ia.

Mr. Johannsen for the past three years prior to the opening of the Regent theater, had been the proprietor and manager of the Orpheum theater in Mason City.

UNIQUE STAGE SETTING.

MANAGER SCHROEDER of the Majestic Theater, 1777 West Twenty-fifth street, Cleveland, has beautified the stage of his house, as shown in the illustration. It is a unique and effective decoration and has elicited much favorable comment from patrons of the theater. Mr. Schroeder didn't find it necessary to take off the roof or tear out the walls, or even to remove the stage. He inaugurated his big week with Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery" and this unique decorative scheme. He arranged a special stage setting, the screen removed to one side so that the orchestra could be accommodated on one side. A grassy lawn-like effect was secured by laying a green drop from the stage to the auditorium incline (not shown in the photograph). Lights of varied hues were thrown on during the intermissions and Japanese lanterns hung throughout the theater.

Stage of Majestic Theater, Cleveland, Showing Unique Decoration.

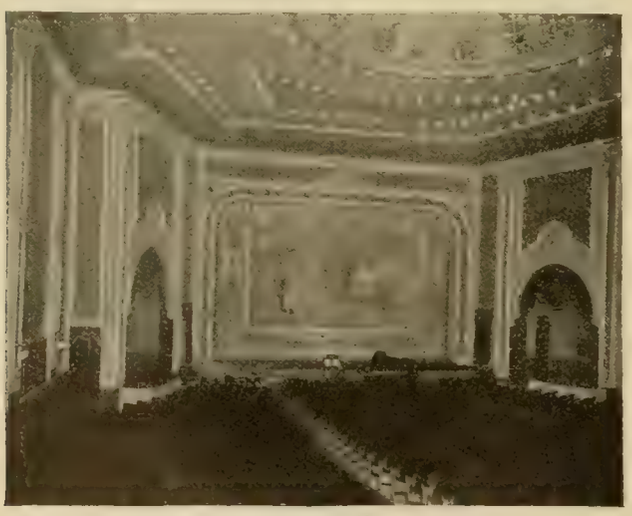
ALLENDALE THEATER, BUFFALO, N. Y.

ONE of Buffalo's finest moving picture theaters is the Allendale on Allen street, near Elmwood avenue. The house was opened September 23, 1913, and the estimated cost is $120,000. The Allendale is now being conducted by the Allendale Amusement Co. This concern recently leased the house from L. Michaels, who built it and for some time was the proprietor.

The house seats 1,100 and is effectively lighted and ventilated. The seats are upholstered and comfortable, with plenty of knee and elbow room. There is an indirect lighting system. In the centre of the ceiling is a large dome, which is artistically decorated. There is a suction fan in the dome.

Allendale Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Allendale is of brick and substantial in construction. The architectural effects are pleasing to the eye. The decorations are in old rose. There is an eight-foot exit court and plenty of entrances, so the house can be emptied quickly. The boxes are roomy and comfortable. The stage is 30 by 35 feet, and is large enough to accommodate vaudeville or dramatic performances. The screen has a setting of red velour. The front of the stage is beautified with trailing vines, ferns and natural flowers.



Interior of Allendale Theater, Buffalo.

There is a complete sprinkling system and hose for use in case of fire. The operating room is in the rear of the balcony and is equipped with two Powers 6a machines and one dissolver.

There are well-kept toilet rooms and a private office for the manager. There is an eight-piece orchestra which makes it a point to supply music which fits the pictures. Special concerts are also given. The Allendale front is brilliant with scores of electric lights and there is an electric flashing sign.

During the hot weather there is a cool palm garden, to which patrons may pass from the theater. Cosy seats are provided. This feature is proving very popular. W. G. Kaliska is manager of the theater. He was formerly assistant to Harold Edel, manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, a Mark-Brock house. Among his plans to please his patrons is to flash news bulletins on the screen. He has arranged with the Buffalo Courier to telephone him this live matter as soon as it is received off the wire. The service is crisp and timely and much appreciated. During the week the matinees are from 2 to 5 p. m., and the evening performances from 7 to 11 p. m. The Sunday shows run continuously from 2 to 11 p. m. The general admission is 10 cents and the boxes are 25 cents.

Mr. Kaliska recently had Miss Helen Todd address an Allendale audience. She is a prominent suffragette of California. Her lines were bright, and the feature, which was unheralded, was a pleasant surprise. Mr. Kaliska has a live mailing list and sends out plenty of advertising matter. He followed this plan recently to attract Buffalo school teachers, pupils and others interested in education to "Evangeline," in moving pictures, at the Allendale. There was a hearty response and capacity business resulted. He also advertises extensively in the Buffalo newspapers.

PORTOLA THEATER, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE Portola theatre, 779 Market street, San Francisco, Cal., enjoys the distinction of being one of the largest houses in that city devoted exclusively to motion pictures, and has the added distinction of being located in the very heart of the downtown section, near Fourth street. While the entrance to this popular house is on Market street, the theater proper is on Stevenson street and is reached through an unusually long tiled lobby. This arrangement is most advantageous as the noises of Market street are entirely eliminated. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,100. A perfect heating and ventilating system forms an important part of the equipment. The house is carpeted throughout with a Wilton floor covering of the highest grade in a soft toned brown, and this is kept clean by means of a vacuum cleaning system.

Portola Theater, San Francisco, Cal.

The management caters especially to women and children. Spacious and perfectly appointed reception rooms for women are to be found off the main lobby, and a colored maid is constantly in attendance. The projection is a matter of much comment, the distance from the operating room to the screen being one hundred and forty-two feet. In the booth are installed two of the newest type Motiograph machines. Much of the success of this house is doubtless due to the fact that first-run pictures only are shown, and that great care is exercised in the selection of subjects.

The Portola theater was erected shortly after the rehabilitation of the downtown district, following the great fire of 1906, and for some time was conducted as a combined vaudeville and moving picture house. The vaudeville features were eliminated two years ago and the house has been operated as a moving picture theater since then. It is conducted by the Popular Amusement Company under the efficient management of Eugene H. Roth, assisted by Harry David.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"IL TROVATORE" (Centaur).

The scenario of this production of Il Trovatore is founded upon the original antique drama, Leonora of Savilla, by Gatteres, and upon the famous Verdi opera, the libretto of which was written by Commanaro, who also closely followed the Gatteres drama. It was written by Charles Simone, under whose direction the picture is being made.

Striking effects and an accurate and concentrated unfolding of the plot have been obtained from skillfully planned artificial sets rather than from remote "natural" scenes, and buildings "in the exact locale of the story," as they say in film advertisements.

Scene from "Il Trovatore" (Centaur).

With the specially constructed sets, all of these matters are taken into account and the plot is unfolded with celerity and clear simplicity. The scenic work has been in charge of J. E. Pinto, the Italian scenic artist and sculptor, whose productions at the Scala, Milan, and San Carlos, Naples, and later for certain Italian film concerns have made him renowned. Fully four months' time was devoted to the planning and construction of the ponderous and elaborate sets. In some of these scenes, notably the Battle of Pelilla, as many as six hundred people and one hundred and eighty horses were used.

The cast of Il Trovatore contains the names of many well-known artists, several of whom have starred or played leading parts on the legitimate stage; Jean Thrall, Agnes Mapes, Morgia Litton, Georgette Leland, Julia Hurley, Carolyn French, Lorma Russell, Grace Renard, Charles Tricoli, Frank Holland, Fred Loomis, George Bancroft, M. E. Hannafy and others.

The production is in six reels, and it is expected to be ready for release on August first.

ECLAIR PLAYERS PERFORM AT FRONTIER CELEBRATION.

A company of Eclair players left the Western studio at Tucson, Arizona, on Friday, July 3rd, for Prescott, Arizona, to attend what is known as "Frontier Day Celebration," which is held each year during July. This is one of the biggest events of its kind in the West and annually draws thousands of people from all parts of California, Arizona and Texas. Among the Eclair players who journeyed to Prescott were Mildred Bright, Edna Payne, Joe Ryan, Norbert A. Myles and Hal Wilson, and it is the intention of the Eclair players to take a complete motion picture of the doings during Frontier Day Celebration. Joe Ryan will enter the bucking and roping contest. In the eighty-mile automobile race, for which a prize of $1,000 is offered, Miss Edna Payne, a leading Eclair player, will ride with one of the contestants. The novelty of this announcement has attracted many motion picture patrons who will watch with interest while Miss Payne risks her life in a mad dash around the eighty-mile course.

"WHO SEEKS REVENGE" (Lubin).

This is a most thrilling and dramatic story of the frontier picturing the hazard of western life before the Indians succumbed to enforced civilization. A post is attacked by the redskins and two women who have just given birth to babes are killed in the raid, a worthless soldier, who has a grudge against the Colonel of the regiment revenges himself by transposing the two babes and the Colonel brings up the boy, and the soldier offers to adopt the girl who is really the Colonel's daughter. Twenty years elapse and by chance the boy and the girl meet, fall in love and marry. During the action of the latter part of the play there is a big fire scene and the Colonel, who has retired from military life and become a manufacturer, is rescued by the boy he believes to be his son. In the end the secret of the changeling is discovered, but the marriage brings two children instead of one to cheer the Colonel's declining years. The Photo Play is directed by Colonel Joseph Smiley. For those who enjoy melodrama the picture will be appreciated.

"CIRCLE 17" (Rex).

"Circle 17" draws a vivid picture of a famous Italian secret organization—tells a gripping human-interest story of love and adventure and intrigue. It was staged and directed by Otis Turner at the Universal's Pacific Coast studios. It was written by Phil Walsh, who has written many Universal successes, and it has been interpreted by a splendid cast of players, headed by Mr. Rawlinson and Anna Little and William Worthington.

Professor Bartoli has incurred the enmity of the society.

Scene from "Circle 17" (Rex).

With his daughter he flees to America. As they start to board the steamer, an agent of the society attacks Bartoli and would stab him, but for the timely interference of Captain Rawfon, U. S. A. That is the beginning of a series of incidents strange, enthralling and interest sustaining. It is young Captain Rawdon who, in America, interferes in the plan of the black-handers and saves, at the risk of his own life in a terrific fight in a river boathouse, Bartoli's daughter from an awful death. This is a two reel drama and will be released July 30.

KLEINE-CINES BIG WILD ANIMAL SUBJECT.

From the jungles of central Africa comes news that the Cines Company stationed there has just completed a big wild animal subject using the jungle animals instead of trained beasts. This company sailed for Africa last February with Anthony Novelli and other Cines "leads," in charge of Professor Fausto Salvatori.

"THREE MEN AND A WOMAN" (Lubin).

In a Lubin photoplay entitled "Three Men and a Woman" a yacht was needed and George Terwilliger, the director, purchased the well known Herreshoff model called "The Cossette." It is supposed to take fire and the seamen desert in a panic leaving Kempton Greene, Earl Metcalfe and Anna Luther on board. Greene (in the play) shows the yellow streak and jumps for the boat being lowered by the crew. He misses the boat and struggles in the water hanging on to a piece of wreckage. While the boat load of sailors pulls away, Metcalf throws the yacht raft overboard and with Miss Luther, who is unconscious, jumps into the sea. Green fights for the raft but Metcalfe beats him off and saves the girl. Greene is drowned (according to the play) and the yacht burns until a boiler explosion takes it to the bottom. "Some" expensive stunt and pretty tough on Kempton Greene; however, he worked as usual next day.

Scene from "Three Men and a Woman" (Lubin)

UNIVERSAL WEEKLY STAFF—IN NEW YORK.

Herewith is a photograph of Mr. Cohn and his camera men working in and around the East. Reading from left to right they are: Eugene Cugnet, camera man; John Cohn, editor; W. R. Goodwyn, who has just returned from Mexico after six months' service with Carranza; U. K. Whipple, head camera man; Joseph Rucker, who has just returned from Vera Cruz after passage down there on a United States battleship and witnessing and securing pictures of the first encounter with the Mexicans; Edmund Starring, for many years connected with European weeklies and now a star Animated Weekly camera man.

Universal Weekly Camera Squad in New York.

BUILDING PICTURE THEATER IN DALLAS, TEXAS.

A two-story picture theater is being built on the site of the old Garden theater on Elm street, Dallas, Tex., which will be known as the Garden. The cost of the new house is estimated at $20,000, and is announced to open on Labor Day. The structure will be fireproof throughout and sufficient exits will be provided for. The house is owned and controlled by the Garden Theater Company, composed of R. J. Stennet, W. J. Brown and other Dallas business men.

MISS LA BADIE JUMPS FROM SHIP'S DECK.

Florence La Badie, heroine of "The Million Dollar Mystery," has added a new deed of daring to her already long list. Miss La Badie leaped into the water last week from the deck of the George Washington, as that big ship steamed past Sandy Hook. Passengers on the deck of the liner were appraised of the girl's intention, and cheers followed her as she threw herself into the waters below. A camera on a tugboat caught Miss La Badie's leap and her struggles in the water. Strong swimmer as the young woman is, the waves caused by the movement of the big liner tossed her about. Director Howell Hansel, megaphone in hand, stood on the tugboat shouting encouragement to Miss La Badie. Towering above her the great hulk seemed to spell destruction to anyone caught within its suction. Miss La Badie responded to the instructions of Director Hansel and plowed through the waves until the ship had left her far astern, giving full play to the camera. Then a rope was thrown to the actress and she was pulled aboard the tug.

"WHEN DEATH RODE THE ENGINE" (Eclair).

This is the Western Eclair release for Sunday, July 26th. The production is in one reel and the thousand feet are crammed with exciting incidents, sensational climaxes well calculated to bring any audience to its feet. There is a race between two giant locomotives, a fight in the cab, a death struggle under water and finally a most realistic lynching "bee," wherein the villain gets "his" and the sheriff does his duty. This Eclair Western film was shown during the Exposition at the Grand Central Palace and created comment.

Scene from "When Death Rode the Engine" (Eclair).

SOL LESSER IN NEW YORK.

With the purpose of buying features that look good Sol Lesser of the Golgate Film Company of San Francisco came into New York a few days ago. He is now conferring with the manufacturers of some of the famous productions for exhibition rights in the eleven Western states in which he has booking offices.

Mr. Lesser reports conditions on the coast as being a fierce fight in which the fittest will be the survivor. The coast exhibitors have developed keen appraising abiliities and with them the day of picture 10 per cent. and paper 90 per cent. is past. Mr. Lesser has carefully analyzed the situation and has the money-drawing potentialitiies of each feature that he buys figured down to the decimal.

The "boy impresario," as he has been called, will continue his policy of keeping a New York office, with George D. MacIntyre in charge, with instructions to buy only those features which will stand up on their merits with the thermometer at blood heat.

"The Black Triangle," first of the Webb Detective Series, was his first purchase.

SHIPMAN LEAVES PAN-AMERICAN.

Ernest Shipman has disposed of all his interests in the Pan-American Film Company and resigned as general manager of that firm. After a few weeks' vacation, Mr. Shipman will become active in connection with new plans to be announced later in these columns.

"THE LOVE VICTORIOUS" (Gold Seal).

This play is original and distinct in every way and the Universal are releasing it under the Gold Seal brand because of this—because its appeal is tremendous, because there is acting in the picture of the finest quality to be had.

Scene from "The Love Victorious" (Gold Seal).

"The Love Victorious" is an allegory of the fall of woman through the agency of Evil and his side partners, Vanity, Flattery, Lust and Vice, and her redemption through the instrumentality of the Christ Spirit as symbolized in the Good Man. The sordid and beautiful, all the attributes of Good and Evil, are personified and each plays his part in his figurative pageant of human life. Produced at the Universal's West Coast studios, the piece was directed by Wilfred Lucas. It is three reels and will be released July 28th.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 81.

It is not often that a cinematographer is lucky enough to be on the spot at the moment an unscheduled and serious accident occurs.

Such luck is the desideratum of all photographers and it is conceded, happens only once in a long life-time. But, this "once-in-a-life-time" event was given recently to a French representative camera man of the Mutual Weekly, when he secured pictures of the big aeroplane accident which caused the death of two daring birdmen, Messieurs Bourhis and Pelletier, at the aerodrome of Buc near Versailles, France, and which is shown on Mutual Weekly No. 81, released July 15th.

On the same number of the Mutual Weekly No. 81 is shown the result of the terrific bomb explosion, which wrecked a New York tenement house and caused the death of three anarchist plotters, who were presumably manufacturing the bomb for use on the Rockefeller estate in revenge for the Colorado mine-strike. The Mutual Weekly cameraman, as usual, was on the job early enough to secure pictures of the falling debris and shows the recovery of one of the mangled bodies by the firemen and police.

Every subject in this number of the Mutual Weekly is of surpassing interest and among the many may be mentioned the violent storm vhich recently caused much loss of life and property in Paris; two Frenchmen fight a real duel for the love of a pretty model, a steamship wreck, tangoing on the beach at Coney Island, and several others too numerous to mention.

"EVANGELINE" DOING BIG IN PHILADELPHIA.

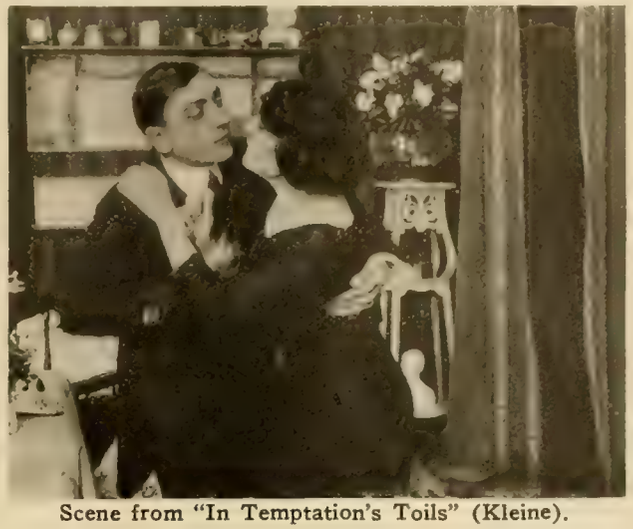
The Canadian Bioscope Company's 5 reel production of "Evangeline," which J. R. Starck is exhibiting at the Garrick Theater, Philadeplhia, is doing well in that city. Opening the Monday after July Fourth, business has climbed at each succeeding performance, the first week totalling well over $2,000, and the second week with a better start in the fore part and with the benefit of the excellent newspaper reviews, bids fair to exceed this figure by several hundrd dollars.

"Evangline" will doubtless be a strong favorite everywhere as the subject is well known to every school child in the country, the study of Longfellow's classic poem being a part of the regular school work in nearly every city of the United States. The Canadian Bioscope Company has produced a fine sample of the motion picture art and one which truthfully and adequately portrays Longfellow's beautiful love romance.

"IN TEMPTATION'S TOILS" (Kleine).

Miss Francesca Bertini, idol of the picture fans of two continents and leading player in the big opera picture, "Pierrot, the Prodigal," which recently completed a successful run at the new Candler theater, New York, is again presented to her American admirers in George Kleine's two-part feature subject, "In Temptation's Toils." In this admirably planned and splendidly produced photoplay she has a part unusually well suited to her extraordinary talents, a part in which she appears at her very best.

"In Temptation's Toils" tells a story of the keenest human interest. Spurned, the woman plans revenge, but love conquers, and with it comes her redemption.



Scene from "In Temptation's Toils" (Kleine).

Appearing with Miss Bertini in this latest Kleine release are several other players of international reputation, including Albert Collins and Emilio Ghione. Artistic studio settings and well-chosen out-door scenes, all magnificently photographed, add greatly to the beauty of the subject. "In Temptation's Toils" will be released through the General Film Company, and the release date is given as Tuesday, July 28.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" (World Film Corp.).

Like many of the famous plays which have been lately screened by the World Film Corporation, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will shortly be shown in a most realistic and dramatic film. Irving Cummings, the well-known motion picture actor, again distinguishes himself in the role of Harris, Mary Eline, the Thanhouser kid, as Eva. Sam Lucas, the well-known colored actor of seventy-two, is Uncle Tom. This production is one of the most elaborate yet attempted by the World Film Corporation. It is the outcome of many months of careful and patient work through many parts of the South and the ice-covered North. During the production when little Eva falls overboard and Uncle Tom goes to the rescue, it develops in spite of his age, Uncle Tom, like the moving picture artist, was game and made the leap, not thinking or remembering that he could not swim. Miss Eline, who is an expert in reality, saved his life. Uncle Tom, in turn, got the credit of saving her life in the film. It might be added that had it not been for Irving Willett, who is responsible for the wonderful photography of this production, both little Eva and Uncle Tom would have lost their lives.

"THE SEVENTH PRELUDE" (Essanay).

A new and particularly interesting mystery photoplay will be released by the Essanay Company on Friday, July 31. It is "The Seventh Prelude" by Lillian Bennet-Thompson, adapted from the Munsey magazines. This play is in two reels and there is not one dull moment in it from start to finish. The mystery begins with the opening scene and is not solved until the very last minute. The unusual feature of the play is that the spectator has not the least idea of the outcome, until the final scene. Richard C. Travers and Gerda Holmes play the leads and their work is declared to be artistic all the way through. Mr. Travers plays the part of a detective and Miss Holmes is the heroine, who is slowly being driven insane by hearing the mysterious strains of Chopin's "Seventh Prelude" at a certain hour every night. This classic was being played on the piano by her father the night he was struck down by an unknown assassin's bullet. The young detective solves the mystery and all ends happily.

THE HEIRLOOM (KLEINE).

A story of love, self-sacrifice and the making of a man is graphically told in George Kleine's two-part feature film, "The Heirloom," which was released through the General Film Company Tuesday, July 7. The plot concerns the adventures of Lord Hawley, a young nobleman, who, when he finds himself face to face with financial ruin, refuses the assistance of friends, sells even the unencumbered portion of his estate, and through his own efforts wins his way to happiness and fortune.

"The Heirloom" can be aptly described as a comedy-drama, a branch of the drama which has heretofore been somewhat neglected by motion picture makers. It combines tense dramatic situations with amusing comedy incidents in such a way as to heighten the value of both. The scenario abounds in opportunities for splendid acting and clever character portrayal, and none of these has been overlooked by the seasoned players who were selected to interpret the story.

NEW HOUSE FOR EARLVILLE, ILL.

Contract has been awarded F. M. Edgett for the erection of a picture theater 36 by 66 feet with a 16-foot ceiling in Earlville, Ill. The plans call for a fireproof house having concrete foundation and cement floor.

Notes of the Trade.

ROBERT LEONARD, well-known star and director of the Rex Company at the Hollywood studios, has just completed a charming society comedy entitled "The Wall Between." It is the romance of a college youth and the girl next door, who is petted and pampered by her parents and treated as a child. Robert Leonard plays the part of the college youth and Ella Hall that of the girl.

* * *

The Princess Ruspoli signed a contract with Pasquali & Co., of Italy, and takes the leading part in a startling war drama, "The Silent Bell," which is soon to be released in this country.

* * *

Otis Turner is producing a two-reel picture entitled "Kid Reagan's Hands," in which Herbert Rawlinson plays the name part, a young prize fighter. Anna Little plays a young widow.

* * *

Cleveland is to be added to the limited list of cities in which "Cabiria" is to be seen this summer.

* * *

Mr. Eduarde Sola has left the management of the well known Spanish film revue, "El Mundo Cinematografico," to take charge of the management of the branch office of the Eclair Company, which is to be opened in Barcelona.

* * *

A wonderful feat of horsemanship is shown in "The Tavern of Tragedy," by Russell E. Smith, produced by Donald Crisp, at the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood studios. The heroine jumps out of a third story window on to the back of a horse.

* * *

Director Charles Giblin has well under way the second feature of the Francois Villon series. This is entitled "The Higher Law" and is of the spectacular period of French history during the reign of Louis XI. Murdock MacQuarrie plays the title role and is supported by such actors as Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney.

* * *

Beginning the sixth week at the fashionable Knickerbocker theater, "Cabiria," which has since June 1, the date of its American premiere, taken New York, Chicago, Atlantic City and Asbury Park by storm, has been one of the few "heat defiers" that has been drawing capacity audiences daily.

* * *

Robert Leonard, actor and director of Rex dramas, is just completing another of his far-famed "Boob" comedies. It is entitled "The Boob's Nemesis." Ella Hall plays the principal female role.

* * *

A forty-inch sand filter with a capacity of fifteen hundred gallons an hour has been installed in the laboratory at the Universal Pacific Coast studio. This is the largest filter to have yet been installed in a motion picture laboratory. The drying room at the Hollywood laboratory has also been enlarged and a new eleven-foot drying drum installed.

* * *

The fact of a man ceasing to belong to his own personality is the basis of the most recent Curtis (Joker) comedy. The principals in this comedy are Max Asher, Bob Vernon and Louise Fazenda.

* * *

Despite the fact that this is the very worst time of year for trying to sell anything, Arthur Rosenbach, sales manager of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, Inc., reports he is closing several very desirable deals on the Excelsior Film Company's picture, "The Toll of Mammon," in four parts, featuring Octavia Handworth.

* * *

Reaves Eason, after a day's successful hunting, attempted to slide down the face of a steep hill so as to make a short cut. He tripped and was thrown heavily to the ground, sustaining internal injuries. He is confined to his rooms in Edgerly Court and it will be some days before he will be able to report for duty to the American Film Company at Los Angeles.

Director Joseph de Grasse is producing a drama by Rupert Julian, leading man in the Rex company. It is entitled "The Hole in the Garden Wall" and is one of those beautiful romances which in the past has established the quality of Rex dramas. The leading female role is played by Elsie Jane Wilson.

* * *

Stanley H. Twist has withdrawn his contracts and other interests from the Pan-American Film Manufacturing Company and has severed his relations with that concern. Many of these contracts will hereafter be handled by the Inter-Ocean Sales Company, which is preparing to start active operations within the near future, and which will act in the capacity of manufacturers' representative.

* * *

"How Bill Squared It for His Boss" is the title of the second of the "Bill" series by Paul West, being issued in the Mutual program under the Komic brand.

* * *

Since the first installment of the Edison series, "The Man Who Disappeared," Mark MacDermott has appeared in a succession of thrilling feats. He has engaged in a fistic battle on a roof's edge and has ascended to a dizzy height in an aeroplane. In a forthcoming release, "A Dive for Life," his wonderful nerve is put to the supreme test. He is pursued by a detective aboard a Hudson River liner and in making his escape leaps from the top deck into the water, a distance of seventy feet. A long swim to shore was made and MacDermott, after taking a brief rest, was prepared to undertake a new thriller.

* * *

Harry Eytinge, the Edison heavy, is planning a large celebration for the opening of his new summer home at Rye Beach.

* * *

"The Toll of Mammon," the four-part Excelsior Feature Film Company, Inc., release which received high criticism from the trade press was recently reviewed by several medical men. Their remarks regarding the moral of the picture were most satisfactory.

* * *

Sydney Ayres is producing in two reels a romance of Kentucky. A great many stories have been written around the uncouth mountaineer, the moonshiner and the revenue officer, but "The Trap" is a more appealing story and different in many ways to most scenarios written around these subjects.

* * *

The latest Christie (Nestor) comedy is entitled "A Troublesome Wink." A most dignified and respectable housewife is afflicted with a nervous disease of the eyes which causes her to wink at the most inopportune moments. The principal parts are played by Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Victoria Forde.

* * *

J. Warren Kerrigan will shortly be seen in the role of a prosecuting attorney. The story is entitled "Weights and Measures." Vera Sisson and George Periolat play principal parts in the production. Jacques Jaccard is the director.

* * *

Miss Charlotte Burton will assume the leading role in "Lodgings for a Night," now being produced for the "Flying A" by Tom Ricketts. Miss Winifred Greenwood was cast for the lead, but owing to the accident she recently met with will not appear in this production.

* * *

Wives who find their husbands are so much absorbed in business that they are neglecting their helpmates may learn something about how to arouse their husbands by seeing the American Mutual film "Business Versus Love."

* * *

Thomas Nash, of the Nash Motion Picture Company, and his Eastern representative, Stanley H. Twist, leave Los Angeles this week, arriving in New York on July 21. Mr. Nash brings with him the first release under the "'Big' Otto Brand," a four-reel animal picture, entitled "The Mysterious Man of the Jungle. During Mr. Nash's stay in New York his headquarters will be with the Inter-Ocean Sales Company, 110 West 40th street, New York City.

* * *

Harry Pollard will soon begin production of "A Miid-Summer Love Tangle," written especially for the "Beauty" brand by Miss Isobel M. Reynolds of New York. This is a bright comedy and the major part of the work will devolve upon Margarita Fischer.

* * *

"Dave," the only living lion athlete, is a new arrival at the Selig plant in Chicago. "Dave" had his education with a circus, his principal stunt being to make long leaps, demonstrating muscular ability.

* * *

A baffling murder mystery, in which a secret band of Hindu mystic figures is finally solved by clever detective work, is "The Mystery of the Hindu Image," a Majestic Mutual two-reel feature, scheduled for early release.

* * *

William Bechtel is back in harness at the Edison studio after a four weeks' stay at Mt. Clemens, Mich., where he was recovering from a severe attack of rheumatic trouble.

* * *

The Rosary, which will be in elaborate form and portrayed by the leading Selig celebrities, has been practically completed, and the announcement of the date for its release will be made in a short time. It is anticipated that this production will be a typical Selig success.

* * *

How a phrase may have two meanings is illustrated in "The Painted Lady," a two-reel Majestic Mutual feature. In this story a girl attempts to save her sister from the wiles of a scoundrel by winning the scoundrel herself. Blanche Sweet and Dorothy Gish play the sisters, each having a role well suited to her talents.

* * *

A variety of pretty bathing costumes will be shown in "Ethel's Aunt," a lively farce soon to be issued as a Komic Mutual release

Exhibitors News

Interesting Information Concerning Moving Picture Men Gathered By Moving Picture World Correspondents Everywhere.

CINCINNATI.

ADDING still further to the accumulated evidence to the effect that Cincinnati is one of the most progressive cities in the country when it comes to the use of motion pictures for purposes other than those of pure entertainment, the city health department recently had pictures taken at a public swimming pool of a demonstration of the proper method of rescuing and resuscitating a drowning person. The "stunt" was staged in the most realistic manner possible, a day being selected when the big pool at Chester Park was swarming with bathers. A cabaret actor played the part of the victim, and his rescue was effected by the captain of the life-saving crew, while two of the medical staff of the health office demonstrated first aid after the life-saver had towed the victim to the shore in the correct manner. The Universal Film Company's local photographer took the picture, which will be exhibited locally for educational purposes, and probably elsewhere as well, and is expected to be the instrument of saving not a few lives.

Local moving picture men were much surprised at recent developments in connection with the supposed plan for the purchase of the Park Hall theater, in Oakley, a Cincinnati suburb, by James Carragien. The first intimation that the plan was not all it appeared to be came when F. A. Nolan, of the Cincinnati Theatrical Co., which handles motion picture and theatrical supplies, caused the issue of a warrant for Carragien, charging him with tendering a worthless check of the amount of $370. It is also alleged that Carragien collected the receipts at the theater named for two evenings, and then disappeared without having paid over any part of the agreed purchase price of the house. The police are looking for him, but so far without success.

The University of Cincinnati has received the first of the equipment which it will use in the illustration by motion pictures of lectures on natural history, engineering and other subjects. Efforts are being made to obtain films illustrating great engineering works, such as the Panama Canal, city planning schemes and the great universities of the world, to name only a few of the innumerable possible educational subjects, and the film exchanges and producing companies are expected to be of great assistance in this respect. Over 400 reels have already been obtained for use in the several educational institutions which will follow this latest development in educational ideas, and others are in process of completion.

A private exhibition of motion pictures of the recent disastrous fire at Salem, Mass., was given in Cincinnati last week, Manager Royal, of Keith's theater, inviting the chiefs of the fire departments of the several cities in this vicinity and other public officials to witness the pictures as of interest in their work. One of the causes of the spread of the fire, it was pointed out, was the secret storage of explosives in factory basements, which is not permitted in Cincinnati. The pictures were unusually clear and distinct, and were much enjoyed by the select audience which saw them first in Cincinnati, as well as by others who visited the theater to see them.

St. Peter's Cathedral, of Cincinnati, recently gave an entertainment for the benefit of the church which included motion pictures showing the golden jubilee of Father Murray, the pastor Other amusements attracted a large crowd to the church courtyard, where the affair was held. The use of motion pictures by churches is becoming one of their best drawing cards, as an amusement device which is beyond criticism, as long as the right kind of films are used.

The Hippodrome Theater Co., of Cincinnati, has closed a deal by which it acquires title to several pieces of property in Newport, Ky., in the center of the city, which will be used as a site for a motion picture house that will be one of the largest in the three cities of Cincinnati, Covington and Newport. Architects are now at work on the plans, and work will start in time to finish the house for the early part of the coming fall season, it is hoped. I. Frankel, of the Hippodrome Co., will manage the house.

The visit of the traveling health exhibit of the State Board of Health to Hamilton, O., attracted considerable attention recently, but the most interesting feature there, as elsewhere, was probably the motion pictures exhibited by the department, a number of reels being used, all of which spread the gospel of good health in some specific manner. Among the pictures shown was one entitled, "Hope" which presented a really good story, covered the campaign for the erection of a tuberculosis hospital, and showed the service which such a hospital gives, incidentally pointing out the proper method of treatment of the disease.

The Orpheum, in Canton, O., found Thanhauser's "The Million-Dollar Mystery," a big drawing card recently, when the first installment of the widely-advertised serial was shown to large audiences. The views of submarine life was particularly appreciated, being decided-of the baseball season is on, the management of popular Thanhouser stars who figured in the cast appealed strongly to the "fans".

Taking advantage of the fact that the heart of the baseball season is on, the management of the Lyceum theater, at Canton, O., presented recently an attraction calculated to draw "fans" of all persuasions in the two-reel Kalem entitled "Home-Run Baker's Double." This picture, which shows the famous Athletic slugger in actual action, as well as in an interesting story, drew unusually well at the Lyceum.

The new theater of the Marion (O.) Photoplay Co., recently organized by Edward F. Sharpless, is about finished, little remaining to be done to make the house one of the best in the city. The house is to be known as the Marion, and will be ready for opening in ample time for the fall season. CASEY.

KENTUCKY.

BUSINESS with the Louisville exhibitors is fairly good in spite of the very warm weather, though it is the night crowds that the theaters are having to depend upon. Audiences during the daytime are very small, as there are very few people upon the streets, except those on business bent.

L. J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Amusement Company, Louisville, J. Johnson Musselman and Fred Sheldon, of the Warner Feature Film Company of that city, recently purchased the Mexican war film, known as "War with Huerta," and have the state rights for Indiana and Kentucky. A special company has been formed, known as the Mexican War Film Company, for the sole purpose of booking the reel. It is not incorporated. Practically every house in Louisville has shown it, and arrangements are now being made in Indiana by Musselman.

The Commercial Film Manufacturing Company has established permanent offices at Third and Main streets, Louisville, in the Postal Telegraph Building. The pictures which are taken at Straws' Mills, Clark County, Ind., will be developed in a long developing room which is now being fitted up at the Louisville office. The whole third floor of the building has been leased and for the present there will be room to spare. Among the films which the company has in course of preparation or just completed are: a two-reel comedy entitled "Snoopy Sim Breaking Into Jail," a three-reel feature "The Interrupted Wedding" and a two reel feature of "Moonshine Molly." The latter is a straight Kentucky picture and is expected to make a hit throughout the Central District.

The National Commissary Managers' Association will hold its fifth annual convention in Louisville, August 18-20. It is probable that the motion picture men of the city will be able to talk some of the delegates into buying motion picture machines to enliven things around the various mining camps and other isolated camps of the country. A motion picture machine is to be used during the course of lectures in showing the general store managers the proper ways to arrange stock and to conduct a store. Some of the timber companies and mine owners of the state have thrown up flimsy picture houses, in the small mining towns, which have shown a nice return on the amount of capital invested.

J. W. Nestor, proprietor of the Nestor Feature Film Company, which maintained an office at 105 West Broadway, Louisville, has sold out his business to the Owl Feature Film Company. Mr. Nestor was formerly of Clarksburg, W. Va., but has been in the film business in Louisville for some time. He is also connected with the Redfern Clothing store of Louisville and expects to give his whole attention to the latter concern for the present.

M. H. Thatcher of Louisville, formerly governor of the Canal Zone, has announced that his new motion picture house in Parkland will be completed and ready to operate about July 20. A small house in this district was operated very successfully a few years ago, and the new house, which is incorporated for $15,000, is expected to be a hummer.

A contract has been made by the Kentucky Y. M. C. A., for showing Dr. Frederick A. Cook's pictures, "The Truth About the North Pole," and the pictures will be shown at practically every association town in the state.

The Majestic Amusement Company, Louisville has put up a paper cup dispensing machine which dispenses paper cups free of charge during the hot summer months, thereby adding to the attractiveness of the theater as a place to go in the hot weather. The majority of the houses have the penny in the slot system, claiming that free cups become a nuisance because children will make too many trips to the paper cup machine, as it is a novelty. However, at the Majestic, the machine is put up high and it would be necessary for an adult to accompany the child to the machine. In this way the house will not be bothered so much with the bad practice.

H. R. Hunter, formerly manager of the Crescent Air Dome, Louisville, is now on the road for H. D. Ticknor, local manager for the Universal Film Company. He was formerly with the Switow Amusement Company, during which time he traveled around the circuit of houses. He also managed the house at Madisonville, Ky., for a time.

The Columbia theater, of Ashland, recently showed a number of pictures which were taken in the home city. Manager Martin was rather put out over a typographical error in one of the daily newspapers, which announced that the show would be held on Tuesday night instead of Wednesday. G. D. CRAIN, JR.

MISSOURI.

WORK on the remodeling of the Willis Wood theater, Kansas City, has begun. The changes will be completed in time for the opening of the house early in the fall. About $35,000 is to be expended by the Standard Amusement Company which has secured a ten-year lease on the theater.

A hearing will be held at St. Louis on July 20, by Special Commissioner Henry P. Law, of Warsaw, in the alleged film trust case. The hearing at St. Louis, with others to follow at Kansas City, and other film centers in Missouri, will be held to determine whether or not a film trust exists in Missouri. The State attorney general in his application for the appointment of a special examiner alleged that the film distributing companies in Missouri are acting in violation of the anti-trust laws. A combination, a conspiracy, a community of interests and interlocking directorates are a few of the things the attorney general believes to exist.

Cyrus J. Jacobs, manager of the Globe theater in Kansas City, will be married to Miss Clara G. Wheeler, of Chicago, in the near future. Following the ceremony, the couple will spend a month in Canada. They will make their home in Kansas City.

Lewis Rundle's lease on the Auditorium, at Rock Port, has expired and John Mears, the owner, has assumed the management of the motion picture house. Mr. Mears celebrated the change by giving a free performance on July 4. The pictures were followed by a dance in the theater.

The Lyric theater, one of the handsomest motion picture houses in Kansas, was thrown open to the public at Goodland recently. J. R. Sprague is the owner. The Lyric has a seating capacity of 400 and is modern throughout.

C. H. Young, of Atchison, Kan., is contemplating the purchase of the Atchison theater. If the deal is consummated, Mr. Young will spend $10,000 in improvements and will bring first class attractions, both in the field of motion pictures and drama, to the theater.

The management of the Varsity theater at Lawrence, Kan., has invested money in linen covers for the seats. The covering constitutes a good protection against both dirt and germs. They may be washed without damage. While the innovation is a costly one in some respects, it is attracting much favorable comment.

The Dixie theater has been opened at Linneus, by Carlos Western. The house is a new one, being erected by Mr. Western especially for the purpose to which it is being put. A full orchestra, a dozen exits and plenty of oscillating fans are a few of the features of the new house.

Much excitement was created at Cottonwood Falls, Kan., recently, when a man who had never seen a moving picture was unearthed. The curiosity is W. T. Smith, a wealthy landowner and agriculturist. Mr. Smith owns several thousand acres of land, and has traveled considerably during his fifty-nine years of life. How he overlooked taking in a moving picture show during the last few years he is unable to explain. Mr.

Smith has decided to complete his education by attending an exhibition at a Cottonwood Falls theater on his sixtieth birthday, which arrives in August. Elaborate preparations are being made for the event.

W. H. Daly, a well known exhibitor of Pittsburg, Kan., was discharged after a jury trying the Sunday blue law case had been out two hours. The jury stood nine to three for acquittal. The case is one of a score which will be tried in the immediate future. Despite the result of the initial test, the county attorney announced that all others would proceed as originally scheduled. The result of the first, however, has given Pittsburgh exhibitors much confidence and it is believed that public sentiment will result in the discharge of all the defendants. Most of the moving picture theaters of Pittsburg have continued Sunday operations since the members of the W. C. T. U. began their campaign. One airdome which presented vaudeville, however, has discontinued Sunday performances because of the fact that it was necessary to give bond for each actor in case of arrest.

Marty Williams, formerly with the J. W. Morgan Film Company in Kansas City, and later with the Alaska Feature Film Company, found the lure of the motion picture business too strong for him and has returned to his old love as special representative of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Williams will travel out of Kansas City. About six weeks ago, he announced he was through with the moving picture industry. A good deal of comment was aroused by his renunciation in view of his prominence in the business. Then came his return.

The resignation of J. Erwin Dodson, Kansas City, manager for the World Film Corporation, has been announced. Mr. Dodson left the company on July 11. He was succeeded temporarily by R. L. White, special representative of the company. Mr. Dodson has not announced his future plans. Prior to coming to Kansas City about April 1, he was connected with the Fort Smith, Ark., branch of the Universal. Mr. White probably will select a new manager in the near future. The Kansas City offices are, in the Gloyd building which has become a sort of community center for film men.

MURRAY.

MONTREAL.

THE LAST INSTALLMENT of Selig's "The Adventures of Kathlyn" was shown to a large and interested audience at the Imperial here. On that occasion the management presented every lady patron with a handsome souvenir photo of Kathlyn Williams, the leading lady.

J. E. H. Wise, organizer and engineer of the Ontario Safety League read a paper on "Safety First" before the Canadian Electrical Association, in this city, and illustrated his lecture with moving pictures.

Mr. Herring, of the Mohnt Royal, does not let much slip by him. Coolness is everything nowadays, and Mr. Herring has taken in hand the ventilation of his theater. He has installed a large fan 60 inches in diameter, worked by a 5-horsepower motor, which exhausts 16,000 cubic feet of air a minute, sufficient to chanye the atmosphere of the theater every five minutes. The Mount Royal has also had its draperies changed, and the North End house looks summery and cool.

James Travis, formerly manager of the Casino, is back with his old love again. Since his return the theater has taken on quite a new aspect. It will not be long before the Casino regains its old time popularity.

Tom A. Byerle, formerly in the exchange business in Texas, has been appointed Montreal manager of the Canadian Universal Film Exchange.

G. E. Hemsworth, the popular manager of the Chrystal Palace, has not been feeling very well lately and is going away for a well earned vacation. His many friends wish him a good holiday and complete recovery. During his absence the theater will be in charge of Mr. Howard, of Toronto.

Maurice West has installed a gold fibre screen in his theater, the Family, and he reports good results from it. "The Million Dollar Mystery" is booked at this house.

An interesting article entitled: "Montreal, A City of Cinemaniacs," recently appeared in Beck's Weekly, and makes the following statistical statement: ". . . Eight hundred thousand people a week pass through the seventy-five moving picture theaters of Montreal, viewing 200,000 feet, or close upon forty miles of film. . . . The exact seating capacity registered at the City Hall is 57,526. . . . Eight hundred thousand people! That represents a quarter as much again as the total population on the Island of Montreal . . . ."

A new theater, the Colonial, has been opened on Arthur Street, Port Arthur, Ont. It is claimed that Colonial is the second largest picture theater in Canada.

GALLAGHER.

IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

LOUIS MEYERS has opened a new theater at Germantown, Neb.

S. F. Rolph, manager of the Royal theater at Fullerton, Neb., has awarded the contract for a new moving picture theater, 25 x 120 feet, to be erected on Broadway in that city.

Jack Howard, who has been associated with Wall Brothers of Freemont, Neb., in their photoplay enterprises, has purchased their house at Norfolk, Neb., and has assumed charge of it. Robert Wall, who has been managing the Norfolk house, returned to Fremont to take charge of the properties at that place.

The First Methodist Church of Brazil, Ind., is using moving pictures.

Petitions, circulated by J. Stafford and Fred Dunnavant, exhibitors at Niles, Ohio, asking that a referendum vote be taken on the Sunday closing ordinance was filed with the supervisors of elections at Warren. Stafford declares it to the interest of children who rove the streets on Sunday that the shows be operated. He also avers the wealthier people are driving in their automobiles to Girard and Youngstown to attend the photoplay shows and that the poorer people who have no cars are deprived of this pleasure.

President Goldberg of the Omaha, Neb., Exhibitors League, indignant at the charge of the Social Service Board that the exhibitors had broken faith in the matter of showing unfit pictures, named a committee to confer with the board. He declared that the only white slave pictures shown in the city were exhibited in a regular theatrical house which was in the picture business only temporarily. Aside from this there was one objectionable film shown in a downtown house, but it was stopped by the Exhibitors League.

Three reels of moving pictures are shown each evening at the playgrounds in Mingo, Ohio.

The Empress theater at Omaha, Neb., showed the moving pictures of the convention of the Nebraska State Editorial Association.

Manager Garman of the Orpheum theater at Lincoln, Neb., is giving travelogues each Monday, Wednesday and Friday night.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

WISCONSIN.

FRANK COOK, manager of the Orpheum theater in Milwaukee, for ten years connected with the Saxe Amusement Company, has resigned to accept a position as general manager of Nielsen Quality Feature Film Company of Chicago.

A "hot weather price" of five and ten cents is featured by the Monroe theater at Monroe.

The problems of the electrical storm season are again upon the manager. At the Unique theater in Waukesha there was a crash and the theater was in darkness. The patrons were reassured by a voice: "Keep your seats; a transformer across the street was struck by lightning and all the lights on this circuit are out of commission."

The building inspector of Milwaukee reports that the fifty-four photoplay houses in the city have an aggregate seating capacity of 35,011.

W. I. Winnegar, who has been managing the Majestic theater at Lake Geneva, has leased the Chenny property in Williams Bay and will operate a moving picture theater. G. A. Van Slyck, owner of the Majestic, will take charge of his house.

The White House theater of Racine has begun its summer schedule of opening on Saturday evening, Sunday matinee and night with three acts of vaudeville and pictures.

The Lyric theater at Fort Atkinson which was closed July 1 for redecorating expects to reopen early in August. The house opened for special business on July 4 and 12.

Members of the Wisconsin Banking Association endeavored to secure for their convention at Milwaukee July 15 and 16 the films teaching thrift. The release date was fixed for September 15.

In a new ordinance, as published, at Madison, it is provided that where there are no side aisles in moving picture theaters the center aisle shall be four feet six inches wide. Alderman Bourke, who fathered the measure, declared it was originally six feet, and announced his intention of finding out who altered the provisions.

The second showing of "Judith of Bethulia" at the Bijou theater in Appleton was by request of the patrons of the house.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

ILLINOIS.

BODKIN & KEANE of the Star theater at Evanston have projected the idea of showing "Made-in Evanston" films. Advertisements were inserted in local papers asking for scenarios by Evanston writers. These are to be produced in local settings under the direction of James E. Byrnes of the Greenwood Inn, who has had film experience. There will be no attempt to start a plant in Evanston; the films will be sent to Chicago for development. They will be shown first at the Star and then put into circulation. It is hoped to show at least one of this kind of pictures each week.

The Cort moving picture theater was opened the first of July at 116 North Adams street in Peoria.

P. S. Colley of Wilmette has leased the Majestic theater at Waukegan. He opened the house with stock musical comedy and moving pictures. To be more exact the house announces that it is "featuring feature pictures." Colley contemplates organizing a circuit of houses which can be booked out of Waukegan.

The Grand theater at Macomb recently had an all-feature week with no extra admission charges.

The Beardstown Amusement Company, just incorporated, has entered upon its career in operating the Princess and the Gem moving picture theaters in Beardstown.

Harry Bloston has retired from the management of the Wildey theater at Edwardsville, being succeeded by W. A. Edwards, who has leased the house from the Edwardsville Investment Company. The policy of pictures and vaudeville will be continued during the summer, but in the fall one big show a week will be booked. The house was closed for about ten days for some improvements. Bloston contemplates the sale of his airdome in Edwardsville and engaging in the show business in some other city.

The Lafreva Amusement Company of East St. Louis has been incorporated to do an amusement business. The incorporators are Lillian Landau, E. A. Haussman, C. E. Elmer, Louis Landau and Monroe Weiler.

About twice a month the patrons of the Opera House at Harvard will be given a vaudeville show in connection with the moving picture bill. Manager W. D. Saunders gets 10 and 20 cents for these augmented shows.

Manager George Howard of the Bijou theater at Monmouth closed his house July 4 for three weeks of remodeling and improving.

A juvenile automobile worth $50 was given away by the Mirror theater in Moline for advertising purposes.

Free moving pictures are now being given at the Illinois ball park in Galesburg.

A benefit performance for St. Joseph's church introduced the new Empress Skydome at Granite City to many likely to become regular patrons.

The Maywood theater in Maywood got ten cents admission when it gave a serial show in regular magazine fashion. The patrons who had followed Kathlyn through her adventures were interested in "The Million Dollar Mystery" before they left the house.

Patrons of the Haish Auditorium in De Kalb paid only five cents to see "The Merchant of Venice."

Illinois' prison pictures, "Life in the Joliet Prison," reached photoplaygoers in Clinton in connection with a stock company bill at the Airdome.

The Grand Opera House, Harold J. Johnson, manager, at Jacksonville, has inaugurated Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday matinees. Fifty cents worth of trading stamps are given with each ten cent admission to these matinees.

Two cents enabled any child under twelve years of age in Freeport to see the Kleinschmidt "Arctic Hunt" pictures at a special 10 o'clock show given by Manager Guiteau of the Majestic theater.

Censorship of public amusement places, particularly moving picture theaters, is aimed at in a petition presented to the city council of Carthage.

The Virginia theater at Hooperston has been offering stock company shows in connection with such attractions as "Hiawatha" and serial pictures. Prices for the combined shows are ten and fifteen cents.

W. W. Watts of the Vaudette Amusement Company of Springfield has closed the Vaudette theater at Ashland and Fifty-fifth streets in Chicago, at least temporarily. Some improvements are being made to the house while it is idle.

F. M. Edgett expects to have his new moving picture theater in Earlville ready for occupancy about the first of September.

Moving pictures will not be shown at the Gaiety theater in Ottawa after its reopening August 26.

Metcalf & Kincaid have opened their airdome in the north side of the public square in Greenfield.

The Opera House in Paris, which is now running pictures, is conducting a voting contest.

The Grand theater at Moline had a camera man on the streets for the purpose of making films which would inject local color into the Grand program.

Oakland business men will give free moving pictures every Wednesday night this summer.

Edward Brick is in charge of the operation at the new Orpheum theater which has been opened at Water and Main streets in Aurora by Harry Hargrave. Hargrave, the Aurora photoplay pioneer, has a good illumination scheme for what was one of the darkest corners in the city. A Wurlitzer orchestra and an automatic ticket-seller are innovations for Aurora.

The Airdome at Riverside Park, McHenry, is in its third successful season. Pictures are shown at ten cents.

Elkhart will have an airdome playing pictures. A building for the purpose has been erected by John Bushell and James Taylor.

The City Commission at Springfield has passed the ordinance which will make it a hard matter to locate a moving picture theater in any of the residence sections. In order to open a show anywhere outside of the fire district it will be necessary to secure the consent of property owners within 400 feet each way of the site.

Secretary of State Harry Woods of Springfield has issued a charter to the Chicago Herald Movies with a capital stock of $2,000. The incorporators are Francis E. Matthews, Harold R. Brown and Harry W. Wayman.

The moving picture theater at Nebo has raised the admission for children over ten years old to ten cents.

When the new Village theater at Wilmette was opened a speech was made by Edward F. Kelly, who is interested in the house. He announced the intention of the owners to make it a community moving picture house and invited suggestions at all times. He introduced to the public A. L. S. Parr, manager of the theater, while the organist at the new Kimball pipe organ "played the picture" with "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?"

Arrangements have been made by the Bio theater at Moline whereby the Between Times Circle of Kings Daughters will have charge of the production of "The Chri-tian" at that house in September.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

IOWA.

RAYMOND SLAUSON and Ernest Landis have purchased the Princess moving picture theater at Monticello from Eugene Byers.

L. D. Hendrix, manager of the Star theater at Mt. Vernon, and C. J. Hodgson, a photographer of that city, have purchased equipment for a moving picture airdome and will tour the state with it. The moving picture business will be supplemented with photograph work. The Star will be operated by Mrs. Hendrix in the absence of her husband.

The patrons of the Crystal theater at Cedar Rapids wanted to see "Tess of the Storm Country" again and got it.

The Majestic theater at Waterloo is now under the personal management of George M. Fenberg, who has been operating it, and has returned to a moving picture program at ten cents for the first floor and five cents for the second.

In addition to the three reels of pictures, three acts of vaudeville are given by the movie airdome which has been opened on Locust street, between Seventh and Eighth street, in Des Moines.

The Lyric theater at Lovilla has been removed from the Carr Opera House to an outdoor location.

Fred Foster, who has opened a moving picture theater in Humeston, will give a show each Saturday night.

"Every week we notice a tendency for the raising of the standard of motion pictures in this city," remarks the Cedar Rapids Saturday Record. "This is especially true as to the Palace and Isis theater. It is such houses as these that will make the motion pictures inviting to the best of our citizens."

The Des Moines Film & Supply Co., Des Moines, has opened an office in the Utica Building. The office will be under the management of R. C. LiBeau, an experienced exchange man.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

IN THE SOUTHWEST.

BY URGING the use of moving picture exhibits the management of the Wichita (Kan.) Fair and Exposition and the Ninth Annual International Dry Farming Congress and Soil Products Exposition and International Congress for Farm Women believes that a pleasing departure will be made from the "tinsel and cheesecloth booths." Announcement has been made that the lecture room of the Forum will be fitted up for projection and the concerns which have films to exhibit will be furnished light, power, etc., free.

Confederate veterans of Dallas, Tex., went to the Hippodrome theater in a body the night of July 4 to see the special Independence Day attraction, "The Battle of Gettysburg." The public was invited to come at the same time and hear the real "rebel yell."

A men's Bible class with a membership of 450 was filmed one Sunday morning in the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Wichita, Kan., by Walter Bell of the Kansas Motion Picture Company.

The Christian Church of Atchison, Kan., has purchased a moving picture machine and will show Biblical and educational pictures free every Saturday afternoon to children under fifteen years of age.

Benefit performances were given two days at the Novelty theater in Topeka, Kan., for the United Commercial Travelers. A band concert in front of the theater each night attracted considerable business.

Moving pictures of the Mystic Shriners at the Atlanta convention shown at the Folly theater in Oklahoma City, Okla., for the benefit of the Masonic Home at Darlington, Okla. In connection there were a number of pictures of Oklahoma events, and the Masons fostered an unusual attendance.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

ST. LOUIS.

THE St. Louis County Republican candidates held a meeting at the Lockwood Garden, Lockwood and Gore avenues, on July 7, and instead of serving beer to their prospective constituents, they entertained them with moving pictures and music. One of the reels shown was a local weekly which contained a school picnic given a few weeks ago wherein most of the candidates participated, and were caught by the camera. The crowd seemed to enjoy the innovation of moving pictures at a political meeting and the liquid refreshments usually considered indispensible on such occasions were not missed.

The New Favorite Summer theater, Cherokee street and Iowa avenue, which has been running light opera with moving pictures between the acts, showed a straight bill of pictures last week, with "A Million Bid" as the feature.

William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater Grand and Lucas avenues, has been beset with so many requests for a re-engagement of "Les Miserables" that the feature will be shown for the third time during the week beginning July 12.

Lionel G. Edel, formerly manager of the feature deparatment at the General Film Exchange, in this city, has been appointed as a traveling representative salesman for the World's Feature Corporation.

Frank Danner, manager of the Elite Airdome, Eighteenth street and Park avenue, advertised a "Nigger Baby Contest" at his theater recently When the "babies" made their appearance they proved to be boys of the neighborhood blackened up, some of them as old as eighteen years. The contest caused much laughter, and closed with a milk drinking race between the "babies," that brought down the house.

Warner & Co., managers of the Fairdome, 3100 Arsenal street, are now also managing the Arlington Airdome at Union avenue and North Market street.

Joseph Rathheim, manager of the Hudson Airdome, Twelfth and Hickory streets, where the audiences of the Hudson theater, Eleventh and Park are entertained during the summer months, has a good plan to increase the admission price of his theater. He opened the season with two ten cent nights each week, and by giving features and special programs he has gradually worked up until he now gets ten cents admission five nights a week, and this in a neighborhood that has been accustomed to paying five cents for its pictures.

A bill has been passed by the House of Delegates, which, if acted upon favorably by the City Council, will provide a season of eight weeks of free moving pictures at the downtown playgrounds. The schedule provides for a two hours' performance at a different park or playground each night. Park Commissioner Davis is outlining the plans now, and films of a historical scenic and educational character will be used. If the law goes into effect the shows will begin July 15.

The California Garden, California avenue and Sidney street, and the Aubert Garden, Aubert and Easton avenues, which are under the same management, are conducting a contest that is proving very popular with their patrons. A Shetland pony and cart are offered as prizes for the most popular boy or girl under sixteen years of age. The votes are earned by the contestants and their supporters through attendance to the gardens, and through purchases of merchandise from different dealers in the neighborhood. a dry goods store, a grocery, a meat market, a bakery and a drug store, all give votes, ten votes with each ten cent purchase. In addition to this two hundred votes are given to any boy or girl under sixteen who sells a family book of twelve tickets to the gardens. The twelve tickets are sold for a dollar in this manner.

Fred J. Murphie is now manager in charge of the World's Feature Corporation's offices in the Navarre building.

William O. Reeve, manager of the Eighteenth Street theater, has built an airdome directly behind the theater, that seats 1,400 persons Mr. Reeve is the tenth exhibitor to operate the Eighteenth Street house, and although the place was considered a non-producer when he took charge, he has built up a big patronage. He believes in features and makes Thursday and Saturday of each week special nights.

GIEBLER.

SAN FRANCISCO.

A PERMIT has been granted by the Board of Police Commissioners to Edward Cano to operate a moving picture theater at 255 Valencia street.

The Santa Clara County Committee of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition are preparing to make an elaborate showing of Stanford College life at the Exposition by means of moving pictures.

The Portola theater scored another great success with its recent offering, "Home Sweet Home." Crowded houses were the rule throughout the week.

"Doc" Hart, well known as a lecturer on criminology, and who has been connected with Davis Bros. in their poster exchange, is now interested in the Heidelburg theater, Oakland, Cal.

The Thanhouser serial production is being shown at Fresno, Cal. in the Pastime theater and the first release was enthusiastically received.

A. A. Cuneo will shortly open a new moving picture house at Bakersfield, Cal., one of the leading oil centers of the State.

A. D. Bynon, who recently opened an airdome at Weed, Cal., has closed this on account of the cold weather. Frequent showers and cool nights interfered with the business.

The Bell theater at Livermore, Cal., is now under new management and a number of changes in policy are being made.

G. A. Bradbury is preparing to open the Idle Hour theater at Grass Valley, Cal.

The Floriston Commercial Club of Floriston, Cal., is giving a moving picture show in the opera house every Sunday evening.

C. B. Clark has opened an attractive theater at Pacific Grove, Cal., this being known as the Colonial.

Work is under way on the theater building of James Beatty at San Jose, Cal. The building permit calls for an expenditure of $6,000.

Moving pictures were taken recently at Oakdale, Cal., by Claude C. Laval, official photographer of the San Joaquin Counties Association. The pea canning industry was depicted in detail, the entire operation being shown from gathering the vines and the shelling by machinery, to packing and labeling. The film will be shown at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco.

The Hippodrome theater, recently opened at Fresno, Cal., as an open air amusement place, has been meeting with great success. A number of pictures taken by the Fresno Film Company are being shown there, must interest being taken in the local views.

The city of New York is preparing to erect a pavilion of its own on the Panama-Pacific International grounds at San Francisco and will expend $100,000 on a municipal exhibit. One feature under consideration is that of showing moving pictures illustratng city work in various departments.

Manager D. M. Linnard of the Hotel Maryland, Pasadena, Cal., is planning to erect a theater building to have a capacity of 4000 persons, and to be known as the Maryland Court Gardens. It is to be largely of steel and glass.

Mary Pickford in "The School Teacher and the Waif" was the attraction recently at the Sequoia theater, Sacramento, Cal., and was a big drawing card. Souvenir pictures of this popular star were given free to the lady visitors.

Plans are being drawn by Architect Lewis Cowles for a theater to be erected at Santa Rosa, Cal., at an estimated cost of $150,000. F. E. Barrett and J. M. Whittingham are among those interested in the proposition.

CHURCH.

MICHIGAN.

O. F. GILLEN has assumed the management of the Family theater in Jackson. A three-reel show will be given.

Manager Beeman, desiring to change the name of his house from the Swastika, announced a voting contest for a suitable title. Each patron for a week was given a card on which to suggest a name, the most suitable one receiving $5 in gold. Only names of six letters or less were eligible.

H. R. Hiller, cameraman, chanced to be summering at Spring Lake and when the $150,000 steamer the Manistee, burned to the water's edge at Spring Lake he was fortunate enough to get about five hundred feet of good pictures. These will be excellent attractions for many Michigan houses.

The moving pictures of the Boy Scouts in Grand Rapids were not shown in the theaters but were exhibited at various school houses to aid a fund for the youths.

Two nine-reel programs were recently shown for ten cents by the Grand theater at Calumet.

Mr. and Mrs. LaMore have opened the rejuvenated Airdome at Eaton Rapids and will follow a high class photoplay policy.

Robert Dunham of Marshall has purchased the moving picture theater on Trowbridge street in Allegan from Manager Richter, who will devote his time to a theater which he recently purchased in Otsego.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

(Continued on page 604.)

Calendar of Licensed Releases

Current Releases

MONDAY, JULY 20th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—The World and the Woman (Drama)
EDISON—The Adventure of the Absent-Minded Professor (Seventh of the "Octavius"—Amateur Detective Series) (Comedy)
ESSANAY—Money Talks (Comedy)
KALEM—In the Wolf's Clothing (Fourth of the Alice Joyce Series) (Special—Two parts—Drama)
PATHE—The Crayfish (Educational)
—In French Guinea (Travel)
SELIG—A Woman Laughs (Special—Two parts—Drama)
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 41 (News)
VITAGRAPH—Love the Clairvoyant (Drama)

TUESDAY, JULY 21st, 1914.

CINES—The Stronger Tie (Special—Two parts—Drama)
EDISON—A Matter of Minutes (Eighth of "The Man Who Disappeared" Series) (Drama)
ESSANAY—Mrs. Billington's First Case (Comedy-Drama)
KALEM—The Beast (Drama)
LUBIN—Temper and Temperature (Comedy)
—Worms Will Turn (Comedy)
MELIES—(Title not reported)
PATHE—A Badger Hunt (Hunting)
—Life in Japan (Customs)
SELIG—The Lure of the Ladies (Comedy)
VITAGRAPH—Bread Upon the Waters (Special—Two parts—Drama)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22d, 1914.

EDISON—A Deal in Statuary (Comedy)
—His Wife's Burglar (Comedy)
ESSANAY—The Fable of "Higher Education that Was Too High for the Old Man" (Comedy)
KALEM—The Rival Railroad's Plot (Special—two parts—Drama)
LUBIN—Who Seeks Revenge (Special—Two parts—Drama)
MELIES—His Sense of Duty (Drama)
PATHE—Pathe's Weekly No. 46, 1914 (News)
SELIG—The Sealed Package (Drama)
VITAGRAPH—Buddy's Downfall (Comedy)

THURSDAY, JULY 23d, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—The Cheeseville Cops (Comedy)
—The Show Busters (Comedy)
ESSANAY—Slippery Slim's Inheritance (Comedy)
LUBIN—The False Shadow (Special—Two parts—Drama)
MELIES—Wanted, a Sweetheart (Comedy)
—Why Preachers Leave Home (Comedy)
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 42 (News)
VITAGRAPH—The Apple (Drama)

FRIDAY, JULY 24th, 1914.

EDISON—Laddie (Special—Two parts—Drama)
ESSANAY—A Letter from Home (Special—Two parts—Drama)
KALEM—The Bingville Fire Department (Comedy)
LUBIN—A Traitor to His Country (Drama)
SELIG—The Substitute Heir (Comedy)
VITAGRAPH—The Winning Trick (Comedy)

SATURDAY, JULY 25th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—The Little Widow (Drama)
EDISON—The Last Assignment (Twelfth of the "Dolly of the Dailies" Series (Drama)
ESSANAY—Broncho Billy and the Gambler (Drama)
KALEM—Defying the Chief (Drama)
LUBIN—A Matter of Record (Comedy)
MELIES—Black Pearls (Special—Two parts—Drama)
SELIG—Footprints (Comedy-Drama)
VITAGRAPH—Romantic Josie (Special—Two parts—Comedy)

Advance Releases

MONDAY, JULY 27th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—Gwendolyn the Sewing Machine Girl (Comedy)
BIOGRAPH—Search, the Scientific Detective (Comedy)
EDISON—A Canine Rival (Eighth of the "Wood B. Wedd" Series) (Comedy)
ESSANAY—Sweedie and the Lord (Comedy)
KALEM—The Identification (Special—Two parts—Drama)
PATHE—The Hosts of the Sea (Educ.)
—Coffee Cultivation, Santos (South America) (Ind.)
SELIG—A Five Hundred Dollar Kiss (Special—Two parts—Comedy)
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 43 (News)
VITAGRAPH—His Kid Sister (Comedy)

TUESDAY, JULY 28th, 1914.

CINES—In Temptation's Toil (Special—Two parts—Drama)
EDISON—The Mystery of the Lost Stradivarius (Ninth of the "Chronicles of Cleek" Series) (Drama)
ESSANAY—A Clash of Virtues (Drama)
KALEM—The Man With the Glove (Drama)
LUBIN—The Question and Answer Man (Comedy)
MELIES—(Title not reported)
PATHE—The Straits of Bonifacio (Sardinia) (Travel)
—Hemp Throwing (New Zealand) (Ind.)
SELIG—Muff (Drama)
VITAGRAPH—John Rance, Gentleman (Special—Two parts—Drama)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29th, 1914.

EDISON—Something to a Door (Comedy)
ESSANAY—The Fable of "The Coming Champion Who Was Delayed" (Comedy)
KALEM—The Indian Agent (Special—Two parts—Drama)
LUBIN—The Lure of the Car Wheels (Special—Two parts—Drama)
MELIES—An Actress's Son—(Drama)
PATHE—Pathe's Weekly, No. 47, 1914 (News)
SELIG—The Mother Heart (Special—Two parts—Drama)
VITAGRAPH—Officer Kate (Comedy)

THURSDAY, JULY 30th, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—A Bit of Human Driftwood (Special—Two parts—Drama)
ESSANAY—Snakeville's Home Guard (Comedy)
LUBIN—Three Men and a Woman (Special—Two parts—Drama)
MELIES—The Trowserless Policeman (Comedy)
—210 vs. 213 (Special—Two parts—Drama)
SELIG—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 44 (News)
VITAGRAPH—The Greater Motive (Drama)

FRIDAY, JULY 31st, 1914.

EDISON—The Stuff that Dreams Are Made Of (Special—Two parts—Comedy)
ESSANAY—The Seventh Prelude (Special—Two parts—Drama)
KALEM—The Deadly Battle at Hicksville (Comedy)
LUBIN—Within the Noose (Drama)
MELIES—Music Hath Charms (Comedy)
SELIG—When the Cook Fell Ill (Comedy)
VITAGRAPH—Private Bunny (Comedy)

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1st, 1914.

BIOGRAPH—The Man Who Paid (Drama)
EDISON—Farmer Rodney's Daughter (Drama)
ESSANAY—The Squatter's Gal (Drama)
KALEM—The Lad From Old Ireland (Drama)
LUBIN—She Gave Him a Rose (Comedy)
—The Rise of the Johnsons (Comedy)
MELIES—Honor Redeemed (Special—Two pars—Dr.)
SELIG—Love vs. Pride (Drama)
VITAGRAPH—The Violin of M' Sieur (Special—Two parts—Drama)

One sheet posters of the popular players | Poster Frames the best made | Slides, film announcement advertising, appropriate illustrations high colored. | Photos of the popular players | Song slide service best in America

AMERICAN SLIDE & POSTER CO. FIRST NATIONAL BANK BUILDING, CHICAGO.

KLAW & ERLANGER

PRESENTING

Well-known Plays in MOTION PICTURES

PRODUCED IN

BIOGRAPH STUDIOS

Announce

MAN'S ENEMY

IN THREE PARTS

Shakespeare's famous line:

"Oh! that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains"

Is the inspiration of this drama which teaches the moral of abstinence

Being the eighth production in this series of

PROGRAM HEADLINERS

BOOKED THROUGH GENERAL FILM COMPANY EXCLUSIVELY

Special Photographs and two styles of one and three sheet posters and three styles of eight sheet posters available

Calendar of Independent Releases

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

SUNDAY, JULY 19th, 1914.

ECLAIR—Tango Versus Poker (Comedy)
FRONTIER—The Ranger's Reward (Western-Drama)
REX—Out of the Darkness (Drama)

MONDAY, JULY 20th, 1914.

IMP—In the Sultan's Garden (Drama)
STERLING—The Circus (Comedy)
VICTOR—Value Received (Two parts—Western-Drama)

TUESDAY, JULY 21st, 1914.

CRYSTAL—Getting Vivian Married (Comedy)
GOLD SEAL—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery (Series No. 15) (Two parts—Drama)
UNIVERSAL IKE—Universal Ike, Jr., in Cupid's Victory (Comedy)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22, 1914.

ECLAIR—Allah—3311 (Three parts—Drama)
JOKER—Jimmy Kelly and the Kidnappers (Comedy)
NESTOR—By the Sun's Rays (Western—Drama)
UNIVERSAL—Animated Weekly, No. 124 (News)

THURSDAY, JULY 23d, 1914.

IMP—The Gateway of Regret)Drama)
REX—At the Foot of the Stairs (Drama)
STERLING—Love and Lunch (Two parts—Comedy)

FRIDAY, JULY 24th, 1914.

NESTOR—All at Sea (Comedy)
POWERS—Kate Waters of the Secret Service (Two parts Drama)
VICTOR—Irene's Busy Week (Comedy-Drama)

SATURDAY, JULY 25th, 1914.

"101" BISON—Olana of the South Seas (Two parts—Drama)
JOKER—The Polo Champions (Comedy)

SUNDAY, JULY 26th, 1914.

ECLAIR—When Death Rode the Engine (Western-Drama)
FRONTIER—When Memory Recalls (Drama)
REX—An Awkward Cinderella (Comedy-Drama)

MONDAY, JULY 27th, 1914.

IMP—When Romance Came to Anne (Two parts—Drama)
STERLING—A Wild Ride (Juvenile Comedy)
VICTOR—Out of the Valley (Drama)

TUESDAY, JULY 28th, 1914.

CRYSTAL—Their Parent's Kids (Comedy)
—Charlie's Toothache (Comedy)
GOLD SEAL—The Love Victorious (Three parts—Drama)
UNIVERSAL IKE—Universal Ike, Jr., In His City Elopment (Comedy)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29th, 1914.

ECLAIR—The Dupe (Two parts—Drama)
JOKER—Wooing of Bessie Bumpkin (Comedy)
NESTOR—An Indian Eclipse (Drama)
ANIMATED WEEKLY—Number 125 (News)

THURSDAY, JULY 30th, 1914.

IMP—Universal Boy (Series No. 2) (Comedy)
REX—Circle 17 (Two parts—Drama)
STERLING—Troublesome Pets (Comedy)

FRIDAY, JULY 31st, 1914.

NESTOR—Maggie's Honest Lover (Comedy)
POWERS—The Tangle (Comedy)
VICTOR—The Mad Man's Ward (Two parts—Drama)

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1st, 1914.

"101" BISON—Tribal War in the South Seas (Two parts—Drama)
JOKER—Wifie's Busy Day (Comedy)

Mutual Film Corporation

SUNDAY, JULY 19th, 1914.

KOMIC—"Billy" (Series No. 2) (Comedy)
MAJESTIC—The Painted Lady (Two parts—Drama)
THANHOUSER—Harry's Waterloo (Comedy)

MONDAY, JULY 20th, 1914.

AMERICAN—A Man's Way (Two parts—Drama)
KEYSTONE—(Title not given)
RELIANCE—Our Mutual Girl, No. 27 (News)

TUESDAY, JULY 21st, 1914.

BEAUTY—Her "Really" Mother (Drama)
MAJESTIC—A Red Man's Heart (Drama)
THANHOUSER—The Pendulum of Fate (Two parts—Drama)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22d, 1914.

AMERICAN—Business vs. Love (Drama)
BRONCHO—Shorty and the Aridville (Two parts—Comedy)
RELIANCE—Izzy and the Diamond (Comedy)

THURSDAY, JULY 23d, 1914.

DOMINO—The Defaulter (Two parts—Drama)
KEYSTONE—(Title not given)
MUTUAL WEEKLY—Number 82 (News)

FRIDAY, JULY 24th, 1914.

KAY-BEE—The Sheriff of Bisbee (Two parts—Drama)
MAJESTIC—Lest We Forget (Drama)
PRINCESS—The Cavalry at Fort Meyer, Va. (Scenic)
PRINCESS—Harvesting Ice (Scenic)

SATURDAY, JULY 25th, 1914.

KEYSTONE—(Title not given)
RELIANCE—The Saving of Young Anderson (Two parts Drama)
ROYAL—Milling the Militant (Comedy)
—Servants Superseded (Comedy)

SUNDAY, JULY 26th, 1914.

KOMIC—Leave It to Smiley (Comedy)
MAJESTIC—The Mystery of the Hindu Image (Two parts—Drama)
THANHOUSER—From Wash to Washington (Comedy)

MONDAY, JULY 27th, 1914.

AMERICAN—The Broken Barrier (Two parts—Drama)
KEYSTONE—(Title not given)
RELIANCE—Our Mutual Girl, No. 28 (News)

TUESDAY, JULY 28th, 1914.

BEAUTY—A Midsummer Love Tangle (Drama)
MAJESTIC—Down by the Sounding Sea (Drama)
THANHOUSER—The Messenger of Death (Two parts—Drama)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29th, 1914.

AMERICAN—Does It End Right? (Drama)
BRONCHO—The Long Feud (Two parts—Drama)
RELIANCE—The Sheriff's Prisoner (Drama)

THURSDAY, JULY 30th, 1914.

DOMINO—The Curse of Caste (Two Parts—Drama)
KEYSTONE—(Title not given)
MUTUAL WEEKLY—Number 83 (News)

FRIDAY, JULY 31st, 1914.

AMERICAN—All on Account of a Jug (Comedy)
KAY-BEE—An Eleventh Hour Reformation (Two parts—Drama)
PRINCESS—The Target of Destiny (Drama)

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1st, 1914.

KEYSTONE—(Title not given)
RELIANCE—The Gunman (Two parts—Drama)
ROYAL—The Baker Street Mystery (Comedy)

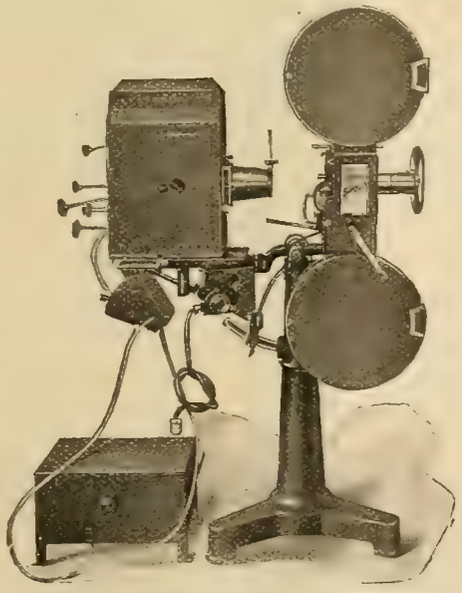
Simplex Quality

again demonstrated at the Dayton, Ohio, Convention, July 6 to 11, inclusive.

Gathered at that Convention were exhibitors from the Pacific as well as the Atlantic Coast, and it was mighty pleasing and encouraging to have one after another come to our exhibit and volunteer the information that they have used Simplex machines for a year or two years, etc., and have projection in their theatres which their competitors, using other makes of machines, cannot equal.

One notable point in the testimony of all was the fact that Simplex machines had not cost them anything for repairs.

The real proof of quality lies in the results of practical use under hard conditions. There are lots of Simplex users in every community. Get their unbiased opinion of the machine. Theirs is the testimony which should influence your next purchase.



MADE AND GUARANTEED BY

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO. INC.

317 East 34th St. New York

Write Today for Our New Catalogue A

DETROIT.

(Continued from page 599.)

DETROIT feels honored in having one of its delegates to the National Motion Picture League Convention elected treasurer of that organization, the successful person being Peter Jeup of Detroit. Mr. Jeup is president of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which position he is now filling for his second term.

After an association with John H. Kunsky for many years—ever since Mr. Kunsky has been in the motion picture industry—M. W. Schoenherr has tendered his resignation, the same having taken effect July 15. Mr. Schoenherr has not as yet decided on his future activities, although he is planning to buy a small theater devoted to moving pictures. He was for several years manager of the Columbia theater on Monroe avenue, and for the past year has been general manager of the Casino Amusement Company, which comprises all of the Kunsky theaters, and the Casino Feature Film Company, which has the exclusive Michigan agency for Famous Players and Jesse Lasky feature films. The resignation of Mr. Schoenherr came as a surprise to the local field.

The Avenue theater on lower Woodward avenue discontinued its season of melodramatic stock on July 12 and starting July 13 started a short season of moving pictures. Pictures will continue until August 23, when they will be replaced by the regular stock season. Frank Drew will continue as manager of the theater.

The Liberty broke all records since it opened the week of July 6 when it offered Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate." Hundreds were disappointed every day. On Sunday, July 5, which was the first day, the crowd extended from the box office to Monroe avenue; on Monday the crowd was even greater. Every day the business showed an increase. Manager Pierce tried to secure the picture for a second week in order to accommodate hundreds of his regular patrons who were unable to gain admission the first seven days, but he could not arrange it on account of future bookings. Following its exhibition at the Liberty, "The Eagle's Mate" was shown at the Empress and the Garden, each for two days, following which it went to Grand Rapids.

According to Attorney-General Grant H. Fellows of Michigan moving picture exhibitions may be prohibited on Sunday by an ordinance in a village incorporated under the general laws of the state. Such was the ruling which he made on July 6.

A. E. Whitbeck, general manager of the New Orpheum theater, at Lafayette and Shelby streets, announces that the house manager of that playhouse will be Harry P. Williamson. He is a well known Detroiter. The Orpheum will open its doors about the first week in September, according to present plans.

Louis Schneider, head of the Michigan Amusement Company, which controls the Grand Circus theater, has been before a jury in the United States district court owing to a suit in which the Detroit Bridge and Steel Works asked that the company be declared bankrupt because it paid certain accounts in full while other creditors have been permitted to go unpaid. Judge Arthur Tuttle, who heard the case, refused to adjudge the Michigan Amusement Company a bankrupt, which ruling came as a result of the showing of testimony by attorneys for the amusement company that the firms seeking to get the adjudication had based their complaint on bills paid by an unofficial receivership appointed to conduct the affairs of the Grand Circus theater.

Architect C. Howard Crane has started to take figures on the two-story office, store and theater building on Woodward avenue, near Willis, for A. Arthur Caille. This theater will be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, and will be called the "Majestic." It will be a fireproof structure of steel and terra cotta in the Italian Renaissance style. The site has 122 feet frontage on Woodward and is 176 feet deep; the lobby alone will accommodate 600 persons; the exterior will be made attractive by an arrangement of boulevard lights and shrubbery. The auditorium will accommodate 1,850. There will be no galleries, but in a chain of 30 auto boxes, 230 more persons can be taken care of, thus bringing the total capacity to over the 2,000 mark. In the rear of the auditorium there will be an electric fountain which wil render musical selections during intermissions. The theater will be equipped with a large stage that will make possible the presentation of elaborate spectacular productions. There will be eighteen dressing rooms. Allowance will be made for an orchestra of twenty pieces and in addition a $10,000 pipe organ will be installed. There will be rest rooms and retiring rooms with attendants in charge. Male ushers are to be employed. A score of exits will make it possible to empty the entire house in less than two minutes. There will be a washed air system of ventilation. The indirect lighting system will be used and the chandeliers will be fitted with prism glass pendants. The officers of the company are A. Arthur Caille, vice-president; Frank W. Westbrook, secretary and Harry Goldstein, who will also be the house manager.

W. D. Ward has resigned as manager of the Detroit branch of the Mutual Film Corporation and has been succeeded by G. J. Trask, formerly manager of the Cincinnati office and more recently district manager for the Mutual of Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

Arthur Lucas, of the home office of the Mutual company, was a visitor in Detroit on July 10.

SMITH.

IN THE NORTHWEST.

W. MATHEWS for the last year operator at the Albert theater in Albert Lea, Minn., has embarked in business for himself at Elmore, Minn., where he has taken over the management of the Lyric theater. He is succeeded at the Albert by John Carmichael.

The Church Club at St. Paul, Minn., is using moving pictures in connection with its community club work.

Clark & Jarvis of Gladstone, N. D., have purchased the interests of Swain, Anforn & Burmester in the opera house and moving picture show at Glen Ullin, N. D.

Announcement has been made by the management of the Pastime theater at Mankato, Minn., that owing to the unusual number of outdoor attractions in Mankato and the fact that the firm has purchased the Minnesota and Iowa rights for a feature, the Pastime will not run regularly in July and August. During these two months a number of multiple reel features will be shown. The regular schedule will be resumed September 6.

W. M. Duke obtained his license for an airdome at Tenth Street and Hawthorne Avenue in Minneapolis, Minn., by promising not to run any vaudeville. Officers of the First Baptist Church and the Northwestern Bible and Missionary Training School withdrew their objections to the theater as a new neighbor when it was agreed to run only moving pictures.

John Cox has sold his moving picture theater in Salem, S. D., to L. P. Pardee who has assumed charge.

The new Ruby theater, with a seating capacity of 700, has been completed at Chelan, Wash.

"The Theater Wide Open" is the inviting summer slogan of the Grand at Rochester, Minn.

The Duluth & Iron Range railroad is conducting a moving picture "Safety First" campaign for its employees in Minnesota.

The city council of Tacoma, Wash., has practically decided to allow owners of moving picture theaters to operate their own machines after passing an examination. It is understood the examination for the owners will not be as strict as for the regular operators.

Frederick W. Moore of Salt Lake City, Utah, will be the general manager, it is said, of the Western Youth Photo Play Company which is to be incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000. J. M. A. Spence, president of the Youth Photo Play Company of New York and Chicago, has been active in the organization of the company. Willis Brown, judge of the first juvenile court in Utah will direct a number of the productions. Negotiations have been made, it is reported, for a half block in Salt Lake City to be used as a studio. Settings will not be confined to Salt Lake, but the natural beauty of the state will be featured.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

INDIANA.

THE INDIANAPOLIS exhibitors are being checked up by the police on Sunday. Since the city administration took over the Citizens' Charity Association, the funds for which came entirely from exhibitors who donated in proportion to the number they could seat, various methods have been tried by the city to collect the donations. When the association was managed by the Exhibitors' League, and the funds dispensed by the league management, there was no way to enforce donations, and many who kept open on Sunday, ostensibly for "charity," were in reality giving nothing to charity. When the city took charge the lame ones were made to march up and pay or be closed up. Then Mayor Bell decided the city could not countenance Sunday opening unless it was certain a portion of the money was going to charity and the city took charge. Now the city is not satisfied that each exhibitor is paying his just proportion and the police are on watch with thumb dials to get an accurate count upon the attendance. The city also is laboring to get proper co-operation with other charity organizations to be sure that the funds they dispense are not in duplication of expenditures by other organizations. The exhibitors are watching the city's efforts with a great deal of interest, and are particularly well pleased at the effort being made to see that all exhibitors pay their full proportionate share of Sunday receipts into the charity.

H. A. Bandy, Indianapolis manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, believes that their new quarters over the Keystone theater, to be about ideal. Ed Sourbier, when he built the Keystone theater, negotiated a lease with the Mutual people on promise of building quarters to their order. One feature of the arrangements is a steel and concrete vault for storing films. All paper is being sent out reinforced with cloth adding much to its durability. Special departments for this work have been installed and all the partitions are open at the top, permitting of good ventilation.

The Star theater man, Hope, broke down, and the house management took a quarter page in the local paper to announce its repair. The advertising value of ventilation is not overlooked in hot weather.

Samuel Berman has been made receiver for the Grand and Tokyo theaters, Logansport. The Tokyo has been closed as it is not believed it can be made profitable on account of its location. The Grand will be continued as it is not in bad condition and can be made profitable.

The idea of turning the churches over for the exhibition of motion pictures in promotion of the playground and recreation movement for children is making headway in Hammond, where it is likely some such step may be taken.

The Luna-Lite theater, Marion, is selling coupon books containing twelve admissions for fifty cents. The Luna-Lite, in announcing the booking of the Pathe daily news service, is listing in regular newspaper type and style alongside its display advertising the news features to be shown. It makes good readable publicity.

The New Era, Columbus, is offering free admission to any one clipping six consecutive advertisements of the house from the Herald, a daily newspaper.

Grimes Brothers, Crawfordsville, owners of the Arc theater, have installed a Wurlitzer pipe organ.

The Indiana branch of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in convention at North Vernon, elected O. G. Murray, Richmond, president; J. C. Trulock, Aurora, vice-president; G. B. McClelland, second vice-president; W. E. Phillips, North Vernon, secretary; W. Curl, New Albany, treasurer, and J. C. Lockwood national vice-president.

Henry G. Rosenbush has bought the Victory theater, Union City, from L. N. Botkin. Carl Rosenbush will look after the ticket office and Miss Minnie Rosenbush will be at the piano.

The Star theater, Hope, has installed an electric piano.

William Lightner, manager of the Yale theater, Princeton, will move to a better location a few doors around the corner where the sidewalk traffic is heavy.

R. L. JENNE.

NORTHWESTERN NEW YORK.

A FORMAL opening of the redecorated offices of the World Film Corporation at 23 West Swan street will be held at an early date. F. W. Young is in charge.

The Buffalo Bureau of Building has issued a permit for the construction of the Palace theater by the Palace Theater Company at 327 Main street, that city. This new moving picture house will be located opposite Shelton Square, between North and South Division streets, and wil cost $80,000.

Harry G. Johnson, who about four years ago became manager of Carnival Court, a Buffalo summer park, which has a moving picture show, is dead from an attack of heart failure. For some time he was a sport promoter and publicity agent and was formerly a newspaper man. He was 38 years old.

The M. A. Myers Amusement Company, which will conduct moving picture and other amusement resorts and do a realty business, has been incorporated in Buffalo with a capital of $200,000. The directors are Merlin A. Myers, O. G. Hoefler and T. C. Pierce, all of Buffalo.

In the new Bell Telephone building, Buffalo, moving pictures illustrating the work of the telephone girl and the great value of the telephone in daily life are being shown. Films taken in familiar places in that city are offered.

The coolness of the Academy theater, Buffalo, is being advertised extensively by M. B. Schlesinger, manager of that house. An orchestra under the direction of Henry Sticht supplies and music.

Bertram S. Forbes has been appointed organist of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo. For years he was organist of the Central Presbyterian Church of that city. He also accompanied many noted singers at Convention hall, Buffalo. A new Skinner four-manual organ will be played for the first time shortly at the Elmwood. Manager Erdman of that theater announces that there will be a special musical program to dedicate the instrument. There is an eight-piece orchestra in addition to the organ.

Joseph Schuchert and Frederic Ullman are erecting a moving picture theater at Genesee and Pratt streets, Buffalo. The house will seat 1,200 and will be up-to-date in every detail.

J. Kauffman has succeeded Frank Frane as Buffalo manager of the Greater New York Film Rental Co.

J. M. Ward, manager of the Gayety theater, Buffalo, accompanied by Mrs. Ward, has arrived from a trip to Duluth and other points up the lakes. He will reopen the Gayety for the regular season in August. This house regularly plays burlesque, with occasional Sunday performances of moving pictures.

The Majestic theater, Buffalo, will open its regular season in a few weeks, with dramatic productions. This house recently played George Kleine's attractions. John Laughlin is manager of the Majestic and Edward Scanlon press agent. They have had wide experience in their respective lines. BILLY BISON.

PHILADELPHIA.

A CHARTER has been granted in the State of Pennsylvania to the Easton Producing Company with a capital of $5,000. The incorporators are J. Fred Osterstock, W. Clayton Hackett, Robert Welch, Abraham Leveton, Julie Chamelin and Harry Dortur.

The South Street theater, 1126 South street, this city, has been conveyed by George B. McCracken to Joseph W. Cummings for a price not disclosed, subject to a mortgage of $45,000. The assessed valuation of the property is $50,000.

The management of the Exposition theater has been turned over to Walter Martin of this city. Mr. Martin was for many years proprietor of the Vineland theater. He reports business with the former as being very good considering the summer season.

In a final effort to complete the sum of $150,000 for the erection of a more efficient building at the West Philadelphia Homeopathic Hospital, 54th and Thompson streets, this city, a series of moving picture exhibitions were given at the Franklin theater, 52d street and Girard avenue. The Franklin theater has been put on sale by the proprietors.

Two frame buildings, 123-125 South Thirteenth street, Harrisburg, Pa., have been razed in preparation for the building of a moving picture theater by Bender Brothers. The building will be of brick and hollow tile and will be fireproof throughout. Large windows will be built along both sides of the theater and exits will be provided at the front and rear and on the sides. It is expected that the theater will be finished by September 1. The manager will be Albert M. Bender.

A film theater is being erected for Kahn & Greenberg at 2425 North Broad street, this city. The new theater will be one story high, and of brick and terra cotta. The seating capacity is 750.

The Belvidere theater, 8320 Germantown avenue, had its grand opening on July, 1, showing six reels of films. The place was well patronized. The price of admission is 10 cents.

A charter was granted in the State of Pennsylvania to the Lyman H. Howe Film Company, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., with a capital stock of $40,000. The incorporator is S. M. Wallingshaw, the treasurer of the company.

Plans have been completed by G. Allen Wilson for the erection and completion of a moving picture theater at Frankford, Philadelphia, which is to cost $20,000. The theater will have been completed about the end of September, and will show only feature films.

Another moving picture theater will shortly be added to the long list already doing business in Allentown, Pa., with the erection of a theater in the West End. The permit was granted to John Fegley, representing the West End Amusement Company. The new theater, which will be a one-story brick structure, will be completed as soon as possible.

The Nixon Theater, Tarantum, Pa., is closed for a period of two weeks owing to the complete renovation of the house. Manager Reed will open on July 20.

Samuel Greenberg has awarded the contract for the erection and completion of a theater building to be erected at 38th and Chestnut streets, this city, to Leroy B. Rothschild. The new building will be a one-story structure of glazed terra cotta and fireproof throughout, and will have a seating capacity of 1,300. Work on the building is being hurried as much as possible.

The Apollo theater, 52d and Girard avenue, has discontinued its week-day matinees, having one on Saturday only. CONGDON.

WASHINGTON.

CONSIDERABLE has been said concerning the effect of moving pictures upon the eye, but, according to the Optical Journal during the recent convention of the Optical Society of the State of New York, held at Albany, N. Y., a representative of the Albany Knickerbocker Press interviewed President P. A. Dilworth as to eye-strain caused by attendance at moving picture exhibitions. Dr. Dilworth was quoted as follows: "The eye-strain due to moving pictures is, in my opinion, overstated. I do not think it at all harmful to the optical organs, provided the eye is more than 20 feet from the screen and the projecting apparatus is one of the more perfect machines which does not have a too noticable flicker. This is the cause of the strain on the eye and the fatigue which sometimes follows.

"The subject is one which, so far as I know, has been too little studied and is a little out of the line of optometry; so, regarding blindness which might result I cannot speak with authority. Speaking from the broad platform of personal observation, however, I believe that while the flickering in some cases causes irritation of the eye, blindness to my knowledge has never resulted. Should this strain be noticed, it would be a good plan to rest the eyes for a few moments by closing them."

With a view to increasing its summer attendance, the management of the Virginia Theatre, on Ninth street, Northwest, is offering various vacation trips to patrons holding tickets bearing lucky numbers. The tickets used are in two sections, each one numbered, and one section is deposited in the ticket box while the other is retailed by the patron. A public drawing takes place on Friday evenings, at which time all patrons are urged to be present. The first prize consists of a round trip ticket to Atlantic City, N. J.; the second prize, a round trip ticket to Old Point Comfort, Va.; the third, a round trip ticket to Harper's Ferry, W. Va.; fourth, two round trip tickets to Chesapeake Beach (good any time); fifth, two round trip tickets to Marshall Hall, Va.; sixth, two round trip tickets to Great Falls, Va.; seventh, two reserved seats at Poli's Theatre; eighth, two reserved seats at the Columbia Theater; ninth, a pass for three months admitting two persons to the Virginia Theater, and, tenth, pass for one person for three months to the Virginia Theater. The prizes range in value from 50 cents to about $3.50.

The continued heavy rains are working havoc with the business of the airdomes, yet on fair nights they get perhaps a little more than their share. The Maycroft, on H street, in the Northeast section, is one of these. This, perhaps, is due in part to the snappy manner in which Fred Stein and his corps of ushers handle their audiences. In no legitimate house is the crowd seated more expeditiously and with less confusion than here and there is a constant movement among the patrons. A vacant space in front of the high board fence is used to stable baby carriages, and as this place is always filled with these pushomobiles, it is readily seen that the Maycroft is a family resort extremely popular.

The Moving Picture World correspondent has heard so much about "ice cooled" theaters that when he hears of such a place he is inclined to be a trifle skeptical. However, he had an opportunity to inspect the ice plant at the Cosmos Theater on Pennsylvania avenue the other day and was surprised at the efficiency of that plant. This is an exceptionally large house, yet in no part was it uncomfortable, although on the outside the mercury in the thermometers was soaring. In the refrigerating room the pipes were scovered with an icy coating and the temperature was about sixty degrees. The process in use is a water-cooling one, running water being kept at a temperature of about forty degrees and forced through pipes and over a fan-like structure. A powerful blower draws the air through the water while further on in its course is a contrivance which withdraws all moisture. Thus the house is kept cool by pure dry air. C. L. LINZ.

OHIO.

C. J. PHELPS was awarded the general contract for construction of the Marion Theater at Marion, O. He bid $11,040. The work has already progressed, and it is expected to have the house in operation September 1.

Architect Anthony Kunz, Jr., Cincinnati, has plans in preparation for a two-story prick picture house for Peter Blum at Mt. Healthy, O.

A. M. Gordon, Illuminating building, Cleveland, has had plans drawn for a $100,000 theatre building and apartment block, to be erected at the corner of East 79th street and Hough avenue. It will be four stories, of terra cotta and reinforced concrete, 80x160 feet. It will be known as the Madison Square theater.

I. C. Craig received the contract for the erection of a brick, fireproof theater and office building for E. Purvis at Logan, O., to cost $15,000

Judge W. J. Wright, of Warren county, heard the case of the Dayton View Theater, Dayton, O., in which Irvin Wuichet seeks an injunction against Joseph H. Thal who plans a theater next to his residence.

O. L. Taylor, proprietor of the Majestic Theater, Lancaster, has taken on "The Million Dollar Mystery," and has had marked success with the first series.

The Union Lumber Company has awarded the contract to build a two-story motion picture building for Isadore Weber at Canal Dover, to cost $18,000.

Architects Maetzel, Tresselt & Bassett, Columbus, have plans in progress for remodeling a theater at 77 North High street for J. W. Swain, to cost $15,000

John R. Elliott, it is understood, will be named manager of the new Hippodrome Theater at Youngstown on completion of that structure. He was manager of the Park theater and later the Grand Opera House.

Manager Clark of the Opera House at Ashland, gave the proceeds of "Judith of Bethulia" to the Ladies' Association of the Congregational Church for one day's performance last week.

The latest addition to Cleveland's amusement world is the Melba, and it is a particularly valuable acquisition to the West Side. The house was opened July 15 with a big program of feature releases. The Melba seats 450 persons and has the first plaster screen to be seen in Cleveland. Its decorations are of old gold and ivory with mahogany furniture. C. P. Goeppinger, who is manager of the Wonderland theater, is also manager of this new house. Forced ventilation has been adopted, circulating iced air. A three-piece orchestra is used for the performances.

Andrew Schiappacasse, 51 years old, pioneer motion picture man and one of the proprietors of the Alt Heidelberg cafe at Akron, died recently. He went to Akron from Cleveland about three years ago. He Started the National Theater at Akron about eight years ago and the National is now managed by his brother Louis.

The contract for the new picture theater and commercial building of the Doan Square Realty Company, Superior avenue and East 103d street, has been awarded to the Rowland A. Curry Company. The auditorium will seat 1,600 persons. RARIDAN.

PITTSBURGH.

THE Pitt Theater Company, 678 Penn avenue, is in the hands of a receiver as the result of an equity action by the National Printing Company of this city, a creditor. The printing concern alleges the theater company has outstanding obligations of $12,500. The assets are given as equipment and are valued at $15,000. For several months the Pitt theater has been devoted to feature motion plays.

Notice has been given that an application will be made to the Governor of Pennsylvania to secure a charter for a corporation to be known as the Russellton Amusement Company. The incorporators are S. W. Church, Henry B. Keil and Walter Halley. The new concern will operate a string of motion picture houses throughout Western Pennsylvania.

A novel method was instituted by the leaders of the recent Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company employees' strike at East Pittsburgh to "spot" men who deserted from the ranks of the strikers. A moving picture camera and operator were placed on an elevated platform before the entrance to the plant and pictures taken of all the men who returned to work. The films were shown later at strikers' meetings.

Two motion picture theaters will be part of the "model" town to be built by the American Zinc and Chemical Company at Langloth, Pa. The manufacturing plant was recently established at that locality and in order to provide homes for the workers and their families the company will build a town to include besides the residences, three schools, three churches and two motion picture theaters.

The standards of safety for the conduct of moving picture theaters in the state of Pennsylvania was given out last week by the State Industrial Board. This law regulates and standardizes machine tools, woodworking machinery and mechanical transmission of power. The standards were prepared by committees representing safety experts, managers, superintendents, supply firms, casualty company inspectors, architects and engineers.

C. E. Carlton of Butler, Pa., is erecting a spacious building on Main street, that city, part of which will be used as a motion picture theater. The theater will have a seating capacity of 600.

The Fort Pitt Film Company has opened an office in the Cameraphone Building, Fifth avenue. They will specialize on commercial pictures.

The Minerva theater, one of the largest motion picture concerns in Pittsburgh, has installed a splendid Photoplayer valued at $4,000. The installation of this expensive Photoplayer is quite in accordance with the policy always followed by the management of the Minerva theater; namely, in giving its patrons the best possible value for their money.

The Standard Amusement Company of Connellsville, Pa., with a capital of $10,000, has been granted a state charter. The incorporators are John M. Robinson, D. F. Hurley and S. A. Coughanour. The new firm intends to operate a chain of moving picture houses in Connellsville and neighboring towns.

The Henry Gluck Amusement Company has leased the old Coliseum building on South Mill street, New Castle, Pa., and will convert it into a motion picture and vaudeville theater. Extensive improvements are being made. MANLEY.

Picture Theaters Projected.

Sandusky, O. A handsome and modern new theatre and office building is being erected by Charles L. Blatz on Jackson street, opposite the Hotel Rieger, between Market and Washington streets. The property and building complete, will represent an investment of approximately $50,000. The structure is of modern fireproof construction, solid brick and concrete being used throughout. It will have an eight-foot basement from the curb-line to the center of the building, as well as an eight-foot basement under the entire stage. The building will be three and one-half stories high and 132 feet long, covering the entire lot. A modern store and large lobby will occupy the front portion of the building, having tiled floor and beautifully decorated walls. An ornamental marquise will extend over the sidewalk. At the right of the lobby will be the entrance to the upper floors which will be fitted up for modern offices, three being provided on each floor, fronting on Jackson street. The manager's office will be located to the right of the lobby. Entrance to the theatre proper will be through the lobby to the foyer and thence to the auditorium. The floors will be of four-inch concrete, in which the seats will be set. The walls will be handsomely decorated and the seats and furnishings will be of harmonizing colors. Toilet rooms and drinking fountains will be provided on each floor. Fire lines will be established at advantageous points. The building will be heated by the vento system and a vacuum cleaner equipment will be installed for the entire building. The lower floor will slope down to the orchestra pit and every seat will be in plain view of the picture screen, which is to be about twenty-five feet from the first row of seats. The seating capacity will accommodate about 800 persons. Two of the very latest motion picture machines will be installed and will be operated by thoroughly experienced men. A modern lighting plant will be installed in the basement which will supply current for the machines and furnish light for the entire building. Mr. Elatz has named the Ivonhoe after his niece Miss Ivon Gamble.

Slippery Rock, Pa.—J. L. Friedman & Bro., are having plans prepared for a modern moving picture theatre to be erected here during the summer.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The moving picture theatre, 2217-19-21-23 North 29th street, lot 74 by 150 feet, has been sold by Samuel Margolis to Samuel Levick for a price not disclosed, subject to mortgages of $60,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The moving picture theater at the northeast corner of 24th and Cambria streets, 124 by 60 feet, has been sold by John J. Grelis to Abraham E. Altman for a price not disclosed subject to a first mortgage of $10,000. A second mortgage of $20,000, given by H. Green to John J. Grelis, has been recorded.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Settlement has been made by Green & Altman for the Susquehanna theater, 1710 Susquehanna avenue, recently purchased by them, through Comly & Mangle, real estate brokers, from the Susquehanna Avenue Amusement Company. The conveyance was made subject to a mortgage of $40,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The premises at the southeast corner of Broad and Dauphin streets, and the adjoining property, 2253 North Broad street, lot 40 by 157 feet, have been purchased by Louis H. Cohan, representing the Central Theatre Company, from Morris L. Miller and the De Long estate, respectively. The total assessed valuation is $30,500. The purchasers will build a photoplay theatre on the lot capable of seating 1200 persons. Morris L. Miller has taken a mortgage of $30,000 on the entire lot.

Allentown, Pa.—Frank F. Seiberling, 604 North 6th street, is having plans prepared for a one-story moving picture theatre, 50 by 80 feet, to cost $7,000.

Chambersburg, Pa.—William P. Britsch has leased the New theatre to J. E. Markley of Harrisburg. The name has been changed to the Orpheum.

Easton, Pa.—C. Frank Schwep, 33 South 12th street, has let the contract to R. T. and C. D. Stewart, Reeder building, for the erection of a one-story moving picture theater, 36 by 60 feet, to cost $6,500.

Franklin, Pa.—E. E. Bailey Co., Oil City, Pa., are preparing plans for a two-story brick and steel fire-proof theater building, to be built in this city within the next few months for the Orpheum Theatre Co., to cost $17,000.

Providence, R. I.—Hippodrome Corporation, Charles Allen, treasurer, 753 Westminster street, are planning the erection of a three-story hippodrome theater, 200 by 125 feet.

Providence, R. I.—The Fair, Inc., have awarded the contract to Fanisgliette Bros. Co., 166 Broadway, for the erection of a two-story theater building, to be known as the Gaiety theater.

Madison, S. Dak.—S. K. Leen is having plans prepared for a one-story theatre building, to cost $20,000.

Bellefourche, S. Dak.—Leo Peterson is having plans prepared for a modern moving picture theater to be erected in this city in the near future.

Aberdeen, S. Dak.—Willard Richards and Andrew Hedman of Waubay, are having plans and specifications prepared for a commodious moving picture theater to be erected in the early fall.

Nashville, Tenn.—J. H. Bradford and others are interested in a project to erect a large modern moving picture theater in this city.

Sulphur, Texas.—The Carothers Brothers are having plans prepared to convert their property here into a modern moving picture theater.

Seattle, Wash.—Alexander Pantages has let the contract to Hans Pedersen for the erection of a six-story theater and office building, 111 by 120 feet, to cost about $350,000.

Tekoa, Wash.—H. L. Willette is having plans prepared for a modern moving picture theater which he proposes to commence work on very shortly.

DOTHAM, ALA.—The city officials are planning to build a handsome and commodious theater and city hall building.

MOBILE, ALA.—E. W. Barnett, who is associated with the Monarch Film Company, is having plans prepared for the erection of a modern moving picture theater in the fall.

HARTFORD, CONN.—Plans are under way for the erection of a large moving picture theater in this city for the exhibition of high-class photoplays. The house will have seating capacity for about 1,800 persons.

CHICAGO, ILL.—A. E. Ortenstein is planning the erection of a modern moving picture theater here, with seating capacity of 1,000.

CHICAGO, ILL.—National Theater Company is having plans prepared for a three-story theater and office building, 50 by 125 feet, to cost $50,000.

HUNTLEY, ILL.—W. J. Ehlert is building a moving picture theater to be completed and opened in the early fall.

HILLSBORO, ILL.—Edward Fellis will shortly commence the erection of a modern moving picture theater. The structure will be one-story and contain all the latest equipment.

MOLINE, ILL.—A. J. Reeves has plans under way for a moving picture theater, work upon which will be commenced in about a month.

MANHATTAN, ILL.—John Koerner has purchased a business building and is having plans prepared for a two-story moving picture theater which he will erect upon the site.

GARY, IND.—Venus Amusement Company, A. J. Obreshk president, are having plans prepared for the remodeling and the addition of one story, 25 by 125 feet, to their present theater building.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—Charles Woos is having plans prepared for a commodious moving picture theater, to cost about $75,000.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Plans are under way for the erection of a moving picture theater at the corner of Bardstown road and Bonnycastle avenue.

DETROIT, MICH.—John H. Kimsky and others, 2206 Dime Bank building, are planning the erection of a two-story theater, 60 by 120 feet.

DETROIT, MICH.—W. F. Klatt is planning to build another theater building. It will be a three-story structure, 30 by 60 feet.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Gladwin Park Theater Company are having plans prepared for a two-story brick moving picture theater.

HUDSON, MICH.—Ezra Dodge will shortly break ground for the erection of a new moving picture theater.

HALLOCK, MINN.—William Krumholz is having plans prepared for a large moving picture theater for the exhibition of high-class photoplays.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Among the moving picture theaters in the course of construction in this city are the Hennepin Arcade, New Palace and New Saxe.

WINDOM, MINN.—The Windom Theater Company are having plans prepared for a modern moving picture theater to be erected here in the fall.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—H. B. Lappe, 15 North 10th street, will remodel his theater building to the extent of $25,000.

LEXINGTON, MO.—Roy Culbertson and George Supe are rushing the work on an airdome which they expect to open here in a few weeks.

OMAHA, NEB.—Samuel Goldsmith, 2210 South 32d street, is having plans prepared for a one-story moving picture theater, 27 by 100 feet, to cost $5,000.

OMAHA, NEB.—J. Marsh, 3319 Lafayette avenue, is having plans prepared for a one-story moving picture theater, 50 by 106 feet, to cost $7,000.

FLUSHING, L. I., N. Y.—Albert Hergenhan of Manhattan is having plans prepared for a $25,000 moving picture theater to be erected in the near future.

MEDINA, N. Y.—Vincent White is having plans prepared for a moving picture theater, to cost $10,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—Work has been commenced on the new Chapman theater and the builders expect to have the structure completed for the opening on August 1.

MARION, OHIO.—Marion Photoplay Company are to erect a one-story moving picture theater to cost $25,000.

TOLEDO, OHIO.—William Unger, Post Office building, Bucyrus, Ohio, is preparing plans for a one-story moving picture theater, 32 by 117 feet, to cost $12,000.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Jordon Brohers' Amusement Company, Temple and Crown streets, are having plans prepared for a five-story theater and office building, 152 by 65 feet.

WILMINGTON, DEL.—Wallace E. Hance, 204 West 24th street, is preparing plans for a one-story moving picture theater, 30 by 70 feet, to cost $5,000.

INDIANA HARBOR, IND.—George Walcis is planning to build a one-story moving picture theater, 25 by 120 feet.

FARMERSBURG, IND.—A new opera house is under construction here by Thomson & McLanahan. There will be seating capacity for about 500 persons. The owners expect to have the structure completed early in September.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.—The Majestic theater of which J. P. Quinn is manager, will shortly expend about $4,000 for improvements to their building.

DECATUR, ILL.—C. E. Surface, 129 North Illinois street, has awarded the contract to W. E. Knight, 1121 North College street, for the erection of a one-story moving picture theater and store building, 40 by 150 feet.

CHICAGO, ILL.—S. W. Marx, 7 West Madison street, is having plans prepared for a one-story theater and store building, 88 by 163 feet, to cost $40,000. Seating capacity of theater will be about 800.

COGGON, IOWA.—This village is planning to erect a one-story theater, 44 by 90 feet.

WICHITA, KANS.—O. D. Barnes is expending $5,000 in remodeling his moving picture theater. Same has been leased to J. G. Holland.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Isaac Cluster, 669 West Baltimore street, is expending $5,000 for alterations and an addition to his moving picture theater.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

"THE IDENTIFICATION" (Special—Two Parts—July 27).—Selwyn, a lawyer addicted to drugs, is sent to prison for five years. Aided by Kimball and McAllister, the man escapes from the penitentiary. Dr. Bell and Bess, daughter of a millionaire, are sweethearts. The surgeon is notified by the police of Selwyn's escape and informed that the man is likely to approach physicians in an effort to secure drugs.

While out horsebacking, Bess is caught in a thundershower. A stranger comes to her assistance and offers her his coat. The two ride towards her home. Dr. Bell calls when the storm passes shortly afterwards. In the kind stranger, the physician is startled to discover the escaped convict. Later, because of Selwyn, Bess and her sweetheart quarrel. Selwyn discovers that Bess is an heiress and plans to make her his wife. Bell, perceiving that his sweetheart is fascinated by the drug fiend, warns the man to leave town. By a clever ruse, however, Kimball and McAllister make the doctor a prisoner. Selwyn seizes the opportunity to urge Bess to elope with him. The girl foolishly consents.

While motoring to the minister's, an explosion wrecks their machine. Bess is uninjured, but Selwyn is rendered unconscious. The man is taken to a farmhouse nearby. Bell, meanwhile, has outwitted his captors and made his escape. He meets the farmer to whose home Selwyn has been taken and learns of the accident.

While waiting for the doctor, Bess learns of Selwyn's terrible habit. The man becomes violent and is about to kill her when Bell and the farmer arrive. The two struggle with the crazed man. The exertion proves too much for the drug fiend's heart and he dies. Realizing how greatly she has wronged Bell, Bess begs for forgiveness.

"THE INDIAN AGENT" (Special—Two Parts—July 29).—Jack heads a party of white men who are traveling westward. The boy has been commissioned to establish an Indian agency. Manuel, a Mexican desperado, and two of his men, join the party. Jack rescues Chief Red Eagle, when the man is injured by a fall. The Indian agent takes him to camp where the redskin is given medical treatment. Anahka, the chief's squaw, believing him to have been captured by the whites, leads her tribe in an attack upon the camp. The chief, however, stops the fray and tells of the white men's kindness.

That same day, Chief Red Eagle overhears and frustrates a plot by Manuel and his men to kidnap Bess, Jack's sweetheart. The Mexicans are forced to flee. Arriving at his destination, Jack establishes the Agency. The following summer, famine descends upon the Indians. His supplies exhausted. Jack is unable to comply with their demand for food. Anahka prevents an attack upon the Agency but the red men threaten to return at the end of three days.

Two days later, Anahka, passing near some underbrush, overhears Manuel and his accomplices planning to hold up the stage coach which is due to arrive the next day. Knowing that a reward of $1,000 has been offered for Manuel's capture, the squaw arranges a trap which results in the Mexican's arrest when the the holdup is attempted. Securing the reward, Anahka purchases provisions and drives furiously towards the Agency. The Indians begin their attack and Jack and Bess face a terrible fate. Red Eagle, vainly endeavors to prevent the fray. Anahka drives up with the provisions. The savages immediately cease their attack and the lives of the whites are saved.

"THE DEADLY BATTLE AT HICKSVILLE" (July 31).—Jim and Dick, rivals for the hand of Dolly, learn that war has broken out. Jim announces that he intends to fight for the South. Just to be contrary, Dick enlists in the Northern Army. Six months later, the rivals meet on the field of battle. Jim finds that his battery has run out of cannon balls. Undismayed, he sends a squad of men to a nearby lemon grove with orders to return with a good supply of the fruit. These are placed into the cannon and fired. One of the lemons hits Dick in the eye.

The Northern troops are about to charge when they hear the 5 o'clock whistle blow. Like all good union men, they promptly quit work for the day. Dick sees Jim all alone. Promising his men overtime wages he secures their aid and captures his rival. Jim is sentenced to die at sunrise. The following morning poor Jim is led out to be shot. When placed in front of the firing squad, he is so adept at dodging, that bullets fail to touch him. Dick thereupon orders two of his men to hold Jim while the rest shoot. But the only result is that the soldiers are slain.

An idea strikes Dick and he tries to shoot his rival with a cannon. Jim, however, catches the projectiles and remains uninjured. Filled with rage, Dick has Jim tied to the muzzle of the gun. Just as he is about to shoot, the commander-in-chief arrives with the news that the war is over. With heavy heart, Dick releases his rival. The two hasten home and proceed to Dolly's house. The girl is delighted to see them. Beckoning to a man with an infant in his arms, Dolly introduces the rivals to her husband and son.

"THE MAN WITH THE GLOVE" (July 28).—Clyde Penfield, freshman, is made an object of ridicule by Walter Holmes, campus leader. Humiliated by Holmes in the presence of Hazel, his sweetheart, the freshman attacks Holmes, but is worsted. Believing Clyde a coward, Hazel contemptuously breaks their engagement. Holmes resolves to give the freshman a thorough hazing. Clyde is summoned before a council of masked students. Unnerved, Penfield breaks down when challenged to a revolver duel and pleads for mercy. Filled with contempt, the leader of the masked students brands the word "Coward" on the back of Clyde's left hand. This act of wanton cruelty results in Holmes' dismissal from college, but Clyde swears to be further avenged.

Years later, Clyde, president of an investment company, is known as "The Man With the Glove," because his left hand is always covered. Learning that his old foe, Holmes, is pressed for money, Clyde loans him $5,000, receiving a mortgage on the man's home. Holmes is ignorant of Clyde's identity. Unable to pay the debt, Holmes is driven into bankruptcy, after Clyde reveals his identity. The man is hounded by his Nemesis. Distracted by poverty and the illness of his wife and child, Holmes attempts to kill the man who has caused his misery. His effort goes for naught and Clyde has him arrested.

Holmes pleads to be allowed to see his wife and child before being taken away. Clyde consents and with an officer, accompanies the man home. There he is astounded to find that Hazel is Holmes' wife. Touched by their misery, Clyde brings about Holmes' release and paves his way towards his former prosperity. That night, in the privacy of his library, Clyde removes the glove from his left hand and serenely gazes upon the brand to which his noble conduct has given the lie.

VITAGRAPH.

"HIS KID SISTER" (July 27).—"Sis is coming home for a visit!" This is the announcement Dan Kenney, a young ranch owner, makes to Ted, his foreman, and the boys. With a whoop, they dash off to meet the 4:40 train. Ted is in love with the girl, and she with him, but Dan, her brother, causes them both much anxiety because of his fondness for gambling. During an exciting game that night, Dan is accused of cheating. There is a fight and Dan shoots his opponent. Ted hustles him out, unobserved, and brings him to a cave in the foothills. On his return to the ranch house for horses, Molly insists on accompanying him to Dan's hiding place. After seeing the men on their way to the border, she turns back home, is mistaken by the sheriff and posse for her brother and leads them a merry chase, finally reaching the barn at the ranch house slightly ahead of the men. There she hurries in and climbs through a trap door into the loft. The sheriff decides to starve "their man" out. Molly finds a basket of apples in the loft and feels sure of her vantage. As the hours pass, both parties fall asleep. Molly awakens and knowing her brother is now safely across the border, slides down the rope and greets her "captors" with a sweet smile. The discomfitted sheriff is obliged to acknowledge defeat. Later, far across the border, Dan, now a conscientious worker, and with no longer a taste for gambling, heartily sanctions Ted's engagement to "His Kid Sister."

"JOHN RANCE, GENTLEMAN" (Special.—Two Parts—July 28).—John Rance, a young hospital interne, becomes ill from overwork and goes to a summer hotel for rest. There he meets Lesbia Vane, a frivolous, pleasure-seeking girl, who flirts with him. On return to the city, Lesbia scorns John's love and flouts him. He is heartbroken, leaves the hospital and takes up medical work among the sailors. He meets an old friend, George Cummings, who is about to start on a cruise around the world. John tells him of Lesbia, without disclosing the girl's name. Cummings, while abroad, meets and marries Lesbia. Three years later, he returns with her to America and invites John to come and visit them. Lesbia is cold and indifferent to her husband's love, and when she and John come face to face, realizes she really loves him. She essays the role of temptress, but John turns from her coldly. Later, her husband overhears Lesbia passionately declaring her love for his friend, who tells her, "I love you as of old, but your husband is my dearest friend." Cummings is dazed, and disappears, leaving a note saying he wishes to make Lesbia and John happy by his action. John finds the note, and later, his friend's body, realizes the tremendous sacrifice Cummings has made, and determines his own renunciation shall be as great. Shortly afterwards, when Lesbia tells him, "I am free, I am wealthy; let us be happy," John sternly hands her the note left by her husband. Her better self is awakened and with an understanding of the nobility of the two men, turns sadly away, leaving John Rance alone with the consciousness of having been true to his friend and himself.

"OFFICER KATE" (July 29).—Being an exceptionally strong-minded woman, Kate Simpkins decides to join the Suffragettes, and her meek little husband makes no objections. The ladies are urging the mayor to appoint policewomen to the force, and after some argument, he agrees to give them a try-out. Kate is decided upon to be the first policewoman. She experiences trials and tribulations while on the force, of which she never dreamed, and almost wishes she were simply Kate Simpkins again instead of "Officer Kate." Meanwhile, her husband has grown very tired of doing housework, so hires a very pretty girl as housekeeper. Kate, after spending a very unpleasant evening on fixed post in a heavy rainstorm, comes home and finds her husband and the new girl there. Everything seems to be running smoothly, and her husband appears quite contented. Kate flies into a rage, almost pushes the girl out the door, and orders her not to come back. After meditating over the fixed post business, and a few more of her trials while on the force, Kate decides home is the place for a woman after all, and if she does not do the housework, and keep her husband company, some one else will. She turns to her hubby, greets him affectionately and vows never to leave home again, and to resign at once from the police force.

"THE GREATER MOTIVE" (July 20).—Bob Hammond, a promising young boxer, is taken East by his manager to meet some of the better man in his class. Bob promises his sweetheart, Maggie Dowling, he will return and marry her. In the East he becomes champion in his class, and is known as "The Battler." Among his new friends, he temporarily forgets Maggie, and she, tiring of waiting for him, marries his old sparring partner, Jimmy Kelly, who has become quite a fighter himself. Bob's manager plans a tour of the country and Bob tells him to make the first stop Pittsburgh, his old home, where he plans to marry Maggie. Kelly and his wife are in bad straits. Maggie having just recovered from a long illness, their resources are sadly depleted. Kelly reads of the coming of the "Battler," and signs to fight him, winner take all. When "The Battler" learns his old friend has married his sweetheart, he is furious, but is glad when he remembers he is to fight him, as he plans to give Kelly a terrible beating. Before the fight, "The Battler" hears of the awful straits of the Kellys, and he experiences a change of heart. After thinking it over, he determines to let Kelly defeat him, so that he can win the money, bring it home to his wife, and help to restore her health. All is carried out as he plans, and although experiencing the sting of defeat for the first time, knows that he has performed a good service and it will make her happy.

"PRIVATE BUNNY" (July 31).—Working as a farm hand for Mr. Finch, Bunny is in love with Flora, his employer's daughter, and all goes well until Ezra Wilson, a former resident of the town, returns from the city to see his old friends. Ezra, resplendent in a brand new Subway Guard uniform, makes a deep impression when he tells everybody he is "connected with a railroad." Flora is simply carried away by him and gives Bunny the cold shoulder. Bunny leaves for the city determined to win both fame and fortune. In the city, he notices a sign reading, "Able-bodied men wanted for U. S. Army," and after seeing a vision of himself marching down Main Street at the head of his troops while Flora looks on admiringly, Bunny becomes a recruit. He has quite a few mishaps, is badly hazed by the other recruits, does all the hard work, causes the drillmaster to lose his temper, and is finally put on guard duty. Here he falls asleep at his post, is arrested and sent to the guard house, where the sentinel carelessly replies to Bunny's inquiry, "Oh, they will only shoot you at sunrise!" Bunny spends a very bad night, and before dawn manager to escape, boards an outgoing freight and arrives at his home town next day. There he and his uniform create a sensation. Flora humbly begs to be taken back, gives him a big dinner party, and things look very bright indeed. In the midst of the jollification, the Sergeant from his regiment stalks in and arrests Bunny as a deserter. Amid jeers, the poor man is marched away with a ball and chain on his leg and placed in durance vile.

"THE VIOLIN OF M'SIEUR" (Special—Two Parts—August 1).—When Pere Ceroms bent his fine old classic face over his violin and played "The Last Rose of Summer," Yvonne, his daughter, and Napoleon, his dog, would creep to his side and drink in the exquisite melody of the fine old Cremona. France was then on the verge of war. An old collector hears of Pere's wonderful Cremona and offers him four thousand francs for it, which is refused. War breaks out, the Prussians capture the town and one, pushing old Pere aside, chucks little Yvonne under the chin. The old man, unable to restrain himself, smashes his precious violin over the soldier's head. Yvonne and her lover, Jean, escape, but Pere Cerome is taken prisoner. After years of suffering in the Prussian prison, he is released and revisits the little town, but does not know a soul, nor can anyone tell him where Yvonne and Jean are. At seventy, penniless and alone in the world, the poor old man is in despair, until he finds his old dog. He secures a cheap violin and one day, while playing it in a little by-street of Paris, a child smiles at him from a window. Pere smiles back and plays once more "The Last Rose of Summer." The old days appear to him in a vision. As the last strain quivers on the air, there before his eyes is Yvonne in the flesh, and behind her, big Jean, himself. With a prayer of joyful thanksgiving, the old man greets his loved ones, and is soon welcomed by his loved ones. Many evenings thereafter Yvonne and little Yvonne kneel by the fireside and stroke Napoleon's shaggy coat while grandpa plays the old familiar song.

EDISON.

"A CANINE RIVAL" (Eighth of the Wood B. Wedd series—July 27).—When Wood B. Wedd, at his friend Darby's instigation, began to pay marked attention to the beautiful Dora Wayne, he ran up against a snag from the very start. Dora owned a dog. Wood B., who hated dogs collectively and individually, would not, however, have minded the mere fact that Dora owned a dog, had it not been that she seemed to care so much for the brute. Gyp, the dog, had a disposition which had evidently been spoiled in his youth. Realizing that Wood B. hated him, he took no pains to conceal his own feeling toward Wood B. Wedd. Accordingly, Gyp would, on occasion, bite Wood B.

When Dora went away from town for a few weeks, and asked Wood B. to take care of her precious Gyp while she was gone, Wood gladly consented, not because he loved Gyp but because he hoped that his noble spirit of unselfishness would make an impression on Gyp's mistress. Gyp did not care a bit about the change in domicile. He made himself perfectly at home in Wood B.'s house. Inside of a week, he ran it. Wood B. was afraid to assert himself in the slightest degree.

One morning, while the enslaved Weed was taking his master out for a walk, Gyp espied a cat, and, thrilled with the possibilities of chase and mortal combat, escaped from Wood B. and set off in pursuit. Wood B., torn between conflicting desires, followed. After Gyp had led Wood B. into an extremely unpleasant altercation with a washerwoman, he disappeared. Wood B., filled with horror at the possibility of Dora returning, and finding that he had lost her precious Gyp, advertised in the papers, offering a reward for the dog's return. After a vivid experience with a few hundred boys carrying lost strayed, and stolen dogs, Gyp was finally regained in an extremely disheveled condition. Dora returned, and Wood B. hurried to her with the dog. Dora told him sweetly that he might keep Gyp to remember her by. Then she introduced Wood to her new dog, and the man who had given it to her—her husband.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE LOST STRADIVARIUS" (Ninth of the Chronicles of Cleek Series, July 28).—When the great Botticelli "Bella Donna Della Mia Mente" was stolen from the Art Museum by members of the militant suffragette party, popular feeling ran very high. Boronoff, the great Russian violinist, offered his services for a great popular concert, the proceeds of which were to be placed in a fund for the purpose of regaining the stolen masterpiece. Boronoff owned the most valuable violin in the world—a real Stradivarius, unequalled in workmanship and tone. At his hotel in London, he demanded that the proprietor provide a safe for the proper safekeeping of his beloved instrument as well as for his valuable collection of gold and silver medals.

Shortly after the safe had been brought to his room, Vera North, one of the leaders of the militant party, called on Boronoff, and begged him not to hold the concert because it would conflict with a large mass meeting planned by the suffragettes. Boronoff refused to grant her request, and Miss North hysterically warned him to be careful how he opposed the interests of her party. When Boronoff went out that afternoon, Miss North came back to the hotel and went up to his room. The next morning, London was startled by the news that the master's violin had been stolen.

Hamilton Gleek, assigned to the case, went directly to the hotel. In the violinist's rooms, he met Boronoff, and Paradine, his protege. Paradine did most of the talking. The great violinist seemed strangely quiet. The safe had been opened, the violin and medals extracted, and the seals replaced on the safe. A hatpin found on the floor seemed to point to Vera North as the thief. Gleek had Miss North brought to the hotel, and questioned her. She stoutly maintained that she had only come to the violinist's rooms to leave a note of apology for her rudeness to him. How Cleek's sharp eyes discovered the clue to the solution of the mystery must be left for the film to explain. Suffice it to say that in an extremely dramatic moment, he clapped handcuffs on Paradine, tore the disguise from the supposed violinist, and discovered the real Boronoff, bound and gagged behind some tapestry.

"SOMETHING TO A DOOR" (July 29).—The fact that her father had absolutely forbidden them to speak to each other did not prevent Bessie and Jim Ferris from being very much devoted to each other. Mr. Hammond was absolutely unable to see Jim in the light of a prospective son-in-law, however, and the young people were obliged to exercise considerable ingenuity to see anything of each other at all. One evening, Mr. Hammond went down to an important business engagement. Bessie promptly called Jim up, and asked him to come over and see her. Jim, in spite of his protests, borrowed a new overcoat from his roommate and went to the Hammond home.

As he and Bessie were sitting in the parlor, saying exactly what they thought about each other, Mr. Hammond returned unexpectedly. Jim hid behind the piano. Mr. Hammond sent his daughter off to bed, and settled down in the parlor to read. After three hours of agony for the unhappy Jim, Mr. Hammond also left for bed. Jim crept stiffly from behind the piano, and stole to the door. He knocked a vase over in the hall, and in his desperate hurry to escape, slammed the door on his friend's overcoat. Mr. Hammond aroused by the noise, came down stairs, looked out through the glass on the door, recognized Jim, and with a smile of satisfaction, telephoned to the police asking them to come up and arrest a burglar in a light overcoat on his porch.

Jim overhe rd Hammond's remarks, slipped out of the overcoat and fled. Mr. Hammond, discovering his flight, came out on the porch to get the overcoat. The door slammed behind him. He put the overcoat on for warmth. When the police came, they, not unnaturally, arrested him. Meanwhile, Jim had been obliged

"Hallberg"

TALK NO. 35

I WILL SAVE YOU $25.00

And Give Your Operator a Treat

You know that the price of the

"SIMPLEX" PROJECTOR

was increased

$25.00

on June 1st, 1914

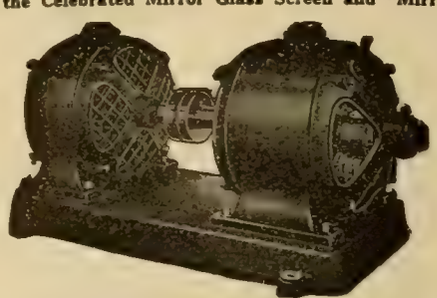
I have 10 Simplexes which I bought before June 1st, brand new, of latest design, with one year's guarantee, on which I will save you $25.00 each besides the regular discount which you are entitled to, BUT you must have your order with me, with cash, before July 29th, 1914.

I take old machines in trade as part payment for new ones, and I also make liberal allowance on your old rheostats, A. C. Economizers, A. C. to D. C. Converters and Rectifiers in trade for the celebrated "HALLBERG" A. C. to D.C. Economizers, which give the BEST LIGHT with the LEAST CURRENT.

Distributor of the Celebrated Mirror Glass Screen and "Mirroroide" Curtain

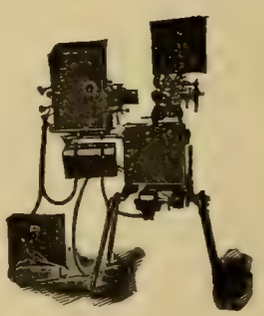
SIMPLEX

Distributor Simplex Machines



HALLBERG A. C. to D. C. ECONOMIZER FOR ONE OR TWO LAMPS

Distributor Power's 6-A Machines



POWER'S 6A

Factory Selling Headquarters for POWER'S, SIMPLEX, MOTIOGRAPH and EDISON MACHINES, "HALLBERG" STANDARD A. C. ECONOMIZERS, "HALLBERG" D. C. ECONOMIZERS, MERCURY ARC RECTIFIERS, MOVING PICTURE MACHINES and FLAME ARC CARBONS

I EQUIP THEATRES COMPLETELY

Free Circulars on all makes of M. P. Machines, but Hallberg's Big Catalogue, 100 pages, costs you 25c. by mail.

J. H. HALLBERG "THE HOUSE OF QUALITY" 36 East 23rd Street, New York

to confess to his friend what had happened to the coat. Fifteen minutes later, the police station was the storm center of a small sized riot. After the ownership of the coat had been finally established, Jim's friend finally settled the situation by threatening to write the whole affair up for the newspapers.

"THE STUFF THAT DREAMS ARE MADE OF" (Special—Two Parts—July 31).—When Nellie and the man she loved were forced, by the cruel vagaries of fortune to go to the city and earn their living, terrible things immediately began to happen to them. When Nellie's employer tried to make love to her, and Joe knocked him down, the thwarted villain swore to wreak a cruel and unusual vengeance upon the pair, which the same he immediately went and started for to do. He was aided in his nefarious plans by a friend in human form—the villainess. She loved Joe, but he was cold. So she decided to make things warm for him. When Joe took Nellie into a corner drug store to buy her an ice cream sody, the villain blew up the soda fountain. The villainess immediately thereafter, shut Joe into a folding bed, and when Nellie's prompt assistance spoiled her gentle little plan to crush the young man's neck, she took Joe, with the villain's help, and chained him in the path of an express train.

But again, they reckoned without Nellie. Nellie lived up to what was expected of her as the heroine of the piece. She broke the chains and released her hero. The affectionate pair withdrew to a shack for refuge. The villain hurled a bomb at the shack, utterly annihilating it. Joe and Nellie were hurled high into the air. Looking down, they saw their uncouth enemies laughing at them. Incensed by their lack of sympathy, Joe dropped a piece of the window frame, which he had brought with him, on the villain's head. Unfortunately, the villain was only stunned. Hardly had Joe and Nellie reached the ground when the villainess shut Nellie in an office safe, and hurled the safe from the top of a high office building. It took all of Joe's efforts to rush down the stairs in time to catch the safe at the bottom of its terrible fall.

But Nellie's brave efforts were all in vain, for after she had rescued Joe from prison, and after a sensational fight with the villainess, interrupted by the inopportune arrival of a mouse, Joe decided to marry the villainess. When dear little Nellie pleaded with him, he gave her a rude push in the face. Then Nellie woke up, and discovered that the mortgage had been renewed on their home, and that she and Joe would not have to work for their living after all.

"FARMER RODNEY'S DAUGHTER" (August 1).—John Rodney's mind was set on having Dora, his daughter, marry Roger Barclay, a rich neighbor. Dora was equally convinced in her mind that she would not marry Barclay, and that she would marry John. When Rodney caught John making love to Dora, he promptly discharged him that night. Dora met John in the garden, ran away with him, and married him. When John and Dora returned to her father's farm, Rodney refused even to speak to his daughter. The young couple settled down in a little house not far away from the Rodney farm.

Several years later, Dora, John and their little son were in rather hard straits. Through Barclay's influence John lost his new position in the village store, and a serious illness prevented him from seeking other work. Dora's mother and brother did their best to help the poor young wife without Rodney's knowledge, but they could not do much. One day, Hiram, Dora's brother, took her small son out to play in the hay fields. Rodney came upon the child, and without in the least knowing who it was, felt strangely attracted to it.

A curious intimacy sprang up between the two, and Bobby got into the habit of running out into the fields to meet his friend. One day, his mother missed him, and went to look for him. She found him playing with her father. When Rodney discovered that his little playmate was his own grandson, he at first turned bitterly away, but the ties of blood overcame his foolish stubborness, and turning again, he took his daughter and grandson into his arms.

ESSANAY.

"SWEEDIE AND THE LORD" (July 27).—Mr. and Mrs. Skidoo receive a letter from Lord Bunkum, saying he is coming to pay them a visit. They decide they do not wish to see the Lord, so they leave, telling Sweedie to inform his Lordship they have been called away. Meantime a tramp finds the Lord's letter, which Mr. Skidoo has dropped, and decides to impersonate Lord Bunkum. Sweedie, at the time, dresses up as Mrs. Skidoo. Then things begin to happen. After a screamingly funny dinner party the Skidoos return home and Sweedie and the bogus lord land in the duck pond.

"A CLASH OF VIRTUES" (July 28).—Young Evanston forges his employer's check in order to make good his margins on a wheat deal. He loses and Weatherbee gives him until morning to make good the forged check. His sister learns of his crime and pleads in vain with Weatherbee for leniency. Desperate, she forces an entrance to the financier's office that night and recovers the forged check. Gordon, the financier's son, is in love with Winnie. He returns to the office that night and finds her. Winnie's brother also returns in an attempt to recover the check. The three meet in a tensely dramatic situation. Gordon makes good the check, announces his engagement to Winnie and all ends happily.

THE FABLE OF "THE COMING CHAMPION WHO WAS DELAYED" (July 29).—The coming "champ" decides he is so good he can go around a Dub like a Cooper around a Barrel. He hooks up with a Foxy Manager. They arrange to pick out Soft Ones to begin with and work up to the championship. They find a Has-Been. After the Coming Champ and the Physical Wreck sign articles, they begin training. Although the coming champ was satisfied his hard Punches would kill the poor old Has-Been, he begins to worry. When the battle opens the Has-Been does a marathon in pursuit of the Coming Champ. The Coming Champ was doing fine work until somebody turned off the Sun-Light.

"SNAKEVILLE'S HOME GUARD" (July 30).—Slim organizes a regiment to protect Snakeville against the Mexicans. Sophie, for whose hand Slim and Mustang Pete are rivals, induces Pete to join. Pete, although he dislikes the idea, enlists, and the way Slim puts him through the manual is uproariously laughable. Pete finally deserts, hides beneath the drill hall and fires two revolvers in such a way that Slim believes they are being attacked by the enemy. Slim tries to escape, but is caught and driven out of town on a mule. He finds the Mexicans hidden in a house, locks the door on them and when Pete, Sophie and the rest of the defenders arrive, he has the enemy's arms and is in command of the situation. Sophie falls into his arms and Slim is hailed as the conqueror.

"THE SQUATTER'S GAL" (August 1).—Broncho Billy learns that part of his land is occupied by a "squatter." He orders the "squatter" evicted. The latter starts out to kill Billy, but Bessie, the "squatter's" daughter, prevents him. She pleads with Billy to permit them to remain on the land. Billy immediately falls in love with her. He returns with the girl to the "squatters" house only to find that it has been burned by a posse sent to evict the father and daughter. Billy offers them his own home and then writes his mother he "has a hunch" he is going to be married soon.

"THE SEVENTH PRELUDE" (Special—Two Parts—July 31).—Jack Gordon, a private detective, becomes interested in a mysterious murder, which has baffled the police. Warren, a wealthy widower, whose hobby is music, has been shot to death in his home one night while playing Chopin's "Seventh Prelude." Only two people are in the house at the time—Alice Warren, his pretty daughter, and James Cummings, her uncle. Warren's will contains a provision appointing Cummings executor of the Warren fortune and guardian of Alice, she being under age. To this Alice objects absolutely, and Cummings can do nothing. The girl now develops a strange mental hallucination, apparently. Each night, at the very hour of her father's death, she hears the "Seventh Prelude" being played in the great mansion, and declares it to be her father calling to her. Cummings consults a psychologist, who begins to treat the girl for an apparent form of insanity. It is at this time that Gordon becomes interested in the case, secures all the facts of the murder from Alice, and declares his intention of saving her.

Learning from the lawyer that Alice has objected to Cummings as her guardian and executor of her fortune, Gordon thoroughly examines the Warren mansion and decides on immediate action. With his assistant Hall, he goes to the Warren home that night and in the most extraordinary manner overcomes Cummings in a desperate hand-to-hand struggle, discloses a hidden phonograph in a closet with a piano rendition record of Chopin's "Seventh Prelude" and unravels the mystery of Warren's death. Cummings himself had committed the murder, and balked by Alice's objection to him as executor and guardian, had shrewdly planned to have her declared insane by playing the phonograph record each night at the hour of Warren's death, thus overruling her objection in court and gaining free access to her fortune. Luckily Gordon's handling of the case brings the murderer to justice, Cummings confesses and Alice is saved.

SELIG.

"A FIVE HUNDRED DOLLAR KISS" (Special—Two Parts—July 27).—Vivian Swift is very popular with the young men and has made a specialty of luring them into her snare and making them feel foolish when they discover that she has been merely playing with them. The society boys at the country club have been the special victims of her wiles. Vivian intends no wrong, but does not realize the extent to which she has prompted her young men friends to discuss her flirtatious character. Three of the most attractive men in the club, Tom, Dick and Harry, have been in Europe for some time and have not yet become acquainted with Vivian. On their return to the club, the other fellows hasten to tell them of the heartless actions of Vivian and all agree that it would be well if she could be taught a lesson. The discussion culminates in a wager of $500 that either Tom, Dick or Harry will, after a week's endeavor, be able to obtain Vivian's consent to being kissed.

Tom has the first try. He flatters Vivian in every way imaginable and she rises to the gait with great success—yet, when it comes to the final point of permitting Tom to kiss her, she evades the issue with great cleverness, and Tom's chances for winning the bet expire by limitation after a busy week.

Next Dick comes into the field, and has his week of try-out. Dick permits himself to be placed in all sorts of positions where sympathy will be aroused, such as being thrown from a horse, becoming disinherited, threatening suicide—all of which brings out a lot of laughs. Dick fails to win the wager because he cannot persuade Vivian to permit him to kiss her within the week's time.

Now comes Harry. There are constant discussions at the country club where the gay parties of young people congregate for dancing, and entertainment, and the two judges, one of whom is a minister, bob up and down mysteriously from behind settees, fountains, and from all sorts of unexpected places, because it is up to them to decide if the wager shall have been won or lost. Harry has adopted an entirely new policy for the conduct of his campaign. He announces that he believes that the interest of a girl can best be obtained through apparent disregard for herself. In other words, he believes that if he leaves the girl alone, her curiosity will be excited and it will be an easy matter for him to become acquainted with her and win the wager. There are a number of comical scenes in which Harry successfully evades Vivian, and dodges opportunities for being introduced to her. He does this in such an ostentatious manner, that Vivian becomes positively angry and shows a strong determination to compel him to meet her and be introduced. When he considers that she has been sufficiently led into the trap, permits himself to be cornered and introduced to her.

Vivian seeks opportunities for proving to Harry that she is an entertaining and charming girl. Harry continues his policy of apparent disregard for her, until he discovers that he has actually fallen a victim to her loveliness, and wishes that he had not made the wager. In fact, Harry falls desperately in love with Vivian, and she apparently reciprocates. The funniest of all the scenes is where Harry brings Vivian to shore after a rough canoe trip on the lake, arriving at a fisherman's hut in the pouring rain. The two ever-present judges are on the job, and have concealed themselves in the fisherman's hut. Harry takes off his coat and places it about the shoulders of Vivian to shelter her from the rain. The contact causes Harry to lose his self-restraint, and seizing her in his arms, he presses a kiss upon her willing lip. Out bob the two judges, and the wad of $500, the amount of the wager, is handed to Harry, who scorns it. He cleverly extricates himself from a most embarrassing situation by answering Vivian's inquiry as to who the young men are, by stating that he had arranged for a clergyman and best man to see him happily married to her. The wedding ceremony is performed in the pouring rain by the young clergyman and everybody is happy.

"MUFF" (July 28).—Janet and Doris Bentham, orphan girls of moderate means in a small New Jersey town, become separated through the impulsiveness of Doris, who is a light-hearted girl of sixteen years, winsome—loved and mothered by her devoted elder sister. Doris becomes infatuated with a handsome circus rider, unprincipled but clever. She elopes with him. Her husband trains Doris to become a circus rider. Doris is injured in a fall from her horse two years after leaving home, and finding that her injuries will prove fatal, she makes her husband promise he will give their infant boy to her sister, Janet; also that he will recompense Janet for taking care of and raising the child. Lablanche, the unscrupulous husband, does not care to recognize the responsibility of the child after the death of his wife, Doris, but having some remnant of decency in his heart, notwithstanding his general lawlessness, he takes the infant to the home of Janet, and leaves it lying on the door-step. In order to disguise any clues that might be followed concerning the parentage of the child, Lablanche removes all its clothing and places the tiny baby inside a large fur muff.

The old maid aunt adopted the child and learned to love it with all the tenderness of a mother's heart. The baby grew up a handsome young man, but owing to the circumstances of his being found on the doorstep, he bore the nickname of "Muff." As the years go on he finds a sweetheart, but due to his reckless ways and the frequent admonitions which he receives from his adopted mother and his sweetheart, he runs away to the city and falls among evil companions. Among these crooks is Lablanche, his father. These crooks encourage Muff to engage in a burglary. An old lady is stopping at a hotel and is reported to have a lot of money. She is no other than Janet, the foster mother of Muff, who has come to the city to find her missing loved one. The robbery takes place, but immediately after the identity of Muff is revealed. The horrified Lablanche discovers that he has made his own son an accomplice and that they have perhaps murdered the loving sister of his dead wife, and the foster mother of Muff. The shock reforms Lablanche, who goes West to try and make a man of himself. Muff, thoroughly repentant, returns to his own home with happy Aunt Janet, and his sweetheart Polly.

CALIFORNIA EXHIBITORS APEX FEATURE SERVICE PANTAGES THEATER BLGD SAN FRANCISCO

"THE MOTHER HEART" (Special—Two Parts—July 29).—Carolyn Carter was the daughter of rich parents. Her mother was a typical worldly woman, a society leader, whose only aim in life was to dominate her social set and uphold her position in society. Little Carolyn was a warm-hearted child, whose sympathies were with children. In her early days she manifested this particularly, by her love of dolls, and her preference to play with them, dressing them and handling them as though they were really alive; and also, as she grew older, in making life pleasant for the little children in the neighborhood. As she grew in beauty, her inclination toward children seemed to increase. She had no sympathy with her mother's social ambitions, and as a consequence she felt lonely in the great big house with all its wealth of magnificent furnishings, pictures, etc., and she really had no person to whom she could look for sympathy and whose tastes were in accord with her.

Mrs. Carter finally satisfies one of her great ambitions, which is to marry Carolyn to a wealthy roue Fordyce, and Carolyn finds her maidenly thoughts and ideals rudely shattered. Her home conditions become unbearable—she runs away from home and obtains a divorce. In the locality where she finds refuge from the frauds and shams of society, Carolyn becomes acquainted with a handsome shepherd—a magnificent specimen of manhood, but wholly without education. He has always been a student of nature, and his education has been of the heart instead of the mind. The natural affiliation of the two instinctively affectionate beings, culminates in a romance which presents one of the most beautiful pictures ever produced. It is filled with heart interest, and is one of the most remarkable exposures of the fallacies of society life ever produced. Of course, they are married and Carolyn realizes her great ambition—a little child blesses their union.

"WHEN THE COOK FELL ILL" (July 31).—Patsy, the cook of the "Flying U" ranch, is passionately fond of canned corn. Every time he goes to town to buy supplies for the camp, cases of canned corn head the list. Patsy may forget at times to order a special brand of tobacco for the boys, or some of the trimmings that go to make a camp dinner more acceptable, but he never fails to order the canned corn. Every day for breakfast, dinner and supper, the big kettle of canned corn forms the principal article of diet. The boys being "good fellows" stand this for a long time until they feel that they cannot accept corn as the main article of diet any longer. Then they revolt and refuse to be served from Patsy's huge kettle any more. Patsy is sensitive, and his feelings are hurt, but his appetite for canned corn is still unimpaired. After the boys walk out on him and scorn the breakfast of canned corn, Patsy retires to the cook tent with the kettle and gorges himself to repletion from its contents.

The boys are sore and hungry, but they leave the camp for the range to perform their regular day's work. As the boys disappear in the distance, Patsy is taken with terrific cramps. He has a horrible suspicion that he has been poisoned. His examination of the empty corn cans suggests ptomaine poison. The camp is deserted and the boys will not return until five o'clock in the evening. Patsy spends hours of agony and realizes that he has had too much of a good thing. After a day of suffering, the boys return to camp. No dinner in sight. Patsy is discovered groaning in pain. They realize his desperate condition. They are glad that Patsy has had a lesson, but do not want him to die. Weary, one of the boys rides off to town to get a doctor, while the rest prepare the supper. After many adventures with the doctor who is in no condition to travel, Weary brings him to camp. In the meantime, a good samaritan, a stranger with a big whisky bottle, has doctored Patsy with liberal decoctions of liquor, so that the doctor's services are not required. All decide to climb on the "water wagon."

"LOVE VS. PRIDE" (August 1).—Rosemary Darcy is the daughter of parents in modest circumstances. They live the simple life. Rosemary has a wealthy and childless aunt, whom she has not seen since she began her education at school. Shortly after her graduation she is invited to visit her aunt and is entertained lavishly by Mr. and Mrs. Marshall. Another visitor, Grace Danton, becomes attached to Rosemary, and they become fast friends. Rosemary is delighted with the luxurious surroundings in the Marshall home, because she loves good things of this world.

Stephen, the man of Rosemary's heart, is not wealthy, but a simple hearted man of fine character and high ideals. He lives in her home town, and they become engaged. Upon the death of Mrs. Marshall some time after Rosemary's visit, Mrs. Darcy and Rosemary proffer their sympathy to the widower, who appreciates it and urges them to continue their visit indefinitely. He is especially attracted by the youth and brightness of Rosemary. Marshall goes to visit the Darcys for a few days, but before his departure he asks Rosemary to marry him. Her love for Stephen inclines her to refuse the wealth widower, while her pride and ambition urge her to accept the opportunity for wealthy and social advancement. She casts Stephen aside and marries Marshall. Notwithstanding her marriage, she endeavors to keep Stephen in love with her, promising to marry him upon the death of her husband, whose departure from this world she looks forward to eagerly, but Stephen has become disgusted with her worldly ideas and no longer loves her.

Stephen falls in love with Rosemary's closest friend, Grace Danton, and marries her. Rosemary feels this keenly. The years pass, finding Rosemary a childless and disillusioned woman, but still charming and beautiful. Marshall does not die as anticipated. She finds herself a slave of the helpless old man, while Stephen and her dearest friend, Grace Danton, live in love and happiness surrounded by their children.

MELIES.

"WANTED, A SWEETHEART" (July 23).—Two girls put an advertisement in the paper stating they desire to make the acquaintance of a young gentleman with a view to marriage. To the numerous replies they receive from the ad. they send the same answer, designating the place of meeting and that each lover is to have a rose in his mouth. About thirty old beau brummels appear to keep the appointment. the girls enjoying the joke from a neighboring window. All goes well until they upset the box containing the answers to their ad., which falls at the feet of two of the disappointed ones. As the girls reach the street to recover their letters, they are made to pay the penalty of a kiss to each of the two disappointed lovers.

"HIS SENSE OF DUTY" (July 22).—A country doctor loses his savings in a stock deal. A widow, one of his wealthy clients, is stricken with a peculiar malady and after bringing a noted professor for a consultation the doctor learns that her life can only be saved by either a violent emotion or a strike of sudden good fortune. The widow realizes her end is near, so makes her will in favor of the doctor and his daughter. She shows it to the doctor and he deliberately burns it up. In doing this he makes the woman believe she is not a hopeless invalid and after regaining her health she asks to be a big sister to the doctor's young daughter and a daughter to the doctor. They come to live with the rich widow and as a final reward she presents the doctor with an auto for calling upon his patients.

"BLACK PEARLS" (Special—Two Parts—July 25).—Two members of the "swell mob" a man and a woman, planned to get a famous dancer's black pearl necklace, valued at $100,000. First, they tried burglary, but the man was nearly caught, and had his hand bitten in the struggle. Then they tried more skilful plans; the man pretended to be a Count, and the woman became the dancer's maid. The sham Count in time won the dancer's heart, and she consented to marry him. At the marriage breakfast the Count refused to take off his gloves, and this aroused a detective's suspicion, but that evening the Count tried to get the jewels. Luckily the detective hastened back just in time to catch and unmask the criminal.

PATHE.

PATHE WEEKLY NO. 45, 1914 (July 15th).—Salem, Mass.—The work of destruction and reconstruction progresses. Menacing walls and towers left by the fire are destroyed.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Wanamaker balloon "America III." National Race Entry, makes 65 miles in maiden trip.

New York City, N. Y.—While preparing a bomb, three I. W. W. agitators are wiped out and a score injured by a terrible dynamite explosion, which wrecked a 6-story building on Lexington avenue and demoralized the East Side.

Evansville, Ind.—German Day Celebration—Historical Pageant and Turnfest.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Before a vast throng, national in its scope, members of Congress and Governors of the 13 original states were present when President Wilson delivered a 4th of July address at Independence Hall.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Three Baby Lions, first born at Cincinnati Zoo.

Albany, N. Y.—Golden Jubilee Celebration of the Rt. Rev. T. M. A. Burke, Bishop of Albany.

New York City, N. Y.—City's New Fire Boat, "William J. Gaynor" making her trial run.

Moscow, Russia.—Disastrous fire in heart of this city's commercial center, destroys Alexander's Passage built in 1878.

Charlottesville, Va.—University of Virginia Summer School celebrates Independence Day.

Paris, France.—The latest coiffures and Paris fashions.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 44, 1914 (July 8).—Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—Inter-collegiate eight-oared varsity race of four miles on the Hudson. Won by Columbia. Time, nineteen minutes thirty-seven four-fifths seconds.

New York City, N. Y.—Mayor Mitchel presents "Honor Medals" to fire heroes.

New York City, N. Y.—"Baby Week" prize-winning babies of Greater New York.

Salem, Mass.—$20,000,000 fire destroys "The City of Witches." Over three square miles in ruin. Twenty-two thousand made homeless by flames.

New York City, N. Y.—New wireless telephone sensation. Inventor Dr. D. G. McGaa talks from Steamship Tyler, at sea, to New York Herald office.

Madrid, Spain.—Marriage of Kermit Roosevelt to Miss Belle Willard.

Syracuse. N. Y.—Golden jubilee Turn Verein celebration.

FLA. GA. ALA. MISS. LA. APEX FEATURE SERVICE 315 RHODES BUILDING ATLANTA, GA. TENN. N. C. S. C. VA.

LUBIN.

"THE QUESTION AND ANSWER MAN" (July 28).—Ben Johnson, a young newspaper man, is in charge of the question department of the "Heart and Home" column for the "Globe." His assumed name in answering lovers who are in trouble is Madame Leonora. Freddie Nix, a bashful lover, has written to Johnson's department seeking a method by which he may win the hand of Mabel Wiggins. Johnson advises him to discard his bashfulness. Freddie tries, but to no avail. In despair he visits the newspaper plant to seek advice. Here he encounters Johnson, instead of Madame Leonora, and the men have a great amount of fun at Freddie's expense. Johnson's advice to Freddie this time is: "Take the girl flowers; and lend the father money."

Freddie leaves encouraged. Mabel appreciates the flowers, but to escape Freddie she goes autoing with another beau. Freddie at the same time insists upon lending Mabel's father a goodly amount of money. Wiggins is so dumbfounded that he takes the bills to an expert to see if they are counterfeit. Johnson's next rule is: "Have a rival hanging around, so that you can show him up," and Johnson decides to go with Freddie and act as the rival. While Freddie is in the parlor with Mabel, Johnson, armed with a box of chocolates is just outside the portieres engaged in conversation with Mabel's grand-dad. He has relieved Johnson of most of the candy before Freddie calls in Johnson to be introduced to Mabel.

Johnson falls in love with Mabel at first sight. He plays the rival so well that Freddie hurries him from the house. The next time Freddie comes Johnson says: 'Buy an automobile for the girl and provide some sort of pleasure for the father." The boob buys a little two-seated runabout and calls to take Mabel out driving. At the same time he has arranged with a little German band to have them secretly enter the hallway of Wiggin's home and give him the "pleasure" advised by Johnson. Johnson, who has now been in love with Mabel for some time, procures a marriage license and goes to the Wiggins home, determined to propose and wed her without delay. As he sits alone in the parlor, not knowing Mabel is out driving with Freddie, the German band strikes up in the hallway. Wiggins, in a frenzy, rushes downstairs and, unable to quiet the band, goes into the parlor. With Johnson's back turned to him he is mistaken for Freddie and forcibly ejected from the house. Johnson leaves the house in the touring car he has hired. On his way home he encounters Freddie's car. It has gone completely to the bad. Freddie is on his back under the car in the middle of the roadway, while Mabel, thoroughly angry, sits neglected and alone. This is the chance of Johnson's life. His car draws up and Mabel accepts his invitation with delight to enter. It starts to rain and Freddie, unable to start his car, discovers the absence of Mabel and walks home, drenched to the skin. The last scene shows Johnson and Mabel settled in the back seat of their touring car, Johnson reading the marriage license to her.

"THE LURE OF THE CAR WHEELS" (Special—Two Parts—July 29).—Craig Archer, twenty years old, lives with his father and mother in a small Eastern city. The boy is a dreamer, a victim of the wanderlust. He reads books of travel and adventure, and the click of train wheels as they pass over rail joints is a constant lure to take the road. Craig's father finally puts him to work in an office. The office is a prison to Craig. He hears the call of the car wheels and runs away, traveling on the brakebeams of a freight train.

A year passes. Craig has a pal now, Happy Mike, a typical tramp. After beating their way across the continent, they arrive at a small Western city. Craig goes up town to rustle grub. He runs across two old men, Robert Hanson and Luther Byers, the latter a lawyer, who are engaged in a fist fight over a political difference. Craig separates the men and meets Hanson's pretty daughter, Betty. Craig falls in love with the girl at first sight. He resolves to settle down and gets rid of his sneering tramp pal in a spectacular fashion. Craig obtains janitor work in Byers' law office. During his spare moments the boy reads law. Byers likes Craig and encourages him. The lure of the car wheels comes again, but Craig easily resists the call with the inspiration of his love for the girl.

Four years pass. Byers is dead. Craig has succeeded to the large law practice. Chiefly through Hanson, Craig is nominated for mayor. Craig tells Hanson that he is going to ask Betty to marry him. Hanson, delighted, speaks to the girl before Craig has declared his love. Betty says she loves no one and that she has no intention of marrying Craig. Hanson, however, finally persuades her to say yes, pointing out that his political future will be assured thereby. Craig proposes and Betty accepts him. Then the girl meets Ralph Wills, Craig's campaign manager. It is a case of love at first sight on both sides, but Betty realizes that it is too late, now that she has promised to marry Craig. The day before the wedding, Craig accidentally learns that Betty does not love him, that she loves Ralph instead. It is the turning point. Craig goes to his rooms, crushed, despairing. He hears the call of the car wheels again and gladly answers it. On the threshold of his great success, he dons his old clothes and boards a freight train bound for anywhere.

THREE MEN AND A WOMAN (Special—Two Parts—July 30). Duncan Cadman, a civil engineer, is much older than his wife, Olive, who is very much of a butterfly. The two quarrel when Duncan, thinking she is ashamed of his lack of society manners, objects to going to a reception with her. She meets John Temple, who is Cadman's direct opposite, and is for the moment interested in him. Temple becomes infatuated with Olive, and his bold attentions cause many an embarrassing moment for Olive. Cadman misconstrues what he sees of the affair and becomes jealous. Howard Brooks, Cadman's young assistant, is badly injured about the time Cadman is called South to work on some lighthouse construction. He brings him to his own home and when he leaves, fearing Temple's nearness, places Olive under his protection. Brooks has already fallen in love with his nurse and her pity and sympathy for him and her pique at Cadman's attitude bring about a feeling she thinks is love for Brooks. When a friend from the South writes Brooks to take a trip south in his yacht, he gets Olive to run away with him. Temple has overheard the arrangement and ships with a motley crowd as one of the crew, there being a seaman strike on at the time. Olive regrets the move when they are out of sight of land and begs to be taken back but Brooks refuses. That evening fire breaks out and the crew become panic stricken. So does Brooks. Temple and the captain fight the crew but fail. The captain is killed and Temple left for dead. Brooks breaks away from Olive and leaving her in a faint, jumps in mad terror for the lowered boat but misses it and falls into the sea. Temple rescues Olive after he gets to his feet and, throwing over the hatch, leaps overboard with her. On the hatch there is room for only two and he fights Brooks who tries to come aboard, finally forcing him under and down. Cadman and his men have seen the fire out to sea and go in rescue boats. He finds his wife unconscious in Temple's arms. Temple scorns to give him any reasons and when they reach land stands up bravely before Cadman, who tells him he is going to kill him. Olive comes to in time to prevent Temple's death and to explain. Cadman offers his hand but it is refused. He leaves and finds Brooks body washed ashore far from the point where husband and wife stand reunited.

"WITHIN THE NOOSE" (July 31).—Roy Blake, a cowboy, works on the "Circle A" ranch. He is in love with Nell, daughter of the manager, George Brooks. The picture opens with the robbery of a bank in a Western town, the escape of the outlaws, and the pursuit by a band of vigilantes. Three days elapse and the outlaws, after having scattered, come together at the Brady ranch to divide the spoil. Thrown off the trail, the vigilantes still search the country. Roy proposes and finds that the girl returns his love; he gives her his ring to cement their engagement. They go to Brooks and ask his permission to marry. The ranch manager is angry, declares that his daughter shall not marry a cowboy and makes the girl give the ring back.

As Roy returns disconsolate to his bunkhouse, he receives a letter from Brady urging Roy to join his boys. A bunch of cowboys come upon the downcast Roy and attempt to cheer him up by shouting and firing their revolvers in the air. Brooks hears the noise, appears on the scene and declares angrily that the next man who fires in the yard will be discharged. Nell leaves the yard for a horseback ride. She overtakes a Mexican who insults her. Nell fights him off but he is rapidly overcoming her when Roy from a distance shoots. The shot strikes the Mexican's hand; he drops the rein and escapes. Nell's horse bolts and carries the girl home, where she falls on the porch in a faint. Brooks hears the shot and finding Roy at the gate, discharges him, refusing to listen to explanation.

Returning to his bunkhouse, Roy determines to go over to the Brady ranch, not knowing that it is the headquarters of the outlaws. He writes a note to Nell, telling her of his intention and giving it to a cowboy to deliver. When the cowboy reaches the house, he finds Nell unconscious and summons Brooks. Roy reaches the Brady ranch and is welcomed by Brady and his outlaws. When Nell reads Roy's note, she reproaches her father for discharging Roy and tells him of the circumstances of the shot. Brooks reads Roy's note and tells Nell that the boy has stumbled into a nest of outlaws. Brooks, sorry that he has misjudged Roy, determines to bring him back from the Brady ranch. When he goes into the house to get his revolver, Nell mounts her horse and starts for the Brady ranch. The vigilantes advance upon the Brady ranch. Nell, reaching a hill, summons Roy by the use of a signal. As Nell is telling Roy the state of affairs, they are startled by the sound of shooting. Looking down into the Brady yard they see the vigilantes capture the outlaws.

"THE RISE OF THE JOHNSONS" (August 1).—Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, a colored couple, are in very hard luck. The grocer donates a few dollars and Johnson, on his way to market, meets a sporty coon acquaintance who invites him to shoot craps. Johnson wants to play but is afraid the police will raid the place. The booster takes Johnson to the rear of the building and shows him a chute running from one of the upper windows to use if escape from police is necessary. Johnson enters the club and gets in the game. The players get very noisy and a patrolman investigates and discovers the chute. He phones for a patrol wagon, which is backed under the chute while several officers force their way into the room above. The gamblers, panic stricken, rush for the chute and are loaded into the wagon. Johnson gathers all the money from the table and makes for another window, thinking to hang outside until the raid is over. One of the officers closes the window and he cannot get back. He hangs on as long as he can and then drops, but to his surprise he only drops a few inches and lands on a pile of packing cases. He hastens home with money in every pocket. Next day he pays all his bills, visits the jail, looks pityingly at the prisoners, then returns home to a gorgeous banquet with two servants in attendance.

"SHE GAVE HIM A ROSE" (August 1).—Two lovers bid each other a prolonged good night at the garden gate. The boy finally leaves and the girl enters the house. Two burglars appear to rob the place. One stays on guard outside the hedge, while the other enters. The lover returns with a guitar and serenades the girl. The burglar in the dining room doesn't know what to do; he is afraid to go and afraid to stay. The girl appears at the window and tells her lover she will come down. The burglar's pal slams a bucket over the serenader's head and runs him off the place. The girl comes down stairs and in the very dim light mistakes the burglar for her lover. She kisses and pets him hurriedly and gives him a jewel case; then he hurries away. He thinks he has a valuable box of jewels. He meets his pal, who has captured the guitar. They exit hurriedly to examine their prize. When they open it they find nothing but a rose with a love message attached. A lively fight ensues. The lover returns with two officers, who take away the crooks and leave the lover to mourn his broken guitar.

BIOGRAPH.

THE CHEESEVILLE COPS (July 23).—A fast-moving tale of crime and love, in which a brave Cheeseville officer, reduced to the ranks, comes in for his own amid the glamour of the gorgeous city carnival to which the members of this rural police force have been invited to head the parade.

THE SHOW BUSTERS (July 23).—Barnstorming at best is not a cinch, but that it has its opportunities is not to be denied, and the troupe engaged by the Hicksville Board of Trade to play a thrilling drama for the benefit of the Local Home for Toothless Tobacco Chewers gets its chance. "Nuf" said.

THE WORLD AND THE WOMAN (July 20).—The woman has the misfortune to be accused of the murder of her husband and even after she is acquitted by the jury she is still condemned by public opinion, even by the man she has learned to love. But when she reaches her darkest hour the clouds disperse and the sunlight of love falls upon her.

THE LITTLE WIDOW (July 25).—To be left a widow with two children in a wild section of the west and to have to defend your little savings from murderous ruffians is a harrowing experience. But then, to find a manly protector for yourself, your children and your money is perhaps sufficient compensation.

Bound Volume No. 20

APRIL TO JUNE, 1914

Now ready for delivery. Price $1.50

Expressage or postage extra

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
17 Madison Avenue, New York City

WANTED

Laboratory man who thoroughly understands chemical toning. Also an assistant in developing room.

"B. R.," MOVING PICTURE WORLD.
NEW YORK CITY.

INDEPENDENT FILM STORIES

POWERS.

THE TANGLE (July 31).—Dolores loves Tom, the Americano. But she also flirts with Pedro, one of the attendants to the old monk. Tom objects. He and Dolores quarrel and he leaves her. She sees Pedro slip through a gate with a knife in his hand and follows him. As she comes to the gate Pedro is not in sight and the old monk is apparently dead on a nearby bench for blood stains lie upon the tiled floor. Dolores flees to Tom and asks him to kill Pedro for his monstrous deed. Tom soon discovers that Pedro has only killed a chicken and the quarrel is made up.

REX.

"THE SOB SISTER" (Two Parts—July 16).—Helen, Tracy's daughter, becomes dissatisfied with boarding school and threatens to run away. In her dilemma, Helen's mother appeals to the clever sob-sister for assistance. Nell visits the school and exacts a promise from Helen that she will remain there. Bradley, a dishonest fight referee, is "shown up" by Bert Randolph, sporting editor of the Times. Bradley swears to be revenged upon both Randolph and the newspaper. A budding romance is under way between Randolph and the sob-sister.

Helen's promise to remain at the boarding school is short lived. A midnight feast of pretty girl pupils results in punishment for Helen. She crawls from a second story window and escapes. Afraid to go home, the runaway girl takes refuge in a city park. She is found by Bradley, who sees his opportunity to even the score with the newspaper. A country correspondent stumbles upon the story of Helen's flight. Unable to secure her name, he telegraphs meagre facts to Tracy, the managing editor. Tracy assigns the "sob-sister" to the story.

Meanwhile Bradley has taken Helen to a cafe. The sob-sister, who has stopped in the cafe for a hasty lunch sees and recognizes Helen. From an adjoining booth she learns enough to know that Bradley is intent upon harm to the girl. Utilizing the telephone, she summons Bert Randolph. When Bradley takes the girl to an evil resort Randolph effects a rescue. With the story in her possession, the "sob-sister" returns to the office. Endeavoring to shield Helen, she tries to dissuade the managing editor from using the story. Her pleas fail. When she completes her story she is discharged by Tracy for insubordination. Tracy, without reading the story, orders it printed on the front page of the newspaper.

Bert Randolph goes to Tracy and discloses the identity of the runaway girl. Tracy stops the press. When he offers the sob-sister her old position she refuses telling him that she is to marry Randolph. Tracy raises the sporting editor's salary.

"BEHIND THE VEIL" (Aug. 2).—Phil was hard; he separated from his wife when suspicion fell upon her and took his baby girl with him. Phil took a house in another town that he might not meet his wife and thereby be forced to remembrance of the woman he still loved.

Lois was a woman and a mother and her heart yearned for her child. She wrote Phil a letter telling him that she intended taking steps to see her child in spite of his precautions to the contrary. Phil refused to consider the letter, but instructed the housekeeper never to allow the child out her sight.

Shortly afterward, the appearance of a veiled woman aroused the curiosity of the women of the neighborhood, but she conducted herself modestly and gossip died out. One day Phil's child wandered up the street and as she toddled along she heard her name called. She recognized the voice and ran into her mother's arms. Shortly after, Lois sent the child back home.

That night, when Phil returned home, he left the front door open. Later, in the night, the child decided to return to her mother and in the darkness she groped down the dark stairs and out of the front door. Lois was interrupted in her bitter meditations by a gentle knock at the door. She opened the door and it was her baby girl. All the bitterness fled and she took the child in her arms and wept. Phil found her there with their child in her arms, weeping and his eyes dimmed and he forgot all past disagreements. After that there was no further use for the housekeeper.

IMP.

"WHEN THE WORLD WAS SILENT" (Three Parts—July 13). Will is a young musician of the modern school, rich in his own right, who has a consuming ambition to make a name for himself as a pianist. For years, however, he has had only one other interest—Leah. She has been his friend, sweetheart and adviser and has continued to love him passionately, always with the hope that some day he would marry her. Then the time comes when Will meets a society girl. She is flattered by his good looks and ability on the piano and Will, in turn, believes that marrying her will further his career. He decides on this step and informs Leah that they must part.

Leah, in a moment of passion one night, and knowing that it is only his ambition that keeps Will from her, enters his apartment, chloroforms him while he sleeps and pours poison into his ears. Then she escapes, taking a silver tea set to make robbery appear as the motive.

Will, with his hearing gone and unable to play, is thrown aside by the society girl. His butler, a faithful fellow, swears to bring the person, guilty of poisoning his master to justice. Time passes; Leah marries Will, though the latter does not know her guilt. They are happy and it is through her that the musician is led to take up composing. Also, she teaches him the language of the lips. It is the butler who secures the evidence against Leah. While he decides to remain quiet, now that his master is happy, Will finds out.

Leah is driven from the house. Several years pass by. Will has become famous by his compositions mainly through the efforts of a concert pianist, Madam Genez. Through the music publishers a great recital is arranged—Will is to meet the pianist whom nobody seems to know much about.

At the recital, Will comes face to face with his wife. Though he had driven her out, she had toiled to became a great player simply to play his pieces and make him famous as a slight atonement for her crime. Reconciliation comes in a scene that is rife with pathos.

"WHEN ROMANCE CAME TO ANNE" (Two Parts—July 27).—When the play opens, Anne is a poor little forlorn sort of girl who owns no clothes to speak of and whose hair is drawn back so tightly that it pulls her features quite out of shape. In the village of Riverton, where she lives with her father, they call her homely and dowdy, and in all the town, romance loving Anne is the only girl without a beau. When Anne watches the young couples going by, arm in arm, she wishes that she, too, could join them on the arm of some young cavalier.

Mark Lane, bachelor, lives all alone and to Anne he is the ideal man. But he refuses to notice her along with all the rest of the girls in the village. However, a day comes when the man realizes that he should be married. He visits Anne's father and has dinner at the house. Anne is unusually attentive, and Mark comes to believe that she would make him a good wife and housekeeper. All brimful of joy Anne consents, when he asks her, and the marriage follows shortly after. He takes his bride home and the girl soon finds that Mark doesn't love her. He discourages all show of affection. Anne catches sight of her face in a big dishpan she has polished and again realizes her ugliness and sobs over the hopelessness of it. As time goes on, Mark is kind and fair with her.

One day an invitation comes for Mark and his wife to attend a barn dance. Anne runs out into the fields with it and begs her husband to go. Mark cares little about it, but consents after his wife urges. Returning to the house, Anne meets a peddler—and in her pocket Anne has the first money she ever earned. She bargains with the peddler and buys goods—laces. Mark won't be ashamed of her at the dance. Every night after he has gone upstairs Anne takes out her precious dress and sews upon it. Then the night of the party comes around. Anne doesn't know it, but her dress is a botch, poorly put together and ill fitting. At the dance Mark finds farmers to talk to and doesn't notice his wife. Other girls laugh at her. Heartbroken, the little wall flower creeps out of the place and rushes home alone. Mark follows her and upbraids her for putting him in an embarrassing position.

Days pass. One afternoon Anne washes her hair and goes into the fields to dry it. There she meets an artist who is painting. He asks her to pose for him. Anne does, only to be discovered by her husband, who sends her to the house angry. But the sight stirs Mark—awakens something in his heart heretofore unknown. Next day Anne comes out on her porch and to amuse herself twines roses in her hair. The artist, passing, stops at the gate and their conversation of the day before is resumed. Mark, unable to work, for a demon of unrest and jealousy has taken possession of him, goes to the house to find the artist again with his wife. Furious, he orders the man away. Then Mark turns to Anne and she stares at him with demure eyes full of wonder at his rage. She creeps a bit closer to him and smiles at his anger. Mark raises his arm half threateningly—she only comes closer and when Mark's arm descends it is to enfold his flower bedecked wife close to his heart.

UNIVERSAL BOY (July 30).—Matty's parents are suddenly called to Europe. Matty is left in New York in charge of his aunt. Shortly after bidding his parents goodby, Matty calls his aunt's attention to a newspaper headline which reads: "Race Between Automobile and Aeroplane at Brighton Beach, Beachy vs. Oldfield." Well, of course, Matt induces his aunt to take him to the aviation field, and of course Matty met Barney Oldfield, the famous "speed King," who instructed him in the matter of handling a racer. Then Matty crossed the field and was introduced to Lincoln Beachy, the aviator, and asks him about the race.

Next we have Matty up at Oyster Bay, where his adventure-loving spirit has drawn him to meet Col. Roosevelt. There is a big crowd on hand. Matty breaks away from his aunt, as the Colonel appears and climbs onto the running board where the Colonel greets him and in an outburst of enthusiasm invites the little fellow into his car. Mr. Roosevelt then introduces our hero to the Mayor of Oyster Bay and later, during the speech of welcome on the part of the Mayor to the ex-President, Matty, in his great delight, leads the cheering of the excited populace. After the reception, Matty and his aunt return home.

On the day following this we find Matty downtown in New York City standing before Hammerstein's Victoria theater at 42d street and Broadway. He earnestly scans the week's bill and then is struck with the idea of going into vaudeville himself. With this in mind he presents himself to Oscar Hammerstein, the famous impresario, and he tells Matty to be back for the matinee and he will give him a "try-out."

Matty returns to the theater and gives impersonations of well-known vaudeville and screen favorites, such as Harry Lauder, Ferd Sterling, and King Baggot, and he concludes with an impersonation of Miss Gertrude Hoffmann in her celebrated Salome dance. During this dance, his aunt enters the theater and Matty's career as a vaudeville artist comes to an end.

BISON.

"TRIBAL WAR IN THE SOUTH SEAS" (Two Parts—Aug. 1).—Lihula, King Kalana's daughter, is greatly loved by the young chief, Makapa. Makapa's mother is a witch-doctor and it is her consuming ambition that her son wed Lihula. Poloka, a rival witch-doctor, has it planned that his son, Lono, marry the King's daughter. The rivalry between the two lovers, however, comes to an unexpected issue when the King's son meets with an accident and is injured. Poloka brings all the sorcery at his command into play and fails to heal the injured man. Makapa's mother then tries her hand and cures the prince. As a reward for her services King Kalana gives his daughter to Makapa.

Poloka becomes enraged at his son's rejection and with his son desert his tribe and joins the band of a rebel chief. Thus allied with a powerful tribe Poloka and his son Lono return to their own island, and steal Lihula now the wife of Makapa. No sooner does Makapa learn of the abduction of his young wife, than he summons all his men and prepares for war. Through her black art Makapa's mother learns of the whereabouts of Lihula. Makapa's warriors land on the island of the rebel chief and a war of extermination begins. As was said before the fighting comes to a climax when Makapa and Lono engaged in a fierce duel with the primitive weapons used by the Polynesians. Makapa slays Lono and carries his young wife back to her people.

CRYSTAL.

"THEIR PARENT'S KIDS" (July 28).—Vivian's mother is being courted by Dave's father. Vivian, is attending a girl's high school, while Dave is about to graduate from college. The old people deceive each other by saying they have a child who is about ten or eleven years old. Vivian's Ma writes her a letter to come home, telling her to don a child's outfit, while the Colonel writes the same to Dave. The young people obey orders and things begin to happen round the house. Eventually they tire of playing kids and don their regular clothing. Dave discovers Vivian and chases her; it winds up by his being thrown into the lake. Finally the old folks admit their deception and decide that their love for each other is still the same, and Vivian and Dave become good friends.

"CHARLIE'S TOOTHACHE" (July 28).—Charlie suffers very greatly with a toothache. He tries all sorts of remedies, but is unable to alleviate his pain. He finally ties a rope to the gas jet, thinking he can pull it out by walking away, but instead pulls the equipment from the ceiling and floods the house with the odor. Commotion reigns and most of the tenants suffocate. He then tries other stunts which succeed only in generally breaking up the house. He dives out of the window onto a woman washing and precipitates her into the tub. Still suffering he runs out into the street where he gets into an argument with a young man and they engage in fisticuffs. During the battle the young man hits Charlie on the jaw and knocks the bad tooth out, whereupon Charlie embraces him joyfully.

STERLING.

"A WILD RIDE" (July 27).—Billy and Olive are sweethearts. Desmond is also in love with Olive and on numerous occasions Olive has turned down Desmond's love making and finally slapped him in the face and ordered him away. Desmond, angry, swears revenge. He follows the lovers while taking a ride in the gondola and follows them from there to the roller coaster.

Billy and Olive get inside the coaster and start to play. Desmond looks around and seeing no one in sight, gives the coaster a shove, which starts it off on its journey. The coaster races around the track at a high speed and the children scream to attract the attention of one of the attendants. But the machinery becomes unmanageable and he calls the assistance of the police. The police come to the spot and after several funny and unsuccessful attempts to stop the coaster, they get into another and give chase. After several funny situations they finally get it away and give chase.

The coaster in which Billy and Olive are in meantime has slowed down and stops in some obscure spot. Billy and Olive jump out and get away. The police find that they cannot stop their coaster. The coaster gains speed and the other attendants who have arrived on the scene are unable to stop it. Desmond in the meantime, horrified at his rash act, runs away from the scene. Billy takes Olive among the rocks on the beach and the picture closes with Olive's head resting on Billy's shoulder.

GOLD SEAL.

"LUCILLE LOVE, THE GIRL OF MYSTERY" (No. 13—July 7).—Taking advantage of Loubeque's quarrel with Thompson, his butler, Lucille picks up the priceless documents from the floor, where they fell during the scuffle. She runs out of the hacienda, jumps into Loubeque's machine with the chauffeur, who has decided to aid her, and begins a wild dash toward the American frontier. Loubeque takes after her in another machine, and a spectacular and thrilling chase begins. The country is rough and the roads are rough and in bad shape. Loubeque can better stand the rough handling than the girl, and as a consequence he gains on her rapidly. Knowing what his fate will be if the spy overtakes him, Lucille's chauffeur loses his head while driving the machine over a dugway. The sight which Loubeque then witnesses freezes his blood and causes him to cover his eyes that he may see no more. Lucille's automobile swerves, hesitates and then dashes from the dug-way and topples from the edge of the cliff into the terrible abyss.

When she regains consciousness she finds herself in bed, with Loubeque caring for her and administering to her injuries. The papers are gone, and she is set back to the point where she started. The futility of fighting the purposes of such a man as Loubeque, with all his physical power, determination and keen sense of intrigue, dawns upon the girl and leaves her without an ounce of fighting energy. Unasked, she agrees to give up the fight which has already cost her so much and return to San Francisco. In her heart she has begun to admire Hugo Loubeque—his steadfastness to a purpose which could actuate only a man of intense character and brilliant imagination. Although he dare not admit it to himself, Loubeque has a feeling for Lucille which is far greater than a passing admiration for her determination, bravery and energy in fighting apparently insurmountable obstacles.

However, Loubeque has never lost sight of his objective point, viz.: the ruination of Sumpter Love, the man who stole his sweetheart and wrecked his life. Thus when he arrives in San Francisco with Lucille he at once begins negotiations with a Lieutenant Hadley to turn over the papers to the Department of State and thus dishonor Lucille's father. He makes an appointment to meet Hadley at a cafe, and there deliver the papers to him. Lucille learns of his plans and accompanies him to the cafe. Knowing that the spy will not talk business in her presence, Lucille feigns illness and is excused.

HAWKINS LIBRARY OF ELECTRICITY

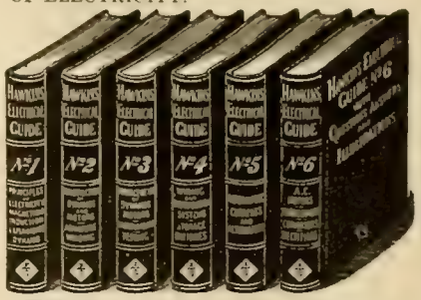
In 6 Leather Pocket Books Price per $1 Volume

Here is a set of books that no man in the ELECTRICAL FIELD should do without. This is the ELECTRICAL AGE in which we live; ELECTRICITY now controls more trades, directs more men, offers more opportunities than any other power that man has yet discovered. Do you wish to know the underlying principles of MODERN ELECTRICAL PRACTICE?

If so, HAWKINS ELECTRICAL GUIDES will give you the information. In reality they are a school within themselves, containing a complete study course with QUESTIONS, ANSWERS AND ILLUSTRATIONS, written in plain everyday language so that a practical man can understand the "HOW, WHEN AND WHY" OF ELECTRICITY.



"THAT'S JUST WHAT I NEED"

They are handsomely bound in flexible black leather with gold edges and will readily go in the pocket. THEY ARE NOT ONLY THE BEST, BUT THE CHEAPEST WORKS PUBLISHED ON ELECTRICITY.

Each book is complete in itself and will be supplied $1.00 per copy, but we believe that the complete set is the best bargain.

The books can speak for themselves and a careful examination, page by page, and illustration by illustration, will convince you of their big value.

If you will fill out the following coupon giving all the information requested, WE WILL SUBMIT THE SIX VOLUMES FOR EXAMINATION ON CONDITIONS NAMED

FREE EXAMINATION OFFER

Theo. Audel & Co., 72 5th Ave., New York

Please submit me for examination HAWKINS ELECTRICAL GUIDES (Price $1 each.)

Ship at once, prepaid the 6 numbers; if satisfactory I agree to send you $1 within seven days and to further mail you $1 each month until paid.

Signature .....

Occupation .....

Business Address .....

Residence .....

Reference .....

M. P. W

FEATURES OF MERIT

Feature Photoplay Co.

220 West 42nd Street, New York City

She hires one of the cabaret dancers to allow her to use her clothes and dance in her place. Lucille dances in the cafe, and now and then, when she edges near Loubeque, she overhears portions of his conversation. Then a most unexpected thing happens. Lieutenant Gibson, Lucille's sweetheart, hapnens into the cafe. He cannot believe his eyes when he sees Lucille, the only daughter of General Sumpter Love, as a cabaret dancer. Lucille also sees Gibson and runs to him with the light of recognition and love in her eyes. But Gison pushes her from him in disgust. He can have nothing to do with a cabaret dancer. She pleads with him, but he will not listen to an explanation and rushes from the cafe.

UNIVERSAL IKE.

"THE NEW COOK" (Juy 14).—Boys on Circle Ranch, dissatisfied with the cooking, decide to have the cook discharged. The ranch owner sends Ike to town to bring a new cook back. In the meantime, the cook's daughter has arrived to pay her mother a visit. Ike mistakes her for the new cook and takes her back to the ranch. The boys, not knowing the relationship, try to make love to the girl and knock the old lady. The daughter objects, telling the boys the old cook is her mother. She leaves her three children and baby with Ike to take care of while she returns to help mother.

The ranch hands now plot to get rid of the mother by kidnapping the baby. Ike returns to the house and baby is discovered missing. The hunt starts. Ranch hands in the meantime write a note and place it on the floor, telling them the baby will be returned when the mother leaves the ranch. The three children forgotten in the house, find a gun which is accidentally exploded. The old lady and daughter enter and find the children all lying in a bunk, and imagine they have shot themselves. The daughter faints. The ranch hands think the mother has killed the daughter. They get a rope and decide to hang her; they drag her away. After much excitement the old lady is rescued, the baby is found and all ends well for Ike.

JOKER.

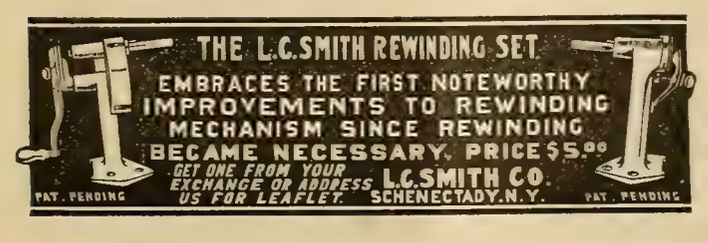
THE WOOING OF BESSIE BUMPKIN (July 29).—Bess Bumpkin was probably the most awkward shrew who ever lived in a small village. Thus, when it was announced that any couple who would consent to be married at a special marriage matinee at the opera house would be paid one hundred dollars, old man Bumpkin grasped at the opportunity to slip Bess off on one of her admirers. Bess agreed to the plan and Phil and Willie were advised that Bess would marry the one who got to the opera house first on the afternoon of the matinee.

Each of the suitors secured a light surry and the race commenced. Phil was the first to drive away with the girl. Then Willie managed to get her into his buggy. Then Willie's buggy lost a wheel. Willie, however, arrived first with Bess at the church. But to the consternation of the pair, and the disgust of father Bumpkin, the award had already been made to another couple.

WIFE'S BUSY DAY (August 1).—Henry Peck is married to a woman who maps out his daily walks through life exactly in acordance with her notions. It happens that the dawn of a new day finds their Chinese cook deeply saturated with gin and the butler still slumbering as usual. After giving Henry a dime with which to buy coffee and doughnuts, that he might not go to his office hungry. wife settles her troubles with the belated butler and the hilarious cook to her own satisfaction.

On his way to the office, Henry meets fascinating Sue, a maid of wits who cannot sport a dime for breakfast. She sees an opportunity to secure one through Henry. She "plants" herself beside Henry at the cafe table, eats heartily and then leaves, while Henry finds the two checks at his own plate. He is under the necessity of making an undignified get-away.

Reaching the office Henry receives a wire from a rich uncle saying that he is coming to pay a visit and expressing a desire to meet his wife. When uncle arrives that afternoon, he finds fascinating Sue with Henry and mistakes her for Henry's wife. Sue, ripe for any proposition that will gain her a supper, carries her part along. On returning home there is compromising situations and laughable incidents. It all ends with the uncle marrying Sue himself and giving a fat piece of money to his nephew, Henry.



THE L.C.SMITH REWINDING SET
EMBRACES THE FIRST NOTEWORTHY IMPROVEMENTS TO REWINDING MECHANISM SINCE REWINDING BECAME NECESSARY. PRICE $5.00
GET ONE FROM YOUR EXCHANGE OR ADDRESS US FOR LEAFLET.
L.C.SMITH CO.
SCHENECTADY.N.Y.
PAT. PENDING
PAT. PENDING

Your negative developed, printed and titled complete
5c. per foot
Delivered within 12 hours
Titles 6c. per foot
GUNBY BROS., Inc., 145 West 45th St., N. Y. City.

FRONTIER.

"THE MIND'S AWAKENING" (August 2).—Dolly arrives at a little western hotel and secures a job as waitress. The cattle buyer also comes to the hotel, awaiting the arrival of the cattleman with whom he expects to do business. To the hotel proprietor's wife, Dolly tells her story. Two years ago her father sent her East for an education. There she met and married a young New Yorker, and for this her father, who had planned that she marry another, disowned her. She soon saw that her husband was tiring of her and one night she left him. Since then by degrees, she had been working her way West.

Two gamblers discover that the cattle buyer is carrying a large roll of money. They scheme to get it. That night they issue from their room and enter another—the wrong one—Dolly's. Arthur hears her screams and comes to her aid. In the fight that ensues the two card men fall through the bannisters to the lobby below, where the sheriff takes them in charge. In Arthur, Dolly finds her husband and soon learns that she erred in believing he was tiring of her. The belated cattleman arrives and overjoyed to find in Dolly, his daughter, is only too glad to offer his forgiveness and congratulations.

UNIVERSAL.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 123 (July 15).—Launching of "Nevada."—Latest U. S. battleship christened "Nevada" and successfully launched in Fore River Shipbuilding Yards—Quincy, Mass. Sub-Title: Eleanor Ann Siebert the sponsor. Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels. Gov. Oddie of Nevada. Assistant Secretary Roosevelt.

Disastrous Storm Hits Paris.—Tremendous downpour causes cave-in of streets and underground railroad in parts of Paris, France.

Metropolitan Bloomer Girls.—Champion suffragette baseball team defeats New York's colored giants—New York City.

Exhibitors meet.—National convention of motion picture exhibitors held in Dayton, Ohio.

Active Week for I. W. W.—Unable to obtain permit for public funeral of three of their members killed by bomb, memorial meeting is held in Union Square—New York City.

Unique Engineering Feat.—Without blocking traffic Lehigh Valley Railroad replaces old steel bridge with 650-ton concrete girder span, Buffalo, N. Y.

Latest Mode in Paris.—Some beautiful gowns worn by fashionable Parisiennes.

People's Regatta on Schuylkill.—Noted crews from far and near battle for honors in annual races—Philadelphia, Pa.

James J. Jeffries.—Ex-champion pugilist visits mammoth studios of Universal Film Mfg. Company—Hollywood, Cal.

The Royal Ascot.—King George and Queen Mary attend the famous English classic—Epsom Downs, England.

Impressive Funeral Ceremonies.—Many prominent men pay last tribute to ex-Senator Edwin Bailey, well-known Democrat—Patchogue, N. Y.

Japanese Squadron Attends Barbecue.—Mikado's sailors from visiting Japanese training ship give exhibition of their skill—Woodland Park, Seattle, Wash.

Largest Gun in World.—New 16-inch gun ready for Panama Canal defense uses 650 pounds of powder to throw a 4-ton projectile 20 miles—Sandy Hook, N. J.

Cartoons by Hy. Mayer, world famous cartoonist of Puck.

NESTOR.

AN INDIAN ECLIPSE (July 29).—Lawson is a new Indian Agent at the Beaver Creek Reservation. Muriel, a local girl, makes friends with the agent, to the disgust of Jim Hill, a dissolute trapper, who follows her, jumps into her wagon and drives her horse at break-neck speed from the village. Lawson sees the act, mounts his horse, and overtakes the wagon. In revenge the trapper slays an Indian and then tells the Chief that he saw Lawson kill him. Lawson and the girl are captured by the Indians and brought to their village as prisoners. Beaver Tail is the son of the Chief, and a recent graduate from Carlisle. Being a warm friend of Lawson, he assists in the latter's release. Lawson finds an old almanac in his pocket and notes that an eclipse of the sun is due. He plots with Beaver Tail to fool the Indians and so Beaver Tail tells the Chief that Lawson will prove his innocence by a sign from Ti-ra-wa (the Indian god). As the eclipse comes on, Lawson points dramatically to the sky. The darkness over, Lawson is released. He takes Muriel home and on the way, while crossing a deep ravine on a log bridge, Hill attempts to follow and attack them. In doing so, he slips and falls to his death.

MAGGIE'S HONEST LOVER (July 31).—Maggie's dad works at the Panama-Pacific Exposition grounds and Maggie takes his lunch to him every day. Eddie, her sweetheart, is a carpenter, also in the Exposition employ. The dirty foreman loves the girl and, there is decided trouble between him and the carpenter, Eddie. Dad objects to the foreman and the foreman retaliates.

At last the villain sees that his only chance is to take the girl by force. With Eddie and the girl scampering hand in hand through the grounds below, the foreman plots with two workmen on the roof of a nearby building to attack Eddie. The girl is captured and, amid piles of lumber in the Foreign Arts Building, the foreman ties her up and sends for a minister. Eddie takes the minister's place and rescues the girl. Dad and mother come to the rescue and a burly policeman arrests the foreman and his accomplices.

VICTOR.

OUT OF THE VALLEY (July 27).—Bud Osborne, sheriff, is brutal by nature and as a result of his associations with criminals his outlook is sordid; he has no ideals or faith in men. The only thing good that he owns is a wife and a baby. Jack Lacy is wanted for the killing of a gambler at Cripple Creek. The The man killed in self-defense and escaped because the case against him looked bad. Lacy is now waiting for the arrival of his wife who is coming West with an emigrant train. Osborne is offered a reward of $1,000 if he will capture Lacy. He needs the money and so arrests Lacy.

While the sheriff and his prisoner are returning to town they are attacked by Indians. Osborne is wounded. Lacy saves him. The Indian uprising is general and the emigrant train in which Mrs. Lacy is traveling is likewise attacked. However, the emigrants successfully repel the Indians. While Lacy is helping the wounded Osborne along he meets the emigrant train. Lacy's first thought is of his wife and he leaves the sheriff to find her. When Osborne recovers his strength he thinks of his prisoner and of the handsome reward for his capture. He inquires after Lacy and goes to arrest him. Pushing back the flap of the wagon Osborne looks inside. He sees a young woman on a straw mattress with a baby on her breast and over the woman and baby is bending Lacy, the outlaw. Osborne mounts his horse and rides home to his own family.

"THE MAD MAN'S WARD" Two Parts—July 31).—The island on which baby Flo is, is occupied by one inhabitant, an old hermit. He discovers the little waif, whom he raises. Flo, as she grows up, is a rough but pretty girl, the only person in the world the old hermit loves. He guards the island against any invasion and no one is allowed to put foot on it except a young fisherman who has won his way into the graces of the old man by supplying him with plugs of chewing tobacco. The fisherman is in love with Flo and often takes her sailing on his boat. He teaches her how to sail it. Soon she is a proficient sailor, and her four

NEWMAN
Brass Frames and Rails

Our Brass Frames can be had in any of the following finishes, all of which require NO POLISHING:

Burnished Brass, Brass Oxidized, Gun Metal, Brushed Brass or Dull Brass, German Silver, Statuary Bronze, Oxidized.

Look for our name on every frame.
Write for new 1914 Catalog.

THE NEWMAN MFG. CO.

NEW YORK 101 Fourth Ave. | CINCINNATI 717 Sycamore St. | CHICAGO 108 W. Lake St.

Established since 1882.

PRINTING and DEVELOPING
FILM TITLES
Give us a trial. All work guaranteed.
Prompt service. Prices right.
If there is any event that you want photographed, we can furnish expert camera men.
STANDARD MOTION PICTURE CO.
Phone, Central 2853, 5 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

FILM MAKING OUTFITS
for Professional Film Work, for the Manufacturer, Traveler, Explorer, Scientist and Private. The well-known fool-proof Junior Camera, 200 feet capacity; Tripods, Tilts, Printers, Developing Outfits, Projectors, Lenses, Polishers, Measurers, Menders, Winders. Special Film Work. Quick, reliable repair.
Establ. 20 years. Largest Inst. in U. S.
EBERHARD SCHNEIDER
219 Second Ave. New York

BE UP TO DATE
Install
CORCORAN TANKS
Get No. 6 Price List
A. J. CORCORAN, Inc., 11½ JOHN STREET NEW YORK CITY

BEST OF CAMERA MEN
Furnished for all Occasions
CHICAGO FEATURE FILM CO.
4108-22 Lincoln Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Manufacturers of the Wonderful
REMBUSCH PATENTED GLASS MIRROR SCREEN
And all other kinds of Curtains for Moving Picture Projection, White Opaque, Glass Transparent Screens for Rear Projection, Goldcloth Fibre Screens, Mirrorcloth Fibre Screens, Seamless with Stretchers or Rollers.
Phone Seven-Eleven F. J. REMBUSCH, Pres.

MIRROR SCREEN COMPANY, INC.
SHELBYVILLE, INDIANA
"The first big Mirror Screen went into the Empire Theatre in Detroit, Mich. It is in use yet and I will forfeit $1000.00 if you can beat it. It is six years old. Think, six years old."
Nine different finishes. For wide or narrow houses.

dogs and the boat are her only amusements on the lonely island.

A wealthy yachtsman, while sailing his yacht, takes shelter from a storm in the cave of the island. After the fury of the storm is spent, he decides to row ashore and look over the island. Hardly has he stepped foot on the island when he is attacked by the dogs and is only saved by the timely arrival of Flo. The yachtsman is very grateful to Flo for her kindly act and is also greatly struck by the beauty of the rough but whole-hearted little girl. He invites her for a sail on his yacht, and Flo, delighted, accepts. She manages the boat about like a veteran and her skill at it brings forth words of admiration from the man. At the end of the sail as they row ashore from the yacht Flo warns him to leave, telling him of the hermit guardian and his great dislike for strangers, even to the extent of doing them violence. He is deeply interested in Flo and her stories concerning the island, and refuses to go and asks her to show him about the place. The fisherman comes to visit Flo and discovers the yachtsman in her company. His jealousy is aroused and running to the old man, tells him of the presence of the stranger. Aroused by the invasion of his island, he secures his gun and goes in search of the yachtsman, whom he finds seated with Flo at the edge of a cliff. Flo sees him coming and warns her escort, who dashes off just as the old man pulls the trigger of his rifle and the bullet intended for him finds its way into Flo's heart. She falls over the cliff to the bottom. The old hermit, realizing his terrible deed, walks to the edge of the cliff and over and falls at the feet of his loved one, their lives at an end.

ECLAIR.

"THE DUPE" (Two Parts—July 29).—Tom Roberts, working for a dishonest mining man, inherits $70,000. He plans immediate marriage with his sweetheart, Grace. Wallace, his employer, invites him to his home, where he meets Borden, a promoter, and Vivian, the weak willed but beautiful daughter of the mining man. She fascinates Tom and he calls again. Meanwhile Grace's mother is sick. Grace writes Tom that she is leaving for Boston.

Time goes by and, as Wallace intercepts Grace's letters, Tom hears nothing from her and imagines she has forgotten him. Borden endeavors to sell him some worthless stock, but the young fellow fights shy. Wallace determines to get him through his daughter and to this end, while Tom and Vivian are dining at Meadowbrook Inn, he has his chauffeur steal Tom's car. They are marooned for the night. Tom stays at a neighboring farm house until the morning. As he is inquiring after Vivian at the Inn, the father enters, and, assuming an outraged and angry attitude, tells Tom he shall either invest his fortune as he dictates and marry his daughter or he will expose the occurrence to the world. Trapped in the snare and partly fascinated by the girl's charms, Roberts decides to marry Vivian.

Meanwhile Grace's mother dies and the girl returns and inquires at the office for Tom. She is told by Wallace that the young fellow is engaged to his daughter and she leaves, broken-hearted. The next morning Tom reads in the paper that the mine in which he has invested his money is a gigantic swindle. He accuses Wallace and the girl. They only laugh at him. Beaten and in despair he turns from the house.

Three months pass. Tom, an outcast and tramp, is sitting on a park bench when his old sweetheart passes. There is a joyful reunion and Grace brings the sick and starving man to her poorly furnished room. Shortly after this the scheming promoter receives word that the mine has really struck ore and he tells Tom that he will buy back his shares for 10 per cent. of what he paid. Duped and discouraged, Tom gives Grace the stock and she goes to Wallace's office. While waiting, the breeze from an electric fan blows a telegram, stating that the Apollo Mine has struck ore, from the desk. Realizing the game in a flash, she seizes the telegram; places a few scraps of paper in an envelope and gives them to Wallace. He eagerly hands her a check. Afterwards he discovers his loss and, enraged, rushes to the house where Grace is nursing her sweetheart. She calmly shows him the telegram and while Wallace returns, beaten and disgusted, Tom and Grace are folded in each other's arms.

"IN THE DAYS OF OLD" (August 2).—Romantic little Willie engages in fisticuffs over a certain charming little girl, and upon returning home is severely scolded. Feeling much ill-treated, Willie creeps into a suit of armor, which stands in the lower hall and falls asleep. His dream carries him back to the days "when love was young and knights were bold," and in fancy he is summoned before the King. That royal gentleman covets greatly Willie's beautiful lady, Clara. He orders the Knight to bring her to court. Though suspicious of the King's intentions, Willie must obey the mandate and the parting is, indeed, sad when Clara leaves her Knight to reside in the King's Palace.

The ruler's wife, enraged with jealousy at her husband's actions, secures the magic rose, whose perfume causes death. Presenting it to Clara, the beautiful lady falls back as if dead, and with much lamentation, she is stretched on a bier. Willie, hearing of his wife's death, gallops madly to the castle, and is tearfully bending over her when she opens her eyes and softly tells him she has shammed death to escape from the King. He assists her to rise, and they rush madly off, only to be held up by the King's guards. Disposing of them single handed, Willie is carrying Clara back, when he awakes with a start to find himself in his mother's arms.

"FIRELIGHT" (Two Parts—August 5).—John Marten, a millionaire twice over, is money mad and a slave driver. In his chase for millions he has completely overlooked his sweet wife and closed his heart for love.

On the day of their tenth anniversary, of which occasion he has no knowledge, the men at his plant strike. Furious at their action he declares he will break them and import foreign labor. A message is received by his wife that the strikers intend killing him should he leave the house that day. Neglected and lonesome among her luxurious surroundings, her love for the money master is overpowering, and she is frantic with fear. Going up to the garret she brings down an old chest, and drawing a chair up to the fireplace, extracts one after the other various things which are reminiscent of the days when she and her husband were young.

Her husband's heart is touched and memories awaken thick and fast as he gazes in the fireplace. They fondle the various objects, see a picture of their first meeting, their boy and girl courtship and finally their happy wedding dances before their eyes. Then the baby comes, and as he sits clasping the tiny shoe the flames reveal the picture of his thoughtless and indifferent ways. Memories of the little one's death and his absence at the time come before him and then the mad, mad struggle for money and more money. As each remembrance flares up and then dies, the thought of the strikers returns and he starts for the factory, but the wife manages to hold him by her side. Of a sudden the true nature of the man overwhelms him, and remembering it is the tenth anniversary of their wedding, he telephones his secretary to meet the demands of the strikers and remains home to make up for some of the lost years.

Brass Frames and Railings

For material, workmanship and design we offer the best.

Get our catalogue and quotation before placing your order.

No. 8

The Theatre Specialty Mfg. Co.
1232 East 3rd Street, Cleveland, Ohio

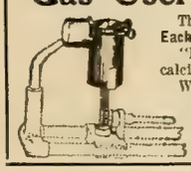
LOCAL PICTURES WILL FILL YOUR THEATRE
WRITE US FOR PRICES
Developing and Printing For the Trade Reasonable
COMMERCIAL FILMERS
1101 W. Randolph St., Chicago.

Good Power's No. 5 Machine, complete, $70.00
Edison, Exhibition Model, all complete, $90.00
200 reels of film, new lot, $4.00 to $5.00
ECONOMY FILM CO.
105 FOURTH AVE. PITTSBURGH, PA.

FILMS FOR SALE
40 Three-Reel Features
20 Two-Reel Features
250 Single Reels
Machines and Supplies
ISIDOR WENIZ FILMS CO., 133 N. Gay St., BALTIMORE, MD

We Buy and Sell Second Hand Films and Moving Picture Machines
WESTERN FILM BROKERS
37 So. Wabash Avenue - Chicago, Ill.

Floral Decorations For Theatre, Stage and Parades
Best selections from the markets of Europe and America
Botanical Decorating Co.
504 So. 5th Ave. CHICAGO
Prices the lowest ever offered for reliable goods

Gas Users — Attention!


The "Gull Pastil" doubles your light. Each (large size), $1.25; 6 for $6.75. "Fulco" adapter makes Pastil fit any calcium burner, $1.00 each.
We carry most complete line in stock of picture machines and supplies in America. E. E. FULTON, 152 W. Lake St., Chicago, Sole American distributors for "Gull Pastil."

SOME TERRITORY STILL REMAINS FOR "THE TOLL OF MAMMON" IN FOUR PARTS
Made at the Studio in Lake Placid, N. Y., "America's Switzerland."
Excelsior Feature Film Company, Inc., 110 West 40th Street, N. Y.

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION.

HER "REALLY" MOTHER (July 21).—"Please, I'm Kathie Stanton, and I'm looking for a 'really' mother."

This the amazing answer the little girl makes who crawls through the hedge separating Mary's estate from the one next door, onto which a new family has just moved. Kathie could hardly have looked in a better place, for Mary, though childless, has the mother instinct in full measure, which she has had perforce, to lavish only on her pets. So on this lonely, neglected child of hard and selfish parents, she pours all the unsatisfied longings of her mothering heart.

Over the hedge a sign is put: "All children coming through this hedge are, for the time, the 'really' children of a 'really mother.'

Puck, per order, The Fairy Queen."

At Kathie's home things go badly and the very night that Kathie is permitted to stay with Mary, Kathie's mother elopes, while her father is drinking at his club. In a drunken pursuit of the couple, Stanton's auto is wrecked and Stanton is fatally injured. Eagerly Mary promises the dying man that she will care for Kathie. And the woman who has so lightly tossed aside the privilege of motherhood, travels far away; while by later order of the Fairy Queen, Mary changes the edict on the hedge, so that "All children coming through this hedge are, for all time, the 'really' children of a 'really mother.' And little Kathie, her arms about Mary's neck, knows that at last there is no make-believe—she has found her "really" mother.

AMERICAN.

"THE BROKEN BARRIER" (Two Parts—July 27).—On the night of her wedding to Jack Hillery, a prominent member of New York society, Eunice Cosgrove, who is the daughter of a newlyrich and socially ambitious family, finds a letter from her mother to Jack proposing the marriage and offering Eunice's fortune in return for the social position Jack can give her. Jack had indignanty refused the proposition but later fell in love with Eunice and asked her to marry him. The young wife, upon reading the letter, jumps to the conclusion that Jack has married her for her money and on her wedding trip asserts that their marriage shall be one of form only and that she will be his wife merely in name.

Time passes; the two keep up evidences of happiness in social affairs. Jack saves Eunice from the consequences of a private supper with a well known club man, and both young people realize that their love for each other has grown stronger. In his weakened financial condition, Jack is too proud to make overtures to his wife for a reconciliation and goes into Wall street to recoup at the same time that Eunice with an aversion for her money starts speculating wildly. Through the irony of fate, Jack reaids the stock that Eunice is boosting, is successful, and in entire ignorance of his action, sweeps away his wife's money as he himself wins. Discovering the truth Jack declares that the fortune now belongs to neither of them alone but that it is "our" money, and the two start life over again.

"DOES IT END RIGHT?" (July 29).—Richard Manners, a young man of wealth and refinement, while rescuing a child from a burning building, disfigures himself for life. Although extremely fond of society, he is practically ostracized. He is intensely fond of children but they flee from his presence at sight of his hideous countenance.

This continual reminder of his misfortune proving too much for his soul, he retires to his country estate where he will be removed from encountering his fellow men. In this rural district lives a young girl who has recently become blind. She takes her old favorite walks, led about by her dog. Manners takes the same walks and one day when the dog broke away from his mistress and has left her helpless, Manners comes to her rescue. To his amazement she does not shrink from his presence and he discovers that she is blind.

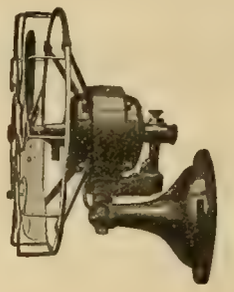
The inevitable happens. They marry and his life is lived simply and happily with her and their union is eventualy blessed by a child. The mother love asserts itself and her soul cries out to see her baby. A famous surgeon, through a friend, carries a letter of introduction to Manners on a shooting trip into the country. While a guest at Manners house, he comes to the conclusion that Manners' wife may by an operation, have her sight restored. The surgeon mentions the matter to Manners, who has a great struggle with himself. He has told his wife of his disfigurement. He knows that her eyesight restored means the end of happiness for him, but the great longing of the mother for the sight of her baby decides him and the operation is successfuly performed. On the day the bandages are removed, Manners goes into the darkened room in which his wife lies with the feeling that the end of his happiness is at hand and he stands before her fearing the look of horror and repulsion which he feels will come to her face when she sees him. When the last bandage is taken from her eyes, she picks up her baby and with her first sight sees it. At this point, the spring of a shade slips and a flood of light streams into the room—the delicate sight of her eyes is then gone forever. She saw her baby but her husband's hideous face was kindly spared from her memory. Does it end right?

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A JUG" (July 31).—Heine, the proprietor of a small restaurant, is outrageously "henpecked" by his wife Katrina. The climax comes one day when Heine, in placing some custard pies on a shelf, accidentally drops one on Katrina's head, and is chased furiously from the restaurant. Fearing to go back and altogether miserable, Heine wanders gloomily down to the creek and decides to end it all. Removing his coat and shoes he writes Katrina the following pathetic note of farewell—"I cant lif mit you, nor I cant lif mit-out you, so here goes nuddings into der creek. Heine."

As he is about to plunge feet foremost into the waters, he suddenly catches sight of a friend Luke McGlook down the creek in a boat with a jug of whiskey. The sight proves irresistible and Heine races down to Luke's boat. Heine unburdens his sorrows upon Luke and in turn, Luke generously unburdens the jug upon Heine. Troubles are soon forgotten and in the course of events Luke rows Heine over to the opposite shore and anchors the boat to a tree. Soothed by the jug's mellowing influence, the two finally become drowsy and stretch out in the boat for a nap.

Meanwhile, the village constable goes fishing and discovers Heine's note and the clothing. Believing that Heine has drowned himself in the creek, the constable hastens frantically to the restaurant and informs Katrina. Katrina is nearly wild and rouses the whole town. All rush down to the creek and start combing the waters frantically for poor Heine's remains.

Meanwhile a thirsty Hobo happens along and discovers Heine and Luke asleep in the boat. He finished up the contents of the jug, replaces it in the boat and sets the two sleepers adrift on the creek. While Katrina is lamenting the loss of her beloved Heine, and the excited villagers are combing the waters for Heine's remains, "the boat drifts into their midst bearing the two 'sleeping beauties,' and the jug." What happens to Heine is sufficient.



Your patrons shun the warm theatres in summer. Make your theatre cool and they will return soon again.

The sign

"Cooler Inside"

will invite them in. Make good by using

Westinghouse Electric Fans

because they give the most breeze with the least expense for current. They need no attention except lubrication once a season.

Send for Folder 4268 showing styles.

Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co.

DEPT. BR EAST PITTSBURGH, PA.

Sales Offices in 45 American Cities.

"Moving Picture Bryson"

If You Want to Put SYSTEM in Your Business Slip in Your Order for My Newly Revised 1914 Edition of the THEATRE RECORD LEDGER, the only moving picture man's bookkeeping ledger that can be easily handled without the worry of keeping books—52 weeks of your business under one cover—separated receipts—expenses—list of vaudeville—motion picture program—weather, etc.—all totalled on one daily and weekly page. Sent on approval upon receipt of $2.50 plus 20c parcel post—don't delay.

The THEATRE RECORD LEDGER CO., 252 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

When Your Picture Machine Needs Repairing

WHY DON'T YOU SEND IT TO US?

We have the best equipped machine shop in the country and can repair any make of machine. Write us and get acquainted.

WE BUY SECOND-HAND MACHINES.

GEO. M. HOKE SUPPLY CO.

76 N. State St. (bet. Lake and Randolph) Chicago, Ill.

GO INTO THE MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS

MAKE MONEY FAST! BE YOUR OWN BOSS!

$30 TO $50 PER NIGHT CLEAR

No Experience Needed

We furnish you with machine, film, curtain and complete outfit ready to go to work with ON OUR EASY PAYMENT PLAN. Write Now for Our Large FREE Catalogue.

NATIONAL MOVING PICTURE Co

Dept. M. P., Ellsworth Bldg., Chicago

MANUFACTURERS, ATTENTION!

I am open for a proposition in the manufacturing or exchange end of the film business. Have 10 years experience as manager for road attractions. Two years manager for moving picture theatres, employed for the past year with the General Film Co., and recently as manager of one of their Special Feature Department Branches. Will go anywhere. Address "C," care of Moving Picture World, 917 Schiller Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Moving Picture Theatre Mailing Lists For Sale

20,192, covering United States and Canada, price $40.00, or $3.50 per thousand for such states as you want.

670 Film Exchanges, U. S.	$3.50
70 Manufacturers and Studios, U. S.	1.00
34 Moving Picture Machine Mfrs. and Dealers	1.00
231 Film Exchanges, Foreign Countries	3.00
520 Moving Picture Theatres, Foreign Countries	3.00

Ask us for full particulars.

TRADE CIRCULAR ADDRESSING CO.

166 West Adams Street, Chicago

Established 1880

DEVELOPING and PRINTING

carefully done for professionals and amateurs

The largest factory in the world devoted exclusively to

Manufacturing Commercial Moving Pictures

Prices and factory description sent at your request

INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE CO.

Watterson R. Rothacker, Gen. Mgr.

223-233 West Erie Street, Chicago

MR. EXHIBITOR!

If you own a house in New York, New England, Pennsylvania, Maryland or any place in the entire East

DO YOU KNOW

That you can book

GEORGE KLEINE'S

Quo Vadis — For Napoleon and France
Anthony and Cleopatra — Last Days of Pompeii
Between Savage and Tiger

And

Two New Winners

THE NAKED TRUTH and SPARTACUS

Also a number of smaller features of the "GEORGE KLEINE" quality

At our GENERAL EASTERN OFFICE in the beautiful new CANDLER THEATRE

NEW YORK CITY
226 West 42nd Street

PAY US A VISIT ANY TIME
OR PHONE BRYANT 2200
WE KEEP YOUR CASHIER BUSY

The Dayton Exposition

brought many exhibitors from all sections of the country into contact with our publications. Few returned home without making a mental note of all we showed. Many are using our POST CARDS on their dull nights very profitably. Write us today for a catalogue and remedy for dull nights.

Semi-Photo Post Cards, $3.00 per thousand; formerly sold for $4.00. Over 400 different players.

Hand Colored Post Cards
For the better class of Souvenirs, 60 of the most popular players, all factions, $10.00 per thousand.

Photo Post Cards
For hand coloring. NOTE: The Public buy cards from stationers and color them. It's a new fad—60 Popular Players $5.00 per thousand.

PHOTOGRAPHS, SIZE 8 x 10, of all the prominent players, Association and Independent, 400 different names, 20 cents each.
LARGE PICTURE, semi-photo, glazed finish, size 11 x 14, $1 per doz.; 43 prominent players.
LARGE PICTURES, HAND COLORED, size 11 x 14. Prominent Association players, $2.00 per set of 12.
Photographs for lobby display of the two and three reel features of all of the Mutual multiple reels—set of 6, $1.00. Always ready 10 days ahead of release.

Special 22x28 Association and Mutual Hand Colored Pictures of 24 Favorites
75 Cents Each. Framed $2.50 Each

KRAUS MFG. CO., 14 East 17th St., N. Y.
Send for Catalogue of over 400 players and samples free. Write us, giving details of your dull nights, and we will send you a remedy.

THE CENTAUR FILM COMPANY

The Oldest Independent Film Manufacturer

Has the largest commercial plant in America, the most up-to-date equipment, and an organization second to none.

Printing and developing in any quantity. Quality guaranteed. Prices interesting.

CENTAUR FILM CO.
BAYONNE, N. J.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

BRONCHO.

THE LONG FEUD (Two Parts—July 29).—Yancey and Harper are two old mountaineers. A feud has existed in their families for years. Yancey and Harper are discovered shooting at each other in the opening of the story. They are stopped by the rain. Returning home, Harper tries to persuade his only son, Frank, to go out and become actively engaged in the feud. Frank refuses. Yancey likewise has his daughter, Louisa, swear a blood oath on the Bible against the Harpers. She takes the oath.

Frank Harper leaves home and goes to the city where he becomes a practicing lawyer in eight years. He returns to the village upon being informed that his old father is grieving for him. While there he meets Louisa Yancey, who is now a beautiful young woman. A love affair ensues. They are discovered by old Yancey in a loving attitude and upon the girl's return he berates her and hands her the rifle, ordering her to go out and shoot Frank Harper. She, remembering the blood oath, attempts to do so, but her courage fails her at the critical moment. She returns to the cabin after a scene with Frank who assures her of his love. Old man Yancey discovers the hiding place of the lovers upon their secret meetings and goes there, lying in ambush for Frank. He is overseen by Louisa, who makes a quick cut across a dangerous marsh in order to warn Frank Harper of his impending danger. In doing so she is caught in a quicksand. Her cry of distress is heard by Frank and he rushes to her rescue. He makes a rope of the horse's bridle and is about to rescue her when the old man Yancey appears on the scene and being unable to see the person who Frank is rescuing, shoots him in the hand. Later he sees that it is his daughter whom Frank is trying to save and he aids Harper in rescuing the girl. Yancey and Frank Harper shake hands. Through the influence of the young people the two old men are finally reconciled.

KAY BEE.

THE SHERIFF OF BISBEE (Two Parts—July 24).—Bud Farone, a saloon keeper of Bisbee, Arizona, resorts to selling whisky to the Indians in order to get money to perform an operation on his little invalid daughter. The citizens of Bisbee are disgusted with their sheriff, Bill Blake, because of his drinking and nominate Ed Simms to run for sheriff in place of Blake at the coming election. Simms discovers that Farone is selling whisky to the Indians, and realizing that it will further his interests, reports it to the men of Bisbee. Bud Farone makes his escape and the angry citizens elect Simms to succeed Sheriff Blake. Hoping to redeem himself, Blake goes in search of Farone. Farone finds Blake asleep, disarms him and then informs him that if he will give his wife $500 of the reward that is offered for him that he will let him take him back to town. Blake agrees. After he has brought Farone back to Bisbee and has had him locked up, he throws the key to the cell in his window, then goes to Simms' office, telling him that he holds no enmity and insists on his taking a drink with him. While they are in the saloon, Farone makes his escape. When the citizens find that Simms has let Farone escape, they beg Blake to accept the position again. Blake is reinstated. The operation is successful on Farone's child and Mrs. Farone and the child join Farone, who has escaped into Mexico.

DOMINO.

JIM CAMERON'S WIFE (Two Parts—July 30).—Jim Cameron becomes desperate at his failure to get work, and resolves to hold up the stage in order to provide necessities for his wife and sick child, Mildred. Mrs. Cameron discovers him in the act of making a mask and pleads with him to give up the thought of such a thing.

A $500 rewarad is offered for the outlaw, Andy Stiles, or any member of his gang. Anticipating a holdup of the richly laden stage, the sheriff plans to take passage on the stage in the disguise of a minister. Andy Stiles and his gang hold up the stage, but they are overpowered by the sheriff. Andy is injured and flees from his pursuers, taking refuge in Mrs. Cameron's cottage. She is unaware that she is bandaging up the outlaw's wounds and upon seeing the posse coming to her cabin, tells Stiles to run for his life. Stiles then reveals his identity to her. Begging her to remove the bandages, he shoots in the air and claims that she has captured him, thereby receiving the $500 reward. When the posse arrive they are surprised to see that she has been brave enough to capture Stiles. Jim comes home to find his financial problems solved by the $500 reward earned by his wife.

THANHOUSER.

"THE SUBSTITUTE" (Two Parts—July 7).—Grieving over the death of her daughter, Mrs. Sinclair, a wealthy widow, loses her mind. After trying a dozen other expedients to restore her reason, the widow's physician introduces Ann Haggerty, an inmate of a girl's reformatory, to Mrs. Sinclair and tells her the girl is her daughter. Mrs. Sinclair, when she recovers, refuses to believe that her daughter has died and takes Ann to her heart. The girl's rascally brother, "Bull" Haggerty, learns of his sister's good fortune and secures a position as groom with the Sinclair family where he blackmails his sister.

The girl finally triumphs over her fear of "Bull," defends Mrs. Sinclair's property and retains the love of Ralph Foster, a young man who visits Mrs. Sinclair from the West.

"A GENTLEMAN FOR A DAY" (July 17).—Leland is a young boy, whose mother is a seamstress in a little country town. He likes to go swimming with other boys. His mother catches him just as he is getting ready to go to the swimming hole, drags him home, and spanks him soundly. The punishment takes place on the porch and is witnessed by a little girl who passes by in an automobile. She laughs gleefully, and her merriment makes Leland very sad. Sadly he wishes he was a rich boy.

The boy falls asleep and dreams that his mother is very wealthy and that he is sent to a private school. There he meets Helen, the little girl who laughed at him, and is alternately favored and ignored by her. The boys who used to play with him laugh at him and call him "Cissy," and Leland yearns for the old days. He wakes and finds that it was only a dream. His mother tells him that he can go swimming and he runs joyfully off to join his playmates.

"THE PENDULUM OF FATE" (Two Parts—July 21).—Two sisters spent the summer at a seashore resort, and Bess, the younger, fell in love with a life guard who had saved her from drowning. Her sister Alice was engaged to a wealthy banker and little Bess did not dare to tell of her romance. On the day that Alice was married, however, Bess cut herself off from all family ties by eloping with the young life guard. Her parents never saw her again and didn't know that she and her little girl had taken refuge with her husband's father after the death of her husband. The old fisherman was kindly to his daughter-in-law, and when she, too, passed away, he took the best care of the little girl.

About thirteen years after the elopement, Alice, her husband and their only child, a girl, were on a yachting cruise and put in at a small fishing village because the banker had some important telegrams he found he must send at once. Marion, his daughter, went ashore in the boat with him, accompanied by the nurse. While the father was away the nurse and the sailor from the yacht wandered off to look around the place, leaving Marion alone. Suddenly she was confronted by another little girl who looked exactly like her, but who was shabbily dressed. The rich little girl envied the other, however, because she was bare-foot and could go in wading.

As a lark, Marion suggested that they exchange clothes and the poor child was thoroughly willing to do so. After they exchanged garments Marion, now dressed as the poor little girl, ran up the beach to go in wading with some other children, while Madeline "played she was a lady." She leaned over the side of the ship's boat to learn all about it, slipped and fell inside, hitting her head against a plank. It knocked her unconscious and when the banker arrived a few minutes later he naturally thought that his own child had been badly injured and made all haste to get her on the yacht. There she recovered, but, to the banker's grief, she declared she was not his child, but belonged to an old fisherman. He and his wife both knew it was delirium and they called in eminent specialists, who failed to accomplish much. In the meantime the real rich child had been taken in charge by the man she thought was her grandfather and she could not convince him that they had never met before.

Marion escaped from the house, leaving a note for the old fisherman, and managed to reach New York through her own confidence and quick wit. Traveling by freight train is slow and by the time she got home the old fisherman was there ready to grab her. There were mutual explanations, and the two little girls who looked so much alike found that they were really cousins. The old fisherman discovered new friends and a new home; for the banker and his wife never forgot the care he had taken of the poor little girl who was one of their own.

A CORRECTION.—In last week's issue, on Page 478, under the head of Thanhouser, a story was published of "The Leaven of Good" as being released on July 17. This is incorrect; the picture was released on July 12. On July 17 "A Gentleman for a Day," a synopsis of which is herewith published, was released.

RELIANCE.

"HOW IZZY WAS SAVED" (July 8).—Izzy is late for his appointment with his sweetheart, Sadie. Sadie takes no excuses and accuses Izzy of drinking too much. Izzy denies her accusation. He takes back the ring he has given her and makes a night of it. He takes home a tramp, who is mistaken by Sadie's friends for Izzy. Sadie is informed that her sweetheart is going to perdition. She reads a note of Izzy's, telling her she will be to blame if he fills a drunkard's grave.

Sadie sends a messenger after the tramp, with a note telling the supposed Izzy that he will be forgiven if he returns. The tramp is puzzled by the note, but returns to Izzy's home. The note drops from the tramp's pocket; Izzy picks it up, and a few minutes later is dashing madly in the direction of Sadie's home.

"A WIFE FROM THE COUNTRY" (July 10).—Jack Bruce is warned by his father that unless he stops dissipating he will be disinherited. Bruce, Sr., is saved from the hoofs of a runaway team by Mary Thorner. Bruce thinks the girl an ideal wife for Jack, and, upon his return, urges Jack to visit her, telling him that he will settle $100,000 on him if he marries her. Jack goes to the country and wins Mary's heart. They are married and return to town. Bruce finally falls really in love with his wife.

"BLUE PETE'S ESCAPE" (Two Reels—July 11).—Detective Burton mixes with crooks for years and never appears at headquarters, and is very successful. Burton proves of great assistance in cleaning up the town. Posing as the notorious "Blue Pete," Burton becomes friendly with "Chicago Red." "Chicago Red" tells Burton he plans to rob the Goodall Construction Company's safe, and Burton agrees to help him. "Pittsburg Slim," tramp friend of "Chicago Red," is jealous of "Blue Pete," and follows them to the scene of their job.

The police capture "Chicago Red," but "Blue Pete" is permitted to escape. "Pittsburg Slim" sees through the trick, and when "Chicago Red" also escapes the two trail Burton to his sweetheart's home. The police arrive in time to capture "Red" and "Slim," and Burton is saved.

"HOW IZZY STUCK TO HIS POST" (July 15).—Izzy loves Mae, the village belle. A yegg, posing as a canvasser, comes to town and nearly steals Mae away from Izzy. Izzy varnishes a chair with quick-drying glue. In his absence Mae and the yegg enter the store. Izzy returns and sits down in the chair. Mae asks Izzy to take her home, but Izzy is compelled to refuse. Mae leaves with the yegg. Izzy frees himself, but his trousers and part of his person are left on the chair.

Afraid to pass through the streets, Izzy spends the night in the store. He is awakened shortly after midnight by the yegg trying to break open the safe. Izzy captures the yegg, thereby becoming the town hero, and cementing himself even more strongly in Mae's regard.

"OUR MUTUAL GIRL (No. 27—July 20).—While arranging Margaret's hair, Lewis, Our Mutual Girl's maid, drops a mirror to the floor and breaks it. The maid, being superstitious, is much frightened at this, and decides to go to a fortune-teller to find out what to do about the matter. Margaret, becoming curious herself, goes with Madge Travers to see Madame Dolores, a seeress.

Madame Dolores assures Margaret that she will not be affected by the incident, but warns her that she is beset by a grave danger, and should go to the seaside.

At the Highlands Margaret mounts an observation tower to watch the ships out at sea. The watchman leaves at sunset for the day, and, not knowing that Margaret is in the tower, locks her in. Margaret manages to attract Dunbar's attention, and the Man of Mystery, with bow and arrow, shoots a cord to her. A rope ladder is attached to the cord. Margaret then makes her way, hand under hand, to safety.

KOMIC.

"WRONG ALL AROUND" (July 12).—Spotty Jones abuses his wife, and she determines to be revenged. She calls her mother to her aid. Jones, apprised of her coming, changes nameplates in the hall, and when the mother-in-law arrives she goes to the wront apartment. Never having seen her son-in-law, she opens hostilities on the occupant of the apartment, the henpecked Mr. Hicks. Mrs. Hicks, returning unexpectedly home, finds a strange woman beating her husband. Mrs. Hicks is busy lambasting the intruder when the father-in-law bursts open the door and sees Mrs. Hicks beating his wife.

Jones tries to square things, but his explanations don't clear him, and the film ends with Jones attacked from all sides.

MAJESTIC.

"THE ONLY CLUE" (July 7).—Jim Broughton quarrels with Tom Collins and knocks Tom against the curb. Jim believes he has killed him, and robs a detective to get money to flee. The detective determines to "get" the man who robbed his house, feeling sure he can identify him by a long scar and a twisted finger on his left hand. Years pass. Broughton has married and is happy when the detective, passing through the foundry in which he works, thinks he recognizes Broughton. Broughton, in desperation, plunges his hand into a mold of molten metal, and thus destroys the detective's only clue.

ATTRACTIVE

LOBBY PHOTOS

ATTRACT BUSINESS

Our Startling Reproductions Command Attention

LET US SEND YOU

Kalem Monday Releases

OR

Alice Joyce Series

Six, 11 x 14, for $1.00

Our Latest Art Production

Mary Pickford

30 x 40, Sepia, $3.00; Hand Colored, $5.00

The Wyanoak Publishing Co.

146 WEST 52nd STREET
NEW YORK CITY

Send Us Single or Standing Order
Your Credit Is Good

A Gundlach Projection Lens Will Make Your Picture Sharper and Brighter.

If it does not you can return it. Every Lens is sold subject to approval.
When you get a Gundlach Lens you go the limit. There is none better made anywhere.
TELEGRAPH the width of the picture wanted, the distance from lens to screen and the name of the machine. We will ship C. O. D., subject to approval and refund if the lens comes back.

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co.
808 Clinton Ave., So., Rochester, N. Y.

CALEHUFF SUPPLY COMPANY

(INCORPORATED)

Jobbers for Powers, Edison, Motiograph and Simplex

LARGEST LEADING SUPPLY HOUSE IN AMERICA

Mercury Arc Rectifier	Wagner Converters
Flame Arc Lamps	Brass and Wood Frames
Automatic Ticket Registers	Ticket Choppers
Exit Signs	Asbestos State Booths
Slide Ink	Ft. Wayne Compensarcs
Carrying Cases	Fire Extinguishers
Tickets	Fire Boxes
Condensers	Carbons
Pianos	Cement
Chairs	Trap Drum Effects

MIRROR SCREENS
PROMPT SHIPMENTS BACKED BY A SOLID GUARANTEE
A Few Slightly Used Machines
N. W. corner 13th and Race Streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

PUT in your own lighting plant and pay for it with your Central Station bills. A Foos generating set will produce current for less than 3 cents per kilowatt, and is more reliable than service from a Central Station.

Ask for Bulletin 98.

FOOS GAS ENGINE CO.
Springfield, Ohio.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

UTILITY TRANSPARENCY CO.
1733 West 9th Street Brooklyn, N. Y.

EYE COMFORT Lighting System

So necessary to the success of every Motion Picture Theatre that we engineer 60 Theatres a month.

This is a free service to Motion Picture Theatre Managers.

Distance Screen to Rear of Auditorium .....
Ceiling Height .....
Width of House .....
Height Under Balcony .....
Distance Rear Auditorium to Front of Balcony.....
Name .....

NATIONAL X-RAY REFLECTOR CO.
Chicago—229 W. Jackson Blvd. New York—6 E. 39th St.

"THE OLD DERELICT" (July 14).—Foster, a young married man in comfortable circumstances, gets drunk and attacks his wife. Realizing that he cannot control his appetite for drink, Foster settles all his property on his wife and goes away. Foster drifts to the mines; his craving for liquor keeps him down. Through all his misfortunes he clings to a little tin box containing a Masonic emblem.. Thirty years pass. Foster, changed beyond all recognition, returns to his old home. He finds that his daughter has married and has two pretty children.

Foster saves the children from being injured in a gun-powder explosion, but is mortally wounded himself. The derelict tries to conceal the trinkets which will identify him. His son-in-law discovers the old man's secret, and destroys all evidence of his identity.

MUTUAL WEEKLY.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 81 (July 16).—Terrific bomb explosion wrecks tenement house, N. Y. City. Three I. W. W. agitators are victims.

Boston, Mass., holds swimming championship.

Two French aviators, Bourish and Pelletier, are killed in aeroplane accident at Versailles, France.

Alphonso Kissling and Maurice Gotlieb, artists of the Latin quarter, Paris, France, fight exciting duel for the love of a pretty model.

The dancing craze hits Coney Island. Bathers tangoing on the beach.

Mr. Kermit Roosevelt, son of ex-President Theo. Roosevelt, marries Miss Belle Villard at Madrid, Spain.

Violent storm of wind and rain causes loss of life and property in Paris, France.

The steamship "Oriole," in collision with another vessel, "turns turtle" in the Thames River, London, England.

U. S. Customs officials seize and destroy $50,000 worth of opium, smuggled into Los Angeles, Cal.

The old cup defender "Reliance," which triumphed over the "Shamrock" in 1903, is being broken up in a Brooklyn shipyard.

First International Cycle Car Races are held at Detroit, Mich.

FEATURE FILM STORIES

ECLECTIC.

DETECTIVE CRAIG'S COUP (Five Parts).—Government sleuths, headed by Detective Craig, have succeeded in running down a gang of Metropolitan counterfeiters. Although their information as regards the location of the gang's hangout and its plans is complete, they are unable to produce evidence against the man circulating bad money. Suspicion rests, however, on James Dalton, a clever crook, who rarely visits the counterfeiters room. Dalton gets rid of his bad money through unsuspected "fences." He has just succeeded in using Bob Brierly, a young prodigal from the west, who dropped his money on the great white way for this purpose. When the bartender who took the bad money discovers it he calls in the police.

Dalton, as usual, escapes while Bob, innocent of the part he has played, is caught and convicted. Released from jail he meets Mae Edwards whom he had formerly befriended. She recommends him to her employer, a banker, and Brierly secures a responsible position. Thinking he has eluded the detectives, Dalton comes to the bank to look the ground over preparatory to a robbery which he is planning. He runs into Brierly and tries to make him an accomplice. Bob, who has married Mae Edwards and wishes to lead an honest life, refuses. Dalton advises the banker that Bob is an ex-convict and Bob loses his position. Dalton's persistent efforts make it impossible for Bob to get work and he is forced to joint the crook. Craig has been shadowing Dalton and knows that Bob is taking part in the proposed robbery against his will. Having made his plans beforehand Craig frustrates the robbery. Dalton alone gets away by going hand over hand across an electric cable between two skyscrapers. He is later caught in an exciting motor-boat chase. Craig then vindicates Bob and the banker gives him back his old position. Bob goes home and tells Mae, and their cup of happiness is filled to overflowing.

A ROYAL IMPOSTOR (Four Parts).—Prince Ludwig, of Gravania, is very wild and indulges himself in many dissipations which reflect no credit on the good name of the reigning family. He has a double in his servant Enrico whom he dresses in his uniform when he leaves the palace so that his absence will not be noticed. Enrico is in love with a pretty peasant girl, Valerie, who in turn is faithful to him. On one of the rides through the royal parks Prince Ludwig sees the girl and falls desperately in love with her. True to Enrico, however, she repulses the Prince. He not being used to have his wishes frustrated has the girl kidnapped and brought to his room in the palace. Before the Prince returns Enrico accidentally enters. Valerie tells him of her plight and he helps her escape through a secret passage.

Valerie has no sooner disappeared from the room than the Prince enters and a quarrel starts between him and his servant in which the Prince is killed. News comes almost simultaneuosly that the king is dead, and Enrico dressing himself in the prince's uniform goes out and passes himself off as the prince. Later the body of the suposed servant, but in reality the prince is found, and the blame is laid upon the newly made servant-king. The cabinet decides to make way with the king because of his scoundrelly action in killing his servant. When Enrico goes to the home of Valerie to declare himself truly the trap is laid by the chief of police. Valerie recognizes her true lover and tries to aid him to escape, but the paths are too well guarded and the false Enrico falls a victim to his own ambition.

THE REIGN OF TERROR (Six Parts.—During the French revolution which changed the government of France from a monarchy to a republic, the lowest citizens of Paris seized the reins of government and caused the imprisonment and death of the flower of the French nobility. Among these was Queen Marie Antoinette. This photo drama shows the attempts made by her friends to get her out of the power of revolutionists and is built up from the celebrated novel "The Chevalier de Maison Rouge," by Alexander Dumas. The story opens with the Queen in prison. The Chevalier de Maison Rouge visits his brother-in-law Dixmer, who is supposed to be strong for the revolution, and enlists his help in a desperate attempt to free the Queen. A young officer of the revolutionists is persuaded by the wife of Dixmer to allow the Queen to take a little exercise in the courtyard of the prison. On one of these walks she is presented with some flowers, one of which contains a note telling of the plans of the conspirators. This note is found by one of the guards and the attempt to rescue her is a failure.

Not to be disappointed the Chevalier makes a second attempt. The authorities fearing this have the Queen moved to another prison. Dixmer and the Chevalier by a ruse overpower the warden, and Dixmer's wife takes the place of the Queen in the cell. The plot seems to be going successfully when it is spoiled by the arrival of the Queen's former guards. To prevent any further attempts the revolutionary tribunal order the execution of the Queen. This is carried out, although the Chevalier and Dixmer make another attempt to rescue her which results in their death.

GAUMONT.

"THE FALSE MAGISTRATE" (Fantomas No. 5).—Having committed murder in Belgium, Fantomas is sentenced to life imprisonment. Two crimes committed in France suggest to Inspector Juve that the Fantomas gang is still at work. He conceives the idea that if Fantomas is set free it will be possible to follow him and capture him and the remaining members of the gang. The villain escapes from prison and makes his way to the railroad station and boards a train where he is tracked by private detectives. When the train stops at a country station, Fantomas alights with the intention of making good his escape, but he finds that he is being followed by two detectives, whom he recognizes. He goes back to his carriage, which leads the detectives to think he is quite safe, but he crosses the train and leaves by the opposite door, jumping into the baggage wagon of the train on the opposite rail. Just at that moment the train moves and a magistrate, who happens to have nearly missed the train, also jumps into the baggage wagon. Fantomas, who was hiding, attacks the magistrate, and after a severe struggle in which he is victorious, assumes the disguise of the magistrate and takes his clothes and papers. He continues the journey as the magistrate, successfully rescues certain criminals, who are brought before him to be tried, and manages to blackmail several members of society, with whom he is brought in contact. While here he is recognized by Fandor, the young and clever Journalist, who happens to come into the district and who has suspicions as to the authenticity of the magistrate. He decides to keep watch upon him. His suspicions are well founded and he identifies the magistrate as none other than Fantomas. After much trouble, he is able to get papers, committing Fantomas to prison, but Fantomas, suspecting his immediate arrest, issues an order to the head warden, and tells him that it is Detective Juve's intention to be arrested, disguised as Fantomas. The warden is not to tell a soul of the detective's intentional disguise, but is to let him remain in prison until 12 o'clock midnight, when the head warden is to personally release him. The police, not suspecting anything of this, feel quite safe when Fantomas is put in the cell and securely barred and locked. His scheme works favorably, and once more Fantomas is at large.

"GENERAL" WAR FEATURE FILM CORP.

"GYPSY LOVE" (Five Parts).—Herve has neglected his wife, Blanche, and has left her for weeks at a time, while he amused himself on the Rivieri and at Monte Carlo, Blanche's loneliness has been relieved by Guido, and their friendship has finally culminated in an unwise. attachment. Blanche, not daring to entrust Guido's love letters to the post, gives the packet to Mme. Ruisor, the wife of the Mayor of Naples, and writes Guido telling him to call on Mme. Ruisor and obtain them. Guido calls at the Mayor's residence expecting to obtain the letters from Madam Ruisor, but is received by the Mayor. Guido, at a loss to explain his call on Mme. Ruisor, the Mayor's suspicions are aroused, and he searches his wife's writing-desk where he discovers the packet of letters. His horrible fear seems confirmed by the first letter he sees. "I cannot bear to think your husband has a parent's right to our little girl."

It happens that Vyamar at this time applies to the mayor for a permit allowing his band of gypsies to encamp in the city. When the Mayor Ruisor suddenly conceiving a fiendishly cruel revenge upon his supposedly unfaithful wife, goes to the nursery, seizes his infant daughter, Dolly, rushes with her to his office and hands her over with a purse of gold to Gyamar and commands him to leave immediately with the child for parts unknown. Gyamar obeys forthwith. When his wife returns the mayor realizes his blunder; but all efforts to recover their child prove futile.

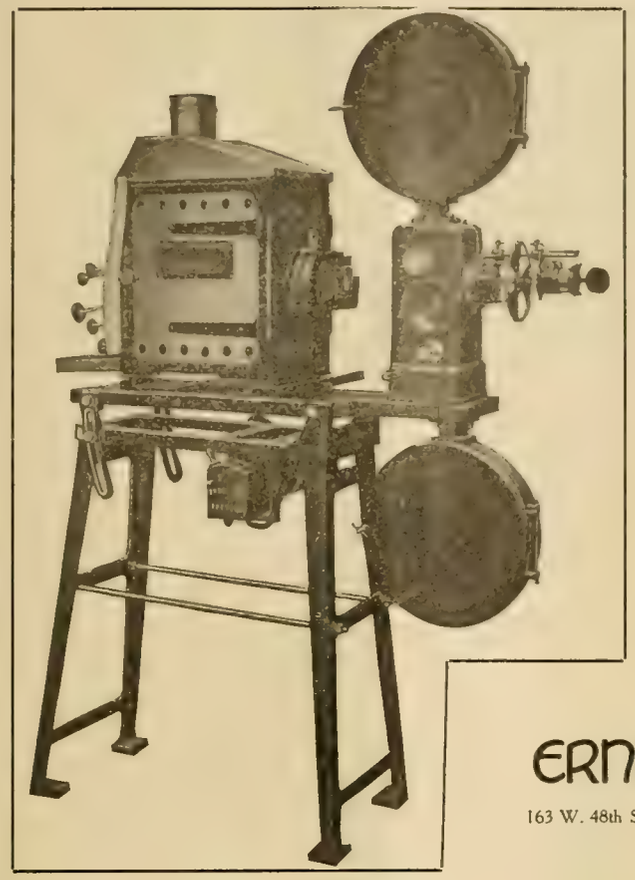
Little Dolly is soon accustomed to her nomadic life and she and little Azucena have become inseparable friends. It is not until Dolly is about eighteen years old that a decisive turning point occurs in her life.

Old Gyamar's lust for gold has led him to sell the now beautiful gypsy dancer to an infamous nobleman of great wealth, but Erik, a young gypsy, aided by Dolly's loyal friend Azucena, succeed in saving Dolly who now throws in her lot with the youth, Erik, feeling justified in leaving Gyamar. At the first inn Dolly and Erik enter, two acrobats induce the young people to join them and form an acrobatic troupe. They agree and after much rehearsing Erik and Dolly become skillful members of the "Black Devils" as they style their troupe.

Dolly's father is now Minister of War. On one of his horseback rides he meets an old gypsy and inquires of her if she ever visited the town before. She refers him to the gypsy chieftain, and he recognizes old Gyamar. He is overjoyed and promises Gyamar anything within his power if he will but restore his daughter. The old man cannot forego this opportunity of gain and bethinks him of Azucena. He presents Azucena as the missing Dolly and Ruisor is delighted with her.

The joy of the parents is of short duration, for Azucena, overwhelmed by the love showered upon her by her supposed parents, is unable to continue the deception and she confesses that she is not Dolly but Azucena. With this clue and every power of the government at his command

TEXAS EXHIBITORS APEX FEATURE SERVICE DALLAS TEX. OKLA. ARK. LA.



Increase your bank account by pleasing your audience. You can do so by using THE KING of all Projecting Machines,

The Ernemann All-Steel Projector "IMPERATOR"

The only machine that shows an ABSOLUTE GUARANTEED FLICKERLESS PICTURE. Don't be behind time.

Write for descriptive literature.

ERNEMANN-PHOTO-KINO-WORKS

163 W. 48th Street NEW-YORK 163 W. 48th Street

Liberty Motion Picture Company

"The name and fame of 'LIBERTY' will circle the globe."

Our equipment is "top-notch"
Our aim is to top the "top."

We are equipped to handle any amount of outside printing.

WANTED!!

Scenarios:—Two or three reel Canadian and Northwestern stories—strong on exteriors. Let them be original.

Address, Scenario Department.

LIBERTY MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

20-52 E. HERMAN STREET GERMANTOWN, PHILA.

the Minister of War soon learns the whereabouts of the "Black Devils." It requires no second glimpse from Madam Ruisor to reveal the identity of Dolly. Erik, the acrobat-lover of Dolly, is given a position in the government by the Minister of War by reason of the fact that he does not cherish an acrobat as a son-in-law, even though he be a professional man, and it is not long after that the young people are married.

WARNER'S FEATURES.

"THE MEDICINE BAG."—In the olden days the mail stage-coach left the frontier town of Saint Joseph, and headed across the prairie to Santa Fe was guarded by the escort of mounted men. It was a journey of 2,000 miles, beset with the dangers of wild animals, prairie fires and ferocity of lurking indians. Here and there on the outskirts of civilization were the cabins which the early settlers erected on the prairie. In one of these houses dwelt Anna and her aged father. Anna was the sweetheart of Dan, one of the mail-coach guards, and her heart would jump for joy when in the distance she saw the stage-coach approaching across the flat plains. On one of these trips Dan befriended an Indian, Two Feathers, who had fallen from his horse and was dying. As a reward the grateful Indian gave Dan his precious medicine bag, telling him that bad luck would never come to him or anyone else who possessed it.

Anna and Dan set their wedding day and as a betrothal pledge he gave her the magic medicine bag. Soon after this the red skins under the terrible chief Black Kettle went with warpaint and tomahawk upon the bloody war path. They surprised and robbed the stage-coach, then attacked and set in flames the little cabin of Anna's father. She was captured by Two Feathers, who recognized the medicine bag and took her under his protection, intending to return her to Dan in gratitude for his kind services.

In the meanwhile Dan who had escaped from the Indian's tomahawks went with all haste to warn his sweetheart of the savages' outbreak. When he arrived at the cabin he found it in ruins, Anna gone and her father severely wounded. He was almost distracted with grief. When casting his eyes on the ground he recognized the gaudy colored scarf which belonged to Two Feathers. He started to overtake them, and rescue his betrothed. For miles across the undulating plains he and his companions trailed the guilty tribe and at last reached the Indian encampment. His companions realizing that they were not strong enough to attack the savages dispatched one of their members to Fort Leavenworth to ask the aid of the army in freeing the captives. Two Feathers and his wife took Anna into their wigwam and were treating her with the kindest of attention. Dan's heart was sorely troubled about the safety of Anna and he could not wait until the morning for the troops to arrive, but resolved to go single handed into the Indians' camp. He entered the wigwam of Two Feathers and was about to kill him when he learned from Anna herself that she owed her life to the Indian. In the cool morning air the soldiers' bugles sounded the charge and the troops from all sides rushed in upon the Indians. The first to die was Two Feathers, who fell lifeless into the arms of his wife with a bullet in his heart. Dan and Anna after giving faithful words of consolation to the weeping squaw turned their ponies' noses toward civilization to be married, pledging themselves never to forget Two Feathers' kindness or to part with the magic medicine bag.

"HER LAST HOPE".—Robert after rescuing Lucy, the star of the moving picture company where he is employed, from a fire which consumes the plant is infatuated with her charms. The pair leave Italy and go to America. In doing this he abandons his sister Olga to live as best as she may on the scanty earnings of her worthless and drunken father. Shortly after this the father dies from his dissipation, and Olga discouraged in her fight against want and poverty decides to accept the attentions of a wealthy count. In America Lucy has grown tired of Robert and casts him off. After much privation he secures work, and by his ability and cleverness advances to a position immediately under the head of the concern.

Robert now makes efforts to discover the whereabouts of his father and sister through the aid of an investigating agency. Unable by those means to do so, he asks for a leave of absence to return to Italy and carry on the search himself. His employer consents on the condition that he accompany his wife and daughter Mary when going abroad.

On the voyage the two young people fall in love, and their attachment is sanctioned by her mother.

In Italy at a masque ball he discovers his sister, now a notorious woman. Upon seeing him she rushes into his arms; his fiance in spite of explanations leaves in a jealous rage. Robert writes her a touching letter of farewell, in which he states the situation, shouldering all the blame for his sister's mistakes and misfortunes. He ends by saying that henceforth he will live for her, thereby giving her every opportunity to redeem herself in her own eyes and the eyes of the world. He and his sister then leave for Venice where Mary and her mother have also gone.

Olga here meets a man who knows of her past. He makes advances to her which she resists. He then exposes her publicly before the guests of the hotel at which they are stopping. As a result she is shunned by all, and in shame and with breaking heart goes to her brother's apartment for consolation. He is talking to Mary and her mother. Olga while waiting behind a curtain for them to leave, learns from the conversation for the first time of Robert's broken engagement, and the sacrifice he is making so that she may start life anew. Robert and his sweetheart are reunited and the story ends happily on board an ocean liner steaming westward toward the New World. He consecrates himself to Mary, and resolves to forget the sadness of the past, and determines to win fame, fortune, and happiness in America, the "Land of the free, and the home of the brave."

"THE ROMANY RYE."—A young farmer visiting a gypsy camp to have his fortune told, meets the gypsy princess and falls in love with her. She pretends to return his affections. She warns him of of a plot which the men of her tribe have laid to rob him, and he is induced to place in her hands for safe keeping, a large amount of money. He is attacked by the girls jealous gypsy lover, but overpowers his assailant. When he goes to reclaim his money, with great cleverness, and in a flood of tears, she declares that it has been taken from her, meanwhile patting the knet in her sash where she is concealing the money.

The youth touched by her apparent grief forgives her and after rescuing her from violence at the hands of her gypsy-sweetheart, he takes her to his own house to live with his mother. Here she is willful, ungrateful, and disrespectful to the kind old mother of her sweetheart. Her only desire is by fair means or foul to obtain from him every cent she can.

He blinded to her faults by his love, marries her. Before the flowers of her bridal roses have faded, she heartlessly forces his mother from her home, to live with friends on a neighboring farm. Ungrateful for the home, love and station that her husband has given her, she turns upon him, bleeding him with fiendish rapacity of his money. In vain he reasons, pleads and makes a costly peace offering to her. She meets her old gypsy lover, and conspires with him to rob her husband of his last dollar and then run away together.

The hour of her desertion arrives, the gypsy goes to her house to carry out the robbery. As she is about to leave the only home she has ever known, the faint voice of an awakening conscience whispers to her that perhaps she is not doing right. Her companion insists upon having every dollar she has extorted from her husband. She refuses to deliver it. The man at the pistol point attempts to force it from her, in the struggle he is shot and killed. Her husband hearing the report of the revolver, rushes into the house, sees his wife, whom in spite of her failings he has always trusted, arising in alarm from the dead body of the gypsy. Her head falls in shame, her conscience fully awakened thunders burning reproaches into her ear.

With breaking heart she sinks to her knees before him, begging forgiveness. But his faith in her is shattered, his eyes are opened, and he refuses to take her back. Deserted by her husband and her former associates she determines by work and service to win back the home and love she has lost. At last the gray haired mother whom she has treated so cruelly is touched by her efforts. Forgetting the injuries of the past the noble old lady pleads with her son for the forgiveness of the wife. The pair are reunited. She has learned by bitter experience it is only by a life of love, duty and unselfish devotion that lasting happiness is attained.

FILM RELEASES OF AMERICA.

THE WITNESS INVISIBLE.—George Neville, son of Professor Henry Neville, an eminent professor of medicine, received a letter from Hedda, a former flame, reminding him of past promises. Neville, meeting Hedda, tells her that his engagement to marry another girl quite interferes with Hedda's plans, but that he will adhere to his word to make an experiment in manufacturing artificial diamonds, which experiment, by its publicity, will be of great aid to her.

Elvira, a famous dancer, is playing at the same theater, and she and her manager are angered by the publicity given to Hedda through the heralded scientific endeavor. Elvira, noticing that a mysterious masked man (Neville) has several times visited Hedda's dressing room, determines upon discovering his identity. Hedda is waiting for Neville to come to her with the final solution for hardening the artificial gems when she is alarmed by the arrival of an attendant bearing the visiting card of Professor Neville.

George arrives. Warning Hedda not to allow a vial of powder to get into connection with a powerful acid lying in a shallow pan, he is nearly finished when he is startled by seeing his father's card. He attempts to flee. Begging him to complete the experiment, she struggles with him and in so doing upsets the acid into the powder. A revolver lying on the table is exploded and Hedda falls dead across a couch. Professor Neville and several other men of science had been knocking at Hedda's door. Hearing the shot, they all rush in, to find the actress dead, and to see a man running down the fire escape.

In the dead girl's hand is found a locket, wrenched from the chain of the man with whom Hedda had struggled. It contains the photograph of George Neville. George is arrested at his home. Professor Neville begs permission to interview him alone. George, stumbling into the laboratory, overturns a vial of chloroform. He falls. His father enters. Suicide? The Commissioner of Police enters, and thinking George is dead by his own hand, goes away. Shall he allow his son to die? Shall he give him back to life as a felon? A Spartan father is the professor. He telephones for the police and revives the boy, who comes back to consciousness to find himself a prisoner. The police, unconvinced of George's guilt, begin an investigation. How the truth was found presents a train of intensely interesting incidents, revelation rather to be seen than written.

I. S. P.

HELD FOR RANSOM (Four Parts).—Brewster, a millionaire, and his daughter, Ruth, were out for a walk. Brewster stopped to shake hands with a friend, while Ruth loitered behind and played with her dog. The millionaire turned just in time to see his daughter driven away in an automobile. Hailing another he gave chase, but in vain. He engages Detective Byrnes, and shows him an anonymous letter he has received. The captors of Ruth learn of Byrnes' connection with the case, and devise a plan to capture him. Later three men in a car are detected watching Byrnes' house, and the detective suspects a trap. By a clever ruse he captures two of the crooks, and forces them to tell him the location of their den. He advises Brewster to meet the crooks at the place named in their letter. Disguised as one of the crooks Byrnes is successful in entering their den, but they were warned to be on the lookout by one of the crooks who escaped capture by the detective. As the daring detective enters the room a man springs from behind a door. The detective, on the alert, jumps back, only to fall into a trap. Leaving him, the crooks go to the appointed meeting place with Brewster. By means of a small pocket mirror the detective reflects the sun's rays and attracts the attention of two of his men waiting outside.

At the meeting place Brewster is induced by the crooks to enter their car. As they are about to drive away a motorcycle with a chair attachment passes. As it passes the man in the chair, unnoticed by the crooks, drops a mysterious looking bag, from which a dwarf of a man wriggles, and climbs onto the back of the car. At the end of the ride the dwarf sends a note to the detective by means of a carrier pigeon. In the house where they take Brewster his daughter is shown to him—imprisoned in a small cell-like room. The crooks demand $10,000 for her release. Just as Brewster delivers the money, the detective and his men break into the room. In the scuffle which follows Barney Lee, the Master Crook, escapes. A thrilling chase ensues between the crook in his auto, and the detective on his motorcycle. A clever scheme to elude the detective fails. By means of a rope, which his chauffeur lowers from a high bridge, Barney Lee escapes from a motor boat. The detective arrives on the bridge and cuts the rope, and so foils the escape of one of Lee's accomplices. He then follows Barney Lee, who seeks refuge in the Eiffel Tower. The chase up the tower, and the crook, in desperation, climbing out onto the beams, is intensely thrilling; and then, retribution is meted out to the Master Crook, when his foot slips, and his body falls from the dizzy height.

The detective recovers the money and restores it to Brewster. Ruth is delighted when Byrnes hands her the beautiful carrier pigeon which enacted such an important part in this thrilling adventure.

PHOTO-DRAMA CO., INC.

"AFTER THE BALL" (Six Parts).

A little maiden
Climbed an old man's knee.
Begged for a story,
Do, Uncle please.
Why are you single?
Why live alone?
Have you no babies?
Have you no home?

The story he tells her follows:

John Dale is an eminent bachelor lawyer who has never felt the sting of cupid's dart. A millionaire friend of John's invites him to join

THE STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO.

Announce Their July Release

"THE LAND of the LOST"

The Photographic and Literary Triumph of the Present Time

A multiple production with a unique theme emphasizing and combining every element of high-class character, dramatic action and picturesque excellence

Introducing the Eminent Players

Mr. ARTHUR DONALDSON Mr. JAMES VINCENT Miss VIOLET STUART

In an Emotional Romance of Land and Sea

IN FOUR PARTS

Attractive advertising material, highly colored Otis Lithograph 9-sheets, 3-sheets, 1-sheets, heralds, lobby photos, advance slides now ready

Territorial Assignments Now Selling. If You Want a Feature That Will Please All the People All the Time Here It Is

One Sterling Production a Month, But Each Production Sterling Perfect

THE STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO.

145 WEST 45th STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y.

THE ALBUQUERQUE FILM CO., Inc.

FEATURING

MISS DOT FARLEY

Direction of G. P. HAMILTON
RELEASING THROUGH

Warner's Features, Inc.

Two most sensational master productions

"THE LUST OF THE RED MAN"

the best Western story ever produced

"THE PRICE OF CRIME"

a beautiful story of pathos combining sensationalism and bigness that will make splendid photoplay history.

COMING PRODUCTIONS:
"RESERVED SHOT" and "WHEN WOMEN LOVE."
MAMMOTH PRODUCTIONS

Western Studio, 406 Court St., Los Angeles, Cal.

a yachting party. The girl that John may have been waiting for appears in the person of Louise Tate, who is accompanied by her father, James Tate. It is love at first sight. John is made a welcome visitor at the Tate home. The family consists of four persons, Mr. and Mrs. Tate, Louise, the daughter, and Gerald, the son. While at college Gerald played games of cards with the other students which caused them to be expelled from the institution. Gerald's father, learning of his son's disgrace, is enraged beyond measure and is about to order Gerald from his home when Louise and her mother intercede for him.

Gerald finds his mother's necklace upon the library floor where it had fallen in her attempts to shield her son from the father's attack. Gerald takes the necklace to a pawnbroker and pledges it, intending to gamble and try to win enough money to pay his debts and have sufficient left to redeem the necklace. Gerald soon loses the money on the races. After missing her jewels the mother summons detectives, who find the missing jewels in the pawnshop. While the pawnbroker is receiving his check from Mr. Tate, Gerald walks into the room and is recognized as the one who pawned the necklace. He is ordered from his father's house forever. For his reckless dissipation he is sent to prison for four years. After escaping from prison, he returns to the city to obtain honest employment but is found by one of his former pals, who forces him by threats of exposure to join them again.

In the meantime John Dale and Louise have become engaged. The annual Charity Ball is announced. This item comes to the attention of Gerald's underworld friends who select him to go to the ball to play his supposed trade of a thief, yet in his heart, he had made up his mind not to do anything dishonest. He goes to the ball where he meets his sister, Louise, who nearly faints when she sees him. As she totters Gerald places his fingers to his lips to indicate silence, and John just turns in time to catch Louise and assist her to an anti-room. While he goes for a glass of water Gerald appears, and while fondly kissing his sister, is discovered by John who becomes so enraged that the glass falls from his hand and is broken to pieces.

John, never having met her brother, stands rooted to the ground by the supposed unfaithfulness of his sweetheart, and demands to know why that strange man was kissing her. John takes Louise home where the quarrel is renewed and the couple, misunderstanding each other, never met again. John turns over his office to a junior partner and sails for a tour of the world.

In the meantime Louise has slowly been dying of a broken heart. Gerald again breaks away from the gang, and under an assumed name, obtains employment in a large factory, where he is discovered and brought back to the prison, where he saves the life of a keeper and his term is shortened for the deed.

Returning to the city, he learns of his sister's illness and, without being seen by his parents, he gains admission to her room, and soon he learns for the first time that he had been the cause of the lovers' quarrel. Louise, before she dies, exacts a promise from her brother that he will explain the scene at the ball to John. The death of his sister kills all the ambition in Gerald, who drifts again to his underworld friends, one of whom has selected a place for good pickings, as the owner of the house is away. It happens to be the home of John Dale, who has unexpectedly returned to his native country.

John dispatches Briggs, his valet, with a note to Louise, asking if he may call, but is met by an old servant who tells him that Louise is dead. John is stunned by the news. The night of the robbery, Gerald is forced to climb into the window first where he discovers the photograph of Louise and, picking it up exclaims, "My sister," which is heard by John Dale, who draws his revolver and compells Gerald to hold up his hands. In that position he is found by the next member of the gang. He cries to his chum to stand aside as he levels his gun at John, but Gerald sacrifices his own life by jumping in front of John, who, tearing the mask from his visitor's face, discovers it is the man whom he saw kissing his sweetheart that night at the ball. With his last dying breath Gerald says to John "My sister shielded me that night at the ball, because I was an escaped convict." John is thunderstruck. "My God! Her brother. What a fool I was not to have listened to her explanation." The scene dissolves back to the little child with her arms around her Uncle John, who murmured.

That's why I'm lonely,
No home at all.
I broke her heart, pet.
After the ball.

SELIG.

THE SPOILERS (Seven Parts).—Glenister and Dextry, co-owners of the "Midas," the richest mine in Alaska, after celebrating their good fortune, leave Nome to spend the winter in the "States," but before leaving Glenister arrives at an understanding with and bids goodbye to Cherry Malotte, a dance hall girl who he has become interested in. Before their return to Alaska on the following spring a plot is hatched in Washington, D. C., to juggle the Alaskan land laws in such a manner as to rob all the rich miners of their property, and to that end a corrupt judge is appointed with instructions to obey the orders of Alex. McNamara, the genius of the entire conspiracy.

The judge is dispatched to Nome at once, but on the eve of sailing from Seattle, he is taken ill and is forced to entrust certain important documents to his niece, Helen Chester, who thus becomes the innocent agent of the conspirators. Helen sails, but en route to Nome smallpox breaks out on the ship and she is threatened with thirty days quarantine. She manages to escape, with the assistance of Glenister and Dextry, who have taken passage on another ship. The two men are ignorant of the nature of Helen's errand, and gallantly fight and defeat her pursuers, then smuggle her on board their own ship and protect her until she arrives at Nome, where she delivers to Struve, McNamara's agent, the secret papers entrusted to her. Glenister, who has fallen in love with the girl, saves her life in a street brawl at risk of his own, then secures living quarters for her with the wife of his mine superintendent.

In due time Judge Stillman and McNamara arrive in Nome and with the help of Struve's rascally firm begin their machinations. The new faction shortly assumes control of all the mines, including the "Midas," and Glenister, because of his love for Helen, prevents the miners from using violence against Judge Stillman and prevails upon them to let the law take its course. Cherry Malotte, the beautiful dance hall girl, returns from Dawson City, discovers Glenister's love for Helen and determines to combat it. In this she is assisted by the Broncho Kid, a gambler and an outcast, who has recognized in Helen Chester his own sister, whom he has not seen since boyhohod, and who misinterprets Glenister's feeling for Helen. Glenister and Dextry find that the Nome court will grant them no relief and decide to send their lawyer, Bill Wheaton, back to San Francisco with an appeal to the Federal courts. To secure money for this purpose they arrange to rob the sluices of their own mine, which they succeed in doing, but are saved from capture by Helen, who recognizes Glenister in time to send McNamara's men on a false trail. Later the Broncho Kid suspects Glenister of the robbery and advises McNamara to search his cabin before there is time to conceal the gold, but Cherry learns of the plan and with her quick wit foils McNamara's effort.

Wheaton returns from San Francisco with a writ from the Federal court which Stillman refuses to recognize, thus making plain the nature of the conspiracy. Becoming fearful of outright violence McNamara undertakes to remove the gold dust taken from the Midas and other mines to a place of greater safety, but Glenister and his friends storm the bank and are prevented from taking forcible possession of the gold only by the timely arrival of troops summoned from the nearby post. For a second time Wheaton is dispatched to the States for aid from the superior courts.

Meanwhile Glenister becomes convinced that Helen has been a conscious accomplice of "The Spoilers" and intends to marry McNamara; so in a reckless mood he spends a desperate night in the Northern gambling hall, playing faro. The Broncho Kid, who is dealer, plots to ruin Glenister with the assistance of Cherry as "case keeper." At the crisis of the game, when his money is gone, Glenister wagers his interest in the Midas and is prevented from losing only by Cherry's declaration that "the cases are wrong."

Cherry saves Helen from a drunken miner and learning her identity, prompts her to suspect the truth of the situation in which her uncle figures. Realizing the great wrong that she has helped to do, Helen undertakes to remedy it, and overhearing the judge and McNamara arranging for Glenister's immediate arrest, she finds him and enables him to escape with a posse at his heel. With the aid of Cherry Malotte, Glenister makes good his flight, summons his friends, and decides to make an end of the looting of the mines by destroying them with dynamite, thus checking McNamara's activities until Wheaton can invoke further aid from the Federal courts.

Wrapped in a world of mystery and uncertainty Helen appeals to McNamara's accomplice, Struve, who offers to put her in possession of the truth if she will go with him that night to a distant roadhouse for supper. Conscious of her peril Helen agrees. The miners, under Glenister's leadership, dynamite the Midas and defeat their enemies in an exciting battle in the midst of which Glenister hears of Helen's danger and rides headlong to her rescue. He arrives only to find Struve badly wounded and to hear that Helen has gone away with the Broncho Kid. Heedless now of all save Helen's safety Glenister rides into town and there encounters McNamara at Struve's office, where the latter had gone to destroy the documentary evidence of the conspiracy. The two men fight a terrific hand-to-hand battle in which Glenister triumphs. Wheaton arrives in time to effect the arrest of the conspirators, on instructions from the Federal court and Helen produces the proofs of guilt which she had secured from Struve. Justice is done and Helen confesses her love for the man she had helped to wrong.

STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO.

THE LAND OF THE LOST (Four Parts).—John R. Bradley, a wealthy ship builder, seeks a title for his daughter, Miriam. Mr. Bradley introduces Baron de Coverly, a fortune hunter, to Miriam. The baron becomes an ardent suitor and after a short courtship Miriam consents to be his wife. They start for a long cruise on Mr. Bradley's new schooner, Carpathia. Captain Hastings is taking his son, Gilbert, a rising young artist, on the cruise. Miriam and Gilbert become friends and the jealousy of the baron is aroused. During a drunken frenzy the baron sets fire to the schooner. Mr. Bradley and Miriam escape in a boat; the baron jumps into the sea and causes the disappearance of the father. The girl left helpless, Gilbert, grabbing a piece of wreckage, binds her to it and starts his battle for life.

With the dawn of day Gilbert guides the now unconscious form on the spar to a cave of rocks. Fate casts the baron upon the same island. Gilbert makes bow and arrow with his pen knife. Sighting a duck, he raises his bow and watches the arrow strike true, swings a rope across the chasm and begins to cross hand over hand. The baron is surprised to see the duck fall at his feet, looks for the archer, and sees Gilbert crossing the rope. Hatred and revenge takes hold of the baron and he cautiously creeps to the edge of the rocks, where he begins to sever the rope. Gilbert is cast upon the rocks below. Taking the duck the baron looks for shelter. Seeing a fire he goes cautiously forward and finds Miriam. She tells him Gilbert was also saved. A look of fear comes across his face as Miriam leaves to look for Gilbert. Gilbert, staggering along the road, hears her coming. As she tells him of the baron he realizes who cut the rope, but ever manly, he does not tell of the baron's cowardly act. Miriam looks to the baron for protection, but his selfishness shows his true character. Gilbert shows her many acts of kindness which rouses the jealousy of the baron. The selfishness of the baron causes Miriam to break the engagement and seek the protection of Gilbert.

With growing trust and confidence, Miriam acknowledges her love for Gilbert. Gilbert leaves to explore the island. Aflame with jealousy, the baron follows him. Gilbert discovers a very old recluse, the lone inhabitant of the island, and after efforts, Gilbert gains his confidence and the old man tells his story. The baron listens but disappears as the old man finishes his tale. The baron follows the old man and sees him fondling his treasure. The baron watches the old man close the chest and totter away toward his hut. Seizing the treasure, the baron is gloating over his find, when the old hermit, looking back, muttering over his treasure, sees the baron. Seizing his stick, he attacks him. Weak and feeble, he is overcome by the baron and his body is cast from the cliffs into the sea.

The baron running from the cliffs, his mind aflame with the deed, is confronted by the form of the old hermit. In fear and terror the baron flees from the form of the old man. Reaching the place where the treasure is hidden he begins to gloat over it. As he fondles it the accusing finger of the old man is again pointed at him and the thread of reason again is strained. He runs from the place as the old man slowly fades away. Encountering Gilbert on the way he makes a murderous attack on him. Gilbert watches his chance and by his superior training gains the upper hand over the baron. During the fight for his life Gilbert hears Miriam calling as though in need of help. By a carefully aimed blow Gilbert leaves the baron on the ground and goes to see what is happening to Miriam. Standing at her hut she sees a thin line of smoke against the horizon. Not believing her eyes she watches until the vessel is clear against the sky. Wild with joy Miriam is still calling when Gilbert comes to her. Showing him the vessel in the distance they hurry to the flag station. Snatching the flag out of the ground Gilbert waves it wildly. It is sighted by the passing vessel. The captain orders a boat lowered and they start to rescue them. The baron, hearing the shouts, comes on the cliff, sees the boat taking Miriam and Gilbert aboard. Shouting and calling, he is about to go forward when the form of the old man raises to forbid him. The baron becomes a raving maniac. On the vessel we leave Miriam and Gilbert flooded in light from a beautiful sunset, watching the fading of the land of the lost.

When Writing to Advertisers
Kindly Mention
MOVING PICTURE WORLD

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

BOUND VOLUMES FOR SALE

Serviceable Cloth Board Binding

Vol. IV,	Jan.-June,	1909, $2.50
" V,	July-Dec.,	1909, $2.50
" VI,	Jan.-June,	1910, $2.50
" VII,	July-Dec.,	1910, $2.50
" VIII,	Jan.-June,	1911, $2.50
" IX,	July-Sept.,	1911, $1.50
" X,	Oct.-Dec.,	1911, $1.50
" XI,	Jan.-March,	1912, $1.50
" XII,	April-June,	1912, $1.50
" XIII,	July-Sept.,	1912, $1.50
" XIV,	Oct.-Dec.,	1912, $1.50
" XV,	Jan.-March,	1913, $1.50
" XVI,	April-June,	1913, $1.50
" XVII,	July-Sept.,	1913, $1.50
" XVIII,	Oct.-Dec.,	1913, $1.50
" XIX,	Jan.-March,	1914, $1.50
" XX,	April-June,	1914, $1.50

EXPRESS CHARGE OR POSTAGE ADDITIONAL

CAN BE HAD SEPARATELY.

Single copies can be had back to January 1, 1913, only.

Moving Picture World

17 Madison Ave., New York City

"Movie Fans"

The movie fan—the person who passes in his nickel or dime frequently to the ticket seller—likes comfort. Proper ventilation is essential to comfort. You give your patrons the very best ventilation at the lowest cost to yourself when you install a

KIMBLE FAN

(Alternating-Current)
(Single-Phase)

The one fan is either intake or exhaust. Simply pull the chain to reverse it. You can use it to draw in fresh air or to force out foul air.

And it's variable speed, too. By regulating the distance you pull the chain you can run it at high speed, low speed or any of the many speeds in between. Suit the ventilation to the size of the audience.

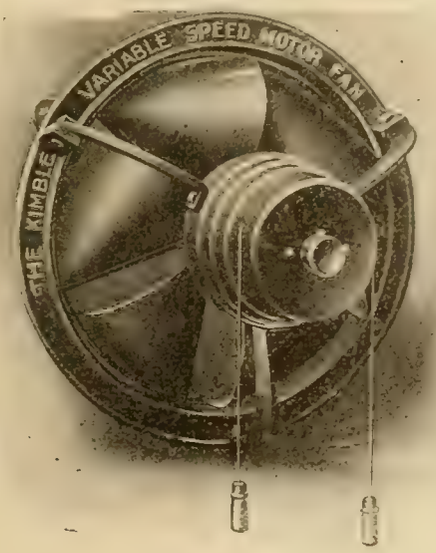
You save money, also. Kimble Fans start on extremely low current. And they reduce operating cost in direct proportion to reductions in speed. Run them at half speed and they use only half as much current as at full speed.

Remember! No other alternating-current ventilating fan can offer you such great advantages. You get this ventilating efficiency and economy only with the Kimble.

We can give you convincing facts and proofs. Write for our Red Fan Catalogue.

KIMBLE ELECTRIC CO.

633 Northwestern Avenue, Chicago, Ill.



IT RUNS SILENTLY

INDEX

TO CONTENTS.

ADVERTISING FOR EXHIBITORS 562
"AFTER THE BALL" (Photo-Drama).. 584
AMERICAN FILM INVASION IN ENGLAND 575
"ANGEL OF CONTENTION, THE" (Reliance) 555
BANQUET ON ROOF 549
BAUM, FRANK L. 579
BLACKWELL, CARLYLE, FOR HIMSELF 553
BRITISH NOTES 561
CALENDAR OF LICENSED RELEASES. 600
CALENDAR OF INDEPENDENT RELEASES 602
CENSOR AND SUPERCENSORS..... 545
CHICAGO LETTER 578
COMMENTS ON THE FILMS (Licensed).. 571
COMMENTS ON THE FILMS (Independent) 572
CONVENTION FLICKERS 551
DAVIS, JOHN C., DEAD 552
DECENCY PAYS 544
DOINGS AT LOS ANGELES 561
EUROPE HUNGRY FOR QUALITY 583
EXHIBITORS' NEWS 597
FAMOUS PLAYERS ACQUIRES BIG SUBJECTS 584
FEATURE FILM STORIES 620
FILM CONDITIONS IN CHINA 577
FOREIGN TRADE NOTES 575
"HELD FOR RANSOM" (I. S. P.) 581
INDEPENDENT FILM STORIES 612
INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES 628
"IN THE LAND OF THE LOST" (Sterling C. & F. Co.) 581
K. & E. VS. BROADWAY PRODUCING CO. 574
LICENSED FILM STORIES 607
LICENSED RELEASE DATES 630
"LITTLE GRAY LADY, THE" (Famous Players) 575
MANUFACTURERS' ADVANCE NOTES.. 593
MOVING PICTURE EDUCATOR 556
MUSIC FOR THE PICTURE 565
NEW CALIFORNIA PRODUCERS 558
OBSERVATIONS BY MAN ABOUT TOWN 559
PATENTS CO. INJUNCTION AGAINST THANHOUSER AND UNIVERSAL 574
PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT, THE 564
PEACE WITH HONOR 546
PROJECTION DEPARTMENT 566
SEEBERG, J. P. 557
"SILENT BELL, THE" (Pasquali) 554
SPENCER, GEORGE SOULE 580
STORIES OF THE FILMS (Licensed).... 607
STORIES OF THE FILMS (Independent).. 612
STORIES OF THE FILMS (Features) ... 620
"TALE OF OLD TUCSON, A" (Edison)... 553
TRIGGER TALKS OF AMALGAMATION.. 550
TWO BIG PRODUCTIONS COMING 582
"VAMPIRE'S TRAIL, THE" (Kalem) 580
VITAGRAPH STAG DINNER AT SCREEN CLUB 555

TO ADVERTISERS.

CARBON IMPORTERS.
KIEWERT, CHARLES L., CO..... 632
RESINGER, HUGO. 637

ELECTRICAL & MECHANICAL EQUIPMENT.
AMUSEMENT SUPLY CO..... 635
BELL & HOWELL, THE CO..... 633
CALEHUFF SUPPLY CO..... 619
DETROIT MOTOR CAR CO..... 637
FOOS GAS ENGINE CO..... 619
FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS..... 636
FULTON, E. E..... 615
GENERAL ELECTRIC CO..... 525
HALLBERG, J. H..... 608
HOKE, GEORGE M. SUPPLY CO..... 616
KIMBLE ELECTRIC CO..... 625
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE..... 634
PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT CO... 627
SMITH, L. C., & CO..... 613
STRELINGER, CHARLES A., & CO..... 635
TYPHOON FAN CO..... 626
WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC AND M'F'G CO. 616

MISCELLANEOUS FEATURE FILMS.
ALL STAR FEATURE CORPORATION... 531
ALBUQUERQUE FILM CO..... 623
APEX FILM CO..... 532
CELEBRATED PLAYERS FILM CO..... 634
CHICAGO FEATURE FILM CO..... 614
ECLECTIC FILM CO.....522-23
ECLIPSE-URBAN FILM CO..... 516
EXCELSIOR FEATURE FILM CO..... 615
FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM CO.....518-19
FEATURE PHOTOPLAY CO..... 613
GENERAL FEATURE FILM CO..... 636
HEPWORTH-AMERICAN FILM CO..... 516
HORSLEY, DAVID. 530
LASKY, JESSE L., FEATURE PLAY CO.. 527
LIBERTY MOTION PICTURE CO..... 621
LIFE PHOTO FILM CORP..... 517
NEILSON, F. O..... 631
SAWYER, A. H., INC.....520-21
STERLING CAMERA & FILM CO..... 623
WARNER'S FEATURES, INC..... 524
WORLD FILM CORPORATION.....534-35

FILM BROKERS.
WESTERN FILM BROKERS..... 615

FILM EXCHANGES.
APEX FEATURE SERVICE 610, 620
BRADENBURGH, GEORGE W..... 633
ECONOMY FILM CO..... 615
GREATER NEW YORK FILM RENTAL CO. 630
KLEINE, GEORGE..... 617
LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE..... 635
NORTHERN FEATURE FILM EXCHANGE 635
TITAN FILM CORPORATION..... 635
WENIZ, ISADORE 615

INDEPENDENT FILM MANUFACTURERS.
AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO. 629
GAUMONT CO. 526
NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION 515
THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION, Inside Front Cover
UNIVERSAL FILM MAUNFACTURING CO. 512-13-14

LENS MANUFACTURERS.
GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN CO..... 619

LICENSED FILM MANUFACTURERS.
BIOGRAPH COMPANY 601
EDISON, THOMAS A..... 533
ESSANAY FILM MANUFACTURING CO.. 511
KALEM CO. 542
KLEINE, GEORGE 536-37
LUBIN MANUFACTURING CO..... 540
PATHE FRERES 538-39
SELIG POLYSCOPE CO..638, Inside Back Cover
VITAGRAPH CO. OF AMERICA..... 541

MISCELLANEOUS.
ARMY & NAVY STORE CO..... 635
AUDEL, THEO. & CO..... 613
ADDRESS "C," M. P. W..... 616
B. R., care M. P. W..... 611
BOTANICAL DECORATING CO..... 615
CENTAUR FILM CO..... 617
COMMERCIAL FILMERS 615
CLASSIFEID ADVERTISEMENTS..... 631
CORCORAN, INC., A. J..... 614
EASTMAN KODAK CO..... 617
GUNBY BROS. 613
HYGIENIC SPECIALTY CO..... 634
INDUSTRIAL MOVING PICTURE CO..... 616
KRAUS MANUFACTURING CO..... 617
MANUFACTURING THEATER SUPPLY CO. 635
MOVING PICTURE WORLD 625
NATIONAL MOVING PICTURE CO..... 616
NATIONAL TICKET CO..... 628
NATIONAL X-RAY REFLECTOR CO..... 619
RAW FILM SUPPLY CO..... 634
SMALLWOOD FILM CORPORATION..... 633
STANDARD MOTION PICTURE CO..... 614
STUDIO FOR RENT (COLEMAN)..... 636
THEATRE BROKERAGE EXCHANGE.... 635
THEATRE RECORDS PUB. CO..... 616
TRADE CIRCULAR ADDRESSING CO.... 616
UNDERWOOD TYPEWRITER CO..... 633
WYANOAK PUBLISHING CO..... 619

MOTION PICTURE CAMERA MANUFACTURERS.
SCHNEIDER, EBERHARD 614

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
DEAGAN, J. C..... 627
SEEBURGH, J. P., PIANO CO..... 633
SINN, CLARENCE E..... 636

OPERA CHAIR MANUFACTURERS.
AMERICAN SEATING CO..... 637
ANDREWS, A. H., CO..... 637
BENNETT SEATING CO..... 637
HARDESTY MANUFACTURING CO.....637
STEEL FURNITURE CO..... 637
WISCONSIN SEATING CO..... 637

POSTERS AND FRAMES.
AMERICAN SLIDE & POSTER CO..... 600
NEWMAN MANUFACTURING CO..... 614
THEATRE SPECIALTY CO..... 615

PROJECTION MACHINE MANUFACTURES.
ENTERPRISE OPTICAL CO..... 633
ERNEMANN PHOTO-KINO WORKS..... 621
PHANTOSCOPE MANUFACTURING CO... 632
POWERS, NICHOLAS .....Back Cover
PRECISION MACHINE CO 603

PROJECTION SCREEN MANUFACTURERS.
GENTER, J. H., CO..... 634
DAY & NIGHT SCREEN CO..... 636
MIRROR SCREEN CO..... 614

SONG AND ADVERTISING SLIDES.
ERKER BROS. 633
UTILITY TRANSPARENCY CO..... 619

THEATRICAL ARCHITECTS.
DECORATORS' SUPPLY CO..... 635

VENTILATION COOLING HEATING

Heating and cooling problem revolutionized by Typhoon System.

You keep cool in front of a desk fan and not in back; apply this common sense and blow the air into your theatre.

A 48" Typhoon Multiblade Blower has sixteen blades, an ordinary exhaust fan has six; it is the blades that do the business.

A Typhoon Tubular Air Warmer will heat and ventilate at the same time.

The low price of effective apparatus will surprise you. Catalogue "W" gives information.

TYPHOON FAN CO. NEW YORK CITY 1544 BROADWAY

POWERS

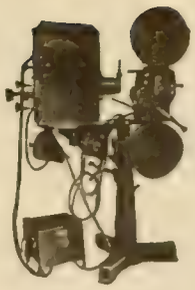
What Is a Moving Picture Machine?

Is It An Eye-Straining, Patron-Losing, Noise-Making Antique?

OR IS IT

One of These Modern Models?

Perfected Through Years of Untiring Efforts by Responsible Manufacturers

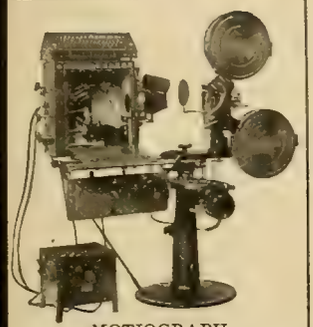


SIMPLEX

We Equip Motion Picture Theatres Completely

Write, Wire or Call for Prices on the Power's 6A Simplex Projector Motiograph 1914 Edison's New Model "D"

Machines That Produce Perfect Projection Mean Better Business



MOTIOGRAPH

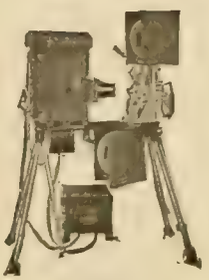
ORDER THAT NEW MACHINE NOW

Prompt Shipments Guaranteed

Picture Theatre Equipment Co.

The Largest Motion Picture Supply House in America

21 East 14th Street, New York City



EDISON

DEAGAN UNAPHONE and DEAGAN BELLS

are the two best Musical Electrical Novelty Instruments in the world for moving picture theatres. They are played from a piano keyboard. Any piano player or drummer can play them. Easy to install and cheap to maintain. Better than any vaudeville act and costs less. Just the thing to stimulate dull "summer-months-box-office-receipts."

Better write today for our Catalogue "F"

J. C. DEAGAN

DEAGAN BUILDING 1776 BERTEAU AVENUE, CHICAGO, U. S. A.

INDEPENDENT RELEASE DATES

AMERICAN.

July 20—A Man's Way (2 parts—Drama).....
July 22—Business Vs. Love (Drama).....
July 27—The Broken Barrier (2 parts—Dr.)...
July 29—Does It End Right? (Drama).....
July 31—All On Account of a Jug (Comedy)...
Aug. 3—At the End of a Perfect Day (Two Parts—Drama) .....
Aug. 5—The Widow (Drama).....

BEAUTY.

July 14—The Joke on Jane (Comedy).....
July 21—Her "Really" Mother (Drama).....
July 28—A Midsummer Love Tangle (Drama).

"101" BISON.

July 18—A Mexican Spy in America (2 parts—Drama) .....
July 25—Olano of the South Seas (2 parts—Drama) .....
Aug. 1—Tribal War in the South Seas (Two Parts—Drama) .....

BRONCHO.

July 15—Shorty Turns Judge (2 parts—Comedy Drama).....
July 22—Shorty and the Aridville Terror (2 parts—Drama) .....
July 29—The Long Feud (Two Parts—Drama)..

CRYSTAL.

July 14—Vivian's Four Beaus (Comedy).....
—What Pearl's Pearls Did (Comedy)...
July 21—Getting Vivian Married (Comedy)....
July 28—Their Parent's Kids (Comedy).....
—Charlie's Toothache (Comedy).....

DOMINO.

July 16—Star of the North (2 parts—Drama)..
July 23—Jim Cameron's Wife (Two Parts—Drama) .....
July 30—The Curse of Caste (Two Parts—Drama) .....

ECLAIR.

July 15—Renunciation (2 parts—Western Dr.).
July 19—Tango Versus Poker (Comedy).....
July 22—Allah-3311 (3 parts—Drama).....
July 26—When Death Rode the Engine (Western—Drama) .....
July 29—The Dupe (Two Parts—Drama).....
Aug. 2—In the Days of Old (Juvenile—Drama)

FRONTIER.

July 19—The Ranger's Reward (Western Dr.)..
July 26—When Memory Recalls (Drama).....
Aug. 2—The Mind's Awakening (Drama).....

GOLD SEAL.

July 14—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery, Series No. 14 (2 parts—Drama).....
July 21—Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery (Series No. 15—2 parts—Drama).....
July 28—The Love Victorious (Three Parts—Drama) .....

IMP.

July 16—The Universal Boy, Series No. 1 (Comedy) .....
July 20—In the Sultan's Garden (Drama).....
July 23—The Gateway of Regret (Drama).....
July 27—When Romance Came to Anne (Two Parts—Drama) .....
July 30—The Universal Boy (Series No. 2) (Comedy) .....

JOKER.

July 18—His Wife's Family (Comedy).....
July 22—Jimmy Kelly and the Kidnappers (Comedy) .....
July 25—The Polo Champions (Comedy).....
July 29—Wooing of Bessie Bumpkin (Comedy).
Aug. 1—Wife's Busy Day (Comedy).....

KAY-BEE.

July 17—The City (2 parts—Drama).....
July 24—The Sheriff of Bisbee (2 parts—Dr).
July 31—An Eleventh Hour Reformation (Two Parts—Drama) .....

KEYSTONE.

July 6—Row Boat Romance (Comedy).....
July 9—(Not yet announced).
July 11—(Not yet announced).

KOMIC.

July 19—Bill No. 2 (Comedy).....
July 26—Leave It to Smiley (Comedy).....
Aug. 2—Bill Takes A Lady to Lunch (Comedy)

MAJESTIC.

July 19—The Painted Lady (2 parts—Drama)..
July 21—A Red Man's Heart (Drama).....
July 24—Lest We Forget (Drama).....
July 26—The Mystery of the Hindu Image (2 parts—Drama) .....
July 28—Down by the Sounding Sea (Drama)..
Aug. 2—Moonshine Molly (Two Parts—Drama)

NESTOR.

July 17—When Eddie Went to the Front (Com.)
July 22—By the Sun's Rays (Western-Drama).
July 24—All at Sea (Comedy).....
July 29—An Indian Eclipse (Indian-Drama)...
July 31—Maggie's Honest Lover (Comedy).....

POWERS.

July 17—The Severed Hand (3 parts—Drama).
July 24—Kate Waters of the Secret Service (2 parts—Drama).....
July 31—The Tangle (Comedy).....

PRINCESS.

July 10—The Girl of the Seasons (Comedy)....
July 17—The Veteran's Sword (Drama) .....
July 24—The Cavalry at Fort Meyer, Va. (Scenic) .....
July 24—Harvesting Ice (Scenic).....
July 31—The Target of Destiny (Drama).....

RELIANCE.

July 20—Our Mutual Girl, No. 27 (News).....
July 22—Izzy and the Diamond (Comedy).....
July 25—The Saving of Young Anderson (2 parts—Drama) .....
July 27—Our Mutual Girl, No. 28 (News).....
July 29—The Sheriff's Prisoner (Drama).....
Aug. 1—The Gunman (Two Parts—Drama)....

REX.

July 16—The Sob Sister (2 parts—Drama).....
July 19—Out of the Darkness (Drama).....
July 23—At the Foot of the Stairs (Drama)...
July 26—An Awkward Cinderella (Comedy-Dr.)
July 30—Circle 17 (Two Parts—Drama).....
Aug. 2—Behind the Veil (Drama).....

ROYAL.

July 18—The New Housekeeper (Comedy).....
July 25—Milling the Militant (Comedy).....
—Servants Superseded (Comedy).....
Aug. 1—The Baker Street Mystery (Comedy)..

SAWYER, INC.

June—The Lightning Conductor (6 parts).....
June—The Lambs All-Star Gambol (Topical)...

STERLING.

July 16—On the Beach (Comedy).....
July 20—The Circus (Comedy).....
July 23—Love and Lunch (2 parts—Comedy)...
July 27—A Wild Ride (Juvenile—Comedy).....
July 30—Troublesome Pete (Comedy).....

THANHOUSER.

July 19—Harry's Waterloo (Comedy).....
July 21—The Pendulum of Fate (2 parts—Dr.).
July 26—From Wash to Washington (Comedy).
July 28—The Messenger of Death (Two Parts—Drama) .....
Aug. 2—The Butterfly Bug (Comedy).....

UNIVERSAL IKE.

July 14—The New Cook (Comedy).....
July 21—Universal Ike, Jr., in Cupid's Victory (Comedy) .....
July 28—Universal Ike, Jr., in His City Elopement (Comedy) .....

VICTOR.

July 20—Value Received (2 parts—Western-Drama) .....
July 24—Irene's Busy Day (Comedy-Drama)...
July 27—Out of the Valley (Drama).....
July 31—The Mad Man's Ward (Two Parts—Drama) .....

FEATURES.

APEX.

July—The Devil's Eye (4 parts—Drama).....
July—The Secret Seven (4 parts—Drama).....
July—The Midnight Marriage (4 parts—Dr.)...

CHILD PLAYERS CO. OF AMERICA.

July—Kids of the Movies (2 parts—Comedy)...

COSMOFOTOFILM CO.

July—She Stoops to Conquer (4 parts—Drama)

ECLECTIC.

July—The Tramp (3 parts—Drama).....
July—The Reign of Terror (6 parts—Drama)...
July—Detective Craig's Coup (5 parts—Dr.)...

ECLIPSE-URBAN.

July 13—Butterfly and His Dog (Comedy).....
—Magic Matches (Comedy).....
July 20—The Joke That Kills (2 parts—Dr.)..
July 27—Sammy Is Too Cautious (Comedy)....
—Peter's Perseverance (Comedy).....

EXCELSIOR FEATURE FILM CO., INC.

July—The Toll of Mammon (4 parts—Drama)..

FAMOUS PLAYERS.

June 20—Spitfire (4 parts—Drama).....
July 1—The Eagle's Mate (5 parts—Drama)..

FEATURE PHOTOPLAY CO.

July—The King of the Beggars (4 parts—Dr.)..
July—The Human Wolves (5 parts—Drama)...
July—Wu Chung Foo (4 parts—Drama).....

FEATURES IDEAL.

June—Whom the Gods Destroy (3 parts—Dr.).
June—The Actress' Redemption (4 parts—Dr.).

GAUMONT.

June 13—Kronstadt (3 parts—Drama).....
June 27—The Iron Man (3 parts—Drama).....

HEPWORTH AMERICAN.

July 13—The Tragedy of Basil Grieve (3 parts—Drama) .....
July 20—Once Aboard the Lugger (Comedy)...
—Poorluck Minds the Shop (Comedy)...
July 27—The Whirr of the Spinning Wheel (2 parts—Drama) .....

LASKY.

June 15—The Only Son (5 parts—Drama).....
July—The Man On the Box (5 parts—Drama)..

LEADING PLAYERS FILM CORPORATION.

June—The God of Death (3 parts—Drama).....
July—Germania (5 parts—Drama).....

LIFE PHOTO FILM CORP.

July—The Greyhound (5 parts—Drama).....

NASH M. P. CO.

July—Mysterious Man of the Jungle (4 parts—Drama) .....
July—The Land of the Lost (4 parts—Drama)..

OZ FILM MFG. CO.

July—The Patchwork Girl of Oz (5 parts—Dr.).

PASQUALI.

June 29—The Chimney Sweeps of the Valley of Aosta (5 parts—Drama).....
July—A Mexican Mine Fraud or the Game That Failed (5 parts—Drama).....

POPULAR PLAYS AND PLAYERS, INC.

June 1—Michael Strogoff (5 parts—Drama)...
July—The Ragged Earl (Drama).....

THE CANADIAN BIOSCOPE CO.

June 1—Saved From Himself (3 parts—Dr.)..

WHITMAN FEATURES.

GARRISON FILM CO. DISTRIBUTORS.

June 27—Jane Eyre (Five Parts—Drama).....
July 11—Lena Rivers (Five Parts—Drama).....

WORLD FILM CORP.

July—The Lights o' London (5 parts—Drama).
July—The Great Stroke (5 parts—Drama).....

ROLL TICKETS

PRICES

Five Thousand	$1.25
Ten Thousand	$2.50
Twenty Thousand	$4.50
Twenty-five Thousand	$5.50
Fifty Thousand	$6.50
One Hundred Thousand	$8.00

Your own special Ticket, any printing, any colors, accurately numbered; every roll guaranteed. Coupon Tickets for Prize Drawings, 5,000 $2.50. Stock Tickets, 6c per 1,000. Prompt shipments. Cash with the order. Get the samples. Send diagram for Reserved Seat Coupon Tickets, serial or dated.

NATIONAL TICKET CO.
SHAMOKIN, PA.

SEE AMERICANS FIRST

FLYING "A" FEATURE FILMS

"The Broken Barrier"

A Two Act Society Drama

Featuring ED COXEN and WINNIFRED GREENWOOD

Under direction of Thos. Ricketts

Release Monday, July 27th, 1914

AMERICAN "BEAUTY"

"A MID-SUMMER LOVE TANGLE"

Refined comedy featuring MARGARITA FISCHER and HARRY POLLARD

Release Tuesday, July 28th, 1914

"DOES IT END RIGHT?"

Featuring WM. GARWOOD and VIVIAN RICH in a dramatic gem.

Under direction of Sydney Ayres.

Release Wednesday, July 29th, 1914.

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A JUG"

Featuring GEORGE FIELD and IDA LEWIS in a screaming comedy.

Under direction of Thos. Ricketts.

Release Friday, July 31st, 1914.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO.

CHICAGO

LICENSED RELEASE DATES

RELEASE DAYS.

Monday—Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Pathe, Selig, Vitagraph.
Tuesday—Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Geo. Kleine, Pathe, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph.
Wednesday—Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Pathe, Vitagraph.
Thursday—Biograph, Essanay, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph.
Friday—Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Selig, Lubin, Vitagraph.
Saturday—Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Lubin, Melies, Selig, Vitagraph.

BIOGRAPH.

July 11—Her Primitive Model (Drama).....
July 13—Two Boy From the Poorhouse (Dr.)..
July 16—The Prospectors (Drama).....
July 18—It Was Some Party (Comedy).....
—Some Decorators (Comedy) .....
July 20—The World and the Woman (Drama)..
July 23—The Cheeseville Cops (Comedy).....
July 23—The Show Busters (Comedy).....
July 25—The Little Widow (Drama).....

EDISON.

July 11—Dolly at the Helm (Eleventh of the Active Life of "Dolly of the Dailies" —Drama) .....
July 13—Qualifying for Lena (Comedy).....
July 14—The Two Doctors (Drama).....
July 15—The Ever-Gallant Marquis (Comedy)..
—An Up-to-Date Courtship (Comedy)...
July 17—Meg o' the Mountains (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 18—Across the Burning Trestle (Drama)..
July 20—The Adventure of the Absent-Minded Professor (7th of the Octavius Amateur Detective Series—Comedy).....
July 21—A Matter of Minutes (8th of "The Man who Disappeared" series—Dr.)..
July 22—A Deal in Statuary (Comedy).....
—His Wife's Burglar (Comedy).....
July 24—Laddie (Special—2 parts—Drama)...
July 25—The Last Assignment (Twelfth of the "Dolly of the Dailies" series—Drama).
July 27—A Canine Rival (Eighth of the Wood B. Wedd Series—Comedy).....
July 28—The Mystery of the Lost Stradivarius (Ninth of the "Chronicles of Cleek" series—Drama) .....
July 29—Something to a Door (Comedy).....
July 31—The Stuff That Dreams Are Made Of (Special—Two Parts—Comedy).....
Aug. 1—Farmer Rodney's Daughter (Drama)..

ESSANAY.

July 11—Broncho Billy and the Sheriff (Drama)
July 13—Sweedie the Swatter (Comedy).....
July 14—At the Foot of the Hill (Drama)....
July 15—The Fable of "Napoleon and the Bumps" (Comedy).....
July 16—Snakeville's New Waitress (Comedy).
July 17—His Stolen Fortune (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 18—Broncho Billy Puts One Over (Drama)
July 20—Money Talks (Comedy).....
July 21—Mrs. Billington's First Case (Comedy-Drama) .....
July 22—The Fable of "Higher Education That Was Too High For the Old Man" (Comedy). .....
July 23—Slippery Slim's Inheritance (Comedy).
July 24—A Little From Home (Special—2 parts —Drama) .....
July 25—Broncho Billy and the Gambler (Dr.).
July 27—Sweedie and the Lord (Comedy).....
July 28—A Clash of Virtues (Drama).....
July 29—The Fable of "The Coming Champion Who Was Delayed" (Comedy).....
July 30—Snakeville's Home Guard (Comedy)...
July 31—The Seventh Prelude (Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
Aug. 1—The Squatter's Gal (Drama).....

KALEM.

July 11—Lame Dog's Treachery (Drama).....
July 13—A Diamond in the Rough (Special—2 parts—Drama).....
July 14—Accused (Drama).....
July 15—The Express Messenger (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 17—Wanted, An Heir (Comedy) .....
July 18—The Fate of a Squaw (Drama).....
July 20—In Wolf's Clothing (4th of the Alice Joyce Series—Special—2 parts—Dr.)..
July 21—The Beast (Drama).....
July 22—The Rival Railroad's Plot (Special—2 parts—Drama).....
July 24—The Bingville Fire Department (Com.)
July 25—Defying the Chief (Drama).....
July 27—The Identification (Special—Two Parts Drama) .....
July 28—The Man with the Glove (Drama)....
July 29—The Indian Agent (Special—Two Parts —Drama) .....
July 31—The Deadly Battle at Hicksville (Comedy) .....
Aug. 1—The Lad from Old Ireland (Drama).

GEORGE KLEINE.

June 16—One Woman's Way (Cines—Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
June 23—A Midnight Guest (Cines—Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
June 30—The Bondage of Evil (Celio—Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
July 7—Heirloom (Cines—Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 14—The Rival Actresses (Cines—Special—2 parts—Drama).....
July 21—The Stronger Tie (Cines—Special—Two Parts—Drama).....

LUBIN.

July 11—How He Lost His Trousers (Comedy).
—Mandy's Chicken Dinner (Comedy)...
July 14—He Was Bad (Comedy).....
—Tough Luck (Comedy).....
July 15—Codes of Honor (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 16—The Cross of Crime (Special—2 parts —Drama) .....
July 17—The Lie (Drama) .....
July 18—She Wanted to Know (Comedy).....
—All for Love (Comedy).....
July 21—Temper and Temperature (Comedy)..
—Worms Will Turn (Comedy).....
July 22—Who Seeks Revenge (Special—2 parts —Drama) .....
July 23—The False Shadow (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 24—A Traitor to His Country (Drama)...
July 25—A Matter of Record (Comedy).....
July 28—The Question and Answer Man (Comedy) .....
July 29—The Lure of the Car Wheels (Special—Two Parts—Drama).....
July 30—Three Men and a Woman (Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
July 31—Within the Noose (Drama).....
Aug. 1—She Gave Him a Rose (Comedy).....
Aug. 1—The Rise of the Johnsons (Comedy)..

MELIES.

June 27—A Shadow On the Wall (Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
June 30—One Suit of Clothes (Comedy).....
July 1—The Monk's Sacrifice (Drama).....
July 2—Womanly Curiosity (Comedy).....
—The Prescription (Special—Two Parts —Drama) .....
July 4—Hidden Death (Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....
July 7—A Discolored Romance (Comedy).....
July 8—The Hole in the Wall (Drama).....
July 9—Good Fortune's Tardy Smile (Comedy)
July 9—A Royal Survivor (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 11—A Friend's Forgiveness (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 14—Rags and Patriotism (Comedy).....
July 15—Justly Punished (Drama).....
July 16—The Test of True Love (Comedy).....
July 16—A Sublime Deception (Special—2 parts —Drama) .....
July 18—The River's Secret (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 21—(Title not reported).
July 22—His Sense of Duty (Drama).....
July 23—Wanted a Sweetheart (Comedy).....
July 23—When Preachers Leave Home (Special —2 parts—Comedy).....
July 25—Black Pearls (Special—2 parts—Dr.).

PATHE.

June 29—Visit to Paris (Travel).....
—Rapids and Water Falls of New Zealand (Scenic) .....
June 30—A French Village in Senegal, West Africa (Scenic) .....
—Venomous Serpents (Educational) ...
July 1—Pathe's Weekly, No. 43—1914 (News).
July 6—The Heart and the Circulation of the Blood (Biology) .....
—Modes of Travel in Japan (Manners and Customs) .....
July 7—A Tiger Hunt (Indo-China) (Scenic)..
—The Ice and Snow.....
July 8—Pathe's Weekly No. 44, 1914 (News)..
July 13—A Russian Boar Hunt (Hunting).....
—The Wine Industry, Marsala, Sicily (Industrial) .....
July 14—Through Bosnia and Dalmatia (Travel)
—The Tombs of the Ancient Japanese Emperors, Annam (Indo China)—(Scenic) .....
—Water Falls at Aragonia, Spain (Travel) .....
July 15—Pathe's Weekly No. 45 (News).....

SELIG.

July 11—His Fight (Drama) .....
July 13—The Wilderness Mail (Special—2 parts —Drama) .....
July 13—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 39 (News) .....
July 14—An Egyptian Princess (Comedy).....
July 15—His Last Appeal (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 16—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 40 (News) .....
July 17—Wiggs Takes the Rest Cure (Drama)..
July 18—The Squatters (Drama).....
July 20—A Woman Laughs (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 20—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 41 (News) .....
July 21—The Lure of the Ladies (Comedy)....
July 22—The Sealed Package (Drama).....
July 23—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 42 (News) .....
July 24—The Substitute Heir (Comedy).....
July 25—Footprints (Comedy-Drama).....
July 27—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 43 (News) .....
July 27—A Five Hundred Dollar Kiss (Special—Two Parts—Comedy).....
July 28—Muff (Drama) .....
July 29—The Mother Heart (Special—Two Parts —Drama) .....
July 30—Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 44 (News) .....
July 31—When the Cook Fell Ill (Comedy).....
Aug. 1—Love vs. Pride (Drama).....

VITAGRAPH.

July 11—Lillian's Dilemma (Special—Two Parts (Comedy) .....
July 13—The Soul of Luigi (Drama).....
July 14—Fogg's Millions (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 15—The Arrival of Josie (Comedy).....
July 16—The Little Captain (Comedy-Drama).
July 17—Pigs Is Pigs (Comedy).....
July 18—The Song of the Ghetto (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 20—Love the Clairvoyant (Drama).....
July 21—Bread Upon the Waters (Special—2 parts—Drama) .....
July 22—Buddy's Downfall (Comedy).....
July 23—The Apple (Drama).....
July 24—The Winning Trick (Comedy).....
July 25—Romantic Josie (Special—Two parts—(Comedy) .....
July 27—His Kid Sister (Comedy).....
July 28—John Rance, Gentleman (Special—Two Parts—Drama).....
July 29—Officer Kate (Comedy).....
July 30—The Greater Motive (Drama).....
July 31—Private Bunny (Comedy).....
Aug. 1—The Violin of M'sieur (Special—Two Parts—Drama) .....

Greater New York Film Rental Company
All Specials Supplied. Main Office: 126-132 West 46th Street. Depot: 116-118 East 14th Street, New York.
Licensed Film Supplied to Licensed Exhibitors :-: :-: :-: :-: :-: Write or Call for Particulars

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS

Classified Advertisements, three cents per word, cash with order; 50 cents minimum postage stamps accepted.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

CAMERAMAN—Desires position, total abstainer, reliable. Willing to travel. C. B. B., care M. P. World, N. Y. City.

EVERYTHING COMES TO HIM WHO HUSTLES—while the other fellow waits, and that's the reason I'm hustling now. Manager—Operator—Musician, 36 years old, red-headed and Irish, and will be at liberty September 1st. A 2300 volt—1633 ampere live wire, and am not afraid of any man from Missouri. What can you offer? Address "Lucky," care MOVING PICTURE WORLD, N. Y. City.

COMBINATION INSTRUMENTALIST and vocalist (one man), carrying a half ton of chimes, Electrical novelties, Xylaphones, Marimbaphone, Saxaphone, Solette Drums, Traps, Bells, etc.; also extensive library. Originator of Unusual Musical Features, Expert experience in every line Theatrical and Photoplay work. Open to first-class managers only; those desiring the best. Address Instrumentalist, 315 E. South St., Indianapolis, Ind.

PIANO PLAYER (young man) desires position in motion picture house. Jack Rosen, 1890 Crotona Parkway, Bronx, N. Y. City.

M. P. OPERATOR—Experienced operator wants position in Conn. State. Address F. W. B., care of M. P. World, N. Y. City.

MUSICAL DIRECTOR (Pianist) experienced and reliable, for vaudeville and Moving Pictures (Union Man), with best of reference and large library of orchestral music, wishes to make a change. Address Nat E. Solomons, Box 891, Martinsburg, W. Va.

HELP WANTED.

AGENTS WANTED—For atlas work, map work and Mexican War map; unusual opportunities for intelligent men with ability to sell. Write for particulars, Rand McNally & Co., Dept. B, Chicago, Ill.

CAMERAMAN—Everywhere (except N. Y. City), owning outfit, can learn of valuable service being established for weekly news pictures. Cameras and perforated negative film for sale. RAY, 326 5th Ave., New York City.

A1 OPPORTUNITY offer to live wire. Wanted, manager to take entire charge of new picture house in Penna. town of 8,500. Good opportunity for one who has made good. Don't write unless you are thoroughly experienced and will bear strictest investigation. No boozers. Write all in first letter. 1-3-8 care Moving Picture World, N. Y. City.

MANAGER WANTED for Moving Picture House. Must be first-class man with best of references. House seats over 2,000. Located in best city in middle west. Address F. O., care Moving Picture World, New York City.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

"COMMERCIAL FILM EXCHANGES? Write us about buy, sell or exchange proposition. OMAHA FILM EXCHANGE, Omaha, Nebr."

THEATER FOR LEASE—In course of construction, seating 1,000, with airdome, very classy building, 11 miles from New York town of 100,000 people; act quick. CLASS, 230 Market St., Newark, N. J.

CAMERAS FOR SALE.

PROFESSIONAL MOVING PICTURE CAMERAS.—Two sizes. Tripods, Zeiss-Tessar 50 m lenses, $150, $225. Special cameras to order. Repairing all makes. R. W. Pittman, 50 West St., N. Y. City.

FILMS FOR SALE OR RENT.

ATTENTION!—Travelling showman, 300 reels film for sale and moving picture machines at a bargain. WESTERN FILM BROKERS, 37 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

FILMS FOR SALE—Two hundred (200) fine Commercial Reels at $5.00 each. Send us amount to cover express charges. Will ship subject to your examination. Address OMAHA FILM EXCHANGE, 14th and Douglas Sts., Omaha, Nebr.

FILM SERVICE—At low rental price of all the leading makes. INDEPENDENT FILM EXCHANGE, 37 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

FOR SALE—Two 3-reel features, auto bandits of Paris and Terrors of Russia, with 1-3-6 sheet posters; price, $75 each. Write for our list of educational subjects for sale. ROYAL FEATURE FILM CO., 145 W. 45th St., New York City.

EQUIPMENT FOR SALE.

FOR SALE.—Any part of my moving picture theatre; opera chairs 65c each, Simplex machines $125, Power's 6A $100. All goods used three months, have many other bargains in other fixtures. A. Glen, Room 200, Houser Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

FOR THEATER EQUIPMENTS.—Such as seats, picture machines, etc., see Lears Theatre Supply Co., 509 Chestnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

EDISON EXHIBITION MODEL.—And Powers No. 5 picture machines complete with upper and lower magazines, new 110 volt Rheostat and Bausch & Lomb lenses, also rewind, everything ready to operate. Used only a few months. Guaranteed first class condition. Will take $75 for either machine, will ship subject to inspection. Howard, 204 Houser Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

BRAND NEW.—Phantoscope complete, $50 C. O. D. Frank A. Holmes, Brewster, N. Y.

FOR SALE.—Model A. Williamson Perforator. Shipped for examination. Charge guaranteed one way. Charles Simons, 405 11th St. N. W., Washington, D. C.

BRASS POSTER FRAMES.—For one, three and six sheets. Also brass easels, brass railings. Write for complete catalog. The Newman Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, O. 101 4th Ave., N. Y.

POWERS 5—Excellent condition, $55, worth twice that; $10 cash, rest collect subject inspection. CLYDE ORR, Fayette St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

ALWAYS ON HAND—Slightly used moving picture machines and chairs at a bargain. WESTERN FILM BROKERS, 37 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES for sale, for rent and exchange, in first-class condition. CHICAGO MOVING PICTURE SUPPLY CO., 37 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

FOR SALE—1,000 5 C. P. carbon lamps, colored, white and frosted. Ten cents each. Also sockets mounted on boards. COLONIAL THEATER, Galesburg, Ill.

FOR SALE—Complete equipment moving picture theater, including 300 seats, gold radium screen, booth, motiographs, etc. COLONIAL THEATER, Galesburg, Ill.

DON'T READ THIS unless you want some extra quality features cheap. Also $650, Peerless electric piano and Edison machine. Address H. V. YOUNG, Linden, Iowa.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND CHAIRS at cut prices. Equipments bought and sold. We save you money on outfits. Designs and plans free. JOS. REDINGTON, Scranton, Pa.

FOR SALE—One hundred single reel comedies, dramas, westerns, etc.; all of them in good shape, some with paper and some without. $5.00, $7.00 and $10.00 each. Also a Number 5 Power machine, rebuilt complete, $110.00. REGAL FILM CO., 922 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

FOR SALE—Bargain, 645 Millner Mfg. Co. Theater Chairs, like new, heavy castings. 5-ply backs and seats. CARR & SCHAD, 748 Penn St., Reading, Pa.

FOR SALE—One automatic nickel in the slot, popcorn machine, guaranteed in perfect order and never used but just a little; cost $250, will take $100 from a quick buyer, 1 brass rib developing drum for two hundred feet film, cost $78 will take $50 and throw in lead lined pan. Address E. D. MacFEE, Petersburg, Va.

EQUIPMENT WANTED.

CAMERA WANTED—Want 2d-hand Prestwich with tripod if good condition and cheap. Box 620, Asheville, N. C.

THEATERS FOR SALE OR RENT.

PRETTY NEW THEATER.—Just opened. Owner cannot operate. Only one in town; $500 cash. Postmaster, Roswell, Ga.

FOR LEASE.—Theater 500 seats, stage, fully equipped, 16 miles from N. Y. town of 40,000. Apply for further particulars to M. Siedlitz, 11 W. 116th St., N. Y. City.

THE VERNON THEATRE.—Corner 4th St. and Vernon Ave., Long Island City, is for sale. New Steinway tunnel next door opens soon, factory and apartment houses erected daily. Big boom expected. Property fireproof brick 55x100. Fully equipped, 2 machines, Gold Fibre Curtain, Wurlitzer Orchestra, will seat 600. Everything the latest. License new, business good all year. One hundred per cent investment. Ten cents, stage attached fully equipped. $10,000 cash required. Call if you mean business.

FOR SALE OR RENT—Opera House with moving picture business. City 3,000, prosperous community. Reasonable terms. Closing estate. MRS. CORA PRATT, 1243 Washtenaw Ave., Ann Arbor, Michigan.

FOR SALE—Moving Picture Theater in West Virginia town, Harrison County, population 3,200; no competition; have fine location; have own power plant; small running expenses; good business. I have lung trouble, is my reason for giving up; will have to leave for my health. I can pack my house every time when my health permits to attend business. Address A. C. (R. F. D. No. 3, Box 138), Clarksburg, W. Va.

FOR SALE—Picture Theater, town 40,000; 400 seats, good proposition for live wire. Best location in city, good equipment, six shows in town, long lease, must sell. Address, LUNA THEATER, Danville, Ill.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE.

NEW SELF-PLAYING.—Self-interpreting pipe organ for picture show. Can deliver in thirty days. Pipe Organ, care Moving Picture World, Chicago, Ill.

ELECTRIC PIANOS.—With keyboards $140. Orchestrian pianos with pipes $250 all guaranteed. Closing out electric piano business. Every picture show has use for one. Send for circular. J. F. Herman 1420 Pa. Ave., Washington, D. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COMPLETE ARCHITECTURAL PLANS for convertible motion picture theater. Closed structure in winter, open air roofless inclosure in summer. Prices $50. HOMER JOSEPH DODGE, 615 Lamont St., Washington, D. C.

FILMS AND MOVING PICTURE MACHINES—For anything else in that line. WESTERN FILM BROKERS, 37 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Representing big interests in the photoplay industry in the United States, we are desirous of obtaining a number of theatres now in operation or to be built, with seating capacity of 600 or over in the various cities of the country. Only Grade A houses will be considered.

SYDCO AMUSEMENT CO.,
331 Madison Ave., N. Y. C.

BOOKINGS AND OPEN TERRITORY FOR

"THE SPOILERS"

For the States of

OHIO, WISCONSIN, MICHIGAN, INDIANA and ILLINOIS

(EXCEPT COOK COUNTY)

WRITE OR WIRE

F. O. NIELSEN,

720 Schiller Building
CHICAGO, ILL.

THE BRIGHT WHITE LIGHT

(CALCIUM EFFECT)
so Desirable for Moving Picture Projections
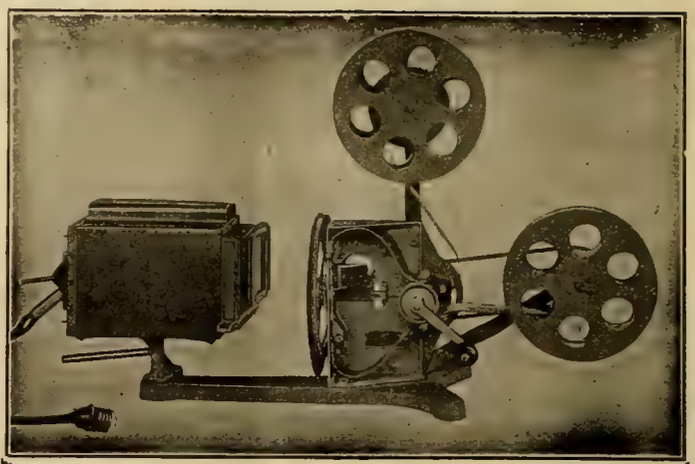
is ONLY produced with

BIO CARBONS

They Are
"The Carbons You Want"

Charles L. Kiewert Co.

NEW YORK 165 Greenwich St.
MILWAUKEE 114 Huron St.
SAN FRANCISCO 143 Second St.



THE PHANTOSCOPE

If you would use motion pictures as an aid in salesmanship, you need THE PHANTOSCOPE.

If you would use motion pictures as an aid in efficiency instruction, you need THE PHANTOSCOPE.

If you would use motion pictures as an aid in education you need THE PHANTOSCOPE.

If you would have a machine you carry as conveniently as a suit case, can set up in any room in just seventy seconds, and without tools other than your two hands, you need THE PHANTOSCOPE.

If there's any doubt in your mind about its value to you in YOUR work, just note the great number of users of THE PHANTOSCOPE.

Just as with the automobile, and as one would naturally expect, there have been striking improvements made since the first PHANTOSCOPE.

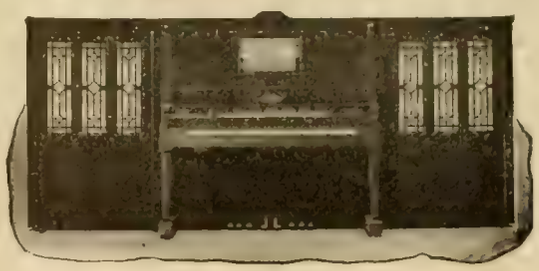
And yet there are many machines which have been in almost continuous service, since the very first, and they are running smoother and sweeter than ever.

The price is $100 complete—Motor driven $125.

Phantoscope Mfg. Co.
Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

SEEBURG "MOTION PICTURE PLAYER"

It has solved one of the Big Problems of the Moving Picture Business.



"The Wonder of them all"

Played either manually or automatically, it produces real music for the pictures.

Get Complete Information on it by Addressing

J. P. SEEBURG PIANO CO., Manufacturers, 209 S. Republic Building, STATE STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Erker's

For

"EVERYTHING"

IN THE

MOTION PICTURE LINE

Write for Catalog

608 OLIVE ST., ST. LOUIS, Mo

Wise Exhibitors Use Local Pictures Because They Get the Big Money!

A five hundred foot "local" featuring your townspeople will make you more money than the biggest feature ever made.

Let us tell you how little it will cost. We will show you how to get big publicity and big crowds.

We make and deliver in 48 hours.

SMALLWOOD FILM CORPORATION

Flatiron Building, New York City

THE UNDERWOOD

Added new meanings to the word

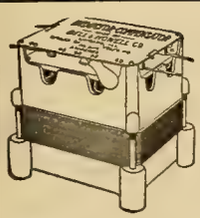
Typewriter

FIRST IN SPEED, ACCURACY, STABILITY

Proved by all World's Records

UNDERWOOD

"The Machine You Will Eventually Buy"



THE INDUCTOR-COMPENSATOR

An Alternating Current Transformer

Designed by an electrical expert in motion picture practice. Built and guaranteed by leading manufacturers of motion picture machinery in the world. Simple, inexpensive and wholly efficient. Order from your exchange or from

THE BELL & HOWELL COMPANY,
1803 Larchmont Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

FEATURES FOR SALE

G. W. BRADENBURGH, 802 Vine St., Philadelphia
Phone Walnut 534. Cable "Bradfilm"

TITLE	Length	Maker	Adv.	Price
WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY No. 1 to 12....	1200	Edison	1-3	$360
THE WRECK	2880	Vitagraph	1-3-6	175
LEAP OF DESPAIR	3670	Itala	1-3-6	150
BRIGAND'S DAUGHTER	3950	Pasquali	1-3-6	150
FOUR DARE DEVILS (as new)	2840	Cosmo	1-3-6	125
MYSTERY OF THE DEATH HEAD.....	2800	Monarch	1-3-6	100
IN THE MIDST OF THE JUNGLE (First adventure of Kathryn)	3000	Selig	1-3-6	150
BULL FIGHT: SPAIN VS. MEXICO (New)....	2000	Huerta & Ross	1-3-6	120
WANTED BY THE POLICE	3000	Mittenthal	1-3-6	100
TOM BUTLER	2650	Eclair	1-3-6	125
SPANISH BLOOD (Asta Neilsen)	4200	Union	1-3-6	200
THE GYPSY (Exclusive Copy, new).....	3200	Gamsa	1-4	275
UNMASKED (Exclusive Copy, new)	2800	Gamsa	1-4	225
THE IRON MAN	2000	Urban	1-3-6	100
FIGHT FOR THE GREAT BLACK DIAMOND.	3000	Nestor	1-3-6	200
A DARE DEVIL RESCUE (Rodman Law)....	3000	Roma	1-3-6	125
A BROKER'S SACRIFICE	3000	Itala	1-3-6	100
THE DREAD OF DOOM	3000	Itala	1-3-6	125

Terms cash with order. 100 additional features. Send for list and prices.

The cheapest house in the trade for second hand films. Ordinary films, comic and dramas for sale from $5.00 per reel up, with posters. Over three million feet to select from. Every film with title and sound condition. No Junk. Everything for the exchange man. Titles to order 5 ft. at 40 cents each, any color, leader stock $5.00 per 1000 feet. Cement, Pathe Formula, $1.00 per quart.

THE MOTIOGRAPH

$250.00 $250.00 $250.00

Is the Greatest Motion Picture Machine Value Per Dollar Ever Made in this Country

A FEW OF THE REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD USE THE MOTIOGRAPH:

1. ROCK STEADY PICTURES
2. SHARP AND FLICKERLESS PICTURES
3. Extra Heavy Arc Lamp
4. Brighter Light
5. Absolutely Fire-Proof
6. Hardened and ground star and cam
7. No wearing out of parts
8. Low cost of up-keep
9. All parts made in MOTIOGRAPH Factory
10. Every part guaranteed
11. Its simplicity
12. A money saver in up-keep as well as first cost

MR. EXHIBITOR:—It is your duty as a successful Exhibitor to buy the BEST machine manufactured, which should give ROCK STEADY, SHARP and FLICKERLESS PICTURES, with SMALL up-keep. All of these qualities you will find in the MOTIOGRAPH.

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO., 564 W. Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.

EASTERN OFFICE 21 E. 14th St., New York, N. Y. WESTERN OFFICE, 833 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

Mirroroide Is the World's Best Screen, Bar None

Over 7500 In Use

IT DOES NOT TAKE EITHER SPACE OR WORDS TO SELL AN ARTICLE OF MERIT TO A MAN OF BRAINS

Over 7500 In Use

Let Us Send You Our Large Free Samples.
Test: Compare with any screen on earth—seeing is believing—your own eyes the evidence.

Made in Silver White, Pale Gold and Silver Flesh in Medium or Heavy Matt finish. Sold the world over under a positive 5-year guarantee at 33 1-3 to 36 1-9 cents per square foot, $3.00 to $3.25 a square yard—and it's canvas.

AGENCIES IN ALL PRINCIPAL CITIES

THE J. H. GENTER COMPANY, Inc. - - - Newburgh, N. Y.

FILL YOUR HOUSE

with pleased patrons and sweet pure air!
Hang

"Vim Vapor Screens"

on your Fans and use Vaporettes

ECONOMICAL AND EFFICIENT

A simple screen with double tanks and wick, finished in nickel plate, sizes 6"x 6" $2.00 each; 10"x10", $3.00 each.

Your choice in Vaporettes.

Sandal Lilac	Geranium Lavender	Jasmin Orchid
$2.00 Qt.	$3.50 ½ Gal.	$6.00 Gal.

HYGIENIC SPECIALTY CO., Greensburg, Pa.

Perfect Daylight Projection Is Obtained Only by Common Sense

If you want to obtain perfect projection and at the same time have your theatre bright as day, you must obtain these results through your lens, condenser, carbons and curtain. We manufacture the BRIGHTASDAY CURTAIN EMULSION, which is universally endorsed by the best exhibitors in the country. Send us $7.50 and we will send you one set of Brightasday Curtain Emulsion, enough to paint your curtain several times, besides black border as well.

We also are exclusive importers of the famous Jena pure white meniscus bi-convex and plano condensers. The meniscus, bi-convex condenser combination will improve your light 50 per cent. Sold as follows:

GOOD BETTER BEST

PRICES	Two Plano Fig. 1	One Meniscus One Plano Fig. 2	One Meniscus One Bi-Convex Fig. 3
Jena Imported Plano Condensers	$1.50 each.		Half Doz., $7.50
Jena Imported Meniscus Condensers	2.00 each.		Half Doz., 9.00
Jena Imported Bi-Convex Condensers	2.00 each.		Half Doz., 9.00
Jena Imported Meniscus Bi-Convex Combination		$4.00 per Pr.
Jena Imported Meniscus Bi-Convex Combination			Half Doz., $20.00

Add 20c. additional for postage.

For information concerning improved and perfect projection address
Projection Dept., LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE, 252 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

Thanks for Past Favors---and Bear Us in Mind When it Gets Cooler

RESERVATIONS NOW BEING MADE ON

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS AND NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER

CELEBRATED PLAYERS FILM COMPANY

Leaders in Filmdom's Progress

Schiller Building 64 West Randolph Street, Chicago

SUPERIOR Photographic Quality

In motion pictures can be best demonstrated by making a print on

"AGFA" THE DISTINCTIVE - - - FILM - - -

AND THEN MAKING COMPARISONS

Specify "AGFA" and Watch Results Formulae Book, Samples, etc., gratis

RAW FILM SUPPLY CO., Sole American Agents

15 EAST 26th STREET - - - - - - - - NEW YORK CITY

"Safety First" with "Agfa" Non-Flam

U. S. Army & Navy Goods

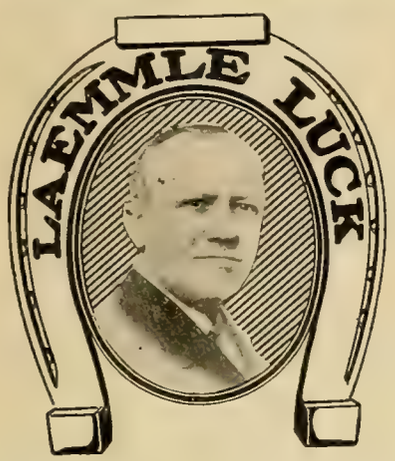
Complete Stock
Correct Regulations
Nothing Faked

CONFEDERATE UNIFORMS, U. S. A. UNIFORMS (any period), RIFLES, SADDLES, CARBINES, REVOLVERS, TENTS, HATS, CAPS, FLAGS, AMMUNITION, COWBOY CHAPS, BELTS, HOLSTERS, QUIRTS, ETC., All Ready for Immediate Delivery.

FOR SALE OR HIRE

Send for Catalogue "M"

ARMY & NAVY STORE CO., INC.
245 West 42nd St., New York
Between B'way and 8th Ave



Do This NOW!

If you do not receive a copy of "The Universal Weekly" every week, send me the name and address of your theatre and I'll see that you get it, NO MATTER WHAT PROGRAM YOU ARE USING. You can't know what's going on in the film business unless you read "The Universal Weekly." Here's a corking good chance to boost your business. Do it now!

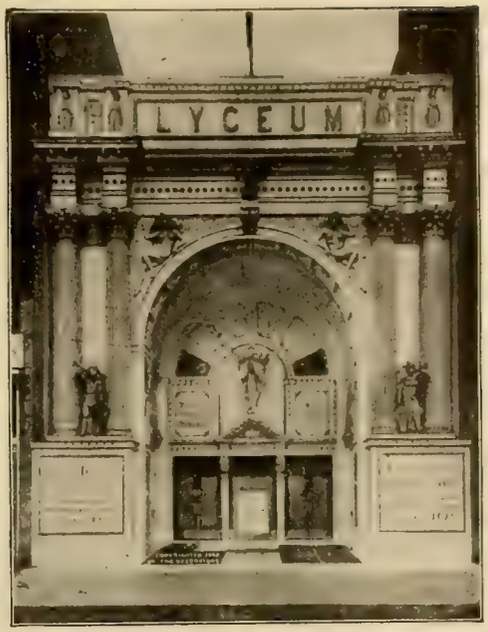
CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

205 West Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.
252-A Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.
1122 Farnam Street, Omaha, Neb.
Hubbell Building, Des Moines, Iowa.

Agents for All Makes of Machines and Accessories

"The Biggest and Best Film Renter in the world"



Ornamental Theatres

PLASTER RELIEF DECORATIONS

Theatres Designed Everywhere

Write for Illustrated Theatre Catalog. Send us Sizes of Theatre for Special Designs.

THE DECORATORS SUPPLY CO.
Archer Ave. and Leo St., CHICAGO, ILL.

REBUILT MACHINES AS GOOD AS NEW

All machines entirely rebuilt and only genuine parts used.

Power's No. 6	$140.00
Motiograph, 1913	150.00
Power's No. 5	75.00
Edison Exhibition	75.00
1912 Dissolving Motiograph	165.00

Many others. Write for complete list. All the machines are complete with the electrical attachments. A-1 condition guaranteed.
We carry complete line of new machines and supplies. Will take back your old machine in part payment of new one.

Time or Cash. Send for Catalog today.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY

160A NO. FIFTH AVENUE - - - - - - - - - - - CHICAGO

WE BUY, SELL and RENT

Moving Picture Machines, Films and Chairs

THEATRE BROKERAGE EXCHANGE
440 S. Dearborn Chicago, Ill.

Northern Feature Film Exchange

Suite 405, Schiller Building, Chicago
Phone Central 6229

Manufacturing Theatre Supply House

804 6th Ave., bet. 45th and 46th Sts., New York

Carbons, Excello, Electra or Bio, 75c. Tickets, Cement, Oil, 15c; Graphite, 1 pound can, 40c.; Condensers, 65c.; Lugs, 8c.; Fuses, 5c., etc., etc. We buy, sell, rent and repair Machines, Economizers, etc.

MAKE YOUR OWN CURRENT WITH A

Brush Electric Lighting Set

Send for 125-page catalogue with very complete information about electrical matters

THE CHAS. A. STRELINGER CO.
BOX MP-2, DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A.

Motion Picture Manufacturers

Get in touch with us.

Do you need an outlet for your productions?
We can give it to you, and your price.
Satisfy yourself.
Communicate without delay with

TITAN FILM CORPORATION
110 West 40th Street, New York.

"THE COMING SCREEN HAS COME"

NOT ONLY HAS IT COME, BUT IT IS HERE TO STAY. IN LESS THAN ONE YEAR THE

"THE PEERLESS" — DAY and NIGHT SCREEN — "THE PIONEER"

HAS BECOME THE STANDARD SCREEN OF THE WORLD

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE "IT SHOWS THE PICTURE" ARRANGE FOR TEST

THE SCREEN OF QUALITY—THE SCREEN DE LUXE—THE LOW-AMPERAGE SCREEN

MAIN OFFICE, 291 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. TELEPHONE 1951 WORTH

Branch Offices and Distributing Centers at
PHILADELPHIA, NEW ORLEANS, ATLANTA, EL PASO, MEMPHIS, KANSAS CITY, DES MOINES, SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES, SEATTLE, PARIS, BERLIN, LONDON

Booking now for
ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN

"Vampires of the Night"

(A Greene photoplay)
In five reels

General Feature Film Co.
5 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Orchestra Music
FOR MOVING PICTURES

The Orpheum Collection of dramatic and descriptive music for Piano and seven orchestra parts. Piano can be used alone. In two series:

No. 1 and No. 2

Piano, 58 cts. each. Both series, $1.15. Violin, 40 cts. each; both 75 cts. Cello-&-Bass same price as violin. Flute 35 cts. each. Both series, 65 cts. Clarinet, Cornet and Trombone same price as Flute. Drums, 30 cts. each. Both series, 55 cts.

Send for free sample page and further discounts; 3d series ready for piano only; 58 cts.

CLARENCE E. SINN
1501 SEDGWICK ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

From the Patrons View Point

What Causes People

to continually patronize one Picture Theatre in preference to another? Of course, location, appearances, films, etc. have a great deal to do with it, but quality of the picture is what builds up a steady patronage that makes the business profitable.

This depends largely on your light and if you are using any other device than a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

to step down your current you are not getting best results.

With our machine you can produce a clear, white, steady light that won't worry your "house" by continuous flickering and will surprise you with the difference it makes with the films.

It is the only device that can be changed instantly to any of the three intensities without breaking the circuit between adjustments.

But this is not all. We will guarantee that our Compensarc

Will Cut 65% from Your Light Bill and we'll send you one on 30 days' free trial to prove it.

We have a little 22 page booklet that explains all the reasons why If you want a better light at ⅓ your present cost, send for it today. It's free.

FT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
of General Electric Company
1402 Broadway
Fort Wayne, Indiana.

C 5

FOR RENT

A CENTRALLY LOCATED

MOTION PICTURE STUDIO

LOCATED IN THE HEART OF NEW YORK CITY, 12 MINUTES FROM TIMES SQUARE. GROUND FLOOR. SEPARATE BUILDING

FOR A LIMITED PERIOD ONLY

STAGE SPACE 50 x 90 FEET—CAN SET UP 7 LARGE SETS AT ONE TIME—GOOD STOCK SCENERY, ETC.

LIGHTING EQUIPMENT PRONOUNCED SECOND TO NONE
BY THE COOPER-HEWITT CO.

Address J. J. COLEMAN, STUDIO MGR.

517-19 W. 54th St., N. Y. City
Phone 6498 Columbus

Non-Breakable and Sanitary STEEL and CAST IRON

HIGH Quality

LOW Price

Opera Chairs

immediate shipment on many styles; Second Hand Chairs; out-of-door seating. Send measurements for FREE SEATING PLAN. Mention this paper.

STEEL FURNITURE CO.

Grand Rapids, Mich.; New York, 150 Fifth Ave. Pittsburgh, 318 Bissell Blk.; Boston, 69 Pearl St.

"In view of the new Era of Palatial Theatre Building created by the advent of the two hour photoplay, it is good to know that the problems of seating the vast crowds, attracted by a new art's increasing vogue are simplified greatly through the publication of the booklet, 'Seating for Modern Theatres.'

"After seeing this concrete and informative publication, I am inclined to the belief that every theatrical manager as well as every caterer to the public entertainment owes it to himself to mark well the vast improvements in theatre seating, and also to render his public such service as may be meted out to it through the now possible comfort while seated in a playhouse."

ROBERT GRAU.

When you buy Opera Chairs, learn something about Theatre Seating. Read what Robert Grau says about our methods in his De Luxe edition, "The Theatre of Science."

THE RIGHT PLACE TO BUY THE RIGHT CHAIRS.

AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY

Display Rooms and Installation Service

14 E. Jackson Blvd., CHICAGO 15 E. 32nd St., NEW YORK

Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Forty Other Large Cities

Steel Standards will not break

STEEL OR IRON STANDARDS

AGENCIES:

H. S. Ansley, 1476 B'way, Long Acre Bldg., New York City. 'Phone 5619 Bryant

California Seating Company, 720 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, Cal.

H. A. Johnson Seating Company, 1214½ Third Ave., Seattle, Wash.

THE WISCONSIN SEATING COMPANY

New London, Wis., U. S. A.

OPERA CHAIRS

OPERA CHAIRS

FOR EVERY PURPOSE

1,000 STYLES

ESTABLISHED 1865

WRITE FOR CAT. NO. 31

The A. H. Andrews Co.

115-117 So. Wabash Ave. Chicago, Ill.

Branches in all Leading Cities

New York Office 1472 Broadway, Long Acre Bldg.

Seattle Office 508-10-12 First Ave., So.

San Francisco Office 782 Mission St.

OPERA CHAIRS

Latest and Best in Seats

SEND FOR OUR PRICES BEFORE BUYING

BENNETT SEATING CO

537 West Market St.

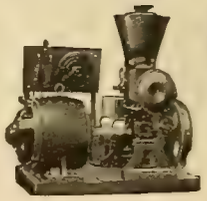
LOUISVILLE, KY.

The "Standardized" Theatre Chairs

Do you want a life-saving chair?
Do you want a space-saving chair?
Do you want a sanitary chair?
Do you want a scientifically built, double standard chair?

We operate the largest exclusive theatre chair factory in the world, AND SELL DIRECT TO YOU. WRITE US

The HARDESTY MFG. CO., Canal Dover, Ohio



Good Light Means Big Crowds

The Sandow Moving Picture Electric Light Plant gives perfect light any time you want it, at 1-10 the cost of public service. Light enough to ship as baggage. Carry your own electric lights. Catalog 301 tells you how and how much. Want it?

Detroit Motor Car Supply Company, Detroit, Michigan.

MR. ADVERTISER MR. ADVERTISER MR. ADVERTISER

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD WILL TELL YOUR STORY TO THE PEOPLE IT OUGHT TO REACH

THE CARBON FOR PERFECT PROJECTION

ELECTRA

HUGO REISINGER, 11 Broadway NEW YORK

THE HOUSE OF SELIG

SELIG LEADS OTHERS FOLLOW

SELIG CREATES OTHERS IMITATE

NEWEST SELIG SPECTACULAR PRODUCTION

WITH CELEBRATED SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO ACTORS

Extracting Thorn From Lion's Paw

IN TUNE WITH THE WILD

Featuring Kathlyn Williams

Order It Now

Big 3-Reel Jungle Spectacle

RELEASED JULY 31

IT'S A SELIG

Daring, startling, vivid and elaborate animal picture drama utilizing the stupendous and spectacular Selig jungle-zoo scenery with a horde of wild beasts.

PRODUCED IN THREE THRILLING REELS

Carrying a Wounded Friend

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL

All the big news from everywhere in pictures.

Released Every Monday and Thursday

Grows bigger and better every week. Representatives in all parts of the globe sparing no expense to photograph great events.

Order from your Exchange NOW.

ALL RELEASES THROUGH GENERAL FILM CO.

SPECIAL ONE, THREE AND SIX-SHEET POSTERS IN FOUR COLORS

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY

General Offices, 20 E. Randolph St.
CHICAGO, ILL.

Remember: It's a Selig

Ask Your Exchange—Book Now
To Be Released Through General Film Co.

A Friendly Spat

THE WORLDS FOREMOST PRODUCER

BIGGEST SUCCESSES

Selig

CURRENT RELEASES

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial

Released Mondays and Thursdays

First in War

First in Peace

First in Popularity

ORDER NOW

All the big news from everywhere in pictures
Grows bigger and better every week
Representatives in all parts of the globe, sparing no expense to photograph great events
Order from your exchange NOW
All releases through GENERAL FILM CO.

For Week Beginning Monday, July 27

A FIVE HUNDRED DOLLAR KISS.

Big Selig 2-Reel Comedy

A Five Hundred Dollar Kiss.

One of the Greatest Laugh-Makers Ever Produced.

Released July 27th.—A hilarious fun-maker, showing the comical adventures of Tom, Dick and Harry, in their crusade against a heart-breaking coquette. Each tries to win a kiss and a wager of $500.00 A laugh in every scene.

When the Cook Fell Ill

Patsy Had Too Much of a Good Thing.

Released July 31st.—One of B. M. Bower's great Western comedies, pictured in a succession of exciting scenes, produced by cowboys, train robbers, sheriffs, etc. Featuring Frank Clark, Wheeler Oakman and Tom Mix. Full of fun.

The Mother Heart

Great Selig 2-Reel Drama.
A Revolt Against Hypocrisy.
Featuring BESSIE EYTON and WHEELER OAKMAN.

Released July 29th.—A succession of great pictures, telling the story of a wealthy society girl, who rebelled against the methods of the idle rich and finally found peace and happiness in the simple life.

MUFF

A Father's Reformation.

Released July 28th.—One of Roy L. McCardell's love dramas with a great moral. The story of a circus queen, an unscrupulous husband, a baby, and an old maid. Full of laughs and tears.

LOVE VS. PRIDE

The Story of a False Ambition.

Released August 1st.—A drama with a moral, depicting the error of a girl who is the slave of ambition and pays the full price. A powerful lesson.

Watch for "The Rosary" Another Big Selig Feature

Pictured with absolute fidelity to every detail. No expense spared to make this production a typical Selig success.
Ask your Exchange about it.

The Adventures of Kathlyn.

Exhibitors who have not booked this world-wide sensation, write now for full story—novel length. FREE. Ask for terms.

Have you booked "The Spoilers"?

Biggest success of the season in New York, Chicago, etc.
Desirable territory still open. Write direct to SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY, General Offices, 20 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

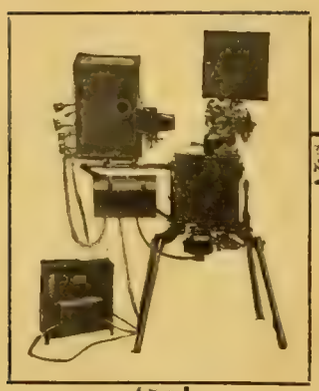
SELIG 4-COLOR POSTERS

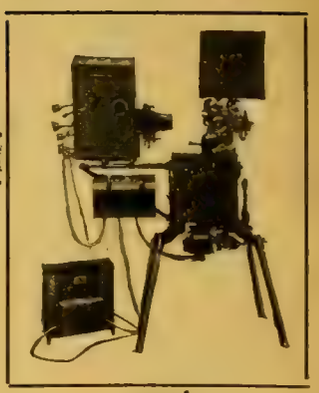
Exhibitors! Brighten your lobby display and get the business by using Selig four-color posters. Also order same for posting.
INQUIRE AT YOUR EXCHANGE.

Released Through General Film Co.—Ask Your Exchange

The Selig Polyscope Company

General Offices, 20 East Randolph St., Chicago.





SPECIALISTS

This is the day of specialists in practically every field of endeavor.

A specialist is considered the court of last resort in anything pertaining to his line.

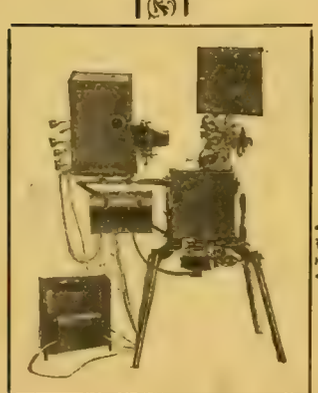
When you have money to spend on any high-class article, you look for the product of the specialist.

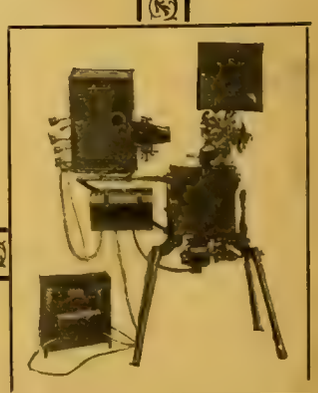
A concern which has devoted itself exclusively to the manufacture of projecting machines for years should be recognized as specialists.

A large majority of motion picture machine users have shown their discriminating "powers," and are using the product of this Company.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

NINETY GOLD STREET, NEW YORK CITY





Vol. 21, No. 5 August 1, 1914 Price 10 Cents

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

THE FILM INDEX

EXHIBITORS' GUIDE

Scene from "Vendetta" (Kleine-Eclipse-General Film Release).

Post Office Box 226
Madison Square Station

NEW YORK

17 Madison Avenue
Telephone Madison Square 3510

$10,000 For 100 Words!

FIRST, we offer the most spectacular motion picture production ever brought out—The Million Dollar Mystery, the 46-reel dramatized version of Harold MacGrath's great story.

SECOND, we offer the benefit of the remarkable interest aroused in these startling motion pictures by the 200 leading newspapers now running the story serially, simultaneously with the appearance of the films.

THIRD, we offer $10,000 for the best 100-word solution of this baffling mystery.

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY

By Harold MacGrath

Thanhouser's Million Dollar Motion Picture Production

Can you think of a more powerful attraction—a bigger drawing card for the dull summer months? Six episodes of The Million Dollar Mystery are now appearing at the better theatres. Two-reel episodes are being released each week. The entire play is full of thrills. It has been enacted by an all-star Thanhouser cast including Florence LaBadie, Marguerite Snow, Lila Chester, James Cruze, Alfred Norton and Frank Farrington.

BOOK NOW! The Million Dollar Mystery is an independent release and may be obtained regardless of the program being used.

SYNDICATE FILM CORPORATION

71 West 23rd Street, New York 166 West Washington Street, Chicago

or Syndicate Film Corporation Representative at Any Mutual Exchange in the United States and Canada.

The Thanhouser Three-a-Week

Tuesday, July 28, "The Messenger of Death"—two reels. A thrilling story of adventure in the Indian civil service. Very capably portrayed by Charles Mather, Mignon Anderson, Irving Cummings, Ed. Fray, John Lehnberg and Eugene Moore, Jr.

Sunday, August 2, "The Butterfly Bug." A mirth-provoking one-reel comedy bringing out the exceptional talents of Harry Blakemore, Fan Bourke, Helen Badgley, Doris Farrington and Renie Farrington.

37

THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION, New Rochelle, N. Y.

Head European Office, Thanhouser Films, Ltd., London, W. C., England

Thanhouser releases will continue to be features of the Mutual Program

ESSANAY

Superlative and Aristocratic Features

"BRONCHO BILLY"

the most beloved character of the entire motion picture world, is awaited eagerly by millions of his admirers each week.

G. M. ANDERSON

the originator of this famous Western character, is appearing in new features regularly. Do not fail to book these wonderful photoplays. Released every Saturday.

Released Monday, August 3rd.

"IN AND OUT"

A story of two comedy musicians who were forced to turn sailors to save their lives.

Released Tuesday, August 4th.

"HER TRIP TO NEW YORK"

A story of pathos that lays bare a woman's heart and a man's thoughtlessness.

Released Wednesday, August 5th.

THE FABLE OF

"THE BUSY BUSINESS BOY AND THE DROPPERS-IN"

By GEORGE ADE

A humorous comedy of the tired business man, his funny visitors and too many cocktails.

Released Thursday, August 6th.

"SLIPPERY SLIM'S DILEMMA"

In which "Slim" spreads a laugh every minute and again gets the best of "Mustang Pete."

Released Saturday, August 8th.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S FATAL JOKE"

A Western drama of mining life, showing the big heart of Broncho Billy. FEATURING G. M. ANDERSON.

Released Friday, August 7th.

"THE MOTOR BUCCANEERS"

(IN TWO ACTS)

A gripping photoplay of adventure that cannot help but hold the interest of any audience. Story by Edward Franklin, adapted from The Munsey Magazines.

OUR POSTERS ARE DISTINCTIVE. They will boom your business. Lithographs are in full four colors. You can order these from your exchange or direct from the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company. Your lobby display will look attractive if you use photographs of ESSANAY players, 8x10, $3.00 per dozen. You can secure these from the PLAYERS' PHOTO CO., 177 N. STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Essanay Film Manufacturing Company

521 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Factory and studio: 1333 Argyle St., Chicago, Ill. Branch offices in London, Paris, Berlin, Barcelona

There have been other offerings dealing with these old-time, romantic days, and some of them have been excellent offerings. But this seems more natural to us than any of the others that we have seen. It's as convincing as a modern picture.—Moving Picture World.

Here is the first installment of a new series of romantic photo-plays that will make film history! They are from the pen of

GEORGE BRONSON HOWARD

and are to be released simultaneously with their appearance in story form in

CENTURY MAGAZINE

They depict the romantic adventures of Villon the mediaeval poet.

The first two Century Magazine stories, "The Romaunt of the Rose" and "The Oubliette" are combined in a three-reel photodrama entitled which will be released under the "101 Bison" brand on August 15th. This story, and each of the succeeding stories of the Villon series will be complete in itself!

"THE OUBLIETTE"

DIRECTED BY CHARLES GIBLYN

MURDOCK J. MAC QUARRIE AS FRANCOIS VILLON
PAULINE BUSH AS PHILLIPPA.
HARRY F. CRANE AS KING LOUIS XI.
LON CHANEY AS BERTRAND DE LA POYNE.

A magnificent replica of the famous Bastille, with turrets, moat, portcullis and drawbridge complete, was built at enormous expense, at Universal City, Cal., especially for this Production.

Superb Photography, Wonderful Atmosphere of Mediaeval Times,
Blood-Tingling Situations.

MAGNIFICENT LITHOGRAPHIC PAPER—6-SHEETS, TWO 3-SHEETS, TWO 1-SHEETS.

PRESIDENT CARL LAEMMLE SAYS:

The Francois Villon series embody all my ideas of what the ideal photoplay should be. The stories bristle with action, thrill with unexpected and ingenious situations, and portray the elusive spirit of France in the Middle Ages in a wonderful way. I am proud to recommend them to Universal exhibitors.

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe

1600 Broadway at 48th Street. New York City

Get Set:—

DON'T try to be the sole judge of what your patrons like or dislike. Don't attempt to run a theatre without consulting the likes and dislikes of the people who PAY REAL MONEY INTO YOUR BOX OFFICE.

I ascribe my success in this business to the fact that I have always kept in touch with the people to whom I looked for support—namely, the exhibitors. You look to the people for your support, so it's up to you to keep in touch with them.

You may THINK that your people want long padded features but you MAY be thinking all wrong. Maybe something is going on in the back of their heads. Maybe they haven't told you what they talk among themselves.

Encourage them to COOPERATE WITH YOU. Make it easy for them to tell you what they like and what they dislike. Tell them that you are in business not to please yourself, but to make money; and that the quickest way to make money is to PLEASE THEM, not yourself.

Let your motto be: "Look ahead all the time!" And then live up to your motto.

CARL LAEMMLE.

SOME UNIVERSAL NEWS

MARY FULLER and her company, including her director Walter Edwin and her leading man, Charles Ogle, have gone to the mountains of Pennsylvania to begin the first of her new special Universal features "The Heart of the Night Wind" from the pen of Virgie E. Roe. It will be filmed amid magnificent natural scenic beauties and has a story of rare interest.

MARY PICKFORD is at her best in the charming play "A Normandy Romance," the second of the Imp special re-issues, released August 3d. The public has gone wild over the Mary Pickford Imps. The display of one of the Morgan Lithograph Co.'s one-sheets in your lobby on the day you show Little Mary will insure you a full house.

THE UNIVERSAL BOY with Little Matty Roubert in the leading role, is winning the hearts of every boy, and his mother and father and sister, too. Each section is complete in itself, and seeing one, your patrons will want to see the next. Released every other week under the Imp brand. Installment 3, released August 13, shows Matty meeting the leaders of the Boy Scouts of America, and Secretary-of-War Lindley M. Garrison.

FORD STERLING is doing some of his funniest work in "A Dramatic Mistake" and "At Three o'Clock," the Sterling comedy releases of Aug. 6 and 13, respectively. Watch out for them!

H. PATHE LEHRMAN has just left for the Pacific Coast, where he will organize a new comedy company to work under the Universal. His chief comedian is Billie Ritchie, than whom there is no funnier English character delineator. Announcements of release dates will be made soon.

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY

CARL LAEMMLE, President

"ENOUGH SAID"

EVERY THEATRE

COMING
THE TREY O' HEARTS
BY
LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Get Busy
BOOK THIS Great Problem Play Now
RELEASED
AUG. 4th.

Your House Will Be Crowded from Door to Dormer If You Arrange For Special Advertising for
The Trey O' Hearts

USE THE BRAINS GOD GAVE YOU

KAY-BEE

KAY-BEE FEATURES

An Eleventh Hour Reformation, 2 parts, Friday, July 31st
The Gangsters and the Girl," " " Aug. 7th
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

KAY-BEE

DOMINO

DOMINO WINNERS

The Curse of Caste, 2 parts, Thursday, July 30th
The Thunderbolt, " " " Aug. 6th
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

DOMINO

BRONCHO

BRONCHO HEADLINERS

The Long Feud, 2 parts, Wednesday, July 29th
Jim Regan's Last Raid, " " " Aug. 5th
THOS. H. INCE, Director-General

BRONCHO

KEYSTONE

KEYSTONE COMEDIES

Three comedies a week

Monday, Wednesday and Saturday release days

MACK SENNETT, Director-General

KEYSTONE COMEDIES

KEYSTONE

Photos 8 by 10 Photos of players mentioned below can be had by sending to the Publicity Dept. 15 cents for one; 50 cents for sets of four; $1.00 for sets of eight.

MACK SENNETT	THOS. H. INCE
MABEL NORMAND	ROY LAIDLAW	CLARA WILLIAMS	CHARLES RAY
CHARLES CHAPLIN	W. S. HART	JAY HUNT	WALTER BELASCO
ROSCOE ARBUCKLE	GRETCHEN LEDERER	JOHN KELLER	FRANK BORZAGE
HARRY G. KEENAN	MARGARET THOMPSON	WEBSTER CAMPBELL	THOS. CHATTERTON
"BARNEY" SHERRY	TSURU AOKI	WALTER EDWARDS	LEONA HUTTON
RICHARD STANTON	SESSUE HAYAKAWA	GERTRUDE CLAIRE	RHEA MITCHELL
J. FRANK BURKE	ENID MARKEY	MILDRED HARRIS	JEROME STORM
		"SHORTY" HAMILTON

A set of 8 by 10 Photos of Keystone Mabel, in four different poses, 50 cents

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORP.

LONG ACRE BLDG., 42nd STREET and BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Ojo Discovers the Magic Brains

OZ FILMS

Scenes from the Wonderful Feature Film
of L. FRANK BAUM'S
Whimsical Fairy Tale,

"THE PATCHWORK GIRL OF OZ"

Just completed. A marvelous filmization that will make the whole world wonder, laugh, and be happier and brighter through its influence. Complete musical score composed to fit every scene by Louis F. Gottschalk.

The Crooked Magician Completes the Magic Powder of Life

The Oz Film
STUDIO AND
Santa Monica Boulevard
LOS ANGELES,

OZ FILMS

Nothing Jollier, Daintier, more Magnificent and Absorbing, has ever been made in Motion Pictures.

The Patchwork Girl at the Den of the Woozy

"THE PATCHWORK GIRL OF OZ"

Competent critics positively assert that in this, their first great feature film, The Oz Company has created a newer and better era and opened a new vista in the field of Picturedom.

Watch for announcements of date of release.

The Discovery at the Gates of the Emerald City

Manufacturing Co.

LABORATORIES

from Gower to Lodi Sts.

CALIFORNIA

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

"The Scales of Justice," with a notable cast and excellent mounting

DANIEL FROHMAN
Presents

The Famous Emotional Drama,

"THE SCALES OF JUSTICE,"

A Terrific Arraignment of Circumstantial Evidence,

By John Reinhart

With

PAUL McALLISTER

Supported By

JANE FEARNLEY

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

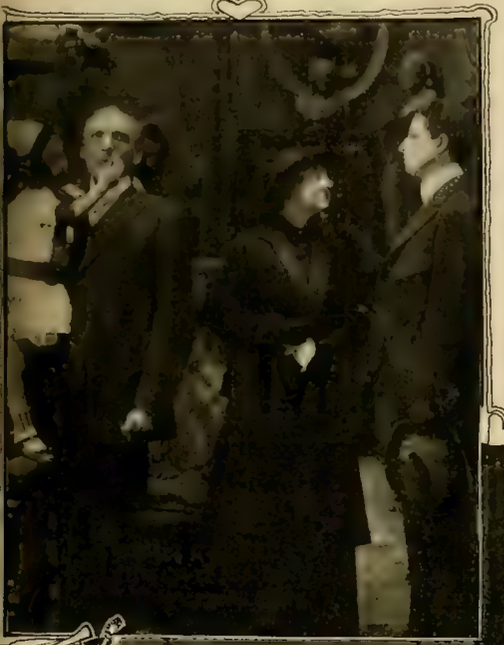
FAMOUS PLAYERS

EXECUTIVE OFFICES
213-229 W. 26th STREET
NEW YORK

COMING:
"The Better Man"
with
William Courtleigh

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

"LOVE IS THE GREATEST LAW!"

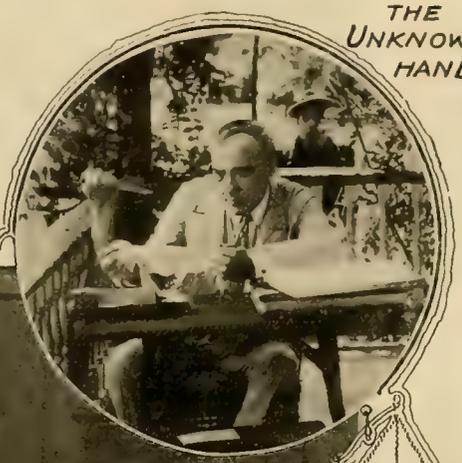


IN FIVE REELS

Released July 20th

A dynamic drama that keeps the interest upheld until the final flash—a pictorial criticism of the undependable influence of circumstantial evidence.

THE UNKNOWN HAND.



JUSTICE

FILM COMPANY

ADOLPH ZUKOR, President

DANIEL FROHMAN, Managing Director EDWIN S. PORTER, Technical Director

"30 FAMOUS FEATURES A YEAR"

FREE "POSTAGE" STAMPS

A new craze is sweeping the country. It has not reached every section yet, but judging by the way it has caught on in cities where it has made its appearance, it will soon embrace every city, town and hamlet.

It is the collecting of "postage stamps" bearing the latest portraits of American motion picture actors and actresses. Of course, these stamps are not actually good for postage, but otherwise they represent postage stamps. Uncle Sam will not permit an exact copy of the designs used by the United States

In some cities nearly all motion picture theatres are handing them out free, with the compliments of proprietors, to all patrons who ask for them. They have proved such a popular novelty that they are fast superseding the giving away of postal cards bearing the photoplayers' portraits and other souvenirs that have heretofore been in vogue. As stamps of different players are given on different days, it ensures a big attendance, as the fans do not want to miss the day that a stamp of their particular favorite is being distributed.

Your FREE sample set of 100 valuable stamps is ready for you, Mr. Exhibitor. Also a free stamp album.

Simply mail the coupon.

This same set is being bought by the public at one dollar.

It has cost thousands of dollars to make the steel engraved stamp dies from which these sets have been struck off.

Therefore you will appreciate receiving the valuable sample set which enables you to actually see how rich looking these beautifully colored stamps are. They have gummed backs and are of the color of real postage stamps.

Seeing is believing, and after seeing these stamps you will believe the above clippings from newspapers and trade papers which tell how the public are crowding motion picture houses, that give away only ONE of these stamps with each admission.

The Famous Star Series stamps are the only stamps obtainable bearing the latest portraits of all the most popular photoplayers, both licensed and independent. There are one hundred different stamps in this series. As everyst amp bears a different portrait of a famous star, "fans" come day after day for a hundred days to get each different stamp in the series in order to complete their collection. The "fans" by showing these stamps to their friends will attract hundreds of new

FREE
"POSTAGE" STAMPS

The portraits on the stamps are sufficiently large and clear to be easily recognized, as the stamps are nearly three times as large as actual postage stamps, and the portraits are perfect reproductions of photographs. It is impossible in a newspaper illustration to show how really attractive they are.

A collection of these stamps will soon be of undoubted cash value, as new designs are constantly being made and the first ones will in time grow very scarce. All those who have collected postage stamps know that some series which are no longer used bring fabulous prices, as high as a thousand dollars having often been paid for an old, cancelled postage stamp by some enthusiastic collector who needed it to complete his collection and who had neglected to secure it in the days when it could have been had for the asking.

patrons. Other exhibitors have found this to be true. You will bless the day you sent for a free sample set. Or are you going to neglect this opportunity and allow your competitors to be the first to make money out of the stamp craze in your neighborhood? It is impossible to show in black and white on this page, the beauty, clearness and rich brilliancy of color of the actual stamps.

Your valuable sample set is ready for you and will be sent by return mail.

ARTHUR LESLIE

P. S. I also wish to hear from supply houses, exchanges and others in those cities where the stamps are not already a popular craze, who wish to be the first to handle these money getting stamps.

Tear out and mail NOW

VALUABLE COUPON

Arthur Leslie
1505 Broadway
New York.

For this Coupon and 5 two cent stamps (which I enclose to cover cost of handling and mailing) send me free a complete set of 100 different portrait "postage" stamps and a stamp album.

..... Exhibitor's Name

..... Name of Theatre

..... Street address

..... City and State

Fill In and MAIL THIS MINUTE

WHERE DO

To the Ambitious Exhibitor

WITH all this juggling of your future by the alleged powers that be, have you, Mr. Exhibitor (with as much investment at stake as the average producer of films), figured out where you come in?

You read the trade papers and every week you read of new organizations that claim they will do this and that, but they really only found a new way of getting your money after you got tired of their old method.

We want your money, too. Without it we couldn't exist. Neither could anyone else. BUT WE ARE GOING TO GIVE YOU A GOOD RUN FOR YOUR MONEY AND LET YOU DICTATE WHAT YOU WANT FOR IT. That's perfectly square, isn't it? In fact, by this method all legitimate enterprises have prospered.

We are not philanthropists, neither do we think that we can revolutionize the motion picture business, but we do believe that with your support and our knowledge of trade conditions, we can procure for you the best program that brains can produce.

Under our system we will supply you one attraction a week that will prove its quality by the number of dollars that it will bring into your box office.

Companies may affiliate and organize to make you take their entire output whether you like it or not. But—

No One Can Monopolize Ambition and Brains

The Alco system is co-operative as well as creative and will procure only such films for the enterprising exhibitor as can be profitably exhibited in his theatre.

WE SCOUR THE EARTH FOR YOUR ATTRACTIONS, AND THEY WILL BE HANDLED IN YOUR TERRITORY BY PEOPLE WHO KNOW YOUR WANTS.

If you have the ambition to own your own exchange and protect your theatre with a program obtained from the world's quality mart—write immediately for our exchange proposition.

FIRST RELEASE

THE POPULAR

CARLYLE BLACKWELL IN

4 Reels By Charles Neville Buck Produced

AL. LICHTMAN
Pres. & Gen. Mgr.

ALCO FI

FILM

YOU COME IN?

To the Independent Producer

YOU have been worrying of late. Well, we don't blame you; we have spent several sleepless nights ourselves trying to solve the problem of selling good pictures the same as one sells good merchandise.

Of course, you know the rule that if you make better merchandise than your competitor, you have every reason to expect a better market. You know, however, this is not so in the picture business.

Past history of the film business teaches us that the one that sold the most films was the best politician. Undoubtedly you are not a politician because you are INDEPENDENT.

Up to now you depended on a little income from the STATE RIGHTS BUYER, but alas! and alack! he is gone. Those of him that didn't go broke, organized and left you out in the cold.

But They Didn't Take Your Brains With Them

So, thank God, we still have a chance. All you have to do is make GOOD FILMS and make them better than anyone else and the ALCO will give you a market.

Our market is open to anyone in the world that has or can produce films of quality. We don't care about their length.

Length Don't Make A Feature

They have to be good in drawing and pleasing power—then they will be good in financial power. We don't care if they are 1,000 or 12,000 feet long as long as their pleasing power is long enough to reach into the pockets of the public.

The quicker you get in touch with ALCO, the quicker your worries will be over, without combining or without conspiring. Alco will market your films. All you need is the knowledge of producing quality films.

SEPTEMBER 1st.

PHOTO PLAY STAR

"THE KEY TO YESTERDAY"

by Favorite Players Film Company 4 Reels

LM CO., Inc. 1465 BROADWAY

DISTRIBUTORS N. Y. C. PHONE BRYANT 8492

"The CURSE of the SCARABEE RUBY"
SHIPPING DATE
JULY 25th
GAUMONT COMPANY
110 West 40th St. NEW YORK.

JESSE L. LASKY
PRESENTS
AMERICA'S FORMOST ROMANTIC ACTOR
MR. ROBERT EDESON

IN THE MOST PERFECTLY PRODUCED DRAMATIC CLASSIC OF THE DECADE
THE CALL OF THE NORTH
BY GEORGE BROADHURST
FROM THE NOVEL
"CONJUROR'S HOUSE"
BY
STUART EDWARD WHITE
5 ACTS 317 SCENES
AS PERFECT IN EVERY DETAIL AS MAN CAN MAKE
RELEASED AUG 10

JESSE L. LASKY FEATURE PLAY COMPANY
LONG ACRE THEATRE W. 48TH STREET
JESSE L. LASKY, PRESIDENT — N. Y. C. — SAMUEL GOLDFISH, TREAS. & GEN'L MANAGER
CECIL B DeMILLE, DIRECTOR GENERAL

Griffith

TO THE EXHIBITORS: You can be perfectly certain how your patrons will take D. W. GRIFFITH'S MASTERPIECE:

"Home, Sweet Home"

YOU take it — and they'll take it, just as all who have seen it took it

Read what authorities say about it around the country!

The Opinions of the Motion Picture Press:

Louis Reeves Harrison in the New York Moving Picture World writes:

"HOME, SWEET HOME, a Photo-drama of beautiful motive, of exquisite treatment, imbued with the personality of brilliant Griffith."
"An appreciation of genius by genius."
"An enchantment of the screen."

The N. Y. Dramatic Mirror says:

"You will want to see HOME, SWEET HOME because the hand of David W. Griffith is felt in every scene; you will want to see it because of the photography; you will want to see it because never before has a cast of equal strength been gathered together in one picture under such a master hand."

The Opinions of the Great Metropolitan Daily Press:

Victor Watson of the New York American says:

"The master art of the 'Movies' beautifully done."

The New York Herald states:

"Perfect in every detail."

Leading Managerial Opinions:

The Manager of the Strand Theatre, New York City, the most beautifully appointed motion picture theatre in the world, wired:

"The most beautiful picture I ever saw."

Los Angeles, Cal., turned out en masse to see it open Clune's Auditorium and thousands were turned away disappointed.

W. H. Clune of Los Angeles, Cal., wired:

"The most wonderful picture ever shown. My theatre seats over 3000 people at first class prices and we turned them away every day."

Thus, from Coast to Coast, has HOME, SWEET HOME made its appeal to human hearts.

This great picturization of the song that has reached all hearts cannot fail to reach the hearts and minds of your clientele.

BOOK IT NOW!

Released through

The Continental Feature Film

Griffith

Extracts from a Letter addressed to the Continental Feature Film Corporation by D. W. GRIFFITH:

Above all--be careful in the selection of films you offer your exhibitors.

Inartistic picturization of plays written primarily for the speaking stage

DO NOT MAKE GOOD FEATURES!

Even ''stars'' of the speaking stage, when hedged about with aged and out-lawed traditions of the spoken drama--

DO NOT MAKE GOOD FEATURES!

FAMOUS NAMES ALONE, unbolstered by artistry, in however big type they may be advertised--

DO NOT MAKE GOOD FEATURES!

Only films played by real artists OF THE SCREEN, the subject matter big, gripping theme--dramas, written especially for the Screen, presented in an ARTISTIC MANNER--

DO MAKE GOOD FEATURES!

YOU WANT YOUR HOUSES FULL GRIFFITH FILMS WILL FILL 'EM

Mr. Griffith personally directs films produced by the Majestic and Reliance Companies and released as part of The Mutual Program, as well as the big theme-dramas which are booked through

Corporation

29 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK
ALL MUTUAL EXCHANGES

Mr. State Rights Buyer:

Are You Ready for Big Business?

The hot weather season—the dull booking period, will soon be over. Will you be prepared for your exhibitors? Will you have the features they want? —or, will you have to choose from those your competitor turned down?

Two of the most sensational thrillers ever filmed NOW READY

The Sacrifice of Pauline

A succession of thrilling scenes lead up to the committing of a crime by Pauline's son, who flees from the country, leaving his mother to face the harassing situation. She is arrested, tried and convicted. Afterwards Pauline averts the marriage of her son to the daughter of the man he wronged.

Four Parts — A Punch In Every Scene

4 Parts HELD FOR RANSOM 4 Parts

Shows the thrilling adventures of Detective Byrnes in solving a great mystery. Scenes like the fall from the dizzy height of the Eiffel Tower; exciting races between motorcycle, automobile and motorboat; the ingenious trap into which the detective falls; and the sensational drop from High Bridge hold the interest throughout.

Territory Still Open On

Hoodman Blind.....5 Parts
Across the Continent..4 Parts
King Charles.....4 Parts
The Lure of Millions..4 Parts
The Master of Death..4 Parts
Great Python Robbery.4 Parts
Where is Coletti?.....4 Parts

THE I. S. P. CO.

220 W. 42d St., N. Y. City

INSURE A FULL HOUSE

"'NEATH THE LION'S PAW"

"THE CURSE of GREED"

"THE THUMB PRINT"

THREE WINNERS

Released Through General Film Company's Special Feature Department

DON'T "HOLD UP" THE PUBLIC!

Order Some of Our Releases and Give Them

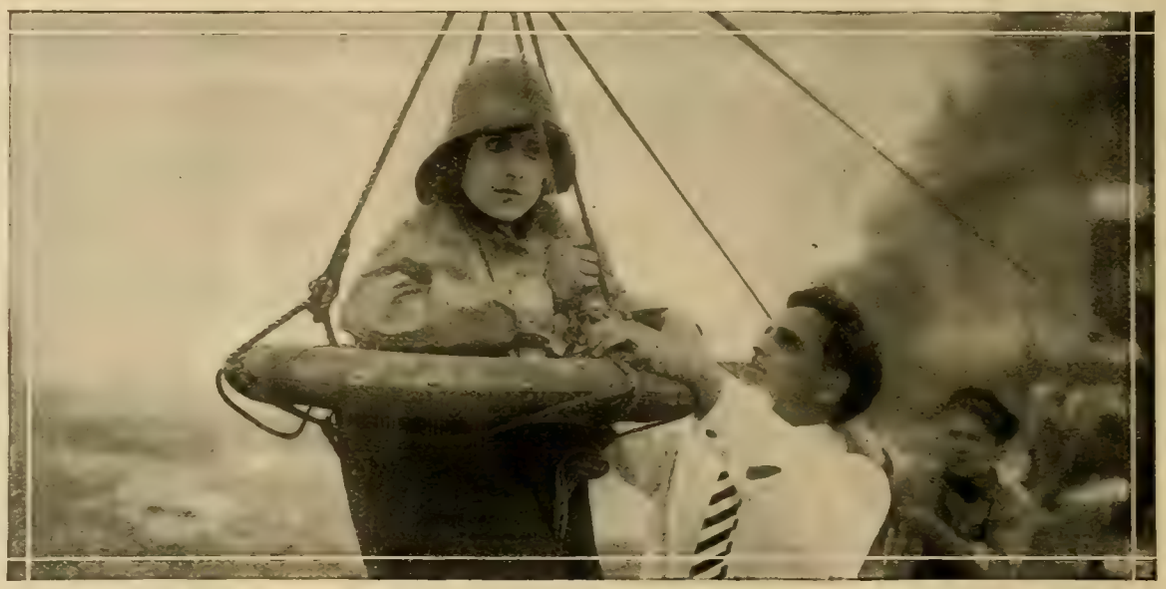
A RUN FOR THEIR MONEY

SINGLES: Tuesday, Comedy
Wednesday, Drama Thursday, Comedy

MULTIPLES: Thursday Saturday
Comedy or Drama

MELIES G FILMS

IS PAULINE WORKING FOR YOU?



THE PERILS OF PAULINE

The remarkable thing about this most remarkable of all remarkable films is that Pauline's Perils get more perilous as they go along.

A hot pace was set in the early episodes. The reason this serial keeps drawing more people all the time, is that Pauline not only keeps up with the original pace—but she goes way beyond it.

PAULINE PULLS PEOPLE * * * SHE'S A GOLD MINE

THIS IS THE LIFE—WHISKERS

One reel American Pathé made comedies.

Quick moving, fast, furious action.

Both these reels are patron-pullers—they are the sort that bring people back the next week for more of the same kind.

ECLECTIC FEATURE FILM EXCHANGES FOR YOUR USE.

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.	BOSTON 3 Tremont Row	CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.	DALLAS Andrews Bldg.	LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.	MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts.
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.	PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.	SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.	ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.	SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.	CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.
SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.	CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av., S.E.	PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.	PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.	WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.	NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.
SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.	OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.			DENVER Nassau Bldg.	KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

THE CORSAIR

Pathe made, 4 parts. Featuring Crane Wilbur in the leading role, supported by Edward Jose and an all star cast.

Based on Lord Byron's great story of the same name. Full of mystery and sunshine of the Mediterranean and the magnetic influence of a beautiful slave girl for whom men gladly risk their lives and lose them. Action, action—corsairs, harems, battles, raids, escapes and treasure caves, a truly Arabian Night's adventure, while through it all there runs the influence of the irresistible Greek girl Medora. A plot of exceptional strength, a setting of alluring Orientalism, and a story which breathes with the first screening and fairly pants at the climax.

WHEN A WOMAN LOVES

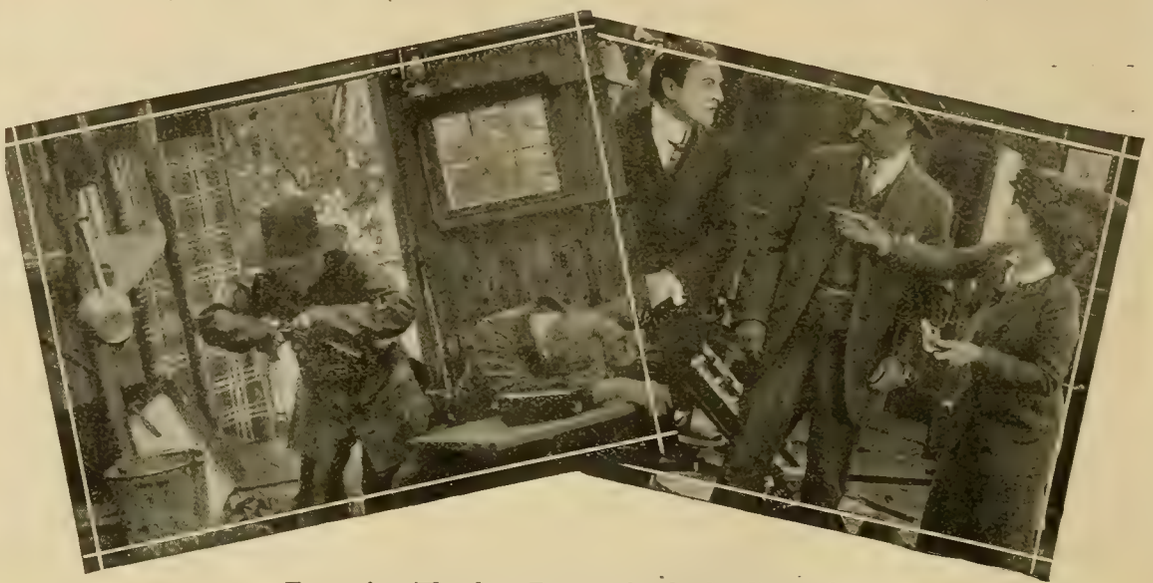
In this film is introduced some new players, among them is an actress in the leading part who is an exceptional "find." She will take your patrons' hearts by storm—she will, without doubt, be one of the greatest actresses ever offered to the moving picture public. Look for her—she is in "When a Woman Loves."

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street — New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

THE BOUNDARY RIDER



Featuring Thurlow Bergen in the leading role.

A dramatic five part attraction of the Revenue service and the North woods. An exciting story with a new sort of hero, a former broker's clerk whose employer becomes involved with opium smugglers and is killed. Suspicion falls on the clerk who is obliged to flee to Canada where he joins the force of fearless boundary riders. From the lawless opium smugglers of New York to the wild free life of the northern boundary riders this film is an accurate depiction of inside facts and has more thrills per foot than any detective play in recent years.

The Eclectic Film Company has put over another big scoop. We have secured all future issues of

Colonel Heeza Liar

The famous series of American cartoon comedies by F. R. Bray.

Everybody knows the Colonel. In the first Eclectic release, the Peerless Prevaricator gets several barrels of fun out of the "River of Doubt."

ECLECTIC FEATURE FILM EXCHANGES FOR YOUR USE.

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.	BOSTON 3 Tremont Row	CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.	DALLAS Andrews Bldg.	LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.	MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts.
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.	PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.	SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.	ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.	SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.	CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.
SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.	CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av.,S.E.	PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.	PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.	WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.	NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.
SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.	OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.			DENVER Nassau Bldg.	KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

THE ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

110 West 40th Street New York City

"The Cream of American and European Studios"

While the daily newspapers are giving their opinions on the big events of the day, you can be SHOWING THESE SAME EVENTS to your patrons in

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS

People no longer have to take the conflicting "opinions" of different newspapers—they can see with their own eyes the big world happenings a few hours after they occur, and while they are still NEWS.

The theatres that run the PATHE DAILY NEWS are catering to the demands of the wide-awake American public, which is always looking for something new. THE PATHE DAILY NEWS is both news and new.

ATLANTA Rhodes Bldg.
NEW YORK 115 E. 23rd St.
CLEVELAND 622 Prospect Av., S.E.

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS

1 CONGRESS STREET JERSEY CITY, N. J.

DENVER Nassau Bldg.
MINNEAPOLIS 4th & Hennepin Sts.
CINCINNATI 217 E. 5th St.

SEATTLE 810 Third Ave.
PITTSBURGH 715 Liberty Ave.
OMAHA 1312 Farnam St.
SAN FRANCISCO 67 Turk St.
SALT LAKE CITY 68 South Main St.
ST. LOUIS 3210 Locust St.
SYRACUSE 214 E. Fayette St.
NEW ORLEANS 910 Gravier St.

BOSTON 3 Tremont Row
PORTLAND 392 Burnside Ave.
CHICAGO 5 So. Wabash Ave.
PHILADELPHIA 1235 Vine St.
DALLAS Andrews Bldg.
LOS ANGELES 114 E. 7th St.
WASHINGTON 7th & E Sts., N. W.
KANSAS CITY 928 Main St.

WORLD FILM
VOTE FOR
THE GREAT STROKE 5 ACTS
LIGHTS O'LONDON 5 ACTS
UNCLE TOM'S CABIN 5 ACTS WITH IRVING CUMMINGS AND THE THANHOUSER KID
PROTEA II 5 ACTS
THE WORLD THE FLESH AND THE DEVIL 5 ACTS
THE LURE 5 ACTS
TORONTO
DALLAS
DETROIT
SEATTLE
LOS ANGELES
SAN FRANCISCO
CHICAGO
NEW ORLEANS
KANSAS CITY
ATLANTA
MINNEAPOLIS
INDIANAPOLIS
CLEVELAND
PITTSBURG
DENVER
ST. LOUIS
BUFFALO
BOSTON
CINCINNATI
WASHINGTON
PHILADELPHIA
NEW YORK
HOME OFFICE
130 W. 46TH ST.
NEW YORK CITY

CORPORATION

COMING

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN
IN 5 ACTS

FROM THE
FAMOUS NOVEL BY HARRIET BEECHER STOWE

IRVING CUMMINGS as Harris

AND

MARY ELINE THE THANHOUSER KID AS EVA

AMERICA'S STRONGEST STORY WITH WONDERFUL PHOTOGRAPHY TO BACK IT

EDISON

THE PRESIDENT'S SPECIAL

Yes, you say as you look at the picture, "common-place wreck," that's all. But the joke is, no such wreck happened at all. It's what might have happened had not a fast automobile overhauled the train and prevented what seemed to the overworked tower-man an inevitable head-on collision. The thrill of the reel is not in the collision but in the heroic act of a brave woman in an automobile who headed it off by her pluck and courage. To be Released Friday, August 7th.

COMING EDISON RELEASES

Saturday, August 8th
One Touch of Nature
(Comedy) 1000 feet

Monday, August 10th
All for a Tooth
(Comedy) 1000 feet

Tuesday, August 11th
A Tale of Old Tuckson
(Drama) 1000 feet

Wednesday, August 12th
Andy Learns to Swim (9th Story)
(Comedy) 1000 feet

Friday, August 14th
The One Who Loved Him Best
(Drama) 2000 feet

Saturday, August 15th
While the Tide Was Rising
(Drama) 1000 feet

WATCH FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF "MY FRIEND FROM INDIA"
H. A. Du Souchet's famous comedy-drama with Walter E. Perkins in the title role. To be released on August 15th through the masterpiece service of the General Film Company.

Order Edison posters of the MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO., Cleveland, Ohio, direct.

TRADE MARK
Thomas A Edison

Thomas A. Edison, Inc.
239 Lakeside Ave., Orange, N. J.
Makers of the Edison Kinetoscope, Model "D."

A New Idea in Series Stories

—Every story embraced in the Alice Joyce Series is complete in itself and has no bearing upon any of the productions which follow.

—Which means that your patrons are not compelled to wait two or more weeks for the continuation of a story. Having paid to see a complete show, they get what they are entitled to in every production of the Alice Joyce Series.

—It is due to this fact that the Alice Joyce Series is playing to BIG business. Get your share of it. Start with "THE VAMPIRE'S TRAIL," and show your patrons the best drama Kalem has produced since "The Vampire."

Forthcoming Two-Act Features of the Alice Joyce Series

The Vampire's Trail

Just as she is about to elope with Payne, the actress is quarantined in the home of the wife whose life she had endeavored to blast. The outcome is surcharged with interest.

Released Monday, August 3rd

The Brand

The fire which destroys the reformatory; Mary's heroism in saving the inmates, and, later, Rosie's dastardly attempt to blackmail the girl, among the incidents which make this of unusual appeal.

Released Monday, August 31st

The Old Army Coat

Produced at Jacksonville, Fla., during the recent reunion of Confederate Veterans. Leroy's efforts to wrest a fortune from the old Veteran's ward results in a series of absorbing situations.

Released Monday, August 17th

The Mystery of the Sleeping Death

A tale of reincarnation which will astound observers. The mysterious trance into which Harrison and Lizzie fall, and the ancient Hindu legend told on the screen make this a story decidedly out of the ordinary.

Released Monday, September 14th

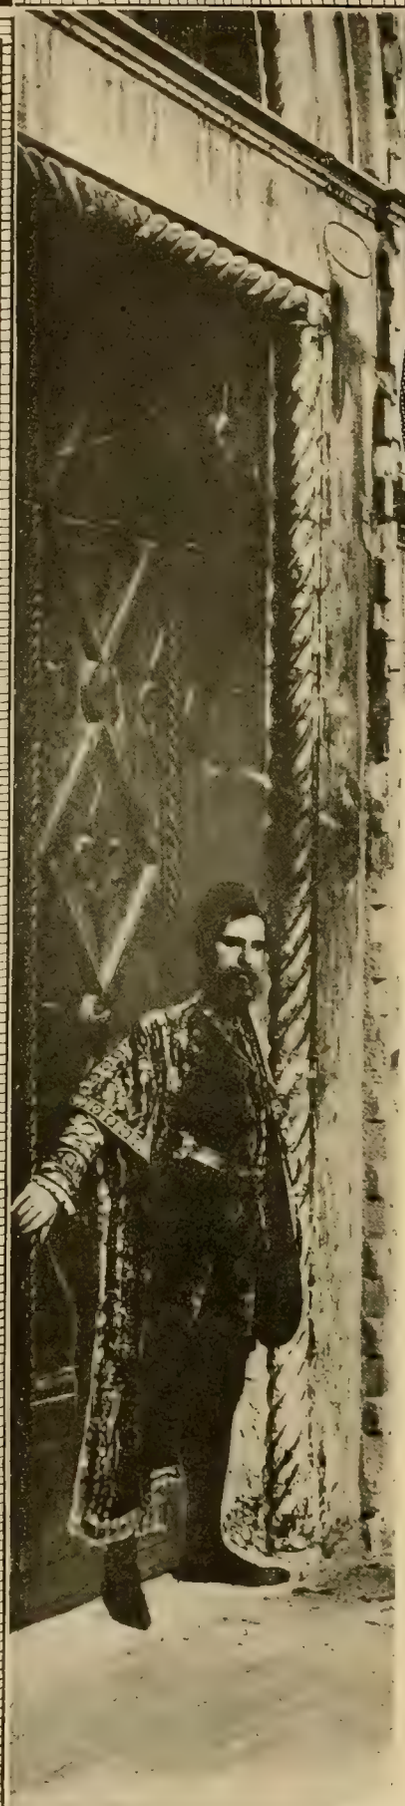
The Viper

Gratitude is foreign to his base nature. He brings misery upon the heiress who marries him and betrays the men who save him from death. Believing him dead, the heiress remarries. What follows will hold you spellbound.

Released Monday, September 28th

The most attractive scenes in the above productions are shown on one, three and six-sheet posters. Get them — they will help fill your house

KALEM COMPANY, 235-9 West 23d St., NEW YORK



"Look to Your Daughter," Cries Iago

Othello

RELEASED
THROUGH SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

or, THE MOOR OF VENICE

FIVE PARTS

THE DIVINE SHAKESPEAREAN DRAMA

Made at Venice, Italy!!!

By the Photo Drama Company. THE SUPER FILM—By All Odds the Most Pretentious, Beautiful and Accurately-Screened Version of Shakespearean Stories!

MADE AT VENICE, ITALY. That's a Tremendous advertising Feature in itself! VENICE, rendezvous of the modern tourist—A very fountain-head of Romance and Adventure! The waterways of Historic Venice with its tales, ten centuries old, of Passionate Loves and Fierce Vendettas—the indolent, dreamy sweep of these Gondola-ridden highways are scenes of the quaintest stories in any language!

FOR THE MAKING OF OTHELLO the City Fathers declared a half-holiday—canals were closed to modern commerce, leaving only the aged palaces, the gayly-costumed players and the clicking cameras of the Photo Drama Company.

In OTHELLO, we offer a real masterpiece. It is the first of Shakespeare's stories filmed in its proper environment, as the Master would have wished.

For Release Through

SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

General Film Company

NOW BOOKING.

Complete Line of Lithographs, Press Stories, etc.

GEORGE KLEINE

166 N. State St., Chicago

THREE SPLENDID MONEY-GETTING SUBJECTS YOU CAN HAVE RIGHT NOW!

They're making money every minute—these three!!! Call up any General Film Office (Special Feature Department) and make a date!

We vouch for them absolutely! From the standpoint of story, photography and general dull-season possibilities, we believe them to have no equals in inexpensive summer attractions.

Let us suggest you try them.

ANNE BOLEYN

A story of the Second Wife of Henry VIII. Every School Child Knows the History of Her Ill-Fated, Doom-Laden Marriage. Anne deposed Queen Catherine, only to give way in time to the new Court Beauty, Jane Seymour. The Courtship, Marriage and Death of Anne Boleyn is one of the Cruelest, Weirdest incidents in the annals of English History. As a Picture, It's a WINNER! THREE PARTS

A KINGDOM AT STAKE

The Pretty Child Queen is Marked by Anarchists for Murder. But, Luckily, her Native Sweetness wins the Heart of the Chief Conspirator, Her daily Companion and Instructor. How the Plot failed.....How the well-meaning but misguided revolutionists were condemned to Die, only to be pardoned at the Eleventh Hour by their childish, loving little Monarch, makes, we firmly believe, the most pleasing, dainty, thoroughly-charming hot weather offering we have seen this summer. Already many theatres have cashed in on "A Kingdom at Stake." Have You? THREE PARTS

OTHELLO

Truly a wonderful subject, made from the Divine Shakespearean Tragedy of that Name. Staged at Venice, Italy, in the environment of the Original, Following Closely the Thread of Shakespeare's Beautiful Story. But—And Here's a Vital Point—You Need be no Shakespeare Student to enjoy the wonders of his written story. All its dramatic power and intensity have been retained three-fold in the film version. Again we say, A Truly Wonderful Subject. You will find in it great box-office possibilities. If you haven't booked it, Do It Now! FIVE PARTS

BOOKING NOW THROUGH

SPECIAL FEATURE DEPARTMENT

GENERAL FILM COMPANY

Complete line of Lithographs, Heralds and Photographs

GEORGE KLEINE

166 N. State Street, Chicago.

LUBIN

"The Lure of the Car Wheels." Released Wed., July 29th.

A Comedy Every Tuesday and Saturday

A TWO-REEL FEATURE Every Wednesday and Thursday

A Drama Every Friday

"Three Men and a Woman" Released July 30th.

FIVE RELEASES EACH WEEK

"THE QUESTION AND ANSWER MAN"
Comedy.....Tuesday, July 28th
A good story of the Editorial room, caused by a mix-up of proper names and nom de plumes. The newspaper man joins in the love game and wins out.

"THE LURE OF THE CAR WHEELS"
Two-Reel Drama.....Wednesday, July 29th
Strange adventures of a boy with a mania for travel. He is nominated for Mayor, but his sweetheart forsakes him and he turns again to the Lure of the Wheels.

"THREE MEN AND A WOMAN"
Two-Reel Drama.....Thursday, July 30th
One of the most sensational melodramatic pictures ever released. A ship on fire and heroic rescue.

"WITHIN THE NOOSE"
Drama.....Friday, July 31st
A strong and graphic picture of the operations of Western outlaws and bank robbers and the justice meted out by the Vigilantes.

"SHE GAVE HIM A ROSE"
Comedy.....Saturday, August 1
A roaring comedy love episode, in which two burglars very much interfere with an ardent pair of sweethearts.

"THE RISE OF THE JOHNSONS"
Comedy.....Saturday, August 1
Very laughable incident which takes place in a coon crap joint. Mr. Johnson wins out beautifully.

LUBIN MASTERPIECES

NOW READY

"THE WOLF"—6 Reels
By Eugene Walter

TO BE RELEASED SOON

"THE HOUSE NEXT DOOR"
6 Reels. By J. Hartley Manners

NOW IN PREPARATION

"EAGLE'S NEST"—5 Reels
By Edwin Arden

Now being produced in Colorado, with Edwin Arden, Broadway's popular actor, in the leading role.

LUBIN POSTERS

By Our Own Staff of Artists—One and Three Sheets with Single and Split Reels. One, Three and Six Sheets with all Multiple Reels.

Lubin Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
Chicago Office - - - 154 West Lake Street

VITAGRAPH

"His Kid Sister"
Comedy-Drama, Monday, July 27

She comes to her brother's rescue and repays him for his love and kindness. She has the laugh on the sheriff after a daring ride and a slide down a rope. MARGARET GIBSON in the title role.

"John Rance, Gentleman"
Two-Part Drama, Tuesday, July 28

He will not violate friendship. Refuses the love a woman had denied her husband. He sacrifices it for the sake of honor and self-respect. ANTONIO MORENO, NORMA TALMADGE and HARRY KENDALL.

"Officer Kate"
Comedy, Wednesday, July 29

She becomes a policewoman. Her husband gets a good-looking hired girl to run the home. Kate resigns from the force and makes her fixed post at home. KATE PRICE in the lead.

"The Greater Motive"
Drama, Thursday, July 30

Bob has never been whipped. He takes the count for the sake of his old sweetheart and her kids. She needs the money worse than he does. DOROTHY KELLY, JAMES MORRISON and GEORGE COOPER are the cast.

"Private Bunny" Comedy, Friday, July 31

JOHN BUNNY makes a big hit in his regimentals and defeats his rival. FLORA FINCH just worships her hero. His glory is cut short by his courtmartial for desertion.

"The Violin of M'sieur"
Two-Part Fantasy, Saturday, August 1

Exactly as presented 75 times on the stage of the Vitagraph Theatre, Broadway, New York City, introducing CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, ETIENNE GIRARDOT, JAMES YOUNG, HELEN CONNELLY and the VITAGRAPH DOG.

SIX A WEEK

"DETECTIVE AND MATCHMAKER"
Western Comedy .....MONDAY, AUG. 3
"WARFARE IN THE SKIES."
Two-Part Military Drama.TUESDAY, AUG. 4

"SECOND SIGHT"
Vita-Laugh Comedy ..WEDNESDAY, AUG. 5
"MEMORIES IN MEN'S SOULS"
Drama .....THURSDAY, AUG. 6

"THE LOCKED HOUSE"
Comedy .....FRIDAY, AUG. 7
"THE HOUSE ON THE HILL"
Two-Part Drama .....SATURDAY, AUG. 8

VITAGRAPH ONE, THREE AND SIX SHEET POSTERS

The Vitagraph Co. of America, E. 15th St. and Locust Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

RELEASED
A Million Bid
5-Part Drama—A Classic

RELEASED
Goodness Gracious
3-Part Comedy—A Gem

RELEASED
Mr. Barnes of N. Y.
6-Part Drama—A Masterpiece

Coming!
BROADWAY'S FAVORITE COMEDY
MR. BINGLES' MELO-DRAMA
In 3 Merry Parts

BROADWAY STAR FEATURES

Produced by the Vitagraph Company of America

As Presented at the

VITAGRAPH THEATRE
NEW YORK CITY

FOR TERMS AND PARTICULARS, APPLY

GENERAL FILM CO.'S SPECIAL SERVICE

Coming!
THE HUMAN INTEREST DRAMA
SHADOWS OF THE PAST
In 3 Thrilling Parts

RELEASED
Love, Luck & Gasolene
3-Part Comedy—A Speed Marvel

RELEASED
Captain Alvarez
6-Part Drama—A Thriller

STATE RIGHTS
The Christian
Apply VITAGRAPH-LIEBLER FEATURE FILM CO., 116 Nassau St., N. Y.

Kalem's Five-a-Week

THE RAJAH'S VOW

An All-Star cast in an Absorbing Two-Act story of the Orient

It costs the lives of Lord and Lady Thomas; it almost causes the death of a Hindu girl by suttee. It makes this one of the most absorbing stories of the Orient ever filmed.

Released Monday, August 10th. Scenes which instantly attract attention on 1, 3 and 6-Sheets.

Old Man Higginbotham's Daughter

Featuring Irene Boyle in a Rural Drama.

Falling into the rapids, the young farmer is whirled down the stream. The outcome of the accident fills this simple story with heart-interest.

Released Tuesday August 11th. Striking 1 and 3-Sheets

A Substitute For Pants

Featuring Ruth Roland in a Marshal Nielan Comedy

It's a divided riding skirt, and Billy, running for office, finds it beats trousers to a standstill in landing the feminine vote.

Released Friday, August 14th

At the End of the Rope

Featuring Princess Mona Darkfeather in a Two-Act story of the West

Unable to climb back to the cliff above, the outlaw is about to drop to the ledge below. He glances down. Waiting for him with knife upraised, is his foe.

Released Wednesday, August 12th

Eye-catching scenes on 1, 3 and 6-Sheets

Near Death's Door

Helen Holmes in a Drama of the Hills

The tremendous upheaval which hurls tons of rock and earth skyward, and the landslide which buries three people, two of the great scenes.

Released Saturday, August 15th. Superb 1 and 3-Sheets

KALEM COMPANY, 235-9 West 23d St., New York

MOVING PICTURE WORLD
THE FILM INDEX — EXHIBITORS' GUIDE

J. P. Chalmers, Founder.
Published Weekly by the

CHALMERS PUBLISHING COMPANY
17 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY.
(Telephone, 3510 Madison Square.)

J. P. Chalmers, Sr.....President
E. J. Chalmers.....Secretary and Treasurer
John Wylie.....Vice-President and General Manager
The office of the company is the address of the officers.
WESTERN OFFICE—Suite 917-919 Schiller Building, 64 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill. Telephone, Central 5099.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and Philippine Islands .....$3.00 per year
Canada ..... 3.50 per year
Foreign Countries (Postpaid)..... 4.00 per year

ADVERTISING RATES.

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING—no display—three cents per word; minimum charge, 50c.
DISPLAY ADVERTISING RATES made known on application.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

All changes of address should give both old and new addresses in full and clearly written.

NOTE.—Address all correspondence, remittances and subscriptions to MOVING PICTURE WORLD, P. O. Box 226, Madison Square Station, New York, and not to individuals.

(The Index for this issue will be found on page 758.)

Entered at the General Post Office, New York City, as Second Class Matter.

Saturday, August 1, 1914.

Facts and Comments

IN a recent issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD we printed the complaint of an exhibitor out on the Pacific Coast, who almost despaired of success because of the unrelentingly hostile attitude of the church people of his town. By a curious coincidence an exhibitor in Canada writes to us telling of how he, too, encountered violent opposition on the part of church people and how he overcame it. When this exhibitor about two and a half years ago applied to the authorities for a license he precipitated a bitter campaign against the application. The question was made the topic of hostile sermons in more than one church and the pulpits rang with denunciations of the motion picture. Our exhibitor took hold and conducted his theater in such a manner that in the course of time he converted his enemies into friends. He writes to us saying that recently his advertisement was solicited "for a publication in connection with one of the churches previously most opposed to us." He concludes by saying: "We are pretty proud of this mark of confidence and trust that our experience may be the source of some encouragement to those who with a high standard in view have not as yet received the recognition their efforts deserved." We hope that our friend and correspondent will favor us with a full recital of the valuable work he has done for the benefit of his brother exhibitors all through the country.

* * *

THE number of exhibitors who insist on screen examination before booking features for their houses is happily on the increase. Discriminating and progressive exhibitors are in a position to do a great deal toward eliminating the cheap and nasty "features," frequently misnamed "sensational." A correspondent in a large town in Eastern Pennsylvania controlling a first-class theater with a large capacity protests that there are too many "so-called features." He makes a suggestion which is well worth pondering by every exhibitor who has the welfare of his profession at heart. He thinks that the "reputable houses ought to start a movement to eliminate exchanges that buy only cheap and inferior films." In England, where the exhibitor has far more power than here and where it pays the producer and the exchange to consult the exhibitor, the danger to the industry from cheap and inferior films has been minimized, though England has the open market. The growth of the exhibitors' influence is a benefit to the entire motion picture industry.

*

The rights for the exhibition of motion pictures of the first flight of quality are nowadays being sold upon conditions. These conditions insist upon a proper, adequate and dignified presentation and upon a minimum price of admission which is consistent with the nature of the attraction. We look upon this practice, which is becoming the settled policy of the quality concerns, as a sure sign of the great future which is in store for the high-class progressive exhibitor. We have seen many splendid pictures tortured, mutilated and massacred by clumsy and ignorant methods of presentation, and it will do us all a lot of good to see good pictures in good hands. Much remains to be done to properly educate the public. The writer remembers how years ago patrons looking at the "Passion Play" wanted to know when the vaudeville was going to come on, and how one man after seeing "Dante's Inferno" wanted his money back because there had been no dancing.

* * *

NEW YORK is famous for occasional displays of stupidity by its official guardians of the peace, but the record went to pieces the other day when a policeman arrested some make-believe cowboys, who were "doing a Western," because they carried old revolvers. He might have found out by the simple process of asking that the revolvers were not loaded and were really useless because they were "props" and not honest-to-goodness shooting irons, but the impulsive bluecoat never stopped to think and haled the entire troupe before a magistrate, who of course promptly discharged the actors, who had no intention of violating the law, even technically.

* * *

THE generosity of motion picture men, and especially of exhibitors, is powerful. Whenever a great calamity strikes a city or town involving distress and misery for widows and orphans the theatrical people have never been slow to offer their aid. A valued correspondent from Calgary, in Canada, speaks in a letter to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD of the prompt relief given by the management of the Rex theater in Alberta. He devoted the gross receipts of two days to the succor of the widows and orphans of 197 miners that were killed in an accident at the Hillcrest mine some time ago. There are other examples of this generosity too numerous to mention. No institution exists today more in sympathy with human red-blooded life than the motion picture theatre.

"Psychological"

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE distinguished and scintillating writers of newspaper paragraphs who supply us with so much whipped wit per day have never told the full story of President Wilson's use of the word "psychological" as applied to business depression. The facts as they are now becoming known show that the President used the word in the course of a conversation with a timid capitalist who was shaken with fear and dared not open his mills. The President, according to the story, "labored" with the man and exorcised the evil spirit of Fear, sending the man home with renewed confidence and a determination to start up his factories.

The association in the minds of our public of the nickel with the motion picture entertainment is largely if not wholly "psychological." In the city of Denver an exhibitor owning a very large and a very fine theater devoted to motion pictures showed the Vitagraph success, "A Million Bid," and paid a handsome amount for printer's ink to glory in the fact that he was showing this picture, which fetched fifty cents and a dollar on Broadway in New York, for the small sum of one nickel, half a dime, the twentieth part of a dollar. If this friend of ours is not suffering from an advanced case of "nickelitis" we will hand in our resignation as diagnostician right at this minute. There is an illustration for you of the "psychological." You may say: Well, the man probably had a bad competitor or two who forced him into this close and feverish adherence to the nickel. Pas du tout, or, as they say in Cork, "divvle a bit." Another theater in the same imperial city was showing "Les Miserables" at ten and twenty cents, selling 75 per cent of the higher priced seats as against the dime chairs.

You know that the public is very apt to look at the motion picture through the eyes of the exhibitor who projects them in his theater. If he insists on the nickel as the sacred and unchangeable price of every motion picture entertainment we must not blame the public for making five cents a synonym for the motion picture. The public can be educated if the right sort of teacher comes along. Now the first requisite of the right sort of teacher is courage. If he believes that his show is worth more than five cents he must have the courage of his convictions. If on the first night of his change from the nickel to the dime or better his attendance shows a marked falling off he may feel the northwind blow about his feet, but he must guard against the chills penetrating to the heart. Let him go on with a program which is worth not less than ten cents, and unless he is handicapped by extraordinary difficulties he is bound to win out.

Let us ask ourselves this plain question: Can the art of producing good motion pictures endure on a five-cent basis? Can the cost of a proper and thorough and intelligent distribution of films be borne on the support of the nickel? Is it possible to give first-class exhibitions attracting the best elements of the public on an admission of half a dime? We are all agreed on the answer. We know that the pictures have broadened and improved in all respects, that they are worth more because they cost more, and that the public can be made to see the facts if properly enlightened. Only a short time ago I received letters from several cities in the East and the South urging that something be done to relieve ruinous competition and all the evil effects of nickelitis. In one very large city not far away a canvass was made among exhibitors to ascertain the sentiments of the majority in regard to raising the price from five to ten cents. It appears that 80 per cent of the exhibitors were in favor of a raise, while 20 per cent were opposed. The progressives decided to start with raising the price on Saturdays, and at last accounts they have been fairly successful. Now it seems to me that the 80 per cent ought not be intimidated by the twenty. The twenty may have special reasons for clinging to "nickelodeon" prices, and they may be grasping at straws just at the point of going down for the third and last time. The worrying about what the 20 per cent are going to do, it seems to me, is somewhat illogical and unreasonable. Let them go where they please; that is their blessed privilege, but let the progressives keep on their way unswervingly.

How can we relieve the public of this misconception that the motion picture is indissolubly associated and bound up with the nickel? Why, we are doing it right now. Such theaters as the Strand are doing it and doing it better than I have any power to describe. Let us get the facts of the great change in the cost and quality of the motion pictures into the newspapers of the entire country. Here is a splendid chance for the recently reunited organized exhibitors of the country to demonstrate the usefulness of combined action. Let them establish a bureau for the dissemination of these facts. Properly dressed in news form items about motion pictures are welcome in pretty nearly every newspaper office in the country. The only modern industry at all comparable in importance and prosperity to motion pictures is the automobile industry, and how many millions of dollars have been spent in enlightening and conciliating public opinion for this new vehicle. The motion picture industry as such has done next to nothing to influence public opinion in a systematic and persistent way. With far greater opportunities than any other industry we have been far less active. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has done its utmost to supply educational literature to all exhibitors who have asked for it and will continue to do so in the future, but the exhibitor must be the one to attend to its distribution in his own locality.

Yes, indeed, the nickel price is largely psychological. Happily such a state of mind can be overcome by reasoning. We recommend no other form of exorcism but calm thinking. If we are mistaken and if the nickel is a good thing for the development of the industry why we are ready to listen to any argument that may be advanced in opposition to our belief. In fact, we would like nothing better than a free and full exchange of opinions in these columns. If there are two sides to this question and if the low price is an advantage we want to know the reasons why. In the meantime we cannot help reflecting on the fact that even in the poorest countries in the world the average price of admission to motion picture theaters is higher than in our country, which beyond all question is the best, the most enlightened and the richest country.

There is an exhibitor somewhere in the South who in order to hurt his competitor came out with a signed statement in the local papers, saying "that any exhibitor of motion pictures charging more than five cents admission was imposing upon the public." He is a type that must be eliminated completely before any widespread improvement can be expected. He is free, of course, to charge five cents, or even less, but why go out of his way to utter deliberate falsehoods about other people? No good can come of such actions. A man who is guilty of them not only hurts his competitor but pitifully demeans himself and advertises the peanut size of his soul to all the world.

Drama and Life.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT IS highly interesting to note the many points of view from which development of modern drama is regarded, particularly for those who study screen production without bias against or in favor of stage presentation. The stage has given us so much in the way of talented directors and interpreters, to say nothing of material for photoplays, that an inclination toward its methods is to be expected, though a one-sided tendency is not altogether desirable in any innovation. Adherence to the accepted rules of dramatic technique is of benefit to the photoplaywright in the way of general knowledge, but the application of these laws to photodramatic structure and treatment is about as suitable as the formulation of any new art according to rules and regulations applied to some older art, that is with extreme caution, if at all.

On the other hand, inasmuch as we are in a stage of experimentation, there is no reason why we should revolt against all forms of past construction, particularly those which use a representation by actors for the expression of ideas, for the exposition and correction of errors, by appealing to the mind through the emotions. There is something to be said in favor of this method. Few men are logical enough to accept easily what is reasoned out by induction, whereas nearly all have emotional sensibilities, which can be aroused, stimulated and directed towards the underlying significance of a story.

Now the newly-fledged critic tells us that a play of any kind must be "true to life." To what life? To whose life? Our existence is full of varied experiences, all of which do not occur to the newly-fledged critic. A great deal that might seem improbable, if not impossible, to him is a matter of actual experience in the careers of other individuals, not living according to his means nor in his environment. Being true to this or that individual's knowledge of what happens, or is liable to happen, is of minor importance to the main issue, that of appealing in a pleasurable or convincing sort of way to the imagination of most people in a mixed audience.

There is pleasure to be found in the realistic treatment of a story, that of seeing the characters act under unusual or even usual circumstances, so that our emotions are excited from sympathetic understanding of their situation, but making that action plausible is an art, and very largely an art of skilled preparation for what is to occur. Only a man of dramatic instinct, or one long trained in successful methods, knows how essential it is to foreshadow the spirit of a play during the earlier scenes. Realism of treatment is a great help, but subtitle hints of what is to follow contribute more heavily toward making a story "true to life" than an actual portrayal of existence.

As to how much of a photodrama shall be devoted to preparation only a general idea can be given, and it depends upon what the author is preparing for. A great deal that occurs during the exposition and development makes ready for the climax, so that a very large proportion of some plays may come under that head. A play is sometimes unjustly criticised because it starts slowly and does not attain full speed until it is more than half over. That is very apt to be the case where there is a big climax with several characters involved. It is not always possible to start with a bang, and it would often be fatal to interest in the main issue if diversion was attempted where the plot should be advanced. It is far better to stand for such unintelligent criticism and husband the strong scenes, placing the culminating point as near as possible to the end.

There is verity of life portrayal in such methods. No effect that is wonderful or startling occurs without antecedent causes. Information leading up to the high scenes need not have the appearance of doing so—it may be covered to an extent—but it should clearly define the relations of principal characters and their attitudes to one another. This must be done, even at a sacrifice of initial interest, otherwise curiosity about the outcome may be so materially lessened as to destroy suspense. A life portrayal, therefore, becomes a mind portrayal in the exposition. Some motive or mental condition is behind the conduct of all leading characters. Climax cannot be made powerful nor catastrophe convincing without it.

The naturalness of a story depends largely, it would seem, upon the author's insight into humanity as a whole, but character delineation, contributing heavily to interest in what is related, has its limitations. Authors err on that side quite as much as directors err in attempting action of the puppet variety. I recall an instance of a bright magazine writer who asked for friendly advice on construction. The scenario had been constantly refused because overcharacterization had made it tedious to read. A few touches of live action, and presto! it sold for more than the average price paid, and it has proven a decided success on the screen. The story was overbalanced with characterization, a better fault by far than lack of that essential, as proven by the price it brought.

It is a fine thing to have one strong and logical character in a story, one fully portrayed, eminently human, seemingly alive, but interest aroused in this central figure must be held by the effects of environment, the influence of other characters, the force of circumstances, as all these work out the purpose and plot. Therein is the life, the soul, the spirit of drama, with enough realism of detail to make the story plausible. Neither should theme be all-important nor characterization subservient—one is a supporting part of the other in a well-balanced composition. That is exactly as with ourselves. Each of us has a character made up of natural capacity trained to a certain point in active resistance to adverse forces. We are all players in little dramas of our own.

While the development of modern drama may be regarded from many points of view by critics, exhibitors and audience in final judgment and by authors, directors and interpreters in the formative stage, there is emerging from the confusion of opinion certain well-defined types of play. These range from split reel to multiples in size and from slapstick to noble tragedy in aim, but it is coming to be recognized that the best of them make us better acquainted with the world in which we live. Behind the eye watching the screen is the mind, hence our intellectual sense is demanding that which counts most. That which counts most is what brings into view a knowledge of life, incomplete though it may be. Sensations are aroused less by what life there is in drama than by what drama there is in life. Moving pictures may not always teach by logical methods, but they are rendering a lot of mental soil fit for cultivation. They are playing an interesting part in a universal scheme of mind development, and wherever they stimulate right knowing they start a course of right doing, their tendency being ethical as well as psychological.

"Othello"

The Great Shakesperian Tragedy Finely Filmed in Five Parts and Now Being Released by George Kleine Through the General Film Co.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE production of "Othello" in films, or of any other of the Shakesperian tragedies, is a tremendous task, a task that must be worthily done when once undertaken, so bright is the light of public opinion that is brought to bear on the result. In such a task as this, with the producer of the required ability and the cast of the most capable type, moving pictures undergo the most severe test that can be placed upon them to carry the story clearly and to visualize the complex action of the characters intelligently.

Take the character of Iago, for example. Without the spoken word it is impossible to judge of the labyrinthic subtleties of his abnormally wicked soul. Pictures are important to reveal him in his full hideousness. If the most expressive face had many hundred times its power to reveal thought and if gesture would be multiplied as many times to assist, even then the pictures would fail to convey the hidden workings of this human serpent's mind. The true nobility of Othello and the sweet gentleness of Desdemona can, indeed, be grasped through the medium of pictures, as is shown in these Ambrosia films; but the spoken word is also required to acquaint us with the "barbaresque grandeur and simplicity about the movements of his soul" and of the unswerving loyalty and fidelity, even to death, of his murdered mate.

For what reason, I am unable to see, the Ambrosia treatment of the story makes it appear that Roderigo's suit for Desdemona's hand was favored by Brabantio, her father. On the contrary, when Roderigo, with Iago in the background, appears before Brabantio's house and wakes him from his midnight sleep to warn him of his daughter's elopement, the irate old man, before he is made aware of his daughter's absence, tells him:

> "In honest plainness thou has heard me say
> My daughter is not for thee."

As a whole, however, the picture story follows the Shakesperian account pretty closely.

We are not favored with a list of the people in the Ambrosian cast, the oversight in a film of such prominence is rather unusual nowadays. Everyone will be attracted by the impersonators of Othello, Iago, Cassio, Desdemona and Emilia.

The "noble Moor" has been well represented, both in physique and in mental parts. It is hoped that the swarthy features of his double in the pictures will not be mistaken for those of African type. The nose shows the difference at first glance; the thick lips—"what a full fortune does the thick lips show," says Roderigo in jealous hate—are a counterpart of those of the Moor as conceived by Shakespeare. The gentleness, the noblemindedness, the horrible fury of the man are well brought out. The death scenes of Desdemona and the Moor have been discreetly shortened.

The commanding character, as seen in the films, is that of Iago. The part is excellently cast. The actor who sustains it has the face, the manner and the youth essential, and is gifted with a fine appreciation and the art of expression.

Cassio is also in able hands, and the artist has succeeded in conveying by his characterization the reason for Othello's preferment of Cassio to the place of Iago, as captain of the guard. Roderigo is also very acceptable.

The selection of Desdemona's representative was most happy. She is a charming woman, less attractive than Emilia in physical beauty, but revealing a soul and devotion worthy of her great prototype.

Great praise is due Ambrosia for the artistic settings of the drama. The main scenes were laid in Venice by Shakespeare, and the Ambrosia people took due advantage of that fact. The Grand Canal, the Palace of the Doges and other favored spots in Venice are given us as they are today. I understand that, in order to take the scenes on the Grand Canal, without having them marred by the busy rush of everyday life, all traffic was suspended by order of the municipal government for half a day.

The attack on the Turkish fleet near Cypress is both picturesque and full of action. This scene is rendered more attractive for the educated eye by reason of the fact that the Venetian authorities loaned for the occasion galleys of the time now held guardedly as valuable relics of the early part of the fifteenth century. It will be noted in the pictures showing the engagement that a large Turkish vessel, dismasted, but still pouring shot on the Venetian fleet, is blown up. It will be remembered that in the Shakesperian story a great storm scattered the Turkish ships, many of them being sunk and others disabled. The showing of the disabled vessel in question was to conform as closely as possible to the original narrative, and this observance of history deserves due commendation.

Scene from "Othello" (Kleine).

Scene from "Othello" (Kleine).

Lindenwald in Pictures

Palatial Home for Walter E. Hering Affords Settings for Lubin Drama.

When a man of wealth with an estate of 200 acres and a palatial mansion with everything that money can afford places his entire house and its sumptuous grounds at the disposal of a motion picture company, and then with attractive wife, prominent socially, insists upon entertaining his guests of the day, the occasion is of more than passing moment.

Walter E. Hering, the Philadelphia business man last week gave an entire day and personally entertained Joseph W. Smiley's Company from the Lubin studios, at "Lindenwald," his magnificent country seat on Old York Road, and there was nothing for the comfort or use of the Lubin players which the millionaire manufacturer had neglected.

Joe Smiley and Company Doing "Water Stuff."

Director Smiley is producing a spectacular melodrama, "The Spy's Fate," a feature photoplay, based upon the causes which led up to the present crisis in Mexico. William H. Lippert, the author of the script, had called for the exterior of a sumptuous estate. In the play are magnificent scenes of splendor, the ball room of a millionaire's home, a beautiful conservatory with flowers and fountains playing, where exquisitely gowned women, promenaded at a function in honor of the American Ambassador.

In the making of the picture which the author drew, Director Smiley thought of the palatial home of his friend, Mr. Hering, and at the request of the director, the home of the society man was turned over to the Lubin players. Even the delicately furnished apartments of Mrs. Hering were placed at the disposal of the actresses by the hostess and there the players donned their ball room gowns.

In all more than a score of scenes were taken at "Lindenwald," and at the conclusion of the days work, Mr. and Mrs. Hering completed their entertainment by serving luncheon to their guests and then conducting them to every nook and corner of the estate on a tour of inspection that the Lubin players will not quickly forget.

In the making of "The Spy's Fate" Director Smiley has used nearly 100 players. There are nine principals in the cast of this multiple feature and how the tank was filled in which the foreign spy imprisons the American Ambassador, attempting to drown him, and the entire company of Lubin players is shown in the accompanying photograph.

"Heart Beats"

Senior L. Lombardi Has the Leading Role in New Features Ideal Offering from Charles Darlington's Melodrama, "A Useless Crime."

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PERHAPS among Italian actors known to screen patrons in America, L. Lombardi has the most enthusiastic following. In this three-act picture, "Heart Beats," from an old time melodrama by Charles Darlington, "A Useless Crime," he has the part of a butler who has promised his dying mistress that he will look out for her son. His faith, unfaithful, keeps him falsely true to this promise even to the attempted murder of his master, the baron, father of the boy, and the destruction by fire of the ancestral dwelling. It is not a wholly convincing character, but it furnishes a well-spun yarn, full of melodramatic action and makes an entertaining picture without special artistic pretensions, but calculated to hold the attention. It gives the actor no real chance for art.

Scene from "Heart Beats" (Features Ideal).

The action of the story begins when this butler finds, looking over the shoulder of his master, that a will has left all of his fortune to a new wife, thus disinheriting the son whom he had promised to protect. The boy is about six years old and naturally needs an ally if he is to have the place in society that his coming rank demands. It has been shown in earlier scenes that the baron's second wife has married at the pleas and threats of her avericious father rather than at the dictates of her own heart. She had another preference, a poor man; but refused him to take the more brilliant match. Later, this other man sends to her a letter asking for an interview at midnight and the butler intercepts it long enough to steam the envelope, open and learn its contents. Then he warns the baron who, under pretence of a journey, lies secretly in wait for the lover to appear. The butler, too, is waiting in the trees and suddenly throwing a cloak over his master's head, strangles him and throws him into a swiftly running mill stream. He is not drowned, for some peasants drag him to shore further down and care for him until, several months later, he has recovered.

The lover, who has heard the struggle, making his way out finds the baron's pistol and puts it in his pocket. The butler has now destroyed the will, but knows nothing of the codicil and the step-mother is still sole heiress. The police arrest her on suspicion of murder and her lover, having the pistol, accuses himself of the crime to shield her. The baron, who has kept the fact of his rescue secret, comes back and lives unknown in a never-used part of the manor house to watch what comes of the situation. The butler, who has not succeeded in safe-guarding the interests of his little protege, finds a man, the exact likeness of the "dead" baron, burglarizing the house and compels him to act the part so that a new will can be executed and witnessed. This dummy fools both the wife and the lawyer and is about to make a great "get away" with all the negotiable papers he can lay his hands on when the real baron appears in the room. There is a struggle in which the building is set on fire. The false baron is killed and the real one escapes with his son.

The eye finds it pleasant to watch all this and the attention is interested waiting to see how it is going to turn out, although the mind is not at all willing to accept it as a picture in which real things of humanity or of life's fates are put on view. The scenes and backgrounds have an atmosphere that suggests a world filled with pleasant or at least acceptable fates. The acting is good, although the role of the leading player gives him no real chance to put his art to the test. The photography is clear.

A School Film Exchange

Wisconsin University Supplies Films for Schools of That State.

THE University of Wisconsin has gone into the film exchange business. Under the charge of W. H. Dudley, the Department of Visual Instruction of the Extension Division is now prepared to supply the schools of the state with motion picture films and lantern slides of an educational character, free of charge.

A survey of the state of Wisconsin disclosed the fact that while 225 schools are equipped with stereopticons, there are on an average only fifty slides to each machine. Fifteen of the schools are equipped with motion picture projectors.

To supply the need of a cheap method of securing new films and slides the Department of Visual Instruction has secured 50 reels of film and prepared 1,500 lantern slides. The slides are made up into sets of 85, accompanied by a lecture, and are sent around the state on circuits from one school to another. To those schools having motion picture projectors a reel of film is also sent.

The service is weekly. The slides remain at a school from two to three days in order that the children may be prepared for the pictures they are to see.

The only cost to the school is that of sending the set on to the next school in the circuit. The routing of the sets has been planned so that the service in any case should not cost more than 35 cents on each package, or about $12 a year. Arrangements for special service and for the supplying of films or slides on a particular subject have also been made.

The motion pictures are expected to prove valuable in interesting parents to come to the schools and so keep them in touch with the work that their children are doing.

SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO.

Elaborate plans are being carried out for the beautifying of the great Horticultural and Zoological Exposition, which will be permanently maintained at Eastlake, Los Angeles, Calif., by Wm. N. Selig, head of the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Selig has made arrangements with a prominent sculptor, who is building groups of elephants, and other groups showing lions, tigers, and other wild beasts in picturesque and artistic attitudes. Plans for an extensive horticultural building are being prepared and in every way the great Selig Jungle-Zoo will be one of the most remarkable places in the entire world.

Mr. Slig has ambitions to create for the American public a place of entertainment, and devised especially for educational purposes which will outrival the great establishment of Carl Hagenbeck, in Germany.

Various parts of the lands which are now enclosed by the high wall which Mr. Selig had built to keep out intruders and to keep the denizens of the jungle-zoo within bounds, are being converted into natural conditions such as prevail in various tropical countries. The wild animals find everything provided at the Selig Jungle-Zoo that they have been accustomed to in the past. When Mr. Selig invites the public to view his great Jungle-Zoo out at Los Angeles, they will view scenery and look upon jungle dwellers exactly as they exist in their habitat. It is expected that the work will be completed in time for Mr. Selig to entertain the public when the Panama Exposition opens next year.

"The Gilded Kidd"

A Bright Two-Reel Edison Comedy, Written by Mark Swan, and Directed by C. Jay Williams.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CAST.

Harry Kidd.....Arthur Housman
K. K. Kidd, the famous financier....Robert Brower
Elsie Lucas.....Elsie MacLeod
Tom Graham.....Edward Earle
The Bear Man.....William Fables
The Jailer.....Edward O'Connor
Bill Nabb, a prisoner.....Carlton King

A HIGHER form of comedy than its action might indicate, "The Gilded Kidd" does not lose its personal element, while directed against an impersonal institution, that farcical old structure we once revered and now regard as non-progressive, the law. There will be laughter at what is ludicrous in a situation on which the story is founded, but it will be laughter of those who have outgrown an antiquated and pompous institution, and who are superior to what is obviously defective in its assumptions. It assumes equity, but it is the greatest known exponent of inequity. Nothing makes the entire code more ridiculous than its unequal enforcement.

Scene from "The Gilded Kidd" (Edison).

The "Kidd" is simply an indulged young man, whose scrapes are paid for in cash by his multi-millionaire father to an extent that nothing he can do is regarded as a violation of law or even a personal offense. An illegal act of his is treated by the police as an amusing episode, while a tramp is sent to jail for six months because he did exactly the same thing. A party of club friends pronounce him immune, declare him to be above all law, and he offers to bet that he can achieve imprisonment within three days. This wager is taken up by his rival in love and the stakes are that the loser shall absent himself from the young lady's society for six months.

Scene from "The Gilded Kidd" (Edison).

The Kidd is far from being a brilliant schemer. He attacks the fabric of society in a very mild way, attempting only minor public offenses, but his victims refuse to punish him, preferring to settle with the old man or merely laugh at his antics, the vagaries of gilded youth. He commits one misdemeanor after another with perfect impunity, but even the officers laugh as soon as they recognize the Kidd. They have come to regard him as an amusing character. So he is, but what he does would nevertheless be punished if committed by a poor or friendless wretch. What is tragedy for them is comedy for the privileged Kidd, whose only claim to privilege is that of being the son of an enormously rich and indulgent father.

In despair, he goes to his father and asks him pitifully, "Won't you please buy me a prison?" He fakes suicide, but it is discovered that there is no poison in his bottle. He declares he has just killed a man, but he cannot produce the corpse. He arranges at the last moment to take the place of a prisoner who is to return in twenty-four hours, for whom he gives cash bail in addition to the personal security of his own corpse. The prisoner sends word, "I ain't never comin' back. Forward my mail to Canada." The Kidd's sweetheart visits the prison in company with others, including the rival, and a stupid jailer tells the girl that "Kidd" is in for breach of promise—the other prisoner's crime—under an assumed name. The rival walks off with the girl and the Kidd finds himself a prisoner in dead earnest.

The play is well cast straight through, and handled with skill. The performance of Arthur Houseman as the "Kidd" is that of a veritable star. The play, while written purely for entertainment, has a good stiff punch.

Hal Wilson

ONE of the well-known and popular motion picture actors of today is Hal Wilson, the character man and assistant director of the Eclair Film Company at its Western studio, Tucson, Ariz. Mr. Wilson numbers a period of thirty-five years as his theatrical experience, during which time he has played every character from that of Tom, the newsboy, in "The Chimes of London," to the leading character role in the famous rural play, "Way Down East." He has appeared in England and all through the Continent, in Africa, Australia, and has toured both South and North America from coast to coast. He claims as his birthplace the small town of Lowell, a few miles outside of London, England, and after many years of drudgery as a boy in the mills of that town he ran away with an itinerant circus, whose uncertain route finally left him stranded in the southern part of Australia. He was fortunate enough to secure a small stock engagement, and after gaining much valuable experience, joined a travelling organization of players who, with a repetoire of well-known productions, toured the continent and then went to South Africa. Mr. Wilson left the company to be featured in a vaudeville sketch, entitled "A Dark Night." In this production the veteran actor played seven different characters. His travels brought him to America just at the time the motion picture was becoming popular and after a short engagement with the Biograph Company he was secured as leading character man with the Vitagraph Company. He remained with this company for four years and because of his many characterizations became known as the Vitagraph "trade-mark." He was induced to leave the latter organization last summer and join the American-Eclair Company at the studio at Fort Lee, and when the Eclair people sent a number of players to their Western studio, Mr. Wilson was picked as assistant director and leading character man.

Porter and Ford Return Home

Famous Players Film Company's Noted Directors Return in Triumph from European Invasion.

ON Wednesday, Edwin S. Porter, technical director of the Famous Players Film Company, and Hugh Ford, the acknowledged master in the Broadway theaters of stage direction, and who has recently abandoned the legitimate stage and joined the producing staff of the Famous Players Film Company, returned from a four months' trip to Europe, where they succeeded in accomplishing photographic feats which never before have been even attempted.

Their first picture was "The Eternal City," in which Pauline Frederic will be starred, and the scenes which they secured in Rome will mark a new era in dramatic picturization.

For the first time in the history of motion pictures the two directors succeeded in filming the Vatican, and in fact every historical and beautiful spot in the Imperial City as a background for a drama. It is the first time that the authorities of Rome have given permission for the ancient city to be thus put upon the screen, and the importance of this achievement both from a commercial as well as from an artistic and historical standpoint cannot be overestimated. Messrs. Porter and Ford also succeeded in arranging to use thousands of the soldiery as well as hundreds of railway officials, government officials and, in fact, succeeded in immortalizing in its outdoor aspects with absolute detail every phase of Hall Caine's wonderful story. They found, however, in spite of general belief to the contrary, that it was impossible to obtain a studio of the magnitude necessary to properly reproduce the interior scenes as the Famous Players Film Co. productions demand that they should be done, and after searching not only Italy, but Paris and London as well, they come back to America, where the enormous studio of the Famous Players Film Company on West Twenty-sixth street, New York, could make production possible.

There was one point, however, as to foreign superiority, that the American directors agreed upon, and that was in the cheapness as well as intelligence of the supernumeraries. "The Italian extra people seemed to have far more appreciation of what the picture and scene meant and of what they were supposed to be expressing," said Mr. Porter, "while their rate of pay is so low that it is possible to use far greater numbers in making spectacular scenes than could be employed without bankrupting an American producer."

"At the Old Cross Roads"

To be Filmed by the Select Photoplay Producing Co.—Estha Williams in Leading Part.

Arthur C. Aiston has closed a contract with the Select Photoplay Producing Company, of New York City, and they have already commenced to film "At the Old Cross Roads," a play which enjoyed for fourteen seasons undisputed artistic and financial success, the tours extending in that period from coast to coast.

The story of the play is wonderfully adapted to film usage, abounding as it does in pathos, comedy and intense dramatic situations. The scenes are laid in the picturesque South, with its wealth of sunshine and its balmy air perfumed by myriads of fragrant flowers. The period being slavery days, brings scenes of times gone by, the beautiful octoroon, the old colored mammy and her numerous pickaninnies, the southern colonel, the hard-hearted plantation owner, and many other characters true to time and locality.

Estha Williams, who for eight consecutive seasons was seen as "Parepa" in "At the Old Cross Roads," has been specially engaged for the same part, and her connection with the picture play will increase its value materially, for she will be recognized as the popular original of the role from one end of the country to the other.

Frank Dear, the well-known director, who recently produced, among others, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," has been engaged by the Select Photo-Play Producing Company, and will have entire charge and supervision of the technical end of the filming of "At the Old Cross Roads."

KLEINE STILL WITH GENERAL FILM.

Contrary to any other rumor or report, George Kleine has not left the General Film Company. He is still one of the principal stockholders and will continue to make his usual Tuesday two-reel release through this company. The only change that has taken place is the Tuesday two-reel release for New York City will go through Mr. Kleine's New York branch office. The General Film Company will continue to supply their other branches throughout the country.

"The Painted World"

A Two-Reel Vitagraph Drama of Strife Between Humanity and Natural Law—Directed by Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CAST.

Eloise Murree.....Julia Swayne Gordon
Yvette Murree.....Anita Stewart
Maid.....Janice Cummings
Murree.....Harry Northrup
Manager.....R. A. Roberts

IT is a bold move on the part of Ralph Ince to put on such a play as enables us to appreciate the tragedies we see, for, notwithstanding their truth and strength, unintelligent men in the moving picture business vaguely imagine that "tragedy" is a little too heavy for the average mixed audience. That mixed audience is a misunderstood quantity. It likes variety, and tragedy that contains elements of vital importance to us, that affects our emotions and stirs what is fine in us, is as keenly enjoyed as any other form of drama, and common consent of mankind has determined it to be the highest and noblest dramatic form.

Scene from "The Painted World" (Vitagraph).

With its action entirely grouped around three characters, an actress, her daughter and her husband, "The Painted World" presents a vivid picture of what is described in its title and enforces by way of a punch that a child is the most sensitive of all living things to environment. Surroundings act upon it as the movements of a moving-picture company act upon the camera. Every early influence leaves its impress upon the keenly sensitive mind of a young child, often dominating later training but inherited traits as well.

Scene from "The Painted World" (Vitagraph).

This is all so perfectly in accord with the ideas of Luther Burbank that I take the liberty of quoting him: "Can we hope for normal, healthy, happy children if they are constantly in ugly environment? Are we not reasonably sure that these conditions will almost swamp a well-balanced normal heredity and utterly overthrow and destroy a weak though otherwise good one?" I might also quote Froebel: "As the beginning gives a bias to the whole after-development, so the early beginnings of education are of most importance."

Eloise Murree is a very natural type of woman. She is fond of all that caters to her vanity in the public acclaim, the private attention, the luxury of living that falls to her lot as a successful vaudeville star, one whose distinguishing attraction is that of a shapely figure, nicely supplemented by easy morals. She is a two-sided creature, with a maternal nature that is the more intense because of its limited gratification. Yvette, her only child, is not neglected, but she is affected by conditions that leave a deep and pernicious influence on her mind during the formative period of life. During tender years she obtains more than one glimpse of her mother's gay entertainments and her father's alcoholism.

The mother suddenly recalls that her little girl is without education and determines to make her a "lady" by sending her to private school through an attorney, who describes the actress as a wealthy woman of leisure engaged in constant travel. Yvette flourishes under favorable environment, while her mother flourishes in a profession where success may be attained without any appreciable amount of intellectuality. The father, meanwhile, sinks into a state of drunken decadence.

The child is a beautiful flower in her "teens" when she leaves the school and rejoins her mother. Her father chances to see the two together and visits their apartment with results that bring about poignant scenes in rapid succession. His brutal struggle with the mother mars her face for life, destroying one eye, and he succeeds in poisoning the mind of his own daughter with visions of the painted world until the girl is led to visit a theater where her mother exhibits her physical charms for "a thousand a week."

The young girl's mind reverts to earlier scenes, and she falls an easy victim to a manager introduced by her own father. She returns home intoxicated and not only declares her weariness of her mother's tyrrany of affection, but blames her parents, "What could be expected from a child of two such as you?" This bitter ingratitude and the hopelessness of the mother's struggle against natural law bring about the final tragedy. She has failed in her natural mission because she has lived "her own life," and she yields to insane impulse with a terrible ending for the careers of all three.

Miss Gordon carries off the honors with one of the finest pieces of work she has ever done, but Anita Stewart and Harry Northrup perform in masterly fashion. This strong trio carries the emotional play through difficult scenes to a consistent and impressive conclusion. Not the least interesting feature of "The Painted World" is the presentation of its characteristic scenes in an actual theater, that of the Vitagraph Company.

EVERYTHING COMES TO HIM WHO WAITS.

Toronto, 10th July, 1914.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: We are enclosing Money Order for $7.00, in payment of two copies weekly of your publication, commencing with issue dated 18th July. Please address (Mr.) W. C. Ball, 33 Howard Park Avenue, Toronto, and (Mr.) R. S. Tickner, 43 Parkway Avenue, Toronto.

We hope to have the opportunity some time to tell the story of how a certain portion of public opinion has changed towards us since the time—two and a half years ago—our application for a license was assailed from the pulpits and otherwise bitterly contested, until the present, when our advertisement is solicited for a publication in connection with one of the churches previously most opposed to us. We are pretty proud of this mark of confidence, and trust that our experience may be the source of some encouragement to those, who, with a high standard in view, have not at yet received the recognition their efforts deserved.

We have always subscribed (locally) to the Moving Picture World, and have derived great pleasure and instruction from its pages. Yours very truly,

R. S. TICKNER.

President Suburban Amusement Co.

THE I. S. P. CO. STARTS FALL RELEASES.

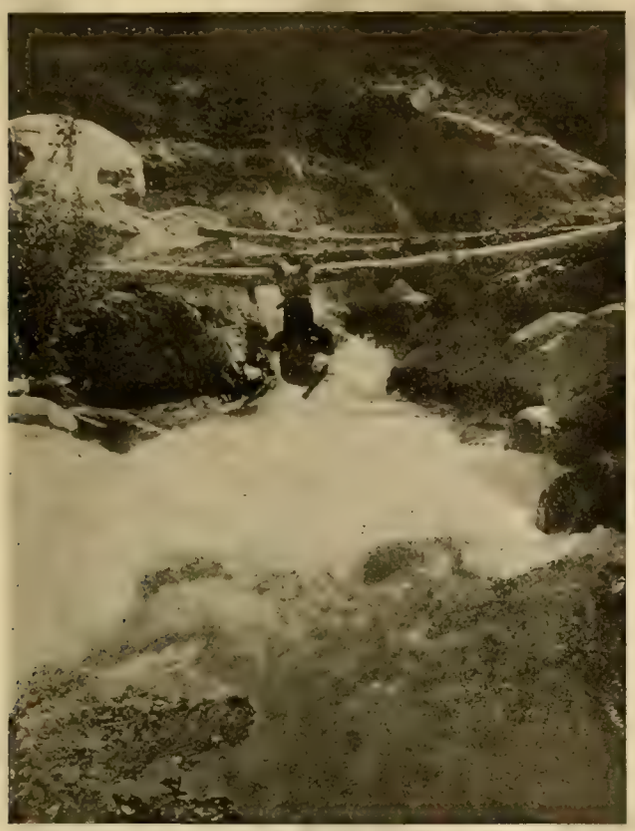
Starting on the 16th day of July with "Held for Ransom," a detective story in four parts, the I. S. P. Co. begins its release of several features that are on a par if not better than some of the past releases, such as "The Great Python Robbery" and "Detective Finn." The next picture is a story of deep heart interest and thrilling incidents that tell a story of a mother's love and self-sacrifice. It is in four parts and the title is "The Sacrifice of Pauline."

"The Trey O' Hearts"

New Universal Serial, from Louis Joseph Vance's Story, an Eventful Melodrama of Thrills That Are Bold and Unexpected.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

TWO installments of the new serial, "The Trey O' Hearts," have been shown, and if the whole production lives up to the promise of these first five reels it should make a very desirable offering. The date of the first release which, with the prologue, is three reels in length is August 11, and this is to be followed by a weekly installment (for fifteen weeks) of two reels each until the whole is complete. The author of the story, Louis Joseph Vance, has won a host of followers by his stirring novels, and this will, we feel safe in predicting it, be the best advertisement he could have. When spectators see his name in connection with the things that take place in this picture, they'll buy his books; they'll want all of them.



Scene from "The Trey O' Hearts" (Universal).

It gives a good old melodrama romance, but full of the new quality the times demand and with the fresh liveliness of action and color that only a born spinner of yarns can give. It invites the closest attention, and when the installment is done leaves in the spectator just the state of mind that the born exhibitor wants and strives to get in his patrons a state of mind that insures another call at the theater on the date set for the next installment, if not sooner. Of course, if we criticised the production as a work of art we could find faults, no doubt, but it never pretends to be anything but an exciting adventure story, full of suspense. This first installment gives entertainment in good measure. That's what it started out to do, and so it is a big success. The means it uses to accomplish this end are simply the action and reaction of hate and love. These things surround the hero (George Larkin) with, as it were, a triangle. There's the vindictive old man (Edward Sloman) as pure hate, one of his daughters as mixed hate and love, and the other daughter (Cleo Madison) as pure love. The three young people make themselves a trey o' hearts. Also when the old man wishes to promise destruction to the hero he contrives to send him a real three of hearts. For the hero, danger follows the three of hearts, but, so far, he has escaped. The picture has a wealth of minor characters, some friends of the hero, some adherents of the old man. The villain and the hero are both rich men.

The prologue shows these two girls and the hero as children, and makes plain why the old man hated and helped to destroy the hero's father. He passes on to the son his hatred. The first reel of the picture proper begins with the villain's attempt to crush and destroy this son, now grown up. We are not shown what this, his first, scheme is, but he contrives it so that the young man and one of his daughters will meet and fate makes them fall in love; so the first step brings nothing, yet leaves the way open for a new attack. The villain has a follower (Ray Hanford) who is everywhere and manages to overhear all important conversations, and, with this man's help, it looks as though the victim has little chance to escape.

The villain's second card (this kind of a tale suggests a game in which fate deals and the cards are played under the influence of dominions and powers while the spectator watches) is the other daughter. She is by nature like her evil father, and her he sends with a definite plan, this time to effect his death in the wilds of Canada. But fate again plays against the old man. The girl fails to kill the youth, gets in danger herself and is rescued by him. She falls in love with him and is soon ready to kill her sister from jealousy. We don't remember seeing anything like this in other pictures. Of course, it is merely going the other pictures one better; but it is noticeable as new and will count highly in favor of this picture's success. The staging, backgrounds and photography included are excellent. There is villainy personified in the vindictive old paralytic, and many of the characters stand out clearly. The young people do very well with their parts. Most spectators will probably count it worth while seeing this first installment, even though it leaves them still "in the air."

Good Subjects Announced

California Company to Do "Salomy Jane" and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

THE members of the dramatic cast of the California Motion Picture Corporation have drawn off their boots, unbucked their pistols, stacked their sawed off shotguns in a neglected corner and backed the antique stage coach under cover. The stage driver of yesterday has become the proud master of a circus ring and the capricious daughter of the mining camp the belle of a ramshackle outcropping to a large city. There has been a marvelous metamorphosis over night. Mere mustaches have given place to full grown beards and bandaged arms to peg legs. Dress, manners, ages, dispositions and physiognomies have undergone miraculous change. "Salomy Jane" has been completed and "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" has made its advent on the studio stage.

By a contract recently terminated with the Liebler Company the California Motion Picture Corporation has secured the exclusive rights to this latter copyright, which, through its pathos and humor, has delighted both as a novel and an offering on the legitimate stage. Alice Hagan Rice, who wrote the book and collaborated on the play, is now ranked, through strength of it, as one of the foremost of American writers. Her advice and criticisms have been an invaluable factor in the preparation of the motion picture scenario.

Beatriz Michelena, the delightfully beautiful prima donna, who played the role of Salomy Jane in the previous production, is appearing as Lovey Mary in "Mrs. Wiggs." House Peters is also one of the big characters in the new photoplay. Andrew Robson, erstwhile "Yuba Bill" in "Salomy Jane," is playing the part of Mr. Wiggs in a checkered career of renegade, circus ring master and repentant husband.

AD-FILM MAKERS TO ORGANIZE.

With a view to bettering trade conditions, eliminating the irresponsibles who are entering into the industrial motion picture field, and correcting other unwholesome conditions, a call for a meeting of industrial advertising film manufacturers to take up these matters has been issued.

This call is signed by H. J. Elkin, manager of the Industrial Department of Pathe Freres; Arthur N. Smallwood, of the Smallwood Film Corporation, and J. M. Torr, editor of Moving Picture Publicity. It asks the attendance of all manufacturers of industrial films at a meeting to be held August 15 at Hotel Shelbourne, Brighton Beach, New York City.

Matters of great importance to all those interested in bettering conditions will be discussed.

One of the topics to be considered will be the formation of a National Association of Ad-Film Manufacturers.

The attendance of all those interested is urgently requested.

Replies should be sent to Arthur N. Smallwood, 175 Fifth avenue, New York.

"The Scales of Justice"

The Famous Players' Five-Part Adaptation of Reinhart's Story Is Well Staged and Interestingly Presented.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE are many factors of excellence in "The Scales of Justice," the five-part adaptation by the Famous Players of the story of John Reinhart. Paul McAllister in the role of Robert Darrow, the district attorney who resigns his office rather than proceed with the trial of the woman he loves, is featured. Mr. McAllister's portrayal of the officer of the law who quits rather than prosecute a woman whom he believes innocent is convincing. The lawyer he gives us appears something of a dreamer; likewise a man whose course is determined by the dictates of an active conscience. If in the beginning we are not particularly attracted to him he wins us slowly but nevertheless surely. Jane Fearnley has the part of Edith Russell Dexter, whose unhappy marriage is quickly shown in the early part of the story, leaving the major portion for the working out of the main action. We see the gradually developing love between the woman and the lawyer and the uneven course it pursues. Miss Fearnley finely fits the role.

Scene from "The Scales of Justice" (Famous Players).

Mark Price, who interprets the part of Philip Russell, the stern old grandfather, gives a strong performance. The old man disinherits his granddaughter on her first marriage and makes his will in favor of Elliot, his business manager, and the son of an old friend. Later, through the influence of his charming great-granddaughter, Edith is restored to the graces of her grandfather. Owing to strong circumstantial evidence Edith is arrested for the old man's mysterious murder, and her troubles begin all over. Hal Clarendon, as Walter Elliot, the thieving business manager and would-be husband of Edith, is forceful. He is a lifelike villain.

Scene from "The Scales of Justice" (Famous Players).

There are two characters in this story that bulk big, even if one be the smallest in the large cast. These are Katherine Lee, the six-year-old who plays Alice Dexter, and Daniel Jarrett, who sustains the role of Jim Crump, the tramp who enters the scene at the wrong time for his own welfare. Little Miss Lee, who will be remembered as the baby mermaid in "Neptune's Daughter," wins all hearts, just as she wins the heart of her theretofore unrelenting old great-grandfather. By her naivete and graces she centers a large share of the interest about herself and holds it throughout. Daniel Jarrett adds materially to the strength of the story. His Jim Crump is a hardened old sinner, melted under the ministrations of a child. This sterling player of wide experience—he was a member of the old Sothern repertoire company—makes a distinct hit. Crump is the man who sees a crime committed and who is at the denouement the instrument of justice.

The picture, which is produced under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron, is finely staged. Mr. Heffron's mastery of the great throng listening to the installation speech of the district attorney is notable. So, too, is his handling of the tense scenes at the trial. The story is clearly told and holds all the way. It is remarkable more for steadily, consistently maintained interest than for dramatic splashes. The treatment of the tragedy is skillful, plainly surrounding the event with all the mystery that has attached to a contemporary event in real life, of which it will remind while in no particular resembling. With its good cast, good story, fine backgrounds and carefully planned interiors, "The Scales of Justice" will furnish excellent entertainment.

What Color Is Ham?

James Montgomery Flagg Says It Is Purple Under the Studio Lights—Actors Resemble Cold Storage Pie-eaters.

PROBABLY the best two-handed catch-as-catch-can illustrator in America is James Montgomery Flagg. Flagg already is artist, author, playwright, song writer, ballad maker, president of the Dutch Treat Club, genial citizen and general all-round hustler. But now he has put another notch on his gun by going into motion pictures. Flagg recently made a charcoal study of Miss Phillips for Our Mutual Girl serial. He told the Dutch Treaters all about it the other night.

"I've learned a lot from that stunt," he said. "I used to be able simultaneously to write a story with my left hand, illustrate it with my right, dramatize it with my left foot and set it to music with the toes on the right pedal extremity. Believe me or not, I found that when that chap was grinding out pictures of me while I worked I could speed up more than I had supposed any artist in or out of captivity could. There was a gentle stimulus in the steady crooning of the camera-handle. Next to the most difficult thing for the novice to do after keeping inside of the imaginary slice of pie that is formed by the range of the camera, is to eat what is brought in to you if you stay near the mercury lights. When you foolishly lift up the lid of a ham sandwich and see purple meat with sea-green borders of fat where you expected pink and white, it's enough to make you change your religion if you happen to have one and, with a low, gurgling moan, make a dash for good old daylight.

Artist Flagg Meets the Mutual Girl.

"And the make-up. Especially under the lights. Actors look like a bunch of people who have been in cold storage for three years and whose first meal on emerging had been huckleberry pie! There's a difference on the screen. There they look fairly human."

"Chasing a Million"

A Three-Part Novelty Burlesque by "Leading Players"—Its Second Title Is "Or Around the World in Eighty Days."

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS three-reel picture, made for the sake of laughter, has many excellent things in the way of comical situations and thrills that will prove diverting and amusing. There are bare places in its three reels; but this foolish, rough and tumble stuff seems to be a trump with audiences this hot weather and the offering will probably prove acceptable with the majority, as a whole, while it is sure that all will enjoy the truly funny things with which it is filled. It doesn't seem to be a cheaply put-together offering, nor is it a studio-made picture. There is plenty of outdoors in it, with ocean and dry land, rocky coast, jungle and desert. There are wild animals loose in it and one of its really fine scenes is a heavy thunder storm at sea—taken in a studio, but the real thing in the fun line for all that.

Scene from "Chasing a Million" (Leading Players).

It opens with a prologue in which we are introduced to the Rajah of Yeabo; his vizier, the Gink; and his priestess, Punkette. They are on a vacation from the Straight Settlements and are doing the delights of gay Paree, where they meet Piggy, the flower girl, and her two steadies, Nutty and Cremo. When the royal party departs things must have seemed slow and the grand announcement in the "Continental Lyre" of a great race for a million to the Island of Bunco, where the latest copy of the "Lyre" has been hidden, must have been welcome. The first to get this and return to Paree is to get the million (if it's there).

Piggy, Nutty and Cremo are late at the start; but make up for it by extra exertions which soon carry them way ahead of all other competitors. After earning prize money by throwing the bull in a real bull fight (it isn't hush money) Cremo gets to the ship first. Piggy missing it by a hair, follows in a rowboat and catches it at Port Said, at which port, too, Nutty, who has swum the seas, climbs aboard. From that point the rush across the desert is begun. Cremo, to pay for his good lunch at the start, is now selected for a meal by a crocodile, who chews him up but can't digest him. Cremo carries a pair of pliers with which he cuts his way out of the reptile's stomach and rejoins his two comrades in misery and with them enjoys many a sad experience with man eating cannibals and with pirates of the Strait Settlements, where, greatly to their surprise, they meet again their old friend the Rajah—"How people will meet!" So the adventure is carried on until they come to Bunco, only to find that an ape has already discovered the copy of "The Lyre" and has torn it. Yet there is enough left for each to have his portion, which after more troublous voyaging they bring back to gay Paree, only to find that the "Continental Lyre" has gone into bankruptcy and that there is no million for anyone.

BUILDING THEATER AT WATERLOO, IOWA.

The market place of J. H. Hoover, situated in West Fourth near Washington street, Waterloo, Ia., has been torn down for the purpose of building a theater. The picture house is now in course of construction. J. E. Bryant of Cedar Falls is the lessee of the new moving picture theater.

"The Rat"

Box Office Attraction Company Has Strong Two-Reel Offering in New Balboa Picture of Gangster Life.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ONE'S attention is caught at the opening of this picture by the characters introduced and the scenes in which we find them. It is a picture of gangsters is some city whose slums border immediately on the sandy beach, footmarked and littered by flotsam and jetsam with docks where a row-boat can hide and slatternly shanties where thieves, gangsters and wharf-rats can gather for mischief or lie concealed when the police are looking for culprits. There is noticed at once a convincing naturalness in these scenes as the haunts of just these characters whose doings also seem quite in keeping, and certainly provide a tale that holds attention from the first minute till the close.

The story is not melodrama after the regular pattern. It isn't a love story primarily and while it has villainy and heroism of a kind, they are not over exaggerated enough to be obviously unconvincing. The best things in the offering are the, what may be termed, by-products of the tale, incidents and bits of unexpected business that show an intimate and authoritative knowledge of the life and characters portrayed. Yet the story is planned to hold us in suspense and makes use of the melodramatic form to get the swing needed to carry us along. Roughly outlined it is this: A pretty slum worker passing in her car saves the "Rat," a gangster, from the roughs of another gang. Her father is the district attorney and has a bit of evidence that will harm another gang. This collection of pretty roughs—as pretty, some of them, as one could wish—abducts her to force her father to give up this letter. The "Rat" hears of it and with the help of his comrades is the means of saving her.

There is good individuality in the different characters as the players draw them and, of these, one of the most vivid is the man with a gash across his face. The photography is excellent.

"The Eagle's Refuge"

Warner's Features Offer a Milano Three-Part Picture Giving a Winter Story in Switzerland—It Has Wonderful Photography.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE Alps in winter are magnificent as a background for a story. Even photographed as perfectly as in this offering, they will hardly take the place of good action; but when, as here, they set forth a story that of itself holds attention, they heighten the value of the offering greatly. This picture plot is not new at all, but the action which it keeps concrete is almost wholly entertaining and there strung on it incidents that are often startlingly fresh and sensational. Its climax is an avalanche which the mountain hurls down upon the "eagle's refuge," a cabin in which the heroine's burglar lover, whom she thinks a marquis, is engulfed. There is a telephone in the cabin and the imprisoned man calls her up where she is staying at one of the great San Moritz hotels. She and her true lover go to the rescue, but the entombed victim on the upper mountain slope has overturned his oil lamp and set the cabin on fire. The fumes of burning stifle him and they find him dead.

The story will prove entertaining, but the best thing about the picture is the fact that its action carries along through scenes of the every-day sports of winter merrymakers in Alpine places. It is full of the holliday spirit, with skating, sleighing, ski-ing and the like, till one in this sultry summer weather forgets all about the heat. It opens at one of the big hotels and introduces an engaged couple, then the "marquis" comes and pays attention to the girl who, for a time, is carried away with the honor of being courted by a nobleman. Then jewels begin to be missed and a somewhat unconvincing detective is called. They find the right man, but his escape is astonishingly unconventional, yet quite believable. All the snow pictures are photographed and toned in a way that brings out the beauty of the distant hills wrapped in their white and blue silence and doesn't neglect the charms of the foreground with golden light slanting across white snow and laying blue shadows from the trees. It provides as a whole very good entertainment.

SIEGEL RETIRES FROM POEM-O-GRAPH COMPANY.

A. E. Siegel, for some time connected with the Poem-o-Graph Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, announces that he has severed his connections with that concern, in which he held a half interest, and will enjoy a much needed rest, continuing his headquarters at 516 Columbia Building, Cleveland. N. P. Fleischer has purchased the interest of Mr. Siegel and will locate in Cleveland nd take up all matters of the company not completed by Mr. Siegel.

Ince and Sennett Coming East

Their Visit May Mean the Two Men Are to Manufacture for Themselves—and It May Not.

THE two chief directors of the New York Motion Picture Company—Thomas H. Ince, director general of the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino brands, and Mack Sennett, creator and director of Keystone comedies—left Los Angeles early in the week, and will arrive in New York Monday, July 27. The departure of Messrs. Ince and Sennett was unexpected, and the purpose of their sudden coming to the metropolis has given rise to a variety of rumors.

Tom Ince.

One report had it that there had been a disagreement between Ince and Sennett and their employers and that the directors were preparing to cut loose and go on producing independently. This rumor was scouted on Tuesday by a film man who is looking after the interests of the directors in the East, and who requested that his name be kept out of the story.

"The facts in the matter are simply these," said this man. "Mr. Ince and Mr. Sennett have been working constantly for the past three years in California. During all this time their whole attention has been devoted to the development and perfection of the pictures they have had in charge. The result has been that they have made a worldwide reputation for the brands they have directed and for the company making them. They feel now, however, that the time has come for them to give close attention to their personal affairs, and with that end in view they are coming to New York to seek a readjustment of their arrangements with their employers. There has been no disagreement of any kind, and only the kindliest feeling exists between the parties. It is a case of simple business, and if the new arrangements prove satisfactory the two men will continue to turn out the favorite brands for their present employers."

Mack Sennett.

Thomas H. Ince stands among the leaders of motion picture directors. He comes of an old theatrical family, his father having been a well known legitimate performer. Mr. Ince had been an actor for twenty years before entering the picture field. "Tom" Ince, as he is familiarly known in the trade, became actively engaged in motion picture work in 1911, having adopted the silent drama against the advice of his friends. He was successful from the start. He is a man of forceful character as was shown by his action when, after a steady run of three weeks' bad weather this spring, he moved the entire plant of the Kay-Bee, Domino and Broncho brands in one night from Santa Yenz Canyon, near Santa Monica, to Edendale, a distance of twenty miles, and resumed work at the latter place the next morning. He is a close student of his profession, a quiet and highly ingenious worker, and is a master in handling big productions.

As a comedy creator Mack Sennett is a genius. The Keystone comedies, which he originated and has largely directed, are popular in all parts of the world. Mr. Sennett was for many years a well known comedian on the legitimate stage. He became a motion picture comedian in 1909, doing his first work before the camera with the Biograph Company. His success as a director was meteoric, and in 1912 he had gained such a reputation that the New York Motion Picture Company offered him flattering inducements to join them and create a new comedy. Mr. Sennett accepted, and the result was the Keystone—not simply a new brand, but a brand new style of comic presentation. Mr. Sennett had made the laugh a study and had carefully analyzed its causes. About the time he created the Keystone he had reduced laugh provoking to an exact science, and had evolved certain set formulas and a given number of set situations that were absolutely sure to bring "the laugh." Mr. Sennett has the unique distinction of being the only director who works without a scenario.

Arthur Leslie

IT is not generally known that Arthur Leslie, chairman of the Press Committee of the Screen Club, is a grandson of Frank Leslie, of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Weekly (now Leslie's Weekly), whose name was a household word for many decades, as Frank Leslie was the first publisher to start a successful illustrated paper in this country. Arthur Leslie's mother, Ada Vrooman Leslie, was well known as a literary woman and was editor-in-chief of seven magazines conducted and owned by his father, Alfred Leslie.

Arthur Leslie.

While Arthur comes of magazine stock, he early chose newspaper work for his life's career. Graduating from Trinity Chapel Parochial School in West 25th street, he started with the old Associated Press and worked on nearly all the New York papers as reporter or desk man. In 1900 he started the Leslie Newspaper Syndicate, which owned its own mechanical plant, and supplied over two hundred newspapers with syndicate matter.

Leslie claims to be the first one to have introduced newspaper halftones, the advent of which marked a new era in newspaper illustration. By extensive traveling and attending newspaper conventions he cultivated a wide acquaintance among editors and publishers throughout the country, which led to the publication of a book, entitled "2,001 Newspapermen I Know."

Two years ago this fall he started the first Motion Picture Newspaper Syndicate throughout the country, which, to quote from a letter to him from John Bunny, "put the motion picture on the newspaper map," as the press had hitherto failed to give the motion picture anything approximating equal recognition with the drama in its columns. Mr. Leslie adopted the policy of never charging a photoplayer for newspaper notices, which course was so appreciated by the profession that when he ran for the Board of Governors of the Screen Club he received the highest number of votes ever cast in the history of the club for a candidate running against other candidates. He still has another year to serve. Mr. Leslie, besides running his newspaper syndicate, is the first one to place on the market a complete line of stamps bearing the portraits of all the well-known players, both licensed and independent. He secured their written permission, giving him exclusive rights to do so several months ago. Blessed with the saving grace of humor, when the writer asked him how he would sum up his achievements he replied, "Just say that I am fair, fat and forty."

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

SUBMARINE KINEMATOGRAPHY.

MUCH prominence is being given in the press to the developments in submarine kinematography, to readers of this paper it must seem very belated now; the Educator gave the same extensive notices of those things now appearing in papers some months ago. It may be wise, however, to draw additional attention to the fact that like all other branches of moving picture work, the trend is always progressive, for nothing in the line of the moving picture is anything else than increasingly educational. Every phase of this work only tends to increase the prestige of Jules Verne, who, without doubt, prophesied to a degree of which he had not the slightest idea of fulfillment. It must of course be recorded that so far as "A Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" is concerned, it is the moving picture that has made possible the submarine development. The Messrs. Williamson of Norfolk, Va., who have been the pioneers of this work, are to be commended for what they have already accomplished, as well as for what they will be able to do in a much larger measure in the future; they will no doubt be further helped by many suggestions which are sure to come from scientific men in each branch of successful kinematography.

The first pictures taken are in the region of the Bahama Islands, where it is well known that the richest and most varied forms of marine life, the most variegated coral reefs and the clearest water, form a combination favorable to most perfect photography. In the deep recesses of coral caverns it was not at all unusual to secure perfectly exposed negatives at 1-75th of second, with a lens opening of f6.3. These submarine experimenters tell us that the beauties of the subaqueous forests are amazingly entrancing. The wonderful panorama offered by the lacelike lengths of coral reef, with their thousands of most brilliantly hued tropical fishes, far surpass anything of the kind on the earth above the waters. There is no doubt that no class of educational pictures will be more welcome than these, and the Educator is leading in impatient interest to see the first film enlarged upon the screen.

A SHARK HUNT.

Stories are not uncommon of fights with man eating sharks, but the actual description of one at close range is very uncommon, while the picture of one has of course never been taken; such a thing was in the realm of impossibilities.

Kinematography has, however, made nearly all things possible along such lines, and one of the first uses of submarine moving picture photography was to take a picture of this extraordinary event. A native diver was found willing to engage in mortal combat with one of these kings of the deep, and clear pictures were taken showing him, as with a strong, clean stroke with a sharp knife, he succeeded in disemboweling the fish, thus landing a death blow in the monster's vitals. Other interesting pictures of the ocean's depths were taken which will be seen in course of time, so that pictures of deep sea life will be one of the forthcoming greatest additions to the educational films.

THE OBJECT IN VIEW.

Those who have charge of a moving picture business in any capacity have necessarily some definite object in view; of course, in the majority of instances it is financial—the old slogan, "not in business for fun," will fit here as well as anywhere else. That money making is not always the object is, of course, possible with moving pictures as with scores of other things; there are those with other objects in view, so long as expenses are paid. There are springing up a number of associations whose slogan is "Betterment and Not Money," the idea being to so use the pictures that all profits shall go to the better uses or applications of the pictures. Both Philadelphia and New York have now their interchurch associations for the purpose of getting all the "church good" out of the pictures they possibly can. From the beginning the churches have wanted the pictures, and although "getting together" has been a prolonged matter there seems to be a growing desire on the part of the makers to meet the wishes and requirements of the churches as never before.

"Commercializing recreations" is another object in view by another society in Chicago. Finding too many organizations for the purpose of solving the "uplift" problem, they are now going to try the pictures because it appears that they may be able in the use of them to combine many of the ideas of the varied and divided societies at present working for similar results, yet at divers points. The foundation thought which has now brought the moving picture to this great work is the discovery that they "keep families together" in a way that has never been experienced before. Previous amusements were always of such a nature that children could not understand those to which their elders went, and the varied moral nature of the attractions were such that going together was out of the question. Good clean picture shows have removed all these disabilities, and the unifying of family life has been one of the biggest successes of the pictures, as well as one of the greatest benefits to the great middle class society. It is undoubtedly along these lines that the great and most troublesome Sunday problem will be solved.

The Sunday question is the most annoying one in the business today. In every community there are "wars and rumors of wars" between the exhibitors and their supporters, and their opponents, the law officers, and those whose code of morals is offended. The growth of these "betterment" organizations will finally settle this question. The chief difficulty will be found in the fact that when the question is settled it will be upon the basis of serving the people with the pictures without more than paying returns. Just how far this will be received by those who are out for money remains to be proved.

NOW AND THEN.

If any one who is familiar with the growth of moving pictures exhibitions has any doubt as to the decided advance along lines at once refined and cultured he has only to visit the Strand Theater in New York. In every way there is here evidence of the highest possible attainment in moving picture exhibiting. The building, the ushers, the conveniences of seating and seeing, the orchestra, the lighting of the house, the projection of the pictures and the selection of the program are absolutely perfect, according to the highest ideals of today. In such a place the thought of the older days, together with the talk of censorship, causes one to shudder, as with that hatred of discord where there is perfect harmony. The program the writer has just seen was a most evenly balanced one of drama, comedy, topical and scientific.

Interspersed with songs of the highest character, sung by artists, the contrast between the vulgar rag-time and colored song slides of but a short time ago was commendable to the utmost degree, and in a way to lead us to hope that the latter are now things of the past, for no one who visits the Strand will ever wish for the return of those "good old days." It must be especially noticed here that the introduction of educational pictures in such a program is a splendid test. They were well received, and it certainly goes to prove that the public taste has also been lifted to that degree where it was ardently hoped it would be.

Alice Joyce Series Popular

Each Picture Tells a Complete Story—Many Good Numbers Scheduled for Release.

That the Alice Joyce Series has hit the bull's-eye of popular favor is apparent from the demand for the subjects embraced in the series, wherever motion pictures are shown.

An ordinary Alice Joyce production has invariably proved to be the strongest kind of an attraction. Alice Joyce in a series of features, however, is proving a tremendous drawing card and is an indication of the great interest taken in this star by the photoplay public.

Aside from Miss Joyce's popularity, the series is a success because it embodies a new idea in series stories. It is a frequent cause for complaint that the average serial story leaves the motion picture patrons high and dry—that the observers are compelled to wait a considerable period to ascertain the outcome of an exciting climax. This was taken into consideration and every one of the features is complete.

The stories of this series are written by prominent authors with the result that these features are not merely a succession of incidents strung together, but strong American dramas of more than ordinary interest.

Among the features which are to be released are "The Vampire's Trail," said to be the strongest drama Kalem has produced since its famous "The Vampire"; "The Old Army Coat," which was filmed in Jacksonville during the recent Confederate Veterans' Reunion; "The Brand," a strong sociological drama; "The Mystery of the Sleeping Death," an unusual story which deals with reincarnation, and "The Viper."

The most prominent Kalem stars appear in the casts supporting Miss Joyce. Some of these players are Alice Hollister, Tom Moore, Marguerite Courtot, Harry Millarde, Jere Austin, Henry Hallam, Helen Lindroth, and others. "The Vampire's Trail" is the next feature of the series scheduled for release. It will be issued Monday, August 3.

American Players Celebrate

Hold a Regular Jollification on July 4 Near the Lakes of Killarney.

"Hurrah for Old Glory." That is indeed a stirring cry when you hear it from Americans in the mountains of Ireland. The Sid Olcott International Feature Film Players have their studio this season on the main road from Killarney to the famous Gap of Dunloe and the Lakes of Killarney. In front of the studio hangs a big American flag, and since about every party of tourists who pass has at least one American, that cry rings out many times a day. Almost every party of the hundreds who come this way each day stop and spend hours with the company, watching Mr. Olcott direct his players. They go away fast friends of all and enthusiastic boosters for the gentlemanly director.

There was quite a discussion, friendly, of course, in the Olcott camp as to just how the Fourth of July should be celebrated. This season about half of the company are English and there are a number of Irish members. But the company have declared themselves the "Olcott Happy Family," and so they decided to have a British-American celebration. Consequently, the exercises were closed with two of the players made up to represent John Bull and Uncle Sam shaking hands.

It happened that the weather was quite uncertain, and that gave more time for the exercises, since with the rain as persistent as it has been, all have been anxious to get out and work in every bit of sunlight which has peeped through the hurrying clouds. The accompanying photo, which shows Uncle Sam and John Bull and the company, was taken just after the exercises in the studio. It was taken in a shower and so is not as clear as it would have been otherwise.

Despite the weather obstacles, the willingness of the company and Mr. Olcott's thorough knowledge of the country combined with his tremendous popularity here, owing to his past five or six visits, will surely give him the greatest pictures of his career this summer. F. C. GUNNING.

Beaufort, County Kerry.

Sidney Olcott and His Company of Players Celebrating July 4 in Ireland.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

"Hold-Up Unionism" Condemned.

IN a recent article in the Journal of Political Economy Professor Robert F. Hoxie, of the University of Chicago, writes as follows upon what has come to be known as "hold-up" unionism.

"This variety is usually to be found in large industrial centers. In outward appearance it is conservative; it professes a belief in harmony between employer and employe. It claims to respect the force of contract and professes regard for law and order. In reality, it has no abiding principles. It is boss ridden and corrupt, the membership for the most part being content to follow blindly the instructions of leaders so long as they 'deliver the goods.' On the whole, its methods are a mixture of open bargaining, coupled with secret bribery and violence."

Recently, in this city, E. A. Franke, owner of the California Theater, on 26th street and Trumbull avenue, had his theater wrecked, at a loss of $1,000, because, it is alleged, he refused a demand made by Jack Miller, business agent of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, Local No. 2. The trouble arose over an operator who was sent out by the International and was claimed to be unable to do the work.

The Chicago Tribune adds its great weight to the removal of the evils of "hold-up unionism" in the appended editorial:

Hold-up unionism, or boss unionism, is now in the public eye in Chicago. Punishing the grafters in the labor movement may frighten a few other scoundrels from making bribery and blackmail a part of the business agent's career. A radical cure for this threatening situation, however, can only be accomplished by the workers themselves waking out of their present indifference and scrutinizing their leaders before they elect them, instead of following blindly men without any sense of honesty but with a faculty for playing politics, which is the case at present.

As the Tribune repeatedely has urged, the main internal problem of unionism, and the evil which reacts most hurtfully upon the cause of organized labor, is the same as the problem and the evil of American politics, the predatory boss. Just as states and cities are misrepresented through the control of the machinery of politics and government by professionals, so are unions. Why, then, may not the same process of reform which has removed the worst evils of practical politics and is going to better conditions year by year, be adapted to the reform of union government? The plug ugly and ballot box stuffer once ruled elections in many districts. He has gone. The polls are now safe. At this time we are simplifying the machinery of party control and working for a more direct influence of the electorate upon officials. Why cannot some analogous means be adopted applicable to all unions by which the peaceful intelligent member may express his will without danger from blackmailers, bullies, or fanatics?

Wild Cat Motion Picture Stock.

Not all men believe the fairy tales of moving picture stock companies at the present time. Yet many bite. It was only the other day that a friend asked me about certain stock that was being sold, the issue being made by the owners of a number of theaters, already built and in operation for some time. A friend of his, a chauffeur, had bought some of it. When that chauffeur sees his money again he will have few hairs on his head.

John M. Oskison, of Chicago, in order to educate his fellows on the mysteries of motion picture stock, recently wrote the following letter to the Chicago News:

Stock for sale in motion picture combinations is the new feature the "movies" have prepared for the public.

Lately Wall street has brought together various motion picture producing and film leasing companies; another combination has been formed in the West, and a great $25,000,000 corporation is talked of. And we who patronize the "movies" are being asked to subscribe for stock in these corporations.

And what wonders of moneymaking the motion picture pioneers have accomplished—if you believe all the stories told by the sellers of stock! Says one promoter:

"Probably no other form of enterprise—not even petroleum or steel—has brought sudden wealth to so many men. Each year now sees a new crop of motion picture millionaires. Most of them, especially the pioneers, began with little or nothing."

Do you wonder why the public is being "let in on the good thing" by way of Wall street? Well, so do I, and I have found out that the business has got to the point where the competition between producers and leasors of films is so fierce that many of the companies must get together, raise more capital, enlarge their markets—or fail. And it is stock in these combinations which is being offered to you and me.

Motion picture people say that the cost of producing pictures in this country is very much higher than in Europe—so high that a successful picture just about pays for its cost. Profit comes from selling the right to reproduce the films abroad.

Now, abroad the film makers are not asleep; they naturally want to cover their own field—and as they can make pictures cheaper than American producers (because all labor costs are much lower) their competition will grow more and more severe. They will come to America with their pictures and make the American producer's road harder.

No, I do not anticipate that all buyers of stock in the motion picture corporations will be enrolled among the millionaires of the future—not because of such purchases, at any rate.

A Wild and Woolly Circular from San Francisco.

George Kleine's branch manager in San Francisco has furnished circulars from that city which shows to what depths unclean and unfair competition has sunk among some exhibitors there.

One of the circulars before me is printed in English and Italian. At the bottom is printed "New Theater," and, opposite, the name, "Michaels," evidently the owner of the house and the man responsible for the outrageous misrepresentations in the circular under scrutiny. The circular is headed "Wild Men! Cannibals!" and following are excerpts from the reading matter:

People who eat one another, and declare that human flesh is sweeter and of better flavor. The shilucks in South Africa are a war-like race of African negroes who live in huts of earth and straw. Leopards, hippopotami, wild herds of elephants, lions, giraffes, monkeys and other animals are shown, as well as cannibals, in a motion picture feature in five parts, entitled "Sport and Travel in South Africa." These pictures will be shown to-day at the "New Theater," Broadway street, near Stockton. They were shown at the Gaiety for 10 and 20 cents, we will show it for 5 cents.

Then there will be another r-reel feature called "The Latent Spark," and one of our Keystone comedies and one of our famous Keystone comedies.

We wish to explain that the Keystone, advertised on two Sundays by an inferior house, belongs to a grade known as "junk." They are about 9 or 10 months old, full of "rain" or scratches, dirt, and enough to blind the best pair of eyes on earth.

We don't like to say this, but it "gets our goat" to see fakes, attempts to impose on the public, and we deem it our duty, unpleasant though it is, to notify the public and discourage these attempts. We, of course, hope this practice will be discontinued, as it does them more harm than us. Still a junk reel of ancient vintage is not a pleasant thing to behold and injures the business in general.

We hope this offense will not be repeated; our advice is, give a good, wholesome show, and above all steer clear of "junk" reels, if the other fellow has Keystones let him have them; not all Keystones are good, in fact some are pretty punk, they can't all be good. If you can't show Keystones, show something else and leave the other fellow alone.

Can members of the League in San Francisco do something to get this man "Michaels" and his competitors to work along sane lines of business?

Municipal Moving Pictures in St. Louis.

Recent dispatches from St. Louis show the great success attending the presentation of free moving pictures to dwellers in the ghetto of that city. Park Commissioner Dwight F. Davis converted Columbus Square, a sunken city block, into a melting pot on Saturday, July 18.

Ten thousand children of Russian, Italian, Greek, German, Irish and other nationalities, with their parents, attended, according to reports. Scenes of St. Louis, the New York zoo and of American industries were shown on the screen.

A Catholic church, a Jewish synagogue, a police station and a public school fronting Columbus Square were used for the park commissioner's experiment. Four blocks away a free municipal band concert competed with the moving picture show for the popularity prize, but only 2,000 attended the concert.

The following morning the park commissioner began to answer scores of inquiries from other cities as to the success of the municipal moving picture shows. The presentations, with new reels, will be given every night during the summer in various sections of the city.

Chicago newspapers have taken up the plan, and similar exhibitions may soon be seen here.

Chicago Film Brevities.

John Pribyl, personal representative of William N. Selig, recently underwent an operation for gall stones at the Michael Reese Hospital, this city. He is recovering slowly but surely, and his numerous friends await his return to active duties with hearty interest.

* * *

"One Wonderful Night," Essanay's famous four-reel production, adapted from Louis Tracy's story in the Ladies' World Magazine, with Francis X. Bushman in the leading role, opened at the Studebaker Theater on Monday, July 20, for a run.

* * *

Victor Eubank has been appointed manager of Essanay's publicity department in the place of Don Meaney, resigned. Mr. Eubank has been on the Associated Press, this city, for some time past and has worked in various capacities during the last ten years on the Tribune, Record-Herald and the Hearst papers.

* * *

"The Spoilers" was presented at Dayton throughout convention week by F. O. Nielsen, who owns the rights to Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois (outside of Cook County). The pictures were shown at the Victoria Theater, the leading legitimate house, to overflowing audiences, at 25 cents admission. The projection was admirable, and the pictures were the talk of the town. Frank Cook was Mr. Nielsen's representative, and Monty Gloss was at the projecting machine. It was an education in moving picture projection for exhibitors of Dayton to view "The Spoilers," as presented. A return date has already been arranged in the same theatre, in the fall.

* * *

Don Meaney, formerly head of Essanay's publicity department, has accepted the position of advertising and sales manager for the Photoplay Productions Co., with headquarters in the Candler Building, New York City. Mr. Meaney has been with Essanay for the past two years. He will leave for New York about August 5.

* * *

Frank Tichenor, general manager of the Photoplay Productions Co., of New York City, paid a visit to the city on Wednesday, July 15, and remained over until July 20, when he returned to New York.

* * *

Ed. M. Henle, owner of the Palace Theater, Muscatine, Ia., paid us a visit on Tuesday, July 14. He reported very encouraging business at the Palace, a new house, which was opened early in February last. The Palace seats 800 people and cost $45,000, including the value of the lot. Admissions of 5 and 10 cents are charged for programs of three and four reels, the higher price being charged for feature programs. A description of the Palace, with illustrations, will appear in a later issue of the World.

* * *

F. O. Nielsen, owner of the Parkway, North Clark street and Diversey Boulevard, informs me that the Snakeville comedy, "The New Waitress," by Essanay, raised such a volume of laughter in his house, Saturday, July 18, that pedestrians passing the doors on Clark street formed a large crowd in their desire to learn the cause of the merriment. The patrons of the Parkway are staid, substantial people who usually smile at a comedy, but in this case they broke all records, according to Mr. Nielsen.

* * *

"John Barleycorn," adapted from Jack London's story of that name, is now running at Orchestra Hall, having opened Monday, July 13. The attendance has grown gradually from the opening day, and wide interest is taken in the presentations.

* * *

Tacoma, Wash., it appears, has outdone every other city in the severity of its censorship ordinance. The depiction of crime on the screen or on the stage, henceforth, will be severely punished, thirty days in jail or $100 fine, or both, being the penalty for disregarding the ordinance.

* * *

Prince Jaime, the deaf and dumb six-year-old son of the King and Queen of Spain, finds his greatest amusement in a moving picture theater, which has been specially built in the royal palace for his use.

* * *

Jacob Muha, for fourteen months operator at the Greenwood Theater, Madison, Mich., called at the World office last week. Mr. Muha is now looking for a position as operator in Chicago. The Greenwood, owned by William Johnson, is showing to very fair business.

* * *

F. C. McCarahan has advised this office that he has resigned the presidency of the Superior Feature Film Co. and disposed of his interest; also that J. R. Hattsteadt, who was an equal owner of the stock with him, now controls the concern entirely. The business will be conducted without change of policy, except that it will be materially increased by an added list of attractive features soon to be announced. Mr. McCarahan is now spending a much needed vacation at the home of his parents in Maysville, Ky. His future plans will be made known within a few weeks.

* * *

The ordinance authorizing the issuance of an exhibition permit for moving pictures "for adults only" has been approved by the council committee on judiciary. The council will pass on the ordinance immediately after the summer recess.

STANDARDIZATION.

Discussion in Trade Papers Recommended as a Means of Bringing It About.

THE Moving Picture World for July 11th contained a brief interview with Nicholas Power on the subject of standardizing the mechanical equipment of the motion picture business. Speaking from the depths of his experience as a builder of projectors, Mr. Power protested vigorously because of the failure of motion picture machinery builders to agree upon a standard of film perforation and to establish a uniform point in the camera at which the picture should start. The interview commands attention because of the prominence of Mr. Power in the motion picture field, and especial interest attaches to it because it is seldom that any mention of the standardization of film processing machinery finds its way into print. It is hoped that Mr. Power will follow this interview with a more exhaustive statement of the problem and the means necessary to its solution.

There can, of course, be no difference of opinion—among the informed—concerning the importance of standardization. The maker of films, the manufacturer of motion pictures, the builder of projectors, the exhibitor, all submit daily to annoyance and loss by reason of the confusion which exists because of the lack of standardization. And the patron of the motion picture theater is being denied pleasures that might be his if the question of standardization had received due consideration.

The problem of standardization is of sufficient importance to command the attention of the leaders in all departments of motion picture activity. And just as the motion picture industry had its origin in scientific investigation, so the standardization of the mechanical equipment of the motion picture business should be accomplished through the application of scientific principles to the problems awaiting solution.

The question of standardization has not been given the publicity it deserves. As before stated, the maker of motion pictures, the manufacturer of projectors and the exhibitor have found in the absence of standardization a constant irritant. But they have not aired their grievances through the motion picture press. They should do so. The problem is as vital as that of censorship. The discussion of it in the columns of the papers published for the trade might well share space with many of the topics now considered there.

The upward trend of the motion picture business is a matter of common knowledge. Its progress is due in a large measure to the intelligent publicity afforded by the trade press. Its continued progress is certain. But its advance should not be hindered by imperfections in its mechanical equipment. And it is just here that publicity can render signal service.

Let all who are even remotely interested in standardization contribute to an intelligent thorough-going discussion of that subject. Let the demand be for a single universal standard of perforation as established by a formally adopted perforation gauge, and for machines so built as to insure the maximum of efficiency in their operation, in order that nothing may stand in the way of perfecting the manufacture and projection of the motion picture. Out of such a discussion there will surely come a better understanding of the needs and difficulties incidental to the making of moving pictures, and to the manufacture and use of motion picture machinery, and, eventually, standardization.

FRANK M. BYAM,
Sales Manager Bell & Howell Co.

TO PICTURE "THE OPENED SHUTTERS."

A four-reel film version of the famous novel, "The Opened Shutters," by Clara Louise Burnham, the distinguished authoress, will be produced at once by Director Otis Turner at the Universal Pacific Coast studios. The scenario for this powerful story was written by Lois Weber (Mrs. Phillips Smalley), and such noted motion picture stars as Herbert Rawlinson, Frank Lloyd, William Worthington and Anna Little will appear in the cast.

"The Opened Shutters" will be an innovation in the matter of feature films because the story is founded upon the ultra-modern aspects of mental science and conduct. It is intense and awe-inspiring because in it the heart is laid naked and emotions battle with emotions. It is not a story of quick and melodramatic action, but of slow and convincing emotional development. At the end of the story the physical aspect of the characters is the same as when the story begins, but their minds and hearts have changed.

Crystal Sued by Patents Company

Plaintiff Seeks to Enjoin Film Company from Disposing of Its Products, Alleging Camera Infringement.

THE Motion Picture Patents Company has commenced an action in the United States District Court to enjoin the Crystal Film Company from disposing of its products, on the ground that the latter has been using a motion picture camera which constitutes an infringement of the claims embodied in the Edison reissue patents controlled by the plaintiff.

John R. Taylor, counsel for the Motion Picture Patents Company, declares he has concluded the only practical method of proceeding against competitors guilty of infringing the Edison patents is to practically tie up the business of the offenders. Consequently, instead of merely asking for injunctive relief restraining the alleged infringing companies from using the machines, he is going a step further and praying that they be enjoined from selling or leasing motion pictures or photographic negatives.

In the complaint, the Motion Picture Patents Company alleges that the defendant anticipated an action might be brought to obtain an injunction restraining it from using the camera which is claimed to be an infringement and produced a large supply of photoplays in order to enable it to continue business without interruption in the event that a temporary injunction might be issued to enjoin the company from using its camera.

Consequently, the complainant asserts, its rights can only properly be safeguarded by the issuance of a sweeping injunction preventing the defendant from using the machine and also from selling or leasing any motion pictures or photographic negatives which it may have on hand.

In addition to the injunctive relief, the complainant asks for an accounting of the profits which it is alleged have accrued to the defendant as the result of the alleged infringement of the Edison patents and triple damages based on the accounting applied for.

Judge Mayer recently sustained the claims embodied in the Edison reissue patents controlled by the Motion Picture Patents Company, but an appeal is now pending from the decision.

The defendant company consented to the entry of a decree admitting that it has infringed on the claims embodied in the reissue patents held valid in Judge Mayer's decision, and Judge Hand appointed Alexander Gilchrist, Jr., clerk of the United States District Court, special master to take testimony as a basis of assessing damages against the defendant.

Al Lichtman's New Organization

Alco Film Company Organized with a Radical Plan for the Distribution of Quality Films.

AL LICHTMAN, until recently sales manager of the Famous Players Film Company, and who during the period prior to his resignation from that concern was responsible for the merchandising methods and innovations in the distribution of feature films now generally adopted by all the leading feature film concerns of the country, has formed the Alco Film Company and established offices in the Heidelberg Building, Times Square, New York City, for the distribution of quality films. When it became public some time ago that Mr. Lichtman intended to sever his association with the Famous Players to launch an enterprise of his own, speculation and surprise were expressed. He now has stated his policy, as radical as some might have expected, as logical as all who know Mr. Lichtman knew it would be.

Mr. Lichtman's study of the feature film market from its very inception to its present development—a development in which he has greatly assisted—has given him a broad knowledge of the feature film business and its intricacies and possibilities. This valuable experience will now be devoted to the combined interests of the distributor and exhibitor.

The plan of the Alco Film Company, of which Mr. Lichtman is president and general manager, is a novel one, as under the arrangement he has worked out a quality film subject is bound to receive the recognition and financial returns which are its due, against the present method, which may be illustrated as follows:

A certain company may be releasing many reels a week, of which only an insignificant percentage can be considered of a high quality, although it receives not equal but better returns than an independent manufacturer who is compelled to exploit and distribute his film in an individual and unsupported manner, although the latter film may far excel and in every respect surpass the former. Such an inequitable and illogical method of distribution, Mr. Lichtman contends, is in direct contrast to the principles and laws of business operation, and cannot long continue.

The plan which Mr. Lichtman intends to inaugurate, and by which he hopes to combat the pernicious influences that encourage a system as above described, is to organize a circuit of the largest picture theaters throughout the country, one in each of the largest cities of the United States. These theaters will book one meritorious feature film a week, obtained from any reputable source, through the Alco, for which the theater will pay the highest justified and possible price, in return for which the Alco will give these respective theaters throughout the country exclusive privileges in their cities for a certain period. This policy will enable the theater to charge a higher price of admission than has heretofore been within the range of the exhibitor, and without a fear that after pursuing a complete advertising campaign for the picture a competing exhibitor can obtain the same film within a short time thereafter and reap the profits of the other's enterprise. To effect this security, after the week's run the film will not be shown in the city for a term of six months, during which time the film will play the smaller towns throughout the country, distributed from the Alco exchanges, which will be established at an early date in the principal cities of the United States. This organization will distribute only the highest grade productions available from the world's market, and the length of film will not determine its eligibility, for Mr. Lichtman believes that the word "feature" is a misnomer as applied to the number of films exploited under that title, and a one-reel production may have as large a drawing and pleasing power as the production of eight reels and will be so presented and exploited by the Alco Film Company.

This plan does not limit itself to the products of any certain manufacturer, but will enable the Alco Company to obtain its productions from the markets of the world. In brief, any corporation or individual having a good production can find a safe and certain market through the Alco Company. Any exhibitor who wishes to be independent of any film faction and who desires to select his program from the quality mart of the world, without dictation or persuasion from concealed powers, will be welcomed into the organization, provided he has a theater seating at least one thousand people, located in a city of a population of 200,000 or over.

From appearances, the organization of the Alco Film Company is the first decisive step toward the thoroughly open market.

BARR AND BRUNSWIG ARE TOGETHER.

Barr and Brunswig is a new team of spotlight singers. While the combination is new, the two young men have had wide experience and likewise success. They have traveled in the United States, in Mexico and in parts of Canada. Mr. Barr has been connected with such companies as the New Colonial Opera Company, Neil O'Brien's Great American Minstrels, etc. Mr. Brunswig has been associated with, among others, the "Piff, Paff, Pouff" Opera Company, Richard Mansfield's Heidelberg Quartet and the New York Opera Company, but is best known in connection with the late team of Brunswig Brothers, which was broken through the death last October in a railroad accident of one of the brothers.

Barr and Brunswig are catering only to the highest class houses. For stage use they have selected full dress suits of the latest style, with silk hats and canes. They also are wearing on the street a striking garb of English walking suits and silk hats and carrying canes. Thus it is their aim to advertise on the outside their appearance at the local theater. Mr. Brunswig has a deep, rich baritone voice, and Mr. Barr has a robust tenor; and these blend finely. Barr and Brunswig are open for engagements beginning September 1.

RUTH STONEHOUSE'S TRIUMPH IN DENVER.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse, the Essanay's most popular photoplay actress, who went to Denver recently for the opening of the New Plaza motion picture theater, has returned to the Chicago studio, after two weeks of triumph in the Colorado metropolis. The Denver crowds filled the theater at every performance to see Miss Stonehouse in her classical dances, and she was feted by society on every occasion. One of the principal events of the engagement was a banquet given the star by the General Film Company. With Manager Ben E. Drum in charge the banquet was one of the most successful of its kind ever given in Denver. Those who were lucky enough to be among the guests witnessed dancing that astonished and delighted them. Miss Stonehouse danced "The Colorado Waltz," and her own interpretation of the "Dance of Love" and the "Geisha Girl." She concluded with "Salome."

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

WITH little more than a month left to elapse before the opening of the fall and winter season, the amusement world presents an exceedingly active appearance, much more so than was anticipated a few weeks ago. Although arrangements for the coming season were under way at that time, and the press workers were kept busy forecasting the wonders their respective companies were acquiring, there was a pronounced nervousness on the part of nearly all concerned as to the financial complexion of the campaign to come. It is very gratifying to see that this feeling has almost completely disappeared, which is due to the recent government and industrial reports, especially those pertaining to large crops now being and to be harvested, and preparations by the railroad companies to handle them. While in some political quarters there has been a disposition to discredit these reports, it is quite evident that they are accepted as reflections of actual conditions by those vitally interested. A mere announcement that immense crops were in sight and railroads were preparing to handle them might not justify crediting it with dispelling the uncertainty that existed a few weeks ago; but it has been followed by the placing of large orders by the railroad companies for increased motive power and most encouraging reports from the steel manufacturing centers. One railroad has placed an order for 85 new locomotives and 60 have been ordered by another. The Homestead Steel Works has one order for 85,000 tons of steel to be used solely in building two big bridges which are to span the East River, this city. In a Pittsburgh suburb between 2,000 and 3,000 additional men are to be put to work on a large steel rail contract, and the Homestead plant also has a $4,000,000 contract for supplying steel to replace the destroyed bridge that spanned the St. Lawrence river at Quebec. Added to these forecasts of prosperity come announcements that two large sheet and tin plate and steel and iron companies in the western part of Pennsylvania have consolidated and increased the capital stock from $5,000,000 to $7,500,000, the increase to be used in improving and extending the plants; and St. Louis tells us that a company employing 4,000 men will resume operations at its rolling mills on August 1st and the sheet and tin mills will resume on August 3d.

* * *

To the people engaged in the purveying of amusements, such forecasts of industrial revival are of as great significance as they are to those who supply the markets of the country with the necessaries of life. It may be said that they are of greater importance to the people engaged in the motion picture business. It is upon the working people that the thousands of picture houses throughout the country depend for support, and there is more truth than fiction in the old saying that the working people will often do without necessaries of life in order to secure a little recreation. Therefore, when revivals of industry come, the picture people are among the first to reap the benefits to be derived from the resources of the working classes.

* * *

There are indications other than an industrial character to justify the motion picture people in looking forward to the next fall and winter season as one of the best in a financial sense in the history of business. During the summer season thus far consumed movements based upon sound judgment have developed what must, in conjunction with the promising trade conditions, operate to the interest of every legitimate manufacturer, renter and exhibitor.

* * *

At about this time last year all branches of the "legitimate" and vaudeville fields were arrayed against the motion pictures to try and regain the business the pictures had taken from them; even the combined vaudeville and picture houses were in the movement against the straight pictures. This was shown for months by an evident desire of the combination houses to prejudice the public against the pictures. To this end they exercised the greatest indifference in the arrangement of the motion picture parts of their programs, and were frequently criticised for willfully trying to create disgust on the part of their patrons towards moving pictures. But the photoplays were too much for the opposing forces. The combination houses were compelled to recognize their merit; vaudeville houses by the score changed their policies and are today featuring pictures, and "legitimate" houses all over the country joined the exodus to the "movie" field.

* * *

Last year the motion picture field was also handicapped by disorganization among the exhibitors and by an inactivity on the part of municipal authorities in various parts of the country that gave free rein to a malignant faction that has persistently tried to put a stamp of immorality upon all motion pictures in order to exterminate them. Although the popularity of the pictures is greater today than ever, it is not what it should be, and will be by the close of the coming season.

* * *

This statement is warranted by conditions of recent development. At the Exhibitors' Association convention in Dayton, O., the two factions of exhibitors became amalgamated. Everything points to united efforts hereafter in behalf of everything looking to the welfare of the business as a whole. Last year some exhibitors favored official censorship, while the majority of them opposed it. The effect of this was felt when the test case on censorship now before the United States Supreme Court was tried in Ohio and when a call was made for a united protest by the exhibitors before the committee at Washington, D. C., against Federal censorship. One of the direct results of the Dayton convention is an amalgamated campaign against official censorship. Another commendable step taken at the convention and which gives to all concerned an advantage which did not exist last year (and which must benefit all legitimately in the business) was the sentiment in favor of throwing open of meetings of the exhibitors' league to the manufacturers. While the amalgamation and friendly overtures to the manufacturers have not taken official form, conditions warrant the assumption that the spirit exists and formal adoption is only a matter of brief time.

* * *

The meeting of manufacturers with exhibitors will be a most important factor in the promotion of the business. The New York exhibitors will support the movement to a man and, as the New Yorkers showed up pretty strong at the convention from a standpoint of intelligence and reason there is hardly a doubt that the exhibitors and manufacturers will get together and in joint session discuss problems and solve them to mutual satisfaction. The business must suffer to a more or less extent so long as troubles between exhibitors and manufacturers and between exhibitors and exchanges remain unsettled; and the only way by which they can be settled is by personal conferences. That is the only way by which the exhibitors, exchange people and manufacturers can be brought to an understanding and true estimation of each other. Many exhibitors look upon the exchange men as instruments created by the manufacturers to force the exhibitors into a servitude for the enrichment of the manufacturers, and many of the latter frequently look upon exhibitors as ungrateful and scheming adventurers; all of which tends to maintain a state of uncertainty and turmoil that injures everybody. Mr. Samuel Trigger, one of the most prominent of the New York exhibitors, says that ninety per cent. of the complaints within his knowledge made to the manufacturers have been readily adjusted.

* * *

Another condition in favor of the exhibitors this year is the sane policy adopted by the municipal authorities of Greater New York to solve the censorship problem. It is believed by the best informed motion picture people in this city that the plan of Commissioner of Licenses Bell will not only solve the problem, but will eventually become a precedent for municipalities throughout the country and seekers for soft political berths will be routed with the unreasonable reformers. They also believe that had the Commissioner's plan been in operation last year there would be no political censor boards scattered through the country and no test case awaiting decision.

* * *

Summarizing conditions, the horoscope for the motion picture season of 1914-15 shows determined efforts by manufacturers to maintain a high standard in all respects; a reunited exhibitors association; joint meetings of exhibitors, renters and manufacturers; united campaign by the exhibitors against official censorship; Commissioner Bell acting in co-operation with the National Board of Censorship, and united support of that Board by all exhibitors, renters and manufacturers. These conditions, with the industrial forecast, look good to us. Hope the cameraman has made no mistake and that development will show the picture as gratifying as it appears upon this screen.

Foreign Trade Notes

BRITISH NOTES.

THE seemingly impossible has been accomplished. Mr. George Bernard Shaw has been filmed. It was a clandestine affair and took place at the Savoy Theater last night (July 9th), where Sir J. M. Barrie had invited a company of literary and theatrical celebrities to see a new production of his. The performance was timed for midnight, and as the guests arrived and entered the theater they walked full into the field of vision of a number of moving-picture cameras stationed in different parts of the auditorium. Whether G. B. S. knew of the plot or not, his arrival brightened the situation from a kinematographic point of view, for he picked up an axe and bolted up the staircase in search of Sir J. M. Barrie in a manner that would shock all modest Shavians. A part of the new play when staged for the public will consist of the projection of the film taken last night.

* * *

The new moving-picture tax levied the other day in Germany to the tune of nearly 24 cents per meter of film has aroused widespread comment. That an attempt will be made to impose a similar but not perhaps so heavy a duty upon films exhibited in this country is extremely probable, and at no very distant date—with what success experience alone will show. In Parliament recently Lloyd George was asked whether he proposed to introduce an amusement tax to apply to theaters and picture theaters. The reply given was that the matter was already under consideration. Exhibitors are already discussing the possible effects of a picture tax which, if created, promises to be analagous to the last land tax. When this was made law, the landlords promptly raised their rent charges and the burden fell upon the worker. Therefore the suggested amusement tax could only have the effect of increasing the price of admission to theaters. But before any such imposition can materialize in Great Britain it will first have to resist the attack of three formidable bodies, the manufacturers, the renters and the exhibitors associations, besides an enormous public outcry. Five years ago a tax upon "the pictures" might have been a feasible proposition to many, but today the majority of press and pulpit are on the side of the kinema, and a tax, if levied, can at the most have only a very limited existence.

* * *

E. D. Horkheimer, of the Balboa Film Corporation, of Los Angeles, is at the moment looking round London in the interests of his firm, and Samuel S. Hutchinson is still with us. A rumor is going the rounds this week that the "Flying A" president has come to terms with several English authors for the reproduction of their works.

* * *

Hector Dion, formerly with the Vitagraph and Biograph companies, both as producer and player, arrived in London recently to join Miss Florence Turner's company at Walton-on-Thames.

* * *

It has fallen to Thos. W. Hands, the municipal librarian of Leeds, to be the first public librarian in England to realize the value of the moving-picture film as a record for preservation for the use of the rising generation. He has proposed to the authorities in charge that a collection of films illustrating local life and customs, ancient buildings, etc., be immediately commenced.

* * *

A fresh batch of witnesses appeared for examination before the Parliamentary committee inquiring into the dangers of celluloid on Tuesday. The principal point under discussion was non-flam film-base, its advantages or disadvantages over ordinary celluloid stock. Will Barker (of the Barker Co.), A. Wood (Gaumont), W. Blake (Eastman Kodak) and A. J. Gale (an extensive exhibitor) each were of confirmed opinion that the compulsory printing of moving pictures upon non-flam base would precipitate a most unsatisfactory and disastrous state of affairs in the trade.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

PARIS NOTES.

FELIX ISMAN, the American theater promoter and real estate owner, has leased the great and beautiful Champs Elysees Opera House in the Avenue Montaigne, Paris. Isman tried to secure the theater some months back, but his plans were frustrated. Now, however, he is in full possession, and his dream of giving Paris the most sumptuous moving picture production ever attempted will be realized next month. August 27 will see the first exhibition in Paris of Gabriel d'Annunzio's wonder film, "Cabiria." Incidentally it will be the initial public performance of the Isman way of screening moving pictures.

Immediately the Boston Opera Company had vacated the Opera House, cables began to arrive from across the Atlantic, and by wire Isman has directed the preliminary work of gathering together an efficient staff and planning the transformation of the auditorium. Within a few days several score of workmen were engaged on the job. Thus when on Friday, July 3d, Felix Isman stepped across from the Plaza Hotel to the Champs Elysees Theater, he found his stupendous undertaking well in hand. Interviewed by the writer that morning, he said: "For the moment I can tell you nothing that you do not already know. I have only just arrived and have barely had time to look around. A little later on, however, I will be able to give you some particulars."

Parisians are evincing enormous interest in the project. The opening of the Isman season of picture plays will be an important event.

I am informed that Henry Ziegler, the American film merchant and vaudeville man, is dickering for the Paris Opera House.

F. J. Goldsoll, the American proprietor of the Cines Palast, Berlin, and till recently director of the German Cines Company, has just become director general of the Ambrosio Company. Goldsoll has engaged an entirely new stock company of moving picture players. He has also secured the services of Signor Caserini, who has been associated with the Gloria Company.

JOHN CHER.

KNOX GETS "CABIRIA" FOR SOUTHEASTERN STATES.

At what is said to be the highest price ever paid for limited territory on a motion picture on a pure rental basis, exhibition rights to "Cabiria," the Itala Film's Torino masterpiece, have been sold by Harry R. Raver to Frank Rogers, of Knoxville, Tenn., for fourteen Southern states. The price is in excess of $50,000. The states are Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

In these states Rogers may exploit a single copy of "Cabiria" during the life of the contract, which runs for fifty weeks.

Clauses in the contract provide for the exploitation and presentation of this wonderful picture in a manner consistent with its dignity. The cities and towns where "Cabiria" is to play must be liberally billed, and the picture must be accompanied by an orchestra of not fewer than twelve pieces and a leader. Prices of not less than 25 cents at matinees and 50 cents at evening performances must be charged. This contract is most important because of the sum involved and because it opens up a comparatively unexplored method of exploiting a film of sufficient merit to constitute an evening's entertainment in itself.

BEST BOOK EVER PRINTED.

Houston, Tex., July 12, 1914.

Moving Picture World:

Gentlemen: Find inclosed money order for three dollars for a renewal of the best book ever printed. Your issue of July 11th is certainly fine; if you want the dope look in the World. Thanking you for past favors, I remain,

Most respectfully,

Hotex Film Mfg. Co. JOHN N. BOGGS.

Doings at Los Angeles.

DIRECTOR ALBERT W. HALE, who recently left the Majestic company to direct John E. Brennan in special comedies at the Santa Monica studio, has finished his first reel, a roaring comedy, which shows a painter having a dream. The title is "Daub Has a Dream." Daub is a painter. The picture surely is a roarer. Much improvement has been done here, and the studio is running along smoothly, everyone working to make good pictures. Mr. Hale starts immediately on "Waiting at the Church," a farce comedy, which is a promising one, with Betty Taere in the lead opposite Mr. Brennan. Sixty extras will be used in this one-reel funnigraph.

* * *

Al. Christie, producer of Nestor comedies, has been sick for two weeks and has had to lay off making those funny pictures. He has been touring around the country in his big car with his wife and mother. They are now staying at the Merritt Jones Hotel at Ocean Park, where Lee Moran and Victoria, Eugenie and Arthur Forde are also sojourning. Christie expects to be able to work again soon.

* * *

There are many incorporations made in this city, some of which no data can be gained from. Here are two: Masterpiece Film Co., with directors: A. H. Hedderly, L. W. Blinn and F. C. Hill. Capital stock is $300,000. The Tom Nash Co. has also incorporated for $100,000. The Sunset Film and Comedy Co., with Norman P. Taylor, E. E. Smith, A. P. Haynes at the head, also incorporated for a hundred thousand.

* * *

William Franey, late of the Joker comedies, has joined Marshal Neilan at his Hollywood Kalem studio, where he will appear in some of the snappy comedies that the young director is putting out with Ruth Roland as the leading lady.

* * *

A. R. Fraser and son and daughter-in-law and a party from Ocean Park visited the Sterling studios last week. Mr. Fraser is the man who built the million-dollar pleasure pier at the beach, which was later destroyed by fire in 1912 and rebuilt immediately after. Ford passed out a number of autographed pictures of himself in comedy make-up.

* * *

Jane Bernoudy, of the Universal, the champion horsewoman of the world, and also a roper of fame, has purchased a new pony. His name is Johnny, and he is 14 hands high. She says she is going to use him to rope from. The little horse is at Miss Bernoudy's Santa Monica home.

* * *

Robert Thornby, of the Sterling company, is working at Venice-by-the-Sea with a juvenile company, using the miniature railroad and the racing coaster in the film. The amusement resort is a good place to make comedies, and Bob takes his kiddies there frequently to get good settings.

* * *

Producer Kelsey, of the Reliance studio, is going to explode a wagon of dynamite in a coming picture. The story is "The Wagon of Death" and the hero sends his brother to the beyond to save his sweetheart from death. Donald Crisp is finishing "The Idiot," a strong heart interest story of life.

* * *

Miss Margaret Gibson, famous as a Vitagrapher, who won the $50 prize for the handsomest bathing costume in the girls' parade at Ocean Park, took the freshly signed check to a real estate dealer near her home and planked it down on a beautiful $2,000 lot which she is buying in the fashionable Palisades district of Santa Monica. Sometimes it pays to win prizes. The lot is now nearly entirely paid for, and Miss Gibson is going to build a bungalow on it soon.

* * *

Jack W. Kerrigan went to Mexico in a motor car with a party, and was gone for four days over the Fourth. They went in a big Simplex, making the long trip to the war country in record time. Since returning, Kerrigan has been busy answering his correspondents. He received a beautiful cigarette holder in a handsome silver case with his name on it. Many other presents are being received by this star of the screen, and his letters of thanks cause him many hours' work.

* * *

The Robbins company is busy at work on a comedy which is a real comical picture. Jack Phipps is in the leading role opposite Miss Dixie Stuart. They go buggy riding in the country near their farmhouse, and she falls out of the vehicle. Really she did fall, and suffered a painfully sprained ankle, and has been hobbling about between scenes on a crutch. This company is progressing nicely, having built an outdoor stage, and dressing rooms.

* * *

Tom Fortune, of Lasky's, says that the studio is full of thousands of dollars' worth of valuable antique furniture being used in "The Ghost Breaker," and that one old clock is valued at $550. "Where the Trail Divides" and "What's His Name" are both being produced here at the same time, and poor Tom is about the busiest man in seven countries. The total valuation on the antiquated furniture is $30,000. Three pictures are worth $100 apiece.

* * *

Barney Sherry and W. S. Hart, playing in the western film, "The Two Gun Men," and the company directed by Reginald Barker have returned from the Grand Canyon after doing some dizzy scenes along the top of the big bluff. They report a fine trip—not. Barney says the beach looks good to him again, as it was 130 in the ice boxes up in Arizona.

* * *

Lasky's studio is being again remodeled and improved, additions having been built. A carpenter shop has been added, as has a stage strip 60 feet wide; 27 new dressing rooms were built and are now in use. They have an old chest there 300 years old, which was handed down in a Spanish family of the Southern California country.

CLARKE IRVINE.

Hemment Making Good.

Wild Game Photographer Has Interesting Experience in Wildest Africa.

By F. H. Richardson.

FOR months past J. C. Hemment, who took the first series of the Paul Rainey African pictures, has been in the wilds of Africa strenuously engaged in securing a new series of wild game pictures. The writer is in receipt of a letter written aboard the S.S. "Gascon," of the Union Castle line, "at Aden, or near it, on the Indian Ocean," mailed at Port Said, June 27, in which friend Hemment announces his return to civilization. In the course of the letter the following items occur:

> For five long weeks I was in hot chase after a bunch of elephants that were big enough to pull the Singer Building down and possessed of enough ivory to supply the billiard ball chasers for time and eternity. Then at Buffalgton, the greatest lake in the world, we ran into a bunch of hippo that made many a mouth water, and these were only two of many experiences. I am now on my way home, a happy and satisfied man. Have made approximately 20,000 feet of film, not all game, but every foot of it interesting. Kings and queens have turned out in their royal robes and performed ancestral stunts for the benefit of the moving-picture camera of Yours Truly; this in three different Protectorates. These pictures show the native customs, dances and usages. My buffalo hunt is one great, big, red-letter thing, and I'll tell you all about it when we meet beside the Great White Way, about the last week in August. I have developed tests from each film, right along as I made them. Talk about a hot box! Just try a dark room tent in equatorial Africa and you will find it out-sweats the sweatiest kind of Turkish bath. My colored autochromes have come out fine, and I have about five gross of 4 by 5's. Have had some jungle fever, but am all right now.

As is well known to those in the "in." Hemment ranks second to none when it comes to matters photographic. He has had ample previous African experience, and we may therefore confidentially expect that the pictures he will be prepared to show upon his return will be something entirely out of the ordinary, and something that will make one great big hit. He will remain in France long enough to develop the whole 20,000 feet.

We are glad Hemment has met with success, because not only is he a hard worker, and therefore deserving, but Jack is also one of those men concerning whom our English brother would remark: "He's a blooming good chap, doncher know, old top."

Later, from another source, it was learned that George Outram, a noted hunter, who was with Hemment in Africa, is coming on to this country to lecture on the films. In his earlier days Outram matched his prowess at England's national game, cricket, against that of the present King George V.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Just Plain Rotten.

COMPETITION may be the life of trade, but it is very evident that some exhibitors have no decent idea of what competition is. We offer in evidence a paragraph from our pimento-flavored contemporary, Real Reels, of Denver. This is the offering:

CAN YOU BEAT THIS?

> Live and let live, is a good old adage that apparently does not hold good in Sanpete County, Utah. One of our customers writes to the effect that every time he runs a Famous Player subject or any big feature that his opposition promptly puts on a five-cent and free show—five cents preferred, but if the people won't come for a nickel the doors are thrown open to everybody. If we printed what we thought of such tactics we would be arrested.

Now Real Reels is published by a feature film company handling the Famous Players' stuff, and if this were all, the item would be passed over as scarcely worthy of comment, save as a local scrap, but it is in line with several other items from several other exhibitors in widely-separated parts of the country, and it is evident that Editor Carpenter is voicing his just wrath over a condition of affairs that is nothing less than vile. A person running a theater cannot meet just and fair competition. He sees that on certain nights his contemporary gets all the business. He immediately throws his own house open free. It does not matter that such tactics must inevitably ruin the man using them. Perhaps, in the meantime, he has ruined the business of some other man, and being himself ruined, feels immune from legal proceedings; feels himself safe. Like Mr. Carpenter, we feel that if we printed what we really think of such tactics, we would be arrested for criminal libel as well as illegal use of the mails, perhaps.

Even Vice-Presidents.

And mind you, one of these men, not the man referred to in the above paragraph, but another man, is the State vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, a man expected, by virtue of his office to set an example of decency to others, and yet he takes this fashion of "fighting" his competitor. He has not the manhood, the decency, the guts, if you will pardon the word, to fight attraction with attraction, to match wit against wit—he has no wit—he can only lie down like a hamstrung calf and bellow. He is not a manager, he is not even a half-excuse for a manager, in spite of his office, he is a weak-kneed, yellow-livered excuse for an imitation of a full-grown, yellow-blooded man. This is written before the results of the convention are known, but we hope that someone had the nerve to bring this matter up and set it forth in its true light to all the exhibitors in the convention and all whom they represent. We do not know what the legal aspect of the matter is. Very probably it varies in the different States, but if there is any one particular thing that seems to this writer to be small and mean and cheap and all else that is nasty and picayunish, this is it; the pin-headed fool who can't manage his own house, trying to ruin the business of another man who has got a little enterprise.

It does not matter that a man cannot put in a good enough show in his five-cent house with which to offset the other man's efforts. It is not the fault of the live man that his competitor is still dangling along with a five-cent show unable to raise either price or program. If he cannot afford to make use of a ten or fifteen-cent program he should do the best he can with his puny nickel program. The other man managed to get a ten-cent house, and to flood a town with free tickets on the night of the other fellow's feature program, is getting about as close to the dogs as anatomy permits an alleged human being to get. Outside of that it might be a good idea.

New and Mighty Good.

If you are looking for a good-natured "sting" get some small manila envelopes and have some such printing as this done on the face:

> Enclosed find a LEWS Patent, One-Piece Coat or Skirt Hanger, the invention of our operator. Accept with our compliments, Vaudette Theater, West Point, Georgia. J. W. Llewellyn, Manager.

If you ask for "pay envelopes" you'll get about what you want. Now advertise a souevenir night and lay particular stress on the "one-piece" hanger that may be carried in the vest pocket. Advertise that each person attending on a certain evening will receive one. Now get a couple of pounds of two-inch wire nails. Wrap them up so carefully that no one will suspect that it is a nail at all. Hand them out. The laughter the nails will raise will overcome the disappointment and leave the whole crowd in good humor. To help along the effect try to have a bill just a little bit better than usual that night or pick out some feature night. Mr. Llewellyn very thoughtfully sent one of the hangers to show the idea, and a whole pack of envelopes. Most of these have been filled and given out, and we have yet to find a person who will not admit that a two-inch nail is not other than an efficient one-piece coat or skirt hanger, even though it is not the sort of hanger that most persons expect. It is one of the cleverest catches that we have seen in some time.

O— E— Again.

Eugene O'Keefe, of the Luna Theater, Billings, Montana, sends in some programs and a copy of an invitation sent out for "A Million Bid." And what do you suppose the type is? It's a fussy-looking Old English, that dear, good Old English, that has been in the type cases since Guttenberg discovered the art of printing from movable types. Of all the hundreds of styles in the A. T. F. book, with Engravers' Shaded, and Litho Title Shaded, and the various styles of Typo script and all the other good things, the printer had to have one more whack at the good old stuff. If we had a printer who ever dared to set a job for us in Old English, we would either kill him or sue him for damages. No one but yap printers ever uses Old English for imitation invitations now. Don't deal with the yaps, or people will think you are a yap yourself. If Old English was a pretty face, or legible or anything but an affront, we could understand its use, but at the present day no one but backwoods printers, kids with five-dollar card outfits and a few other ever use the stuff, and it most assuredly and emphatically should not be used for matter that a manager wants people to read. We thought that even Montana was further along than that. The card is well worded, but few people have the patience to weary their way through ten lines of puzzle-stuff. Mr. O'Keefe says that it brought out a select crowd, so perhaps they have plenty of time in Montana, even though that is no excuse.

The program is better, being readable. There is a rather attractive front page, done with type and a single ornament, clean-cut and clear. On page three is given the weekly run with a special story of the big feature on page two and a little gossip on page four, including the announcement that those visiting the theater on Monday will receive free a photograph of Miss Joyce on request. Mr. O'Keefe asks for suggestions on the program. We see nothing in particular to suggest changes on, either in the copy or the setting. Both are well done for the size of the sheet. The only improvement would be an increased size or number of pages, preferably the latter, perhaps an increase to eight pages with a page of chat about the house, a couple of pages for the coming attractions and two more pages of gossip.

Another Haynic Argument.

The Haynic Theater, Fairmount, Minn., almost always is good for copy on something they produce. Here is the latest from their D. K. special that others can use with benefit:

THERE'S A REASON.

> This little heart-to-heart talk hasn't a thing to do with the breakfast food business and the man who invented the phrase has chased himself over into the Happy Hunting Grounds, but we simply had to steal his thunder because we wanted to impress upon you that there IS a reason.
>
> If you haven't been wearing ear muffs for the past several weeks you must have heard a lot of talk about the wonderful pictures the Haynic has been showing. THERE'S A REASON.
>
> In fact, the reason is quite numerous. For one thing, we are not confined to the output of one concern; we are buying in the open market THE VERY BEST of nearly all the bigger manufacturers. We care not who makes them; if the pictues are good the Haynic buys them.
>
> For another thing, we have the best, clearest, steadiest projection possible to obtain. We ask you to notice the clean, distinct, clear-cut effect of our pictures—that they are as clear and distinct at the extreme edge as in the center. Please note also, that they are steady. You have undoubtedly seen pictures that wiggled and wobbled around on the screen until they gave you the impression of a setter pup chasing his tail. Ours are not of that kind. There is no eye strain, no fatigue in Haynic pictures. THERE'S A REASON.

We like, too, the way they phrase their announcements of coming subjects. They do not promise too much nor too little, and are not afraid to admit that an occasional reel is not quite up to standard.

Another Clip.

Harold and Helen Ballou, of the Olympian, Seattle, give another good clip paragraph for program publishers in this comment on Shakspeare:

> "All the world's a stage and all the people players," writ William Shakspeare some years ago. Little knew the bard that his playful jest would become a real, genuine fact in the days to come. The silent play is acted upon the world's stage, anywhere and everywhere, by anybody and everybody.

Now and then a little "highbrow" stuff helps a lot and it was the Ballous who started that quotation from Omar on its rounds some time ago. There is a lot of it hanging around if you know where to go after it.

"Two Fers."

The Spruce Theater, Philadelphia, is making special terms to the kiddies for the Saturday matinees during the summer. They print a coupon good for two children if presented with five cents at any Saturday matinee, and print two on one weekly program. Another program carries this argument:

> If you feel fatigued after a warm day's labor come here in the evening and brighten up. It will fit you for a better day's work on the morrow.

That's all right as an argument, but it is lacking in snap. This might be better:

> If it's hot at home, come here.
> You'll work better tomorrow.

The shorter, crisper the argument the more apt it is to be read and believed. Spanking a man with a feather pillow does not have one-tenth the effect that the same weight of lead pipe will have. In your advertising use lead pipe rather than feather pillows. Vastly more effective and convincing is the line:

> Send your children to the Matinees and you KNOW they're safe.

That tells something. It tells it smartly. Some men get as much as $10,000 or $15,000 a year for telling commonplaces smartly. Make a noise like that much money in your advertising and you'll GET IT. But you'll have to do it all day and every day, not merely by fits and jerks. Chester Beecroft got a good job the other day. We would like to bet he did it on the stuff he wrote for the General Film. Surely you remember the "Bill" stuff. So did his new boss.

Would You?

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., sends in a post card for a recent Kalem that starts interestingly with the question

Would you sacrifice your beauty to save your sweetheart's life?

That line, we think, is of greater importance than the Alice Joyce line just below, and yet it is set in body type where Miss Joyce gets a fat black line all to herself. The public at large is more interested in the proposition than in Miss Joyce and the fans would find her name in six point, though there is plenty of room for the two lines in bold type. The point is to find what line will most directly interest the greatest number and play it up accordingly. The question line is easily the strongest here and should have been featured. The entire advertisement is a little bit too much the work of a job compositor and not the advertising man, though they have a man who can write lines. We wish the ad man for the Orpheum would get so familiar with the print shop that he can call the foreman and at least three printers by their first names. It would pay him, and pay him well.

It Pays to Advertise.

It pays to advertise in this paper. We've said so before and very evidently lots of others think so. We said recently that Woodland Park, somewhere, seemed to be a nice place, and right away it develops that the park is in Louisville, Ky. A. V. Oldham, the president of the company, supplies the information and a weekly program folder that drops into poetry. This is the poem. It can be made to fit any two syllable park and three syllables if you are careless:

———BE A BOOSTER———
When you see the Woodland trying,
Hard to give you a good show,
You can boost it up a trifle;
That's your cue to let folks know
That you're not a-going to knock it,
Just because it ain't your "shout,"
But you're going to boost a little,
For they've got "the best show out."

But their best advertising is the picture of a place so attractive that we wish we were there right now. If they will send in a good photograph we will be glad to run it.

Another One of Those.

And just as we have found Woodland Park comes a sample from some place. The post mark looks as though it might look like Los Angeles if the canceler had not tried to make a quarter turn with the stamp. Anyhow Mr. Frank Egan announces that the Little theater is going to have some remarkably good shows, and he announces it with a choice of type that would please any printer as much as it would please any patron. It is pretty just to look at, and it makes you feel that a man who can get up such advertising could not possibly offer a poor attraction. It is all print, but it looks all hand cut work merely because someone picked out the type with care. If this comes to the eye or eyes of Mr. Egan, will he please send some more and tell if our guess is correct. And if he will offer to send samples to others, he'll more than double the debt.

With Ribbons.

Frederick E. Mortimer, of Freeport, Maine, is no more careful to tell us where he lives, but the man in the post office has less muscle, so we know. He sends in a well printed card inviting us to come with our better half "to meet Miss Lucille Love." A white satin ribbon badge is inclosed with the request that it be worn, which no doubt lent "an air" to the occasion. We think some people would be coaxed to attend just to wear the badge. That may seem foolish, but try it yourself sometime.

We Are Waiting.

We are waiting to hear from the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., about that dramatic company they were going to start making pictures with. We should hate to think they were fourflushing. Meantime they are keeping the camera busy (they have a camera) with school commencements, local firemen's parades and such things. Just in passing we like their top line that reads "Ninety minutes from Worry." They will be closer to it than that when they start their dramas, but meantime it listens well and may cheer them up.

Still From Missouri.

Here is a letter from Philadelphia. Our statement that the small town man seems to show more hustle is getting under the urban skin. Here is the result:

> In the issue of June 27th I notice you hand some bouquets to the small town manager, and no doubt a great many of that class will, as a result, be induced to send in their small bit. We have three suburban towns running part time, as much as they will stand. The inclosed speaks for itself. It is printed on thin stock as we have them inserted in the morning papers. For house-to-house distribution we use post cards on manila stock.

We do not want to hurt anyone's feelings, but we think that the insertion of extra matter in newspapers is a grave error. Most of the big papers are in arms against this "magpie" circulation, and even where this crusade is not on we think that most every man resents a circular fluttering from his morning paper. He takes the paper for the news, not as a vehicle for a lot of truck, and he will not read the stuff that is not in the paper. Most people feel that this is a cheap effort to get into a paper without paying for the privilege and will resent it as an imposition. We know that the man who leaves papers at our door knows better than to offend in this matter, because he has been warned against it. It is like the darkey funeral tailing on to the circus parade to get the benefit of the free band, and it creates a sentiment the reverse of favorable.

We still think that the small town man plays the game better, but we are open to conviction if the big town people have pride and wit enough to match the small town offering. Hustle is represented by more than an inserted throwaway in someone else's paper.

More Than He Paid for.

Recently we spoke of an advertisement put out by Frank Montgomery for his Jacksonville house. This was a four column, down the page advertisement that urged Jacksonville patriots to boost instead of knock. We said then that the advertisement was something more than the space it filled, but it seems to have gotten all Jacksonville talking and it was made the text for a pulpit sermon the next morning. Here is an extract from the report:

> Sunday, at the morning service at the First Christian Church, Rev. J. T. Boone, pastor, had a great deal to say about "Boosting." He was calling attention of the Sunday school class to the value of boosting the Sunday school for a bigger attendance, and used the argument of Montgomery, the Moving Picture Man. He held up for observation the four-column advertisement Mr. Montgomery had in Saturday's Metropolis. He called attention to the beauty of the advertisement in two colors, and to the text of the ad, which was on "Boosting." He showed how well Mr. Montgomery is boosting, not his own business so much, as everything in general and the city of Jacksonville as a whole. Then he read an extract from a boosting editorial in The Metropolis, and heartily commended all this boosting, and called attention to the results bound to accrue if everybody boosts the city and the State as these have done, and described how it would build a big city here.
>
> Dr. Boone urged his Sunday school pupils to become boosters—to boost for a bigger and better Sunday school, and told them if they would boost consistently, persistently and constantly they could do it. And he is right. Hearty, constant, persistent, intelligent boosting will build great things, Sunday schools, communities, churches, counties, states and countries.

But, mind you, Montgomery backs this up. He does not merely talk. When we were down in Jacksonville in January Montgomery referred us to the largest stationer there for a small purchase. They did not have it in stock. In June we were down again and were looking for something more important. This, too, was not in stock, and we good naturedly "kidded" the manager about his boasted store. The next night the owner of the store himself was at our hotel to show that the article we had wanted in January had been put in stock at once, and to promise that the other goods would be in stock when we want them in the fall. It was a small matter, less than a ten dollar purchase, but Montgomery had too much pride in the town he brags about to let a man go away saying that he could not get what he wanted. He had gone to the trouble to hunt the merchant up and pass along what was not even intended as a complaint. It's no wonder that when Montgomery announces himself as a booster that people take him seriously, because he is a booster in the best sense of the word. He is identified with the whole town and not merely with his picture houses. And it is what lies back of the advertisement that makes it so effective.

Are you a part of your town or are you merely living off it?

Not Bad.

Lubin's two reel "Kiss Me Good Night" is caught up by the Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., to form the catch line of a card that merely reads: Kiss Me Good Night at the Lehigh Orpheum, Tuesday, June 30.

More would have spoiled the advertisement. They used just enough to pique curiosity with an unusual line, and at the same time they insure the card a longer life, for the rural swains are bound to hold on to the printed advertisement to help out their bashfulness. Some one down there evidently stays awake

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

OWING to the delay sometimes necessary in replying to inquirers through this department, it is announced that in future replies to questions relating to the technique of photoplay writing will be replied to by mail, replies of general interest being repeated for the benefit of others. Where the questions are simple and may be replied to briefly, the annotations will be made directly on the question sheet. In case a more elaborate treatment is required and the subject is of general interest, the carbon of the printer's copy will be sent. This is not an invitation to seek to start an elaborate personal correspondence, and questions that seem to be written for no other purpose than to draw a personal reply will be ignored and the stamp confiscated. Neither is it the idea of this writer to do the work that should be done by the correspondent. If you want to know what company is likely to have a child seven and a half years old, nine feet tall and with blue eyes, do not enclose a reply envelope. Read the synopsis printed in each issue and find out for yourself. This is intended merely to expedite the answering of questions asked by earnest students of photoplay who may be inconvenienced by the delay of two or three weeks required for a printed reply. If there is any tendency to start a comedy feature the offer will be withdrawn. It is up to the readers of the department to be nice.

Under no circumstances whatsoever will the manuscript of any person be handled. We cannot even look at synopsis.

Edison Wants Ones.

The Edison company wants good one reel scripts and wants some quickly. Not long ago they were overstocked and advised contributors that they would not be in the market for a time. Now they have resumed buying and ask that announcement be made that they are again in the market for powerful one-reel dramas.

Goes on a Month.

Announcement is made that the Telegraph-Chartered Theatres Corporation prize contest will close September 15 instead of the middle of August as originally announced. Scripts should be gotten in by then.

That Sun Stuff.

Honestly, if we were not such a fat, good-natured cuss, in spite of what some of you think, we might be tempted to get sore at the number of persons who have written to us about the Vitagraph-Sun contest when we never had even the littlest thing to do with the contest and never had a script in. Now to reply to a whole lot of people, please listen:

The Sun wanted something that would get it readers, on the proposition that some of the readers would stick after the contest was over. The Vitagraph wanted some advertising, as all companies do, and it would not be able to buy such advertising as it received out of next year's profits. They got together. They ran a contest. They ran it absolutely on the level. They paid out a certain sum in prizes and purchased between two and three hundred other scripts. But they cannot afford to hire one clerk to spend two days looking up the script of yours that did not get a prize when there are about a thousand others who each want a script-hunter for two days. You gambled a script against a thousand dollar prize. You lost. Be a sport and take your loss. Don't be wolfing around asking to have your script sent right back.

It was the Vitagraph-Sun contest. Read the Sun to see if you won. If you did not win you lose. You lose your script if you did not have the forethought to carbonize it, and if you are not in the suplementary list of three hundred. If you are, see it in the Sun. This is their graft, not ours, and we don't want to spoil the Sun's game. If you think the Sun ran the contest just to oblige you, you lose again. They ran it so that several thousand persons would each buy a copy of the Evening Sun every night until the excitement dies down. We cannot run a private inquiry bureau and defeat the Sun's ends. It would not be clubby. Ask the Sun. You were gambling about a hundred copies of the paper against the thousand dollar prize. If you drew a blank pay for the ticket, anyhow.

Hartigan Wants Slapsticks.

P. C. Hartigan, a former Kalem director who now is doing comedies for the Pathe Freres, apparently on footage, writes, returning some straight comedy: "Owing to the fact that this branch of the company is to confine itself for the present, at least, to slapstick comedies, I am returning your scripts. As things are now on a smooth running basis here, we promise not to hold scripts longer than a few days." His address is 406 Court street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Inquest Clubs.

We want to see the coming season end with an Inquest Circle in every photoplay writing center in the country. Most of those already established have done great good in bringing the isolated writers together and getting them into the atmosphere of the work, and we want to see more of them established.

But we want to see them conducted on the lines of the Inquest Club of New York City, and not along the cut and dried lines, for we believe that the rules laid down make for the best and most permanent organization. Many of the local Coroners have started out to pattern their organizations on the lines of the usual literary club, and this defeats the end of the club. The rules are very simple.

The first is that there is but one office, the Coroner. There are no other officers and no membership list, therefore no election of members or officers and no opening for the arise of friction. If you don't like the Coroner you quit the circle. If you do like the Coroner you can remain a member as long as you behave yourself and the Coroner likes you.

The second rule is the complement to the first. Since there is no membership there can be no membership fees or dues of any sort. The Coroner can collect no monies, nor can the circle hold a library or any other sort of property.

The third rule is that the Coroner shall not recommend any book, periodical or publication of any sort, nor recommend any school, course or any other mode of instruction. This applies to this paper and its publications as well as to the publications of other concerns.

The fourth rule is that the Inquest for meetings shall be held not less frequently than once a month between September and May inclusive, either at the home of some member or at some restaurant where the charges on the bill of fare shall be within the means of the membership, and preferably after visiting some photoplay program or on a night immediately succeeding.

These are the rules that interest the membership. It is also understood that the Coroner shall deal equitably with the members of the Inquest, but the Coroner is answerable only to the Coroner of the parent body and not to the members of the local inquest.

In other words, some competent person undertakes to gather about himself or herself the other writers of a city for the purpose of study and discussion. Each can help the other without losing any personal advantage, and already the Circles in Pittsburgh, Baltimore, New Orleans and elsewhere have done much to develop writers into sellers.

If you want to start an Inquest Circle in your city write in. In the fall the various circles will be advertised at least once a month and an effort made to keep in intimate touch with them.

Miss Justice's Ideas.

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice writes so sanely on the subject of the recent Vitagraph contest, that we print her letter in full, merely adding out own "Amen." She seems to have said about all there is to say of the squarest prize contest on record. This is what she writes:

> The big Vitagraph-New York Sun photoplay contest just closed, in which you may have already noted I won two awards in the Supplementary Prizes, one on "The Under Man," a three-reel society-business drama, and "The Psalm Singers," a two-reel, out-of-doors comedy drama of new idea, has been particularly interesting to me during the past three months for the fact that the Sun has been publishing so widely a call for ideas and plays from the big literary authors, stating thus the Vitagraph Company, as well as the newspaper which is the vade mecum for news of many literary homes, hoped to raise the standard of the silent drama. I have always had faith that the fiction author was by experience qualified to make a good photoplaywright. However, it was a distinct disappointment to me, and must have been to the Sun and Vitagraph as well, that out of the great mass of 3,500 scripts sent in to the contest, to find among the successful "fiction-writer entrants" a number of less than you could count on the fingers of one hand. It was furthermore a big surprise to me, for I have heard incidentally that about 40 per cent. of the unsuccessful contestants were the big writers—many of them famous. I scarcely expected to win the big prize, but if for no other reason I am mighty glad to have "made good" among the very small "fiction representation," whose plays have been added to the major prizes. And alas! this further demonstrates the fact to me, that the big author so wide and wildly advertised with poster credit, has been brought to the front by the assistance of the patient and experienced staff-writer. There are exceptions to this rule, I know—but here was a contest opened to the whole world, and I am amazed, if not a little ashamed, of our best writers, for allowing such a chance for photoplay recognition to get by them. But it certainly shows that the photoplay author is born, not made. Photoplay writing stands absolutely in a class by itself. Mabel Herbert Urner, Madison Cawein and the few others of us who were successful, I trust will now hold on to the game—which truly I have found the most fascinating in the whole catagory of writing—or at least try to hold up the literary end of the profession.
>
> Personally, I had no time to prepare for the contest. I simply took what represented my regular week's work, but as my aim has always been to not allow the standard of one of my scripts to fall beneath the other, I trusted that what was sent, almost at the last moment, might qualify as my usual work. Stress of contract work did not permit me to write a long multiple. Yet my plays went in as finished, playing scripts. When I began the photoplay game a little over a year ago, it was expressly with the view of building up from the fundamental start on a sound foundation. No synopsis only for me. The joy in writing scripts is to do them from begining to end, and weigh them out in logical construction the same as if one were to weigh them on a scale.
>
> In the contest meanwhile, one notices the names of many of the regular, experienced scenario writers among the successful ones. This is gratifying to all concerned, I feel. In this contest, scripts had to speak for themselves, and Sun-Vitagraph is to be praised and thanked for this edict, as it gave every aspiring photoplaywriter in the world a chance, if he would but try, regardless of name or reputation. Yet, even the regular script man might have made a better showing in number.

But perhaps the most striking instance of all is the great number of newcomers recorded on the honor roll, from whom, no doubt, fresh ideas, or synopsis-drafts will be purchased. Their winning may have just been a streak of luck, but from these men and women—many of whose names we have never heard—will likely come the photoplay dramatist of tomorrow. The printed list in the Sun is quite a remarkable outlay—and here is success to all of them.

In completing a twenty-four-reel series, and a twelve-reel series of multiples for William N. Selig, aside from other multiples as the fancy struck me, my work for the last four spring months is almost at an end. An eight-by-ten shack, and my periodical love for the great north woods, is luring me. So the first week in July will find me flying somewhere, without an address. I have accepted short invitations from Newport, R. I., and Big Moose in the Adirondacks, mid-summer, but there are wilder spots I know of than these, and in the fall when Mr. Selig sends a company north to produce my Northwesterns, it is my idea to go along, and likely find a couple more plays again, on the ground. So far my work has been identified with the Selig and Essanay film companies, whom I have noted the Moving Picture World has designated as my "first loves," but one rightfully and naturally feels a loyalty to those who advanced her first interests. But as I come to think of it, it was Vitagraph who accepted my very first script in synopsis form.

"Stolen Ideas."

Just a couple of weeks ago we wrote a story and shot it out and two days later saw what might have been the twin sister to the script, so we sent a telegram and called the script back. The story was written the day the film was released and there was no possible chance of collusion or fraud of any sort.

It is this sort of thing happening every now and then that make us slow to accept the numerous claims of stolen ideas unless the titles and names of characters are also identical, which puts it out of the accident class.

Exact Technique.

In our Technique of the Photoplay, in one of the sample scripts, the scene has an automobile "entering." Later the occupants re-enter the car and "car off."

A chap who likes to split hairs and then split the splits and again subdivide wants to know if the auto should not exit since it entered.

The aim of technique is to get the best possible action and tell it understandably to the editor and director. If this is done it does not matter whether the car is off, exits or is removed from the scene. Anything that gets over the fact is sufficient. Properly the occupants should "enter in car" and "exit in car," but if the car enters and is off the director knows what is wanted. The sample script was purposely written in loose technique to convey that fact, but this writer wants to be painfully exact, apparently. Some time ago a literary purist who read one of our scripts was horrified to read this scene:

6— Street—Jim on—Nell enters—Jim lamps Nell—chases her.

He thought that we should be ashamed to turn out such work, and maybe we would be if the story were intended for a stranger editor. In such a case we might have written:

6— Street scene—Jim is standing in the near foreground—Helen enters—Jim's attention is attracted by Helen's pulchritude—he becomes enamored as she passes across the stage—as she leaves the scene he starts in pursuit of her and also exits from the scene.

However, it was intended to be produced by Arthur D. Hotaling, and he did not have to send us a night letter to ask what "lamps" and "chases" meant. He got the scene over quite comfortably. This is not a defense of the script written in slang, which is seldom excusable. It is intended to point out that painful accuracy may detract from the spirit of the story.

Credit to Authors.

Once upon a time, not so very long ago, there lived a Young and Earnest Author. He still lives and he is still Young and Earnest, but he no longer Shoots Off His Mouth about Credit to Authors, because he got a Studio Job, and he knows what This Writer knew Several Years Ago, to wit, that "Written by" looks Good on the Script, but is a Blamed Lie in Most Cases. Dropping the George Ade Style of capitalization, here are his amended conclusions:

> Before I joined the —— staff no one shouted louder or harder than I for credit to authors on the screen, and no one belittled the work of the staff writer more than I did. Nowadays every time I see an author credited by my company with a picture I cannot restrain a laugh, because I know how little that writer had to do with the finished picture. Even men of the standing of —— —— and —— —— and —— —— write stuff which at times has to be touched up, and as for the ordinary run of authors we are seldom able to use more than the bare idea of the story they have sold. And as you probably know, there is a big difference between working up one of your own pet ideas, and taking another fellow's and trying to make a good picture out of it. For instance, a few weeks ago my firm bought an idea for $5 of —— joining the volunteers and being put through the drill for recruits. The idea appealed to Mr. —— and was turned over to me for development, and I had to write one thousand feet of action around it. Still more recently they sent out an order for a number of slapsticks with all exteriors. The output was falling behind, the studios were overcrowded, and they wanted to get 25 or 30 scripts on hand right away that they could turn over to directors to go out and make in one or two days. I gave them five in two weeks. Not so bad. But in returning to the scripts that we reconstruct, no matter how much work we do on them, we are never heard of, except on pay day, and I guess the bosses think that suffices. We are very seldom pressed for original work. There is generally so much reconstruction and picturizing to be done that the bosses would rather have us devote our efforts to this stuff than write new stories. And we put so much of our own stuff in the stories we fix up that in the long run it about evens itself up. But as I said before, giving credit to the original author in cases like this is a joke.

It is not so very long ago that this chap was one of the most insistent howlers for credit on the screen, both in the Inquest Club and wherever else he happened to be. He wrote letters to such papers as would print them, arguing against the "injustice" of the practice and praising such companies as did credit the author. Now he is with one of the crediting companies and he is honest enough to admit his error because now he knows.

Personally we should like to see authors given full credit where such credit is deserved. We have always said that, but we have added that the time is not yet ripe to kick with any justice back of the complaint. Here is corroborative testimony from one of the most anarchical of the old guard. If you won't take our own word for it, perhaps you will accept his.

And by the same token when we say anything along similar lines, please realize that through personal touch and in correspondence we have a vastly larger horizon than your own, and so a wider and more authentic knowledge.

Manufacturing Stories.

Don't manufacture stories. Write them. Do not take certain factors that ought to make good stories because they have been used before and seek to make them over into another story. If you cannot give the old factors new treatment drop them until you can.

If you are an old and practiced hand you can give the new twist and you are justified in using the old elements, but the new writer needs to be most careful of the material he selects.

For some reason writers seem fond of the inventor who has his invention stolen. Several good stories have been done on this theme, but in every instance the author has given new twists to the old string. The beginner does not know the tricks, and so the resultant story is merely the story of the inventor who gets his idea swiped and gets it back again and that is as fiercely interesting as the story of last week's ball game.

There are ten thousand people trying to write stories who cannot get ahead merely because they cannot get away from the conventional ideas and strike out on new lines. Now and then some of them do hit out, but they get so far out that they are worse off than before.

We have not the slightest idea that any large number of persons will accept this advice, but the man who up to date has not made a sale will be most likely to take money from the manufacturers if he will stop trying to sell and put in one full year merely studying plots, what makes them plots, what can be done to make them other plots and why this last should be done. Then he can take up the detail of selling with a better chance of success because he at least knows something of his subject.

Back to One.

Several managers of theatres have written lately of their efforts to test out their audiences on the subject of their preference for single reels and multiples and almost without exception the decision has been in favor of the one reel subjects, the voting being as high as 75% in favor of the singles where it was announced in advance that one night a week a two or three reel story would be shown.

This does not fairly indicate the preference of the spectators, for it deals with the double reels as they are and not as they should be, and this is a factor that should be kept in mind. Not all two reel stories are worth two thousand feet of film, but it is clear that there is a stronger and constant demand for one reel subjects, and where there is a demand from the public the manufacturer must eventually supply what is wanted. It will not only give an opening to the beginner, who is not able to handle two reels competently, but it will also give the real writer a market for stories he has not the nerve to try and pad into two reels.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Address all Orders to

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of the Moving Picture World and of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until such articles have been demonstrated to a member of our staff. In case of apparatus pertaining to projection this means the editor of this department.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending 4 cents, stamps, (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 43.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Permission to use the contributor's name must accompany each answer, otherwise only the name of the city will be used. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Would you recommend a belted or a direct connected engine and dynamo? Give reasons for your answer. How would you, in some simple, inexpensive, effective manner, deaden the engine exhaust, without creating any back pressure on the engine? What is back pressure, as applied to an engine; what is its effect? What is compression and its effect, and how is its amount changed?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 37.

Again the Roll of Honor is short, and I have got to do considerable stretching to include anybody in it at all. However, the replies by the three brothers named are fairly good: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Eugene A. Upstill, Long Pine, Nebraska, and Boston, Mass.

Answer to Question No. 37.

By Eugene A. Upstill, Long Pine, Nebraska.

The question:

Can you use a motor wound for single phase current on two or three phase, or a two phase motor on a single phase or three phase? If your answer is yes, show, by sketch, how you would connect. What is "single phase", "two phase" and "three phase" current, and what in your opinion are the advantages or disadvantages of the various phases? Suppose you had the choice of single and poly-phase current for that new theater, the same to be used for incandescent lighting, fan motors and to pull a motor generator set. Which would you advise the manager to install, and why would you give that advice?

The Answer:

You can use a single phase motor on one phase of either a two or three-phase system, as per sketch No. 1, but you cannot use a two-phase motor on a single phase system. A single phase system is merely a two-wire system in which each wire is positive for every half cycle and negative for one-half cycle. A two-phase system is one which makes use of two alternating currents which differ in phase by 90 degrees, or one-half cycle. A three-phase system is one which makes use of three simple alternating currents separated by 120 degrees, or one-third of a cycle. A two-phase current can be run on a three-wire system, or on two separate two-wire systems. The poly-phase is the better for the central station, and for persons using motors, but it has no advantages for lighting. The question does not give the size of the fan motor it is proposed to use, but for anything not exceeding ¼ h. p. it is better to use single phase, since it will cut the expense of wiring. However, for a heavier motor, such as the motor of a motor generator set, poly-phase current is best by reason of the fact that with single phase the action on the motor armature is somewhat similar to the action of a reciprocating engine, there being a "dead center" every half cycle, whereas with poly-phase current there would be no "dead centers," and the armature is always working. With three-phase the pull is more equal than with two-phase. In fact, with three-phase current, the pull on the armature is to all intents and purposes uniform. Sketch No. 1 represents a two-phase system with four wires, and sketch No. 2 represents a two-phase system with three wires, and indicates method of connecting motors thereto. For a three-phase system with six wires you could connect a single phase motor as per sketch No. 1, but it is, of course, necessary that you always get the two wires of the particular phase. A two-phase motor would be connected to both circuits of a two-phase system, or to two phases of a three-phase system. With a three-phase system it would be as per sketch No. 2.

The above answer is correct as far as it goes, but it is not very satisfactory. Nevertheless, it is the best of the lot. The answer only covers part of the question, to start in with, and then the motor connections are not shown in very good form. There was one very good answer, but it was mixed up so badly that I could not be sure in all respects just exactly what the brother meant, and it would not be fair to others to assume that he had the right idea when he didn't and to put it right myself, therefore, I have simply published the best answer that came. If any of the department fans wish to elaborate on this answer I shall be glad to hear from them.

Keeping Oil Off the Film.

The operator of the Pastime theater, Union Hill, New Jersey, sends in the following scheme for keeping oil off the film in a Simplex. He says:

Place a cloth over the crank shaft, inside the machine, with a small weight at the ends to keep the same stretched down away from the sprocket. This is the only place the oil will get on the film, and the use of this plan would stop much argument at the exchange.

When the front part of the gate (Simplex) is pushed back if you will put a light piece of tin around the inside of the tube with a small piece of corset steel to hold it tight against the side of the tube, you will protect your lens from oil.

I have no Simplex mechanism at hand, therefore cannot follow the idea very closely, though from the sketches submitted I take it that Union Hill means that the film rubs against the crank shaft at times, and from it accumulates oil. If this is the case the cloth scheme would, of course, stop the trouble. I would suggest to the Simplex Company, however, that if there is any trouble of this kind a guard could easily be arranged to prevent the film touching the shaft. As to the lens idea I don't think I quite understand though doubtless Simplex users will, therefore the suggestions will probably prove of value. But allow me to suggest that if only one drop of good oil is placed on a bearing (not a patent kerosene mixture but a good oil) it is enough and no trouble would then be experienced from oily film or lens.

Am I Wrong?

Alfred Fowler, Alliance, Ohio, writes:

I am going to answer a couple of questions propounded in May 30 issue. With regard to acetone cement, let me say it is all right, provided you do not scrape the emulsion off the film. Leave the emulsion on and put the whole thing in acetone as directed, which makes a good cement. On May 23rd, page 1113, I noticed an article entitled "Danger! Poison!" by Mr. Lorence, New York City, with regard to moistening the film with the tongue causing bad teeth. I must say brother Lorence is perfectly correct. My teeth were good until about six months ago when it cost me $30 to have them fixed, and the dentist told me it was due to the habit of moistening the film when making patches. I did not believe him, but now I have to. Last night I had a thermometer in my operating room and it stood at 99 degrees, and that is not the hottest it has been either.

I wonder if the editor is wrong in directing that the emulsion be scraped off in making acetone cement. I never heard of using film in making cement without scraping off the emulsion, but maybe you have got one on me this time; at least brother Fowler seems to think so.

Cameron's New Projector.

For some time past, at least here in New York City, rumors have been afloat that there was a new projector in course of invention, which would soon be launched upon an unsuspecting and confiding filmdom. This machine was to be known as the "Cameron," and, as usual, each individual who undertook to describe the peculiarities of the forthcoming projector had an entirely different yarn to tell.

At the late convention the Cameron was in evidence in the Atsco booth, where it received its full share of attention, therefore it seems that the time has arrived to tell you and show you exactly what the new-born infant looks like, how much it weighs and the probable color of its hair.

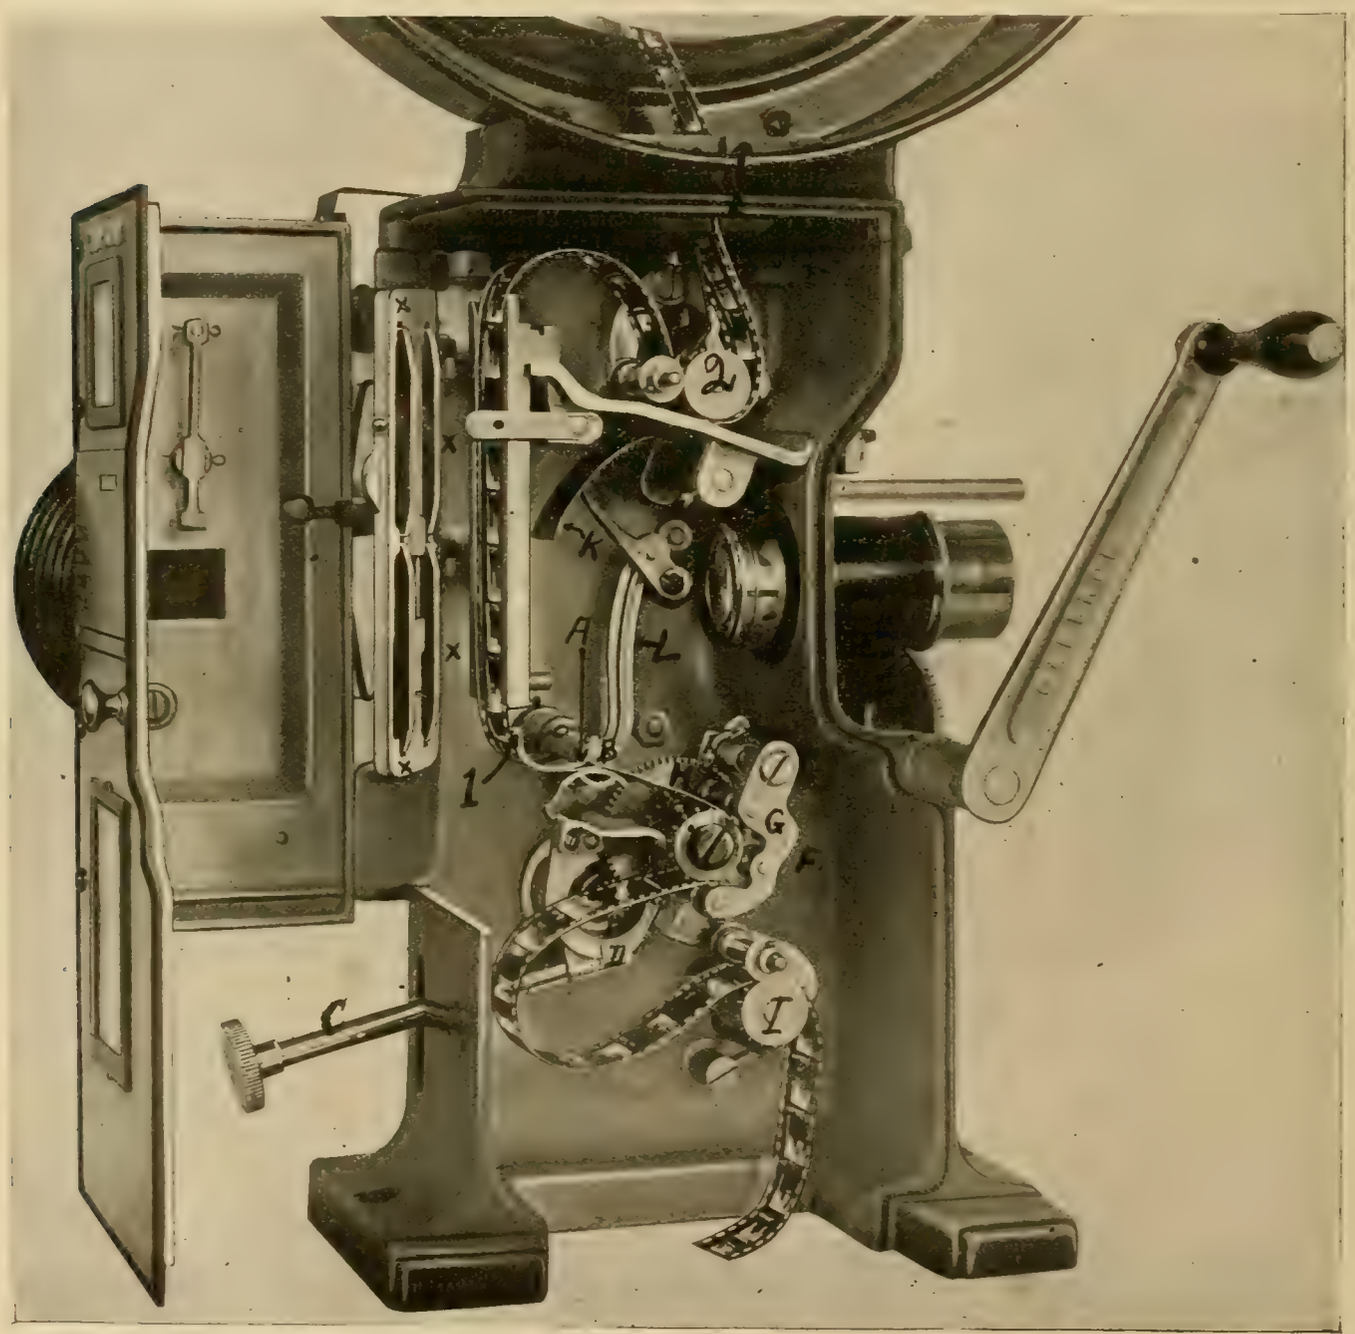
The Cameron machine is the invention of Mr. James A. Cameron, and his associates in the Cameron Picture Machine Company, Brooklyn, N. Y. It has been in course of development during the past six years, and the final product shows some decidedly unique features, the actual value of which will only be demonstrated thoroughly and finally by actual use under varying theater conditions. However, the editor is prepared, even at this time, to say that it has features which look decidedly promising.

As will be seen in the above illustration, the projector has an odd-shaped lamp house, which gives a rather peculiar appearance, from the American point of view. In fact, the general get up is somewhat in line with one or two European projectors.

The lamp house has ample ventilation, the same being at the back, and left-hand side of the hood. The door is so hinged that it shuts by gravity—an excellent idea indeed. The observation hole in the door of the lamp house—one on each side, is of ample dimension, and is protected by red and green glass, which gives the operator a chance to examine his arc without any eye strain whatever, also these holes are located in the right place. The lamp house slides on the ordinary sliding ways, very similar to those employed in the Edison and Power's machines, with which everyone is familiar. The lamp itself is of heavy, rigid construction, and has all the movement necessary to enable the operator to handle his arc, and force it into any desired position.

The lamp takes a 6-inch carbon below and a 12-inch one above. The back of the lamp house is entirely closed in, and, in short, the lamp and the lamp house are fully up to the requirements of modern practice. The condensing lenses are protected by heavy metal holders, and the condenser casing is thoroughly ventilated, so that, as far as I am able to see, the condenser arrangement is quite satisfactory, provided a method be added whereby the distances between the lenses can be readily altered by the operator.

As will be seen in the first illustration the machine is supplied with a friction disc motor drive, located under the table, the table being cast iron, light in weight, but rigid. Above are seen the details of this motor drive, the regulating handle of which is conveniently located at the side of the table, as shown. The weight of the motor itself provides the pressure between the friction disc wheel and the friction pulley, but the amount of this friction may be controlled by two heavy screws at the top of the motor. The table legs are of 1 1-2 inch tubing, and are adjustable, so that the machine may be set at any desired angle. The magazines are of pressed steel, 14 inches in diameter, round in shape and very rigid. And now we come to the mechanism.



Detail View of the Mechanism of the Cameron Projector.

The heart of the moving picture projector is the intermittent movement, and in the Cameron, we have a decidedly unique proposition. The intermittent sprocket is entirely done away with, and there is no star or cam, or anything corresponding thereto. The intermittent of the Cameron is what may be termed a modified type of the old "beater" movement. The beater movement, at one time popular, but now falling into disuse, contained grave faults. Not only did it have a decided tendency to scratch the film, but it was the mortal enemy of all weak or loose patches. With the beater movement a loose patch meant a stop Mechanism Open to View.

in the show, because it was promptly pulled in two. The Cameron movement, however, while it retains the many very excellent points of the beater type, apparently gets around its weak ones, though it is true that my judgment in this matter will have to be supplemented, and proven out by acurate use over an extended period of time under varying conditions; also I am not altogether certain as to how it will handle first run film, the emulsion of which is often quite soft, though inclined to believe there will be little or no trouble on this score.

As will be seen in the illustration the film comes down over the aperture, and passes through a slot in S shaped arrangement A. Now "this S shaped arrangement" is the intermittent of the Cameron machine, and its action is to pull the film down, rather than to strike it down as the beater did. This movement has the advantage that there is practically no limit to its possibilities in speed. That is to say, it can be made anywhere from one to one, to one to twelve, or even more. In fact, Mr. Cameron informs me that the movement actually has been used for a considerable time, in experimental practice, at one to twelve. This, however, proved to be too severe on the film, and it was cut down to one to seven and a half, which it is now, and which it is the design that it will be when the machine is placed on the market. It is very difficult to actually describe a movement of this kind, but I think the illustration will do more than anything else to help you understand it, bearing in mind that point 1 of the S shaped intermittent movement moves up and down under the aperture, and that the whole intermittent has an oscillating, or rocking movement, being carried by shaft B.

Front Part of Machine with Mechanism Closed.

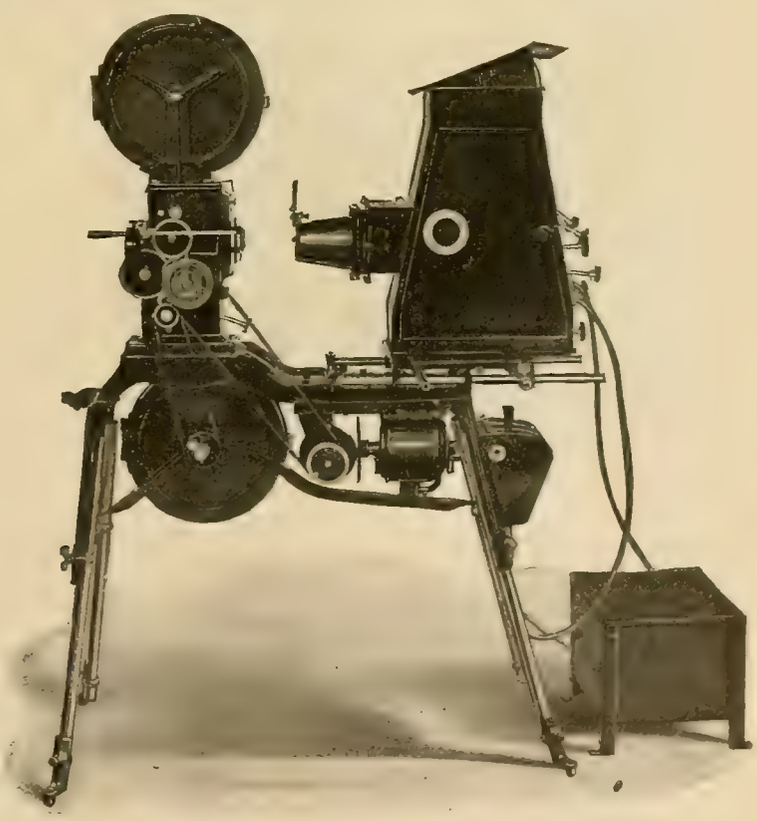
The framing device is decidedly unique. Projecting through a slot in the lower front of the machine we see shaft C, with a knurled knob on its end. This is the framing lever. It will be observed that this lever joins split casting D, which rides on fixed central casting E, and revolves around the same at the will of the operator, being locked by means of a clamping screw on the end of the framing lever, C. Now this split casting carries the "conveyor sprocket" F, its idler bracket G, and gear H, which moves the sprocket. The operation is as follows: When the operator wishes to frame his picture, he gives the knurled knob at the end of the framing lever a slight turn, which releases the framing device. He then raises or lowers the end of the framing lever, which has the effect of moving the conveyer sprocket either up towards the intermittent movement, or else in the opposite direction, and this in turn alters the position of the film in the aperture, since the registration of the film at the aperture is governed by the conveyor sprocket.

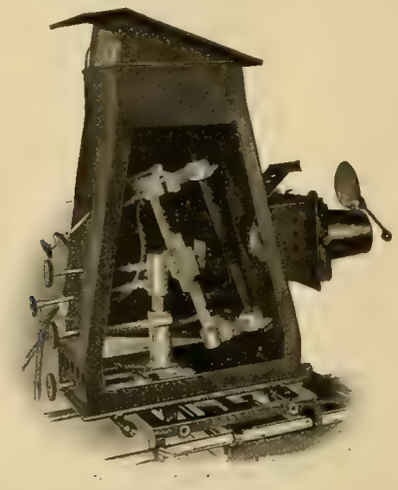
And now a word of explanation with regard to the office of the "conveyor sprocket," and how it acts. As has been said, the Cameron machine has no intermittent sprocket, star or cam. The film is pulled down out of the upper magazine by upper sprocket 2, which feeds it down into the gate in the usual way. The film passes down through the gate and is stretched across from the bottom of the aperture plate to conveyor sprocket F without there being any lower loop. Conveyor sprocket F revolves continuously; that is to say, it has no intermittent movement, and normally it would simply pull the film down through the gate and across from the bottom of the aperture plate to the conveyor sprocket in a straight line. Between the bottom of the aperture plate and the conveyor sprocket, however, is the intermittent S shaped arrangement A. Now bear in mind the fact that the conveyor sprocket is pulling the film straight along continuously but intermittent A is rocking, and its point moves precisely ¼ of an inch each time, so that, although conveyor sprocket F pulls the film continuously, still that portion between the point of A and top of the gate receives an intermittent movement just the same as that imparted by the intermittent movement of other projectors. The main advantages claimed for this movement by its inventor are the lack of parts of considerable weight having high inertia, and therefore subject to considerable wear; the absence of the effect imparted by worn intermittent sprocket teeth; the production of a picture free from any movement whatever due to worn intermittent parts.

These are the main claims made by the inventor. It is not my purpose to comment on them at this time, preferring rather to leave the matter to the judgment of our readers, and to the tests of time. I will say, however, that I have witnessed the performance of one of these machines which has been running continuously for almost one year in the Hanover theater, Brooklyn. The manager of the Hanover informs me that it has had no repairs at all during that time. The picture projected by this machine was excellent. It ran a rather old commercial film in good shape, and Mr. Cameron claims that the movement is easier on patches than any other movement in existence, but this, again, I cannot corroborate. It will have to be proven by actual comparative test. It is a very broad claim; still it may be true. Let us hope it is.



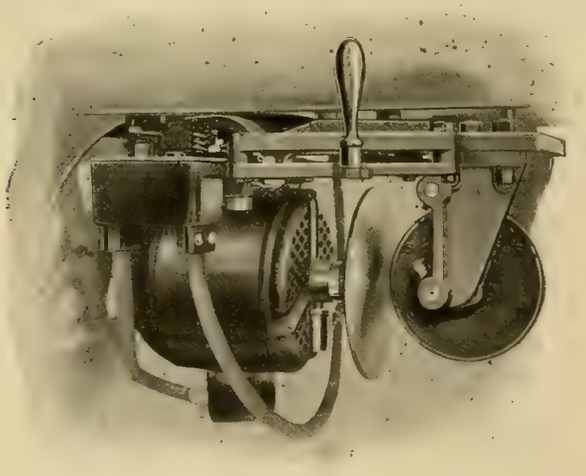
The Entire Machine.

Below the conveyor sprocket will be seen a second, or lower feed sprocket, 1, which feeds the film into the lower magazine. This sprocket is not absolutely necessary, but is placed there to prevent a double pull on the film at the conveyor sprocket; that is to say, a pull from above and the take-up pull from below. The loop between the two sprockets is to take away from the conveyor sprocket the strain of the take-up. It is, as I said before, not necessary, but the machine operates better where this loop is present.



The Lamp House.

The shutter is "something else again." In the illustration K is the shutter, and L the lever which actuates it, the lower end of this lever being connected directly to a small, counterbalanced pulley on the end of the fly-wheel shaft. The shutter moves up and down across the aperture with an oscillating, reciprocating movement. In effect it is a two-wing shutter, and, by reason of the rapidity of the intermittent, according to the inventor's figures, it only cuts 30 per cent. of the light, which gives an available illumination of 70 per cent.; far more than anything that has heretofore been attempted. Mr. Cameron is a firm believer in the fact that his shutter is the ideal one, and it must be admitted that there are things to be said in its favor. For instance: it cannot by any possible circumstance get out of time with the intermittent; therefore travel ghost would seem to be an impossibility with this mechanism. However, on the other hand, it is a reciprocating movement, and, in effect, a two-wing shutter, therefore the editor must be noncommittal on this particular proposition. Frankly, I don't know, and won't know until such time as I have seen this projector worked out in actual practice on the screens of several theaters, under varying conditions. If Mr. Cameron can make good on this proposition, it certainly will be a big thing. But he will have to "show me" in this shutter matter. However, it will be a simple matter to substitute an outside revolving shutter.



The Motor Drive.

The automatic fire shutter is as positive in its action as any I have seen. The film tension is supplied by two very long springs, which act on four shoes, X-X-X-X, each one approximately 2¾ inches in length, thus giving a total distribution of tension over 11 inches of shoe surface, and this, in the judgment of the editor, is an excellent proposition. The mechanism is inclosed, except some of the gearing on the off side of the machine, the fly wheel and fire shutter governor, which are outside.

One thing which impresses the observer is the simplicity of this mechanism and the ease with which it is taken to pieces. At a guess I should say that the whole mechanism could be taken apart in less than five minutes, and it could be reassembled in almost the same time.

The Cameron machine will be on the market in a short time, and, while, as I have said before, there are certain features which I shall want to see tried out in practice before passing final judgment, the thing, as a whole, looks decidedly promising.

Ground Detector.

John R. Gibson, St. Louis, Missouri, makes the following query:

> I have been told one of the machine manufacturers is grounding the arc lamp by means of incandescent lamps. Will you please give me your opinion of this proposition, and whether or not it is a practical method of grounding.

No, friend Gibson, it is not a practical method of grounding, nor do I understand it is designed to be such. The scheme is not approved by the New York Department. The reason for requiring the grounding of all-metal projection machines is as follows: In case the machine is insulated and a heavy positive ground, is established, then the lamp house, mechanism, table and magazines are all charged. Now suppose the interior of the operating room to be lined with metal, or to have a metal frame which is grounded, and suppose the operator in putting in a reel to touch its edge to the metal of the operating room and the magazine. Right then and there he will get a good, big, fat spark and possibly the film would be ignited.

The grounding of the machine obviates this. The scheme of the manufacturer in question is to attach a ground wire to one side of the lamp socket, and run a wire from the other lamp socket to the top carbon arm, then the same thing is done with the lower carbon arm, and, of course, the instant a ground is established, the lamp connected to the carbon arm the ground is on will light. That scheme is all right, viewed purely and solely as a ground detector, but, due to the high resistance of the lamp filament, and its small current carrying capacity, it is not an effective ground from the point of view above named. The scheme simply amounts to a permanent test lamp, or rather two test lamps, and it is all right in its way, but the objection lies in the fact that in order to make the scheme operative the machine must be insulated. This scheme was used to some extent by operators in Chicago several years ago, but its use was discontinued.

First Run Troubles.

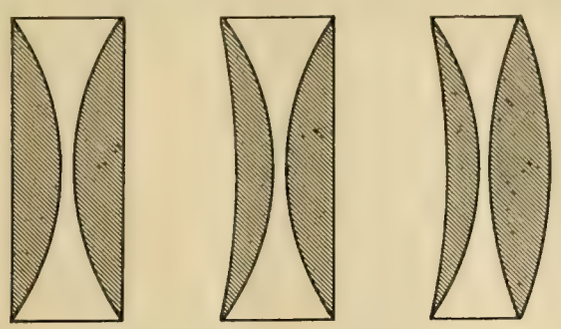
W. H. Mullally, East Orange, New Jersey, has troubles of his own as follows:

> I am called upon to run a large feature every day, and many of these are first runs, which spell trouble, and means a lot of cleaning of the tension shoes between reels. Recently I received a seven reel feature, absolutly first run. These films had never been on, or through a machine. The films looked as though they had not been thoroughly dried after being developed, or maybe it was due to the weather, it being very wet that day. But be that as it may, the film seemed to be dead, like a damp piece of paper, and each layer clung to the one under it. I have a motor-driven Simplex, but the motor could not pull this film through. I had to crank it for the first two shows, after which the motor did the work, but in order to run the film I was obliged to loosen the tension springs, and push the film trap away back with my thumb; this caused the picture to jump up and down on the screen, and I was compelled to stop in the middle of the reels at least once during the first two shows and clean the emulsion off the shoes, besides cleaning them after each reel. In fact there were so many stops that the patrons complained. I have often seen emulsion come off films in flakes and dust and leave a little deposit on the tension shoes, but the emulsion on these reels came off like gum and caked hard in the runners. Also it peeled off like steel shavings from a drill on both sides of the picture, and would hang in the aperture and show on the screen. For these reasons I thought the film was not properly dried, or not dried at all. The second day the films were curly and full of life, and I had no trouble. The sprocket holes showed some effect of the heavy pull, and I reported same immediately to our office, and used as much care as I could, but the exchange criticised my handling of the films, and sent in a bill for something like $10 for damage. I claim they should be thankful the film was not entirely ruined, and that our house should have a rebate to offset the spoiling of the show by improperly dried film. I would like to have your opinion.

I could not give it unless I had personally examined the reels. If you have stated things exactly as they were, and the emulsion was so soft that each layer of film stuck to the one next to it, then most emphatically the exchange is not entitled to any damage, because the film was not properly dried. I think that would be an indisputable proposition. However, had you been a consistent reader of the department, and the Handbook you would have long since learned that even conditions as bad as this can be handled by the operator who "knows how." Next time you have a proposition of that kind you get an ordinary tallow candle, and every few turns of the crank touch it to the upper sprocket, or if you cannot do that by reason of the construction of the machine then make a roller out of a section of the candle, and, exercising your ingenuity a little, place it on a wire spindle and attach it in such way and at such a point that it will rub lightly on the film track, on the emulsion side. This will deposit sufficient tallow to, if not entirely stop the trouble, at least help it to a large extent. You should also grease the tension shoes with the tallow before threading the machine each time. Also never clean the emulsion off the tension shoes with a steel instrument; always use a silver coin, or better still a wet cloth. If you use a knife blade, or screw-driver point you will scratch the steel and aggravate the trouble.

Meniscus Bi-Convex Condensers.

The Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, Minnesota, has sent to the department an ample stock of its new lenses for testing purposes. In this proposition the rear lens is meniscus: that is to say the convex is on one side and the concave on the other. The front lens is a bi-convex: that is to say convex on both sides. Tests show there is a very decided improvement in the light when these lenses are used, and that the improvement is well worth the additional price of these lenses, where the condenser system is carefully matched to the objective.



I find, however, two objections, one of which can, I think, very readily be overcome, hence amounts to little. The other is more serious, but I do not think sufficiently so to destroy the value of the proposition. The first objection lies in the fact that while each one of the two lenses costs $2, and the meniscus, when placed in an ordinary condenser holder, will crack just as readily as will a plain cheap plano-convex lens; but this, I believe, can be entirely eliminated by using an Elbert holder or one like it, and lining the grooves in that holder with very thin asbestos. The second difficulty lies in the tendency of some of the lenses to turn a light straw color, though that feature did not show up in the meniscus lens of the sets I had, but only in the bi-convex. The manufacturers claim that this is not present in all the lenses, and that even when it is present it is often possible, after using the lens a short time, to reheat it, whereupon it will again become a pure, white lens. Whether this is true or not I do not know. The manufacturers also claim that if the lenses are handled with ordinary care only a small percentage would discolor at all. What they mean by "ordinary care" I don't know, but, at any rate, I do not regard this discoloration as serious enough to overcome the good points of the lenses, and if this tendency can be eliminated these lenses will certainly have the strongest indorsement this department can give them.

The Laemmle film service has this matter up with the manufacturers now, and they hope to be able to entirely stop the discoloration. These lenses do not turn green or purple; if they turn at all it is always a light straw. As the matter now stands I recommend the lenses with the addition of the Elbert holder for the meniscus. If the discoloration is eliminated I will not only strongly recommend them, but urge the substitution of the meniscus-bi-convex combination for the plano-convex in all projectors, using, however, a proper holder, such as the Elbert or one on the same order.

Meniscus-Bi-Convex Condensers.

Charles R. Bozett, Brooklyn, New York, writes:

> With regard to the meniscus-bi-convex condenser combination advertised by the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, I tried a set out under the best possible conditions. Have two Power's Six A machines with adjustable rheostats. Have been using plano convex condensers with fairly good results, but the Laemmle ad sounded good to me, so I asked the manager to buy a set and he did. I put them in one machine, leaving the piano convex combination in the other, of course. Now, under ordinary conditions I have the adjusting lever of my rheostat at half past six, meaning straight down, which gives about 30 amperes. When I put in the new lenses it was necessary to move the lamp house up toward the head in order to get a clear field, and I cut my amperage down to 22. And now comes the good news. I actually get a better screen illumination and sharper definition with 22 amperes than I did with the old condensers at 30 amperes. Last week we moved outside to the airdome, where I have a 4-inch back focus Gundlach objective, giving a 17 foot picture at about 85 feet. The operator who formerly held the open air position, Arthur Crothers, paid me a visit and was surprised at the results. He asked what amperage I was using. I told him 30, whereupon he declared it was necessary to use 40 to get results last summer, using plano convex condensers. In ordering these sets of condensers the operator should give the focal length in inches the same as in ordinary condensers; for instance: Two 6 1-2 inch, or back lens 7 1-2, front lens 6 1-2, also the width of condenser desired.

I do not know what brother Bozett means by "width of condenser desired." If he refers to the diameter of the lens, I have not been informed that these lenses come in any other than the 4 1-2 inch diameter. The meniscus-bi-convex combination, which the brother has, has been dealt with in the department recently. If the manager will order a lens holder from John D. Elbert, San Francisco, at the same time he orders the lenses I am prepared to indorse that meniscus-bi-convex proposition right now, with the qualification, however, that there seems to be some tendency to turn a very light shade of yellow, but they don't all do this and perhaps you will be lucky, and even if they did I believe the benefit is great enough to more than make up for the tendency to slight discoloration. I cannot, of course, consistently recommend the purchase of costly lenses of this kind except they be used in conjunction with a lens holder similar to that put out by Elbert, because when a manager pays $2 for condenser lenses he does not feel disposed to stand for any breakage, and naturally the rear lens (the meniscus) will be just as liable to break as will the ordinary plano-convex, though I do not think it will be any more liable. The reason why you get better effects from the lower amperage when using these lenses lies in the fact the meniscus lens and the bi-convex taken together have a shorter e. f. than the plano convex combination of equal separate length, and this brings the arc somewhat closer to the lens. Moreover there is not so much loss at the back surface of the back lens by reflection. The reason you get better definition lies in the fact that this combination is in effect a three lens combination, and therefore to a large extent corrects spherical aberration, and, I believe, also, to some extent at least, reduces chromatic aberration. I think Brother Bryson of the Minneapolis Film Service is to be thanked for having sprung this proposition on us. It comes just at the right time, too, when there is a holder on the market which will, if not entirely stop, at least will very largely reduce breakage, so that we feel justified in recommending a high priced condenser lens, which we could not consistently do before.

Licensing of Schools.

New York City writes:

> In June 20th issue is an article entitled "High Class Comedy," the comedy consisting of replies made by applicants for operator's license when facing the Board of Examiners. I am myself, or have been a student at an operator's school in this city. I was highly interested in the article, but was in no way surprised at the answers given by applicants for license. If you only knew the kind of instruction pupils in these schools, or at least the one I attended, are given, you would readily understand the why and wherefore of the answers. There are no demonstrations, no practical operating, and very little explaining at the school. There are not even the necesssary machines and tools for learning. I believe there should be a license exacted from all moving picture operators' schools, for the reason that, at least in some of them, would-be-operators are simply being defrauded of their money, and can never hope to pass a competent examination through knowledge gained at the school.

As to the licensing of schools, why presumably they are licensed, though I am not certain about that either. In any event, however, the only effect of a license would be that in case of fraud being proven the license could be revoked. But, as a matter of fact, the same thing can be done, in effect, by making a complaint to the proper authorities, whereupon the proprietor of the school would undoubtedly be made to answer in the courts, and would, in effect, be put out of business were the charges substantiated. There is no need at this time for schools. They are, in the opinion of the editor, perpetuating a fraud, at least to the extent of holding up inducements to men who pay for a course, well knowing that the student will find when his course is completed that, even though he be a competent operator, the field is already overcrowded with experienced men. There is, even now, a long waiting list, numbering, I think, close to a thousand, of applicants for examination for licenses, and, moreover, there are far more licensed operators right here in New York City than there are jobs.

Shutter for Half Size Lens.

The Nicholas Power Company informs us that it has designed a shutter to give perfect results when working with half size objective lens. As operators who have used these lenses well know, there is a heavy travel ghost when the ordinary shutter is used with a half-size objective, unless the lens be stopped down to about one half its diameter. This can, of course, be overcome by increasing the width of the main blade, but when this is done the width of the main blade is so disproporitonate to the width of the flicker blade, or blades, that heavy flicker results. The Nicholas Power Company has designed, and is prepared to furnish a shutter blade to take care of this proposition, and those using a Power's machine and half size objective, can now obtain the same from that company, in either two or three wing style. This blade, of course, cuts a rather heavy percentage of the light, but it nevertheless gives perfect results on the screen.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

The new second edition of the

MOTION PICTURE HANDBOOK FOR MANAGERS AND OPERATORS

420 Pages Illustrated

By F. H. Richardson

$2.50 Each Postage Paid

will be the standard textbook on the subject for many years.

Address all orders and remittances to

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Comments on the Films

Licensed.

SWEEDIE THE SWATTER (Essanay), July 13.—This comedy number is excellently photographed but it is unfortunately not strong in plot interest. The mere employment of the eccentric hired girl does not serve to rouse the interest of observers and the subsequent proceedings do not catch hold. The auto chase and other closing features had plenty of action but for some reason the number did not prove much of a winner.

THROUGH BOSNIA AND DALMATIA (Scenic). The Tombs of the Ancient Japanese Emperors, Annam (Indo-China—Scenic) and the Water Falls at Aragonia, Spain (Travel—Pathe), July 14.—A triple-subject reel that is highly interesting from an educational point of view.

AN EGYPTIAN PRINCESS (Selig), July 14.—Written by Lewis S. Cornell and produced by Walter Clark Bellowe. This is a rather wild and wonderful picture production but never-the-less it is interesting. Several complications occur which are quite amusing. Frank Weed, as an old chemist, Vere Hamilton, as his wife, Grace Darmond and Palmer Bowman are the principals and make this a highly enjoyable offering.

ACCUSED (Kalem), July 14.—The caption of this should be "Wrongly Accused." A sum of money is missing which is a payment on a mortgage and is carelessly left on the desk. It later disappears. An employe is accused of having stolen the money and is discharged. The whole plot is somewhat far-fetched and covers a wondrous amount of territory, but in the final it is discovered that a rat was the purloiner and it all ends happily.

AT THE FOOT OF THE HILL (Essanay), July 14.—This without exception, is a picture that appeals in heart interest and Mr. Commerford, while being an old actor in the legitimate line, loses nothing in the silent drama. His work is magnificent. Some heroic action is made necessary by the author, but the grand old man meets the requirements. This picture will not fail to please any audience anywhere.

THE TWO DOCTORS (Edison), July '4.—Charles M. Seay has written an interesting photoplay that is out of the ordinary and George A. Lessey has ably produced it with a splendid cast, including Augustus Phillips, Joe Manning, Sally Crute, John Sturgeon and others. It illustrates the different dispositions of two men—in the profession of medicine—one careless the other careful. The outcome is very satisfactory, and a life lesson is taught.

TOUGH LUCK (Lubin), July 14.—Written by E. W. Sargent and produced by Frank Griffin. This is a real comedy and Billy Bowers made of Mr. Boggs a laughable character. Julia Calhoun was Mrs. Boggs and helped along, as did the others in the cast. The plot is a good one. On the same reel with "He was Bad."

HE WAS BAD (Lubin), July 14.—On the same reel with "Tough Luck." Another of E. W. Sargent's, directed by Gerald T. Hevener. John and Matty Edwards are the principals in this and with the assistance of a good cast of colored people they make it a sprightly offering.

THE EVER-GALLANT MARQUIS (Edison), July 15.—An entertaining half-reel comedy, with Harry Beaumont appearing as the marquis. His proposed present of a valuable garter to one of the ladies gets him into a duel. Good light comedy.

AN UP-TO-DATE COURTSHIP (Edison) July 15.—This, on same reel with above, proves amusing. The widow's rivals take her riding in a buggy, on a motorcycle and finally in an auto. The latter explodes. This has some laughs in it.

THE FABLE OF NAPOLEON AND THE BUMPS (Essanay), July 15.—This comedy number opens with some interesting views of the author, George Ade. He is seen feeding chickens on his farm and later in the act of writing the scenario which follows. The story is that of a young clerk who consults a phrenologist and gets an idea that he is another Napoleon. Bitter experiences cure him of the notion. An original conception worked out entertainingly.

THE ARRIVAL OF JOSIE (Vitagraph). July 15.—This comedy number gives Josie Sadler an opportunity for some clever character work. The opening scenes are in a boarding house in Germany where she waits on table—very clumsily. Later she comes to America, where she meets the German grocery boy, impersonated by Billy Quirk. They, of course, fall in love. There seemed to be no particular climax to this, but it makes a pleasing character sketch.

THE PROSPECTORS (Biograph), July 16.—A pretty Western story in which two prospectors love the same girl. She prefers one and is forced to defend herself with a gun from the other. The picture is not very novel in plot but is finely photographed, sincerely acted and contains many attractive Western scenes. Its leisurely development gives strength to the story.

SNAKEVILLE'S NEW WAITRESS (Essanay), July 16.—A typical ranch comedy, abounding in scenes that are true to the life, such as washing up for meal time, etc. Sophie's arrival means the usual strife to win her. Slim's efforts to take her horseback riding were amusing. This proves very pleasing.

THE LITTLE CAPTIVE (Vitagraph), July 16.—A good story with the scenes laid at a military post where Sonny Jim, played by Bobby Conelly, is taken on a visit. The manner in which he aids the escaped convict to get away makes an appealing yarn and the closing scenes were particularly effective. A pleasing number with a touch of heart interest in it.

PIGS IS PIGS (Vitagraph), July 17.—This classic bit of humor is here told in pictures and to see the express company floundering about trying to determine whether guinea pigs is pigs, while the family of the original two is multiplying as though to cover the earth, is very laughable. The price for pigs is five cents more per pig then than for domestic pigs and the consignee won't take them on the pig rate. It is well acted with Bunny as the expressman. A good offering.

WANTED AN HEIR (Kalem), July 17.—This farce in which a wealthy old man gives all his relatives a try-out and finds in the awkward but true-hearted girl the only worthy one, may be not new; but as here put on gives good fun to those who watch and will be a good number on the program. Ruth Roland and John Brennon play the chief roles and add much to the amusement. There was a reasonable amount of laughter and it ought to go well everywhere.

THE LIE (Lubin), July 17.—About three years ago a picture made in France utilized this excellent idea in an effective offering. Here, with the self-same situation and the self-same development, the picture is much weaker, mostly from the fact that the idea is suited to a different environment and fails to fit well with the American life. It doesn't convince and Americans will not see these game wardens, who have the right to enter the cabin of even a poacher, or this poacher as native or very interesting. Hardly better than fair as entertainment.

WIGGS TAKES THE REST CURE (Selig), July 17.—While Wiggs, as a man unconvincingly needing a rest, is a bit of a drag, his cure makes the picture lively and furnishes good fun. Two-thirds of the picture seems wasted film and the rest makes a good offering. The idea is not at all new. The photography is clear enough.

THE FATE OF A SQUAW (Kalem), July 18.—A typical story of Indian life, with a pathetic twist at the close. The white man, after losing his memory, is cared for by the Indian girl whom he had befriended. When he recovers his senses he leaves her for his former sweetheart. Charles Bartlett and Mona Darkfeather play the leads very acceptably.

BRONCHO BILLY PUTS ONE OVER (Essanay), July 18.—This is an exceptionally good example of the Broncho Billy series. It pictures Marguerite's thirteenth birthday, though she must have been a little older to marry so speedily thereafter. The story is a pretty one and contains much good humor. Carl Stockdale rises to the occasion by giving us a thoroughly amusing and absolutely convincing picture of an irate male parent. He really infuses new life into this stock character; more of these carefully studied renditions are needed on the screen. A good ranch comedy number.

THE SQUATTERS (Selig). July 18.—There is a good story in this film, but it is so loosely developed that very little feeling gets into the various scenes. It concerns the ousting of some squatters from a factory site, the girl and her lover appearing as sociological workers. The action seems quite scattering at times so that the scenes failed to rise to a strong climax.

SHE WANTED TO KNOW (Lubin), July 18.—This half-reel, written by E. W. Sargent, makes a snappy little offering. The inquisitive wife makes a wild chase after her husband to find out what a certain letter contains. The communication turned out to be a coal bill. This brought laughter from the audience.

ALL FOR LOVE (Lubin), July 18.—A half-reel, with above, which depicts the efforts of Shirtless Holmes, detective. Romaine Fielding, who wrote the comedy, appears in it and he and the village types manage to stir up considerable amusement of a rough-and-tumble sort. The photography is usually clear, but might have been improved in places.

ACROSS THE BURNING TRESTLE (Edison), July 18.—This produces an impressive story written by Francis Lynde, entitled "In Christmas Canyon," when it originally appeared. It shows how the young woman at the station crossed a burning trestle to save an oncoming train. This is sincerely acted and vividly presented; it brings up the climax with a decided punch. The cast includes Mable Trunnelle, Herbert Pryor and Yale Benner. A very good release.

IT WAS SOME PARTY (Biograph), July 18.—This half-reel subject is quite breezy in treatment, as the men and women at the poker party exchange shirts and dresses. The game is raided by the anti-gambling society. This is broad, but will pass.

SOME DECORATIONS (Biograph), July 18.—The housecleaning spell at the Bilkins' residence becomes a very ludicrous knock-about affair. For rough-house amusement this is well pictured and full of life. It will bring laughter. On same reel with above.

THE WORLD AND THE WOMAN (Biograph), July 20.—The novelty in this unusual situation gives a fresh interest to the story which is quite possible. It is the love story of a woman who had been acquitted but whom the world still accused and tells us how she finds vindication many years later in a note left by her husband who had committed suicide and had not been murdered. The acting is not strong. Comments in the theaters tell us that the people are getting mighty sick of insincerely-acted and written love scenes. In spite of these, this picture makes a good offering.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE ABSENT-MINDED PROFESSOR (Edison), July 20.—This Octavius picture will probably be amusing to the patron who has not seen many good comedies; but to the old-timer who has seen the best adventures of Octavius, this number will have a falling away in interest and may in consequence bore him. Octavius suffers by comparison with the best that he has done.

LOVE CLAIRVOYANT (Vitagraph), July 20.—There is good entertainment in watching the development of this situation, although the situation in itself has nothing typical or truly interesting—it is the old, jealous husband story, and we have seen many of it. Expectation is kept wakeful until the climax which is weaker than the development of the misunderstanding that brings the trouble to a head.

Licensed Specials.

FOGG'S MILLIONS (Vitagraph). July 14.—This is a well-produced two-part picture in all respects, and it holds the attention of the spectator by its sheer worthiness. It contains much that demonstrates human frailties, which in the end—in sequence—boomerangs to punish the culprits. Elizabeth R. Carpenter must be given the credit for having produced a splendid vehicle for a superior cast. Van Dyke Brooke, who plays the leading part, Peter Fogg, is the director. Jack Harvey portrays in a natural manner the wronged husband. Norma Talmadge, Kalman Matus and Harry Kendall are in the cast.

CODES OF HONOR (Lubin), July 15.—Sincere acting helps to make convincing this story of the girl shoplifter. Her husband is shot, she is sentenced to prison and her boy child adopted by a family. In later years, after her redemption, she is released and takes the boy again. The piece then shows how the young fellow's love affair is almost wrecked by the reappearance of Kidd Hogg, an old pal of his mother and father. But all turns out right in the end after Kidd's confession. This type of story has come to be quite conventional, but when skillfully handled, as in this instance, it proves interesting. Ormi Hawley plays the lead very acceptably.

THE LAST APPEAL (Selig), July 15.—This two-reel number has numerous faults in construction and is quite improbable, but it gets hold of the interest very strongly toward the close. Quite a lot of suspense is aroused over the prospect of Bell's execution for murder. The hero-convict forges a stay of execution and thus saves his employer's life. The ex-convict was entirely lost sight of for quite a while, as the crime was being shown and during subsequent scenes. This gave the observer time to almost lose interest in him. The confession of the real criminal and his deathbed scene were needlessly horrible. This number has a strong story interest in spite of its shortcomings.

THE EXPRESS MESSINGER (Kalem), July 15.—This is a two-part drama of railroad life, written by E. W. Matlack. The tramps learn of the proposed shipment of diamonds by express, impersonate trainmen and get them from the expressman. Then follows an exciting chase over roof tops and the final recovery of the gems. This is consistent and well handled, though it rouses no very great emotions in the observer. The photography is only fair in places. It contains one entirely new situation, where the operator short-circuits the wires with his watch and sends a message. This makes a railroad story of about average merit.

A SUBLIME DECEPTION (Melies), July 16.—This story of high social life is very artistically developed. The handsome widow takes the blame for her married daughter's flirtation, but in the end the girl confesses and all concerned are eventually made happy. This number is enacted by an especially pleasing cast and contains many attractive scenes. It is well worth while.

A HOUSE BUILT BY ELECTRICITY (Melies), July 16.—This completes the second reel of above. It is an extremely clever piece of trick photography, in which an entire house is seen to rise from ruins. This is, of course, accomplished by reversing the film, but the effect is astonishing. An exceptional novelty.

THE CROSS OF CRIME (Lubin), July 16.—A two-reel number written by Will N. Ritchey and enacted by a good cast, including L. C. Shumway and Louise Dunlap. Ernest steals an express package containing money and the crime follows him all his life, even threatening the happiness of his daughter after she grows up. The chief drawback in such a story is the lack of agreeable scenes, but it is sincerely presented and depicts vividly the terrible consequences of crime. The penitentiary scenes, where Ernest helps quell the mutiny, were well put on. This is somewhat sordid but strongly presented.

MEG O' THE MOUNTAINS (Edison), July 17.—A two-part melodrama by Richard Ridgely and set in a Southern community. The story is fashioned after the regular, semi-rural romance; but it has suspense in a measure and an entertaining quality. The characters are really ordinary, though the author has endowed Meg with a partial freshness that pleases. The incidents are well thought out and seem new all through. Mabel Trunnelle plays Meg and is the only truly strong element in the offering. The author is also the director.

THE STOLEN FORTUNE (Essanay), July 17.—A two-reel chase picture on the grand scale. It will make laughter but there is too little variety in the incidents after the hero has advertised for one Illuski whom he is led to think the rightful owner of his fortune. The whole city of Chicago turns out to be either Illuski himself or a near relative of that person who, in reality, is fictitious, merely a scheme on the part of the dead uncle who left the fortune to the hero to try his honesty. If it had continuously convinced it would have been much funnier. It is only a fair offering.

THE SONG OF THE GHETTO (Vitagraph), July 18.—A two-reel story of Italian life in Italy and this country. It pictures a double love affair. Rosa's status in the story is always rather vague. The love affair between Yvette and Mario occupies chief interest in the mind of the observer and its development is pictured in an attractive, original way. The cast is an agreeable one throughout. The photography is good and the whole production holds the interest very well in spite of a somewhat hazy idea as to the relationship of characters in the fore part of the photoplay.

A WOMAN'S LAUGH (Selig), July 20.—The story of this two-part picture is decidedly unpleasant and there is a too thinly veiled suggestion of brutality in the climax. A man who has, so the picture says, been ill-treated by a light flirtatious woman, invites her out into a lonely place and then lets her go because he did not want to hurt her good name. There is an appeal in this to numbers; but not to the best.

IN WOLF'S CLOTHING (Kalem), July 20.—Alice Joyce two-part picture that, in spite of its rather artificial situations, creates marked suspense. It accomplishes this by the boldness of its artifice. Like a swiftly moving cloud, it has, with no substance at all, a quality that carries away one watching it. The photography, in this print, is not quite up to Kalem quality, but is fair. A good offering. W. E. Wing is the author.

Independent.

THE VETERAN'S SWORD (Princess), July 17.—The story is weak to the point of being at least, at times, foolish. Yet here is something in the atmosphere of the thing that makes the spectator wish that it were better, one would like to see something convincing of such interesting people as these characters. That what is shown could have happened is more than doubtful, and we dare not call it a good offering. The camera work and the staging are, like the acting, excellent.

THE NEW HOUSEKEEPER (Royal), July 18.—A picture that suggests the French rather than the American method of making a farce. Yet its humor is understandable and will be acceptable to the average patron. It is breezy and lively and a very fair offering.

HENRY'S WATERLOO (Thanhouser), July 19.—A picture in which the same player takes part of all the characters, and there are nine of them. This entails double exposures aplenty and they are all simply perfect. It is a tour de force for the camera man rather than for the actor; for playing different roles is his business. An offering that will interest especially the spectator who realizes that the roles are played by the same man, and we think that most will. That some may not, is due to the actor (Harry Benham) who is competent.

THE CIRCUS (Sterling), July 20.—This is a knock-about comedy, with a circus side-show setting. The fire-eater sets the tents ablaze and a wild scramble ensues. Good stuff of its kind, but the photography is only average.

MUTUAL GIRL NO. 27 (Reliance), July 20.—Perhaps it is too much to expect of any serial to keep up to the high level that this one has maintained for so many weeks. Yet while the present installment is a good deal weaker in interest than those that have just gone by, it is very fair and is probably only sparring for wind in order to get a new set of situations going. Norma meets Mme. Delores, the fortune-teller, who gives her some of the usual stuff—stuff that may be, we must confess, of deep interest to some who take stock in such. But there are many whom it will make weary.

A RED MAN'S HEART (Majestic), July 21.—The gratitude that obtains even in the heart of a savage is clearly shown in this photoplay and makes of it a rather interesting plot.

UNIVERSAL IKE, JR., IN A CUPID'S VICTORY (Universal Ike), July 21.—Ike, Jr., and Louise grow up together and decide to get married. The wedding preparations are a very jumbled affair. Better costuming and cleaner settings would have made this more attractive. The story is not very funny and, as a whole, this low comedy offering is only fairly successful.

THE PENDULUM OF FATE (Thanhouser), July 21.—A two-part picture taken mostly along the shore. It has a prologue in which one daughter of a rich man, after being rescued by a life-guard, elopes, and the other daughter marries a banker. In this part there is much conventional love-making with kisses and the like. Then, after skipping several years, the conditions of the two cousins (Fairbanks Twins who look alike) are contrasted. One is the orphan granddaughter of a poor fisherman and the other is with her parents on a beautiful yacht. Fate gets them mixed up, and parents and grandfather both think it a touch of the brain, until after a well-handled, speedy climax, all are happy ever after. It was built commercially for the twins; and is not especially convincing, yet will please on account of its theme; its players and the pretty backgrounds and well-handled scenes.

IZZY AND THE DIAMOND (Reliance), July 22.—One feels that this story strives to be interesting rather than is so spontaneously. The incident is slight and not convincing. Yet it is very well acted and the general handling of it is as perfect as could be with this material. A fair offering.

LEST WE FORGET (Majestic), July 24.—Produced by Jack O'Brien. It is a very interesting photoplay in all respects. Raoul Walsh, Ralph Lewis, Marian Cooper, and Mrs. Cromwell have the leading characters and do fine work. The photography is of the best and the beautiful scenes taken in Hollywood, Los Angeles, add to the beauty of this offering.

THE SHERIFF OF BISBEE (Kay-Bee), July 24.—This is a peculiar sort of plot, but has probably been taken from an actual occurrence. A candidate for sheriff denounces a friend for selling liquor to the Indians. The depredator lays himself amendable to the law for the purpose of obtaining money for an operation on his child. It is a very interesting and absorbing plot.

IRENE'S BUSY WEEK (Victor), July 24.—Irene Wallace makes a cute appearance as a boy in portions of this film. The story itself is not clear at the beginning and, in spite of interesting possibilities for a good comedy, fails to get over strongly.

WHEN DEATH RODE THE ENGINE (Eclair), July 26.—This is melodramatic and full of intense, vivid action. Robert Frazer plays the sheriff who pursues the Mexican with the baby. We fear the baby would have been killed any number of times during the exciting chase on engines and subsequent struggle. But it all goes to make a very successful offering of the thriller variety.

AN AWKWARD CINDERELLA (Rex), July 26.—Robert Leonard and Ella Hall appear in this pretty story, based on the old Cinderella fairy tale. The serving maid goes to the ball in a borrowed costume and loses one of her ungainly shoes, but, of course, the hero discovers her. Pretty in treatment and cleverly handled.

WHEN MEMORY RECALLS (Frontier), July 26.—In spite of the unusual villainy displayed by one of the characters and his tendency to indulge in the melo-ello stuff, this may be considered a fair release.

THEIR PARENTS' KIDS (Crystal), July 28.—This same very farcical situation has been used a number of times already. It is a stock property, though laughably ridiculous and will, in this handling, make a serviceable number.

CHARLIE'S TOOTHACHE (Crystal), July 28.—On the same reel with the farce just noticed, this comic will surely make 'em laugh. It is broad yet free from vulgarity and can be relied on.

UNIVERSAL IKE, JR., IN HIS CITY ELOPEMENT (Universal Ike), July 28.—This Ike, Jr., number struck us as much funnier than the average of the series. Ike's struggles to get his wife and the goat to the city were certainly ridiculous, and the sleeping-car scenes were best. For just plain horseplay this is well worth while and is free from offense.

JIMMY KELLY AND THE KIDNAPPERS (Joker), July 30.—Comic burlesque that mixes fun with melodrama in a way to please the average spectator. One fails to find in it much wealth of incident; and repetition makes portions of it a bit slow, but it has a good deal of truly laughable business.

AN INDIAN ECLIPSE (Nestor), July 30.—This is a well-pictured Indian story, but it opens a little too vaguely to be strong. The best scenes are where Lawson saves his life by foretelling an eclipse of the sun. An old idea worked out on the screen in a fairly entertaining manner.

MATTY, THE UNIVERSAL BOY (Imp), July 30.—"Matty Breaks Into Vaudeville" is the subtitle of this installment and the best thing (in fact the only good thing in it) is the wonderfully clever imitations of Matty, who, on the stage, "takes off," and to laughable perfection, Ford Sterling, King Bagott in Absinthe, Gertrude Hoffman and Harry Lauder. This is the truly funny part and fills the best portion of the film. The celebrities that he meets and all of the a la Mutual Girl stuff in it is rather thin and uninteresting.

THE TANGLE (Powers), July 31.—Grace Cunard and Francis Ford appear in this. The girl requests her lover to kill Pedro, thinking he has murdered the priest. But it develops that Pedro merely slaughtered a chicken with the bloody knife. This is neither humorous nor dramatic, and hence does not make any great success one way or the other. The garden scenes were attractive.

WIFIE'S BUSY DAY (Joker), Aug. 1.—There are good laughable jokes in this picture, but it is rough and a bit more vulgar than usual. It is very likely to make 'em scream in most places.

Independent Specials.

THE PAINTED LADY (Majestic), July 19.—It is hard to see how this two-part picture got its name, which has been used before; it doesn't seem to apply here. The first part shows how one sister (Dorothy Gish) came to the city to escape her mother's old fashioned ways and there went wrong, and how the other sister (Blanche Sweet) came to rescue her. The inner significance of the situation is kept down and ought not to offend. The first reel lingers a little and the picture's whole meaning and object is accomplished in the second, which shows how the other sister accomplishes her purpose. In this, there is much of the unexpected (it is bold and convincing) and much that is powerfully dramatic and the close gets hold of real life in a strong-souled way that is commendable. It ought to go well. In the first reel there are several places where one notices Griffith mannerisms (whether he made it or not) and these, seen so often, weaken it; but at the climax, Blanche Sweet's acting is mighty fine.

A MAN'S WAY (American), July 20.—A two-part offering contrasting a man's and a woman's idea of a career. It is not clear-cut and fails to get to its destination convincingly. The man's dreams are vague and he neglects the love of an intellectual woman for his dreams. Later he marries a girl of the hills, whom he teaches to read and write, but leaves her to return to his "ambitions." She becomes acquainted with the first woman, who takes her to the city and makes a great opera singer of her. The man has now found a mine, meets her again and she forgives him. The camera work, including some perfect double exposures, is highly commendable and there are some lovely scenes in it. The general handling and the acting are fine.

JIM CAMERON'S WIFE (Domino), July 23.—A two-part western melodrama of well known type in which, at the end, the outlaw, so badly wounded that he can neither escape or fight, lets the wife of Jim claim the reward for his capture. This money saves the little family from the "wolf at the door," which had been growling of late. In the picture, there is plenty of fast riding, shooting off of pistols, a stage hold-up and other things that are liked by the more elemental spectators. A fair rather than a noteworthy offering. The photography is clear and the characters are played pleasingly.

WHEN ROMANCE CAME TO ANNE (Imp), July 27.—An excellent two-part picture, which was put on by William Drew and in which Gwendolin Pates plays a homely (would you believe it?) rube-like girl, horribly awkward but a good cook. A rough but well-to-do farmer marries her, because he needs a wife and she is in love with him. He is hard in his ways to her, but she finds a way to look very pretty and an artist comes. The farmer has to fall in love with her—he had wanted to do it before, but thought it unbecoming to be a kissing kind of man. This is only a very rough outline of an unusually interesting picture story. It has some wonderful photography and will please by its many good points. A desirable offering.

THE DUPE (Eclair), July 29.—A strong, well developed story of how two crooked business men make a dupe of a young fellow who inherits a fortune. Later the fake mining stock develops into the real thing and the hero is richer than ever. Robert Frazer and Mildred Bright play the leads, with Helen Marten as the daughter of one of the crooks. This is an unusually strong offering of its type, working up naturally and easily to a fine climax. A good release.

CIRCLE 17 (Rex), July 30.—A two-reel number, with Herbert Rawlinson, Wm. Worthington and Anna Little in the cast. The old Italian and his daughter are pursued by the Black Hand after leaving Italy and the hero is kept busy saving them from death. This is unusually well constructed and acted for this type of picture. It has a good story value and the climax is strong.

TRIBAL WAR IN THE SOUTH SEAS (Bison), Aug. 1.—A two-reel production, taken in the Hawaiian islands. The members of the Bison company compete with the natives in shedding their wearing apparel and the makeups on the whole are very breezy. The story follows the conventional trend of this type of tales, having to do with rivalry for the hand of the king's daughter. The number closes with the tribes in combat. A few native sports were introduced in the course of the story.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 17 (Warner's Features).—A three-reel picture from the Milano Studio. It makes fun of a terribly tragic situation and gets a good laugh "over." One can see perhaps that the situation is not being developed with relentless logic, but it is as logical as many offerings. In fact, it makes a very fair story, giving us earnestly enough the adventures of a wee lad in the hands of a crook who makes his living by selling children. The baby is born to the sister of a countess, whose husband doesn't know anything about it. The sister is dead and the countess is looking out for the child, when she loses track of it following a fire in the baby home. The laughable turn at the end is all unexpected and adds much to the value of the film. A pretty fair offering.

A FIGHT FOR LOVE (Warner's Features).—A very enjoyable melodrama offering of "the good old kind" and in three reels. It is kept lively, if not at all times sternly logical, has interesting backgrounds and is pleasingly acted. It is also competently staged and clearly photographed. A tale of a love that didn't run smooth, it has its double-dyed villain, its heroine and its hero, whom the unscrupulous man schemes to supplant in her affections. The Pyramid studio made it in Westchester County, N. Y., and it is a picture that will surely entertain and can safely be counted on.

LETTER FROM AN OPTIMISTIC EXHIBITOR.

Allentown, Pa., July 15, 1914.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir: Under Facts and Comments I noticed that a correspondent enumerated a long list of good features, and then deploring the fact that the supply of this kind of films is giving out.

Would it not be a blessing to the exhibitor who is buying a "cat in the bag" on the majority of multiple reels to start a depot through which the exhibitors could exchange comments and views on features? I would gladly contribute several dollars to supply such a bureau. Through the Picture World I have had some great productions, that I could conscientiously boost, while on the other hand, some are not worth showing, not saying anything about the price you are obliged to pay for them. So-called "Features" are getting too numerous and unless the reputable houses start a movement to eliminate exchanges that buy only cheap and inferior films, the cause will suffer.

I think "The Adventures of Kathleen" and "Perils of Pauline" series have done more to stimulate and build up business than all the special features combined. When you pack a house of 1,400 capacity in thirty-five minutes after opening the door, as I have done the last few weeks, it is enough proof of some unusual interest.

My business last week was bigger in "velvet" than any week, except one in 1913, and only during January of this year did I "clean up" more money.

For the benefit of those who think it's too hot to get crowds in the summer I wish to state that I had a ventilator put in the center of my auditorium, 12x12x12 feet; have two large exhaust fans going and six oscillating wall fans, windows and doors open, making it more comfortable than in the parks. Anyone can have a fan for the asking, but seldom any use them or have occasion to.

Have also installed a "Wurlitzer Unit Organ," Style "H"; a Gold Fibre Screen, showing pictures in full daylight; use G. E. M. C. rectifier and the best machines and lenses procurable. Think my pictures are better than any others that I see. The ventilator in the center of my auditorium works wonders in creating circulation of fresh air. I use heralds with features, which brings good results. Run a daily ad. in all the papers, also a notice as per enclosed clipping.

By giving a clean show, perfect projection, the best pictures, good music and comfort, there is no dull season.

Yours very truly.

Manager Pergola Theater. D. E. KNOOR.

Censor on Rampage

Breitinger, of Pennsylvania, Objects to John Barleycorn—Film Men's Defiance—Show Picture at Y. M. C. A.

J. LOUIS BREITINGER, one of the censors of the Keystone State, has come out as an opponent of "John Barleycorn," believing, it appears, that "John Barleycorn" is not quite as black as the films have painted him. The representative of the Bosworth Co., which produced the picture, is William E. Smith. He and C. E. Pierce, who staged the moving picture story, have endeavored for several days to overcome Breitinger's objection thereto, but Breitinger has been obdurate.

In despair, Smith and Pierce gave a free exhibition of the picture at the Young Men's Christian Association of Philadelphia to an audience of ministers and temperance workers. The audience pronounced the picture a strong moral lesson.

"Mr. Breitinger's chief clerk threatened me with arrest if we dare show the film here this afternoon," said Mr. Smith. "That was a mere foolish threat, however, as the law clearly permits us to give private exhibitions of a picture of a chartered association without the approval of the board of State censors. We gave this exhibition merely to demonstrate that there is nothing in the slightest degree objectionable in the picture and that there is no sound reason whatever for its rejection by Mr. Breitinger.

J. Louis Breitinger.

"Of course, we understand well enough what interests object to this picture. In California we were offered $25,000 to suppress it until after the November election. But the picture went on in California, and it will go on here as sure as there is justice in the land.

"We told Mr. Breitinger that he could not have any reason for suppressing this picture, as it has been approved as a strong temperance argument by ministers and church workers all through the land. We offered to submit all the written church indorsements to him. But he waived them aside with the remark that he did not care a rap for them because all those ministers, church workers and temperance people 'are biased, anyway, against the other side.' This 'other side' that Mr. Breitinger talks about is, of course, the rum side, and that seems to be the only side Mr. Breitinger is considering.

"He refused to give us his objections to the picture in writing. But his verbal objections were all opposed to the pictorial attack on rum. He has insisted that nearly every scene in which booze is shown in its hideous features shall be eliminated or softened and that an extra 500 feet of pleasant domestic life be added to rob the picture of its dramatic climax. That is impossible. Jack London has written a story and we have produced a picture that teaches a lesson. We do not grant any State censor the right or power to strip either the story or the picture of its educational value."

Written down from memory, Mr. Pierce gave out some of Censor Breitinger's suggestions for improving Jack London's temperance story as follows:

Reduce the scene of boy drinking beer from pail.

Reduce drinking scene at Italian picnic. Eliminate caption about boy's fear of Italians.

Eliminate caption about no deal being consummated without Barleycorn.

Reduce drinking scene after return to yacht.

Reduce Japanese drinking scene.

Reduce drinking scene in saloon after sailors' payday.

Extend domestic scene at end, showing the true reformation of the man.

At Censor Breitinger's office in the Franklin Building it was said that he was out of town and that no action would be taken against the men who exhibited "John Barleycorn" at the Y. M. C. A. until Breitinger's return to the city.

Among those who witnessed the presentation of the pictures were the Rev. Harry M. Chalfant, of the State Anti-Saloon League; Secretary Eastman, of the Y. M. C. A.; a number of ministers and several prominent women.

The Great Stroke

World Film Corporation Shows an Interesting Five-Part Crook Picture with a Military Beginning.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE World Film Corporation will release on July 27 "The Great Stroke," a five-part crook drama, with an army touch in the first part. It is an interesting story, and it is punctuated by incidents that thrill. The maker of the picture has not hesitated to permit the hero-crook to go not only scot free of punishment for his later crimes, but has given to him his old sweetheart, who will, it is to be assumed, in the future protect the hero from himself. If there are a few instances where the action is facilitated through thinly veneered artifice—as, for instance, when the accomplice obtains a position as messenger in the jewelry establishment, application for which certainly would have subjected to severe scrutiny the record of the man—there are also stunts that more than compensate. One of the latter is the climb along the side of the moving train and the photographing of the criminal under the car as he executed his "great stroke" of putting to sleep by the anaesthetic route the bearer of the package of pearls.

The acting is of the best quality. If the story be melodramatic certainly the work of the players is not. At the head of the excellent cast is Anthon De Verdier, a man of fine stage presence and worthy to rank with the best screen stars. He has the figure of a soldier, and he knows how to wear a uniform. He has the part of Lieutenant Egan, an officer who spends at cards much of the money of Colonel Hudson, his uncle. When the colonel shuts down on the supply the young man steals from the family safe in order to meet a debt of honor. If this be a singular way of meeting the obligation he follows it up by the unexpected, promptly confessing his misdeed. He is arrested on complaint of the uncle and sent to jail for two years. On his release he proceeds to make good his threat to his uncle—that he will continue a thief. Mary, the colonel's daughter, is Egan's steadfast friend. It is through her influence and her aid that, already hunted by the police, he is induced to take ship with her for parts that are new and to start right. Miss Agnes Norlund has the role of Mary; what she has to do is well done. Colonel Hudson gives us a good performance.

Scene from "The Great Stroke" (World Film).

The picture is carefully staged. In the beginning there is the smart military air that practically always obtains in Scandinavian pictures—and we are making a guess that this is from that geographic section. The release of the former lieutenant from his two years' term in prison is impressive. The use of the reflectors on an upper floor of the criminals' abode to show who is at the door below is novel on the screen. The elevator and the doors work perfectly. From a spectacular viewpoint the scenes about the railway train and under the carriage are the best. The later happenings, where the police net is narrowing about the band, are full of interest. The picture is well photographed.

A Group of Eclectics

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

"The Royal Impostor"—Four Parts.

THIS brilliantly colored picture is entitled to great praise. The plot, reminiscent of the "Prisoner of Zenda," is well conceived and consistently carried out, developing very strong dramatic situations, especially in the last two parts.

The king of one of the mythical Balkan states dies and leaves the kingdom to his son, a dissolute prince, who is disliked by the court and the populace. This prince bears a striking resemblance to one of the soldiers of his army. This soldier is in love with a girl of his own class, and they plight their troth before he goes away to the front. By an accident the prince meets the young girl and, enchanted by her beauty and modesty, he covets her. She tells her lover of her danger, and the latter kills the prince. Confronted with the consequences of his terrible act, he decides to take advantage of his striking resemblance to the prince. He casts the dead body of the prince out of the window of his castle into the sea below and then dons the uniform of his double. The deception is at first successful, and even when the body of the prince is found, the discovery of the real situation is delayed by the belief of the girl that the body cast up by the waves is that of her lover.

A number of interesting situations now arise, and the struggle in the soul of the prince, tormented at once by his conscience, and constantly tempted by a desire to see his sweetheart, is depicted with great dramatic power. The impostor tries to give the people kind and beneficent laws, which is distasteful to the court. The killing of the supposed soldier is attributed to the prince, and his ministers use the girl, who thinks that the prince is the murderer, to further their own purposes. The girl, in the belief that the man on the throne is the murderer of her sweetheart, lures the former into a room, ready to stab him to death. She then makes the terrifying discovery that the man whom she had promised to kill was not the murderer of her lover but, on the contrary, her lover himself. She lets him escape, but the conspirators gathered around the house where the lovers met are on the alert, and when the supposed prince steps out of the door he is attacked and killed.

The acting is good, the settings all appropriate and at times very striking and impressive. The photography leaves nothing to be desired. In these days, when colored pictures of merit are very rare, such a feature as "The Royal Impostor" will be very acceptable on the program of every exhibitor.

"The Corsair"—Four Reels.

Turks, pirates, veiled ladies from harems, dancers, eunuchs and soldiers pass in kaleidoscopic disorder on the screen, and when the end comes we are mildly wondering how so much trouble could originate in such a short time.

It appears that a band of pirates abducted several women from the harem of a sultan. The living spoils are brought before the chieftain of the pirates, impersonated by Crane Wilbur. This actor, well known for his success in juvenile leads and similar characters, was ill cast for such a ferocious part and made a first class parlor pirate.

Scene from "The Corsair" (Eclectic).

What there was of the spectacular in the picture was good, notably the scenes in the harems. The settings were appropriate and beautiful, almost without exception, and the photography of the best. A little pruning would do no harm.

"When Rome Ruled"—Five Parts.

This feature, made in this country, scarcely keeps the promise which its title implies. In visualizing classic themes, and especially stories dealing with any period of Roman history, high standards have been set in the past, and whenever a production falls decidedly below this standard it is apt to disappoint the public, which is now used to the best.

The introduction of artificial scenery for outdoor settings is scarcely ever justified, but in a big production dealing with a big subject it is particularly displeasing. The story deals with the early Christian era, and it appears that the high priests of the temple of Jupiter, singularly enough named Caiphas, is desperately in love with a Christian maiden. A lot of intrigue follows, during which the Christian maiden is supposed to be greatly harassed by lions. The young lady is finally thrown into an arena, of which, however, we see but a very small corner. Through a happy accident, she is released at the last moment by her gallant lover, and her rival, who opened the door leading to the arena to get her flowing robes out of the jamb, is in some way thrust into the arena. We get a flash of the rival and the lion in embrace, but it seems by no means a hostile embrace. No doubt the lady knew the lion. It is probable that she was the trainer, for, as an actress, she was impossible.

The acting of the other principal characters was quite acceptable, with the exception of the man taking the part of the high priest. He both looked and acted like Eddy Foy, which was rather preposterous for a high priest of Jupiter. The photography was good throughout, and some of the outdoor settings were well chosen.

"Detective Craig's Coup"—Five Parts.

This is one of those modern detective stories which have attained quite a degree of popularity with moving picture audiences. It abounds in interesting and novel detail and dramatic situations. The story is written around the tragic adventures of a young man who became the innocent victim of counterfeiters and was cast into prison for four years. Though anxious and determined to avoid the gang of counterfeiters which had been the cause of his original undoing, he is dodged by the leader at every footstep and threatened with exposure. He loses one position after another through the persistent hounding of Dalton, the chief of the gang, and is at last compelled to join the gang. He is determined, however, to shake off the gang at the earliest possible moment, and, learning of their plan to rob the bank of his former employer, he sends a message of warning. The robbery is discovered and all the members of the gang are arrested. The young man who had given the warning is arrested, too, but his innocence is established, and everything ends happily.

There are many clever situations, such as the counterfeiters in their den. The ruse of Detective Craig in spying upon them is a decidedly original piece of detective work, while the scheme of the counterfeiters to make their den look like an artist's studio at the approach of the slightest danger is both startling and amusing. The chase of the criminals on the waters of the Hudson, the police boat acting as the pursuer, is full of thrills and strongly realistic. Settings and photography are decidedly good, and the acting leaves little to be desired. The part of the unfortunate victim of circumstances was taken with considerable skill, enlisting and holding the sympathies of the audience. The feature, it seems to me, could be made to gain in strength by being made somewhat shorter.

"MONEY." (United Keanograph Film Co.)

"Money" is the name of the big, spectacular, six-reel production which the United Keanograph Film Co., of Fairfax, Cal., announces for its first offering to a market discriminating. Its theme is timely, dealing with the financial, political, social and economical question of the day. In as much as money is something which interests everybody more or less, particularly more, the title is one close to the interests and ambitions of all of us.

James Keane, president and general manager of the company, was also the author of the scenario and producer of the picture. George Scott was in charge of the camera work.

Massive is the adjective to describe the production and it will class with the colossal master films of all brands. In one scene 2,000 men are used.

The subject deals with the power of the man who controlled the world, and his downfall through his overrating of his ability to conquer public opinion, the mighty agent which has humbled the strongest. The press of New York is a prime factor in bringing equity and justice to the workingman. Throughout runs the love theme, its motives closely interwoven with the rest of happenings.

Indiana Exhibitors Protest

Think They Should Have "One Wonderful Night" in the Regular Service—It is in G. F. Co.'s Exclusive Program Now.

When the McClure Company was promoting the contest for the hero of the picture, "One Wonderful Night," it called upon the exhibitors of the country to assist them in securing votes for the contestants and to give publicity to the forthcoming feature. The Essanay Company won the prize and made the picture. It was good enough to be put in the General Film Company's exclusive service and that makes the exhibitor pay an extra price for the picture if he wants to run it.

Naturally the exhibitor who has given some time and energy to popularizing a picture in advance is inclined that he ought to come in for some consideration when the picture is released; hence, the kick from Indiana which is published herewith:

McClure Publishing Company, New York.

Gentlemen: The Essanay Company are producing your story "One Wonderful Night." The exhibitors over the country who took an interest in your voting contest, expected to be able to run this picture in their regular service, the same as we ran "What Happened to Mary" and "Who Will Marry Mary?"

After millions of people take an interest in this story and in the voting contest, expecting to see their favorite actor on the screen, they are to be disappointed because the Essanay Company are releasing this picture through the General Film Company's exclusive program.

Gentlemen, do you know what the "Exclusive program" is? It is a program the price of which is prohibitive. We exhibitors pay so much a week for our program; if we use any picture in the exclusive program we must pay for our regular service and then pay an additional price for this so-called exclusive picture.

Do you gentlemen think this is fair? We exhibitors and the show-going public boost this voting contest and then the public, our clientele, are prohibited from seeing our favorite actor because we exhibitors cannot afford to pay for this exclusive program.

It looks to me as if the General Film Company was making capital out of your advertisement. If the picture was in their regular releases it would be shown in every town, village and city in the country. As it is, there will be a great many localities that will not run the picture, they can't pay the extra price. Our patrons want to see this picture, they are interested, they want to see the man they elected, and we exhibitors feel that you should take his matter up with the General Film Company and the Essanay Company and demand that this picture be released in their regular program and taken out of the exclusive service. The Indiana Exhibitors' Association and the Indianapolis Managers' Association have asked their officers to write your company and ask that you demand the General Film Company to play fair in this matter and give the exhibitors and the general public a chance to run and see these, their pictures. Very respectfully,

Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

There are two sides to every question and especially this one. The McClure Company spent a lot of money promoting the Hero contest and what the exhibitor did in aiding them was contributed entirely to the McClure Company. When the Essanay Company secured the right to make the picture, "One Wonderful Night," it also spent a lot of money in the effort to make a good picture and one that would come up to the advance announcements. It is just possible that the maker of the picture believes that it is entitled to get back some of that money by charging a higher rental price for it.

It is also a question if the picture would receive the proper presentation if it was released in the regular service. Too many excellent subjects have been ground through the projector at extra speed and with no reference to their good qualities because they were distributed in the regular way. But if an exhibitor is compelled to pay a special price for a picture he is more likely to give it special attention in an effort to get his money back.

However, the Indiana exhibitors are entitled to present their kick and The Moving Picture World prints it at its face value.

MAINE TO BE INDEPENDENT.

At the last meeting of Maine State Branch No. 29, M. P. E. L. of A., it was unanimously voted to relinquish the charter and to form a state league absolutely independent of any national or international organization. A committee was appointed to communicate with the exhibitors of the state and invite them to become members of the new organization, and this work has been vigorously prosecuted by A. P. Bibber, Music Hall, Lewiston, Maine, chairman of the committee. Mr. Bibber has received about fifty applications for membership, and he has called a meeting, to be held at Portland on August 4, for the purpose of organization. Developments thus far indicate that the state league will be a big success.

SPECIAL REPORT of the National Board of Censorship

70 FIFTH AVENUE

NEW YORK CITY

Film Company Essanay

Gentlemen: The ... entitled The Table of the Higher Education ... viewed by the National Board of Censorship on 4-1-14 ... is as follows:

EDUCATIONAL VALUE: Good ✓ Fair ... Poor ...

ARTISTIC VALUE: Good ✓ Fair ... Poor ...

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE: Good ✓ Fair ... Poor ...

MORAL EFFECT: Good ✓ Fair ... Poor ...

NOTE:- Where no check is made after ... is understood. ... "None"

FURTHER COMMENT: Real Comedy!

NOTE:

EDUCATIONAL VALUE.—This term ...

ARTISTIC VALUE.—This term is interpreted ...

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE.—This term ...

MORAL EFFECT.—This applies to the ... good moral effect.

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP

"THE BROKEN BARRIER" (American).

The "Flying A" company, under direction of Thos. Ricketts, scores a tremendous hit in the two-reel production, "The Broken Barrier." Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen play the leads and are ably supported by George Field as the villain, and other American stars.

The topic exploits domestic strife of which the underlying cause proves to be unlimited wealth.

Scene from "The Broken Barrier" (American).

Mr. Coxen, as a man of principle, spurns money as an incentive to marriage, and Winnifred Greenwood, in the sweet innocence of her youth, is dominated by love only. An unlooked for circumstance intervenes and the ship of matrimony strikes a snag at the very launching.

The plot is not a particularly heavy one, but requires marked ability and the production is a testimonial of the calibre of "Flying A" talent. The settings are gorgeous and the photographic quality is immense. The subject will be released July 27th.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs.

By George Blaisdell.

HONORS are coming fast these days to Miss Elaine Sterne, the winner of the thousand-dollar Evening Sun-Vitagraph scenario contest. This remarkably successful young woman has received notice that she has also been declared the winner of a $250 prize in the Collier short-story competition, where nine thousand stories were submitted. Miss Sterne's first scenario was accepted by the Vitagraph Company last September. It was a single reel and was entitled "The Circus and the Boy." It was released July 1. Since the acceptance by the Vitagraph Company of this initial effort of the young woman who seems to write stories with the same facility as that with which she invents photoplays she has received checks for thirty-five scripts. The story that won the Vitagraph contest, it will be recalled, was a five-reel subject, entitled "The Sins of the Mothers." The Vitagraph Company is proceeding with its production, which will be under the direction of Ralph Ince, with Miss Anita Stewart in the leading role.

In a recent chat with Miss Sterne she admitted she was receiving many requests for scripts. She says that she tries to write one play a week, be the same one reel or more. While she devotes much thought to planning a story, and especially to the drafting of a thorough synopsis, once she begins the manual work of putting the tale on paper she usually finishes a play in a day and a half.

Miss Sterne's experience with the pen antedates her work for the screen. She has written children's stories for St. Nicholas among other fiction efforts. She admits that she has made no particular study of dramatic construction, although she has taken a course in short-story writing at Columbia University. "If one has a dramatic style it seems to me he should be able to write both for the screen and the magazines," she says. "Which do I prefer, drama or comedy? Well, I have written quite a number of kinds of stories, including comedies, but I must confess I like dramas best. Yes, I have done some work for Selig and the Universal. In fact, as to the latter, I have just finished a story for one of their particular stars.

"What remarkable things the producers are able to do in putting on a story! I often wonder how they are going to accomplish some of the things I put in the scenarios, but I find them on the screen. While I said I never studied dramatic construction, perhaps I should tell you that I did make a close study of produced pictures. I counted the scenes and noted their length; I followed the action and watched the introduction and the development of the story. I tried to absorb the method of making the good pictures.

"Was I surprised when I learned that I was the winner of the Vitagraph's contest? You may be sure I was. I never dreamed of such a thing coming to me. I submitted only one story. I had another outlined in my mind, but decided to hold it back and to make it into a book. And, of course, now I am glad that I did."

Miss Sterne received her check from the Vitagraph Company on June 13. She is not superstitious. One important fact in connection with the reception of the check is that it reached her before she was twenty-two years old. Surely she has made a remarkable record in the few months she has been writing for the screen. In spite of her youth her head is unturned. She realizes that success means harder work; harder work, because if she has drawn to herself the attention of photoplay followers much will be expected of her—and she is going to try to write stories that will be adjudged better than their predecessors. With youth, ability and ambition on her side, we may expect much of Miss Sterne in the years to come.

* * *

The writer was permitted the other day to get a peek at a studio print of an unusual picture of King Baggot's. Here is a two-reel story in which all the characters, and there are eleven of them, are portrayed by one actor. In the cast are two women. It is safe to say nothing approaching this has ever before been attempted, certainly not in the United States. Of double exposure we have had much; yes, and triple exposure, too. It is doubtful if there has been anything produced which approximates this subject in synchronization, in the exceptional correlation of the actions of the characters in the scene. We have had striking instances of synchronization in isolated cases, or two or three in a picture, but in this story of Mr. Baggot's there are many. The title of the production is "Shadows," and the name was suggested by the many exteriors in which the rays of a low sun play a picturesque part. The script is by George Hall.

The story is one of the detective series in which Mr. Baggot has been featured. The role of the detective is played straight. One of the chief characters is a Chinaman. Another one of prominence is the "heavy." A German innkeeper is most naturally portrayed. So, too, are the women characters, which are the first Mr. Baggot has essayed. "When I started making this picture," said the Imp's leading man, "I had no idea of the amount of work it would involve. I believed I could do it at odd moments. It took me a good part of five weeks, as I had the regular work to keep up with. I have received most efficient assistance from Mr. Schellinger, the cameraman; he has taken deep interest in making the double and triple exposures synchronize. Some scenes we had to take three and four times to get the results we wanted. I found one of my greatest difficulties in the dovetailing of the gestures of the triple exposure."

As the picture was shown in studio and not in plot sequence no attempt will be made at this time to review the story, saving that for the finished production, which has every indication of carrying an interest on the side of the dramatic as well as on that of the novelty. It is safe to say that none will follow the working out of the story with more interest than Mr. Baggot's fellow players and producers and those who have knowledge of the technical side of picture making.

* * *

George Lessey, the well-known player and director who for so long has been seen in Edison films, on Monday, July 26, goes to the Imp studio to assume the direction of King Baggot's company.

* * *

Ormi Hawley dropped into New York one evening last week from Lubinville. When one of her friends remarked that she was more sylph-like than when he saw her last she proudly replied: "Yes, sir; I lost twenty-five pounds in the South this winter."

* * *

Hasn't somebody got a scheme for eliminating mosquitoes in the open-air picture places? Writing just after returning from a two-hour, one-sided battle with the invisible pests—and in a show place situated in one of the highest parts of Brooklyn—there is a temptation to say that "airdomes"—abominable term—are not an unmixed pleasure. Adding to the alleged entertainment was Thanhouser's "Remorse," two reels of reeling drunkenness—and that's no pun. It was a story of elopement, forcing a wife to take her baby and return to her father; the death of a mother caused by the actions of a worthless son, and then the murder of a father as he was trying to prevent a robbery of the same sot's winnings at the gaming table. Cheerful! Not a bit of it! We stuck it out just to see how much misery could be crammed into two reels. To be sure there was a moral for the "vilest sinner" in the intimation that there was a chance for him, but the man that story was meant for would never spend any money to go to see pictures, even if he were sufficiently sober to follow the figures on the screen.

* * *

The contrast was all the sharper by reason of "Remorse" following Vitagraph's pretty story of "Happy-Go-Lucky." It is refreshing again to see two stars of the rank of Earle Williams and Clara Kimball Young in a single reel. It may be reminiscent of days before we thought we were "multiple mad"; certainly it is prophetic of the rehabilitation of the neglected single reel, the foundation of the great motion picture industry. The rebound from the multiple cannot mean the elimination of the longer picture. It will mean, though, as an average, more judiciously conceived and carefully produced subjects, and less of them than we are getting just now or than we have been getting. There'll always be an abundance of demand for quality pictures of any length. The big houses will require or will use the big productions, and the big houses are increasing in numbers as the smaller ones are diminishing.

There is one phase of this subject of single or plural reels of which the public hears little, but which, nevertheless, is a live topic among the more prominent players. Talking during the New York convention with a well-known licensed player he pointed out that since last September he had taken part in but eight pictures. "Miss ——," he continued, referring to one of his studio mates, "has been cast in but six. We get out of touch with our people. Of course, it is pleasant to be chosen for leads in the big stuff, but it means taking us off the screen so far as many of our friends are concerned, as the longer subjects may never reach the smaller communities. If it were given me to decide, I'd prefer the shorter pictures."

Miss Anita Stewart

ONE of the most popular young women on the screen is Miss Anita Stewart of the Vitagraph Company. Her rise has been rapid; it had to be, for she is not yet twenty years old, and she received a high school education before entering picture work. Miss Stewart was graduated from the grammar school as the youngest member of her class. In Erasmus Hall High School, a famous Brooklyn institution, one of her studies was vocal music and piano. She appeared in several amateur operas, taking small parts with distinct success. Miss Stewart's striking features were reproduced by several artists on calendars and high-class pictorial lithography.

Miss Anita Stewart.

Miss Stewart's work in motion pictures is due primarily to the fact that she is the sister-in-law of Ralph Ince, Vitagraph director. For the first six months she filled unimportant roles, learning the business from the bottom up. Her first important role was the lead in "The Wood Violet," released in November, 1912. The sketch of Miss Stewart furnished by the Vitagraph Company says this interpretation remains her greatest success. Possibly the writer of that biography never saw Miss Stewart's remarkable work in "A Prince of Evil," a two-reel Vitagraph, released a year ago. In one scene of that production she attained a height of emotional portrayal that beyond question placed her in the first rank of dramatic interpreters. Miss Stewart has had other successes, among which were "The Lost Millionaire," "The Treasure of Desert Island," and "A Million Bid," the latter the first of the Broadway Star Features. Miss Stewart has been selected as the lead in the thousand-dollar prize scenario written by Miss Sterne.

Carlton S. King

THERE are many who have enjoyed the acting of Carlton S. King, as the hero in a number of photoplays put out by the Edison Company, but there are only a few who recognize in them the Carlton S. King, comedian. Mr. King is meeting with great success, although his identity has been submerged in the assigned roles. What we want to see is some of his comedy, the line which made him in the South and West.

Carlton S. King.

He is a product of the Middle West, having first seen the light of day in St. Louis, the Missouri city that has contributed much theatrical talent to the world. After an early education in the public schools Mr. King took to amusing people. He is not what could be called a dressing-room comedian, but is a sort of combination of the late Sol Smith Russell and Raymond Hitchcock. Many of the critics have dubbed him the "serious comedian." This is a fitting expression because Mr. King has a serious view of professional work and early realized that a thing worth doing, was worth receiving his best efforts. This is the real reason his characters in photoplays, while different from productions in which he made a success on the operatic stage, stand out prominently. However, the sooner the Edison directors offer the opportunity for his comedy work the better it will be for all concerned.

In the part of Theobold, in "Alma, Where Do You Live?" his success on the road was only second to that made by the late Charles Bigelow, who created the role in the New York production. Mr. Weber was seeking another similar part for Mr. King when, in October, 1913, Mr. King joined the Edison stock.

Harry F. Crane

HARRY F. CRANE, who is playing the part of Louis XI in the "Francois Villon" series (Universal), is one of the few survivors of the old school which has a —— but passed into history. In his time he supported Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Stuart Robson, McKee Rankin, Frank Lawlor, Katie Estelle, Kittie Blanchard and other great stars who were well known to the generation.

Harry F. Crane as King Louis XI in Francois Villon Series (Universal).

After the Civil War, in which Mr. Crane served as a drummer boy, he went on the stage against the wishes of his father, who was a Baptist minister. His first part was a juvenile role in "David Copperfield." At the opening of the Grand Opera House in St. Louis, Mr. Crane distinguished himself in the leading juvenile part in "Poverty Plats." Following this engagement he played leading parts in "Oliver Twist," "Sea of Ice," "Black Crook," and other well-known productions until his father prevailed on him to leave the stage. Crane then took up the study of medicine and become a graduate physician. He practiced medicine for many years in Buffalo and finally, on account of his wife's health, he went to California.

The practice of medicine had never appealed to him and through all the years of his practice the call of the stage had always been strong in his blood. He had taken an interest in motion pictures since their beginning and once he arrived in Los Angeles, he set aside all thought of medicine and went back to his first love—the stage, but this time the motion picture stage. Since he has been with the Universal he has distinguished himself in every part which has been given him.

Mr. Crane is a half-brother of Hon. Joseph C. Sibley, ex-Congressman and member of the Standard Oil Company. He was born in Baltimore, Maryland.

J. A. Koerpel Sells His Theatre.

J. A. Koerpel has just sold his Palace Theatre, and under those circumstances has sent in his resignation as vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York.

Mr. Koerpel was one of the hard workers of the association, and the organization loses a valuable officer, whose services have been appreciated by all his coworkers. At present he is summering at Port Henry, N. Y., and upon his return it is said he will affiliate with some large film corporation.

CORRECT ROSTER OF KANSAS LEAGUE OFFICERS.

Through some unexplained circumstances the report of the latest meeting of the Kansas State League, the list of officers elected was wrongly published in the Moving Picture World. To get the matter straight, the following correct list is printed: W. B. Moore, Galena, Kan., president; Archie Blue, Salina, Kan., first vice-president; Fred. Savage, Great Bend, Kan., second vice-president; W. H. Willey, Mulberry, Kan., treasurer; P. J. Concannon, Emporia, Kan., secretary; C. E. Glaman, Wellington, Kan., national vice-president; Guy E. White, Beloit, Kan., sergeant-at-arms.

Laemmle Wins St. Louis Suit

Circuit Court Nullifies April Election of the St. Louis Film and Supply Company—Swanson Enjoined.

THE suit of Carl Laemmle and others against William H. Swanson and others for the control of the St. Louis Film and Supply Company, which has been on trial in the Circuit Court, City of St. Louis and State of Missouri, Judge Cave presiding, has been decided in favor of the plaintiffs, as follows:

Now at this day the court, having heretofore, to-wit: on the 24th day of June, 1914, heard the evidence offered in this case, by the respective parties, and having taken the said cause under advisement and being now sufficiently advised in the premises, doth find the issues joined in favor of the plaintiffs, and doth order, adjudge and decree as follows, to-wit:

That the pretended election of directors of the Universal Film and Supply Company, held April 22, 1914, by defendant Swanson, and the pretended election of officers by defendants on said day, be set aside and for naught held, and that defendant Swanson and defendants Garesche, Rosenthal and Bryant be perpetually enjoined from acting or attempting to act as directors or officers of said company by virtue of said pretended election or elections.

That defendant Swanson forthwith indorse and surrender to stock of said company standing in his name as trustee at the time of said election of April 22, 1914, together with the five hundred (500) shares of stock thereafter issued by defendant Swanson to himself as Trustee.

That the shares of stock attempted to be issued by defendant Swanson to defendants Vital W. Garesche, Barney Rosenthal, John Noelker and Alfred Bryant, or to any other person on or after April 22, 1914, be canceled and for naught held, and that defendant Swanson forthwith surrender to John H. Holliday the stock certificate book and stock certificates of said company, together with the minute book and seal of said company, and that a meeting of the stockholders of the company for the election of directors to serve during the ensuing year and for such other business as may properly come before the meeting be held at the office of the Company at 2116 Locust street, in the City of St. Louis, Mo., on the 27th day of July, 1914.

It is further ordered and adjudged by the court that the costs of this proceeding be taxed against the defendants, and that execution issue therefor.

Draft filed.

Miss Edna Goodrich

MISS EDNA GOODRICH, the famous international beauty, most recently seen in the magnificent production of "Evangeline," at the Park Theater, was secured by Samuel Goldfish of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., for a forthcoming production, for that concern, of one of the classical Belasco successes in motion pictures.

Miss Edna Goodrich.

Miss Goodrich, who is now in London, preparing for her participation in a big English production, will journey to the Lasky studio at Hollywood, Calif., where she will make her first appearance before the camera. She starred for several years with Nat Goodwin in several plays and bears a world-wide repute for her beauty and talent. With luxurious dark hair, huge black eyes and clear-cut features, this famous beauty should make a capital screen type. It took considerable persuasion on the part of Mr. Goldfish to secure Miss Goodrich for the movies, and after prevailing upon her to appear, promised her that if she liked the work and found everything agreeable, Lasky was not amiss to making her a permanent Lasky star.

Immediately after her appearance at the Lasky studios in September, Miss Goodrich will return to London in time to open in her English production, the latter part of November. In all likelihood, she will appear in "The Warrens of Virginia" or "The Darling of the Gods."

POPULAR WINDOW DISPLAY.

Perhaps at no time has it been more forcibly demonstrated the great hold that moving pictures have on the general public than was displayed during the recent exhibition of 800 photographs of popular film favorites in the windows of Brock & Co., jewelers, on Broadway, the principal business thoroughfare of Los Angeles.

In arranging for a unique window display, Brock hit upon the idea of exhibiting the photographs of screen favorites. Photographs of almost every film star known in the United States and Europe were secured and placed in the big display windows of the jewelers. The first day of the exhibition was almost a riot. The display windows were on a line with the sidewalk. The exhibition opened Monday morning, and before eight o'clock a dense throng gathered in front of the store and blockaded the sidewalk. Two policemen were detailed in front of the store, and the men, women and children were compelled to form in line and take their turns at viewing the pictures. Each person was permitted to stay only three minutes to watch the exhibition. A line more than a block long, walking two abreast, soon formed, and the two police officers were compelled to send for reinforcements to assist them in keeping the crowd in line. The never-ending throng of sightseers continued to watch the display until midnight. The following day was a repetition of the first day's exhibition. Crowds gathered early in the morning and continued to gaze at the photographs until after midnight.

"FIRELIGHT." (Eclair.)

A most beautiful production which will be released by the Eclair Film Company, Inc., on Wednesday, August 5th, is "Firelight," a two-reel feature. O. A. C. Lund and Barbara Tennant are the leading players and their roles call for strong dramatic work. The heart of the story is furnished in visions from the flickering firelight and the reflections shown therefrom bring together man and woman, who have been drifting further and further apart. The story is from the pen of Mr. Lund, who, besides playing the leading male role, directed the production.

Scene from "Firelight" (Eclair).

Faversham for All Star

THROUGH his personal representative, Mr. Gallagher, William Faversham, the international stage favorite, has cabled his acceptance of an offer made for his debut in motion pictures with the All Star Feature Corporation, under the direction of Augustus Thomas, Director General of production for that concern.

It has been freely rumored for many months past that Mr. Faversham had completed negotiations with various concerns and just as often has been denied that these negotiations have been successfully consummated. Since his leaving America, the All Star Company has been in constant touch with Mr. Faversham by cable and word has just been received through his representative that he has accepted and signed the contract tendered by the All Star Company.

William Faversham.

The amount to be paid Mr. Faversham for his appearance before the motion picture camera has not been disclosed by the All Star Company, but it is well known that his price is one far in excess of what has heretofore been paid to any person appearing in motion pictures. It will be remembered that the All Star Company has paid Ethel Barrymore a sum exceeding $10,000 for her services, and it is rumored that Mr. Faversham's contract is in excess of even this amount.

The subject chosen for a vehicle in which this most popular of all stars is to be seen is "The World," a most complete spectacular drama, which has enjoyed, in years gone by, a phenomenal universal success as a theatrical attraction. The star character in this production will give Mr. Faversham every possible opportunity to display the versatilities and dramatic accomplishments for which he is famed.

The value of this appearance in motion pictures it would seem is greater than anything before offered to those wide awake picture show-men of the world who appreciate the value of a name such as is offered in this coming production, both as to star and play.

The name of Faversham is almost a household word and the theatrical career of this man is a most remarkable one. His first stage appearance was in 1885, in England, and a short time after that he came to America, where he appeared in "The Prince and the Pauper," and as Valentine Day in "Featherbrain," in 1889, and in 1892 as Prince Haldenwald in "Aristocracy."

Under the direction of Charles Frohman he has been seen amongst other successes in "Lord and Lady Algy," "Brother Officers," "The Younger Son," "Diplomacy" and as Romeo with Maude Adams in "Romeo and Juliet." His first appearance as a star was made in 1901 at the Criterion Theatre as Don Cesare in "A Royal Rival."

Mr. Faversham sails from England on the 29th, aboard the Olympic, and will arrive in America about the 5th of August. Everything is in readiness for him and he will immediately begin work on the production of "The World," at the Yonkers Studios of the All Star Feature Corporation.

A. F. DITTMANN VISITS NEW YORK.

A. F. Dittman, proprietor of the Dittman Theater, Brownsville, Texas, was a visitor to New York following the Dayton convention. It was Mr. Dittmann's first trip to the city in seven years. The Dittmann seats 800 and uses licensed and Mutual service. Mr. Dittmann says Texas has been untouched as yet by the censorship bug, the people being generally satisfied with the work of the National Board. Mr. Dittmann came north partly to get away from the intense heat, which he says this summer has been unusually oppressive.

Edwin S. Porter of the Famous Players taking a Scene in Rome for "The Eternal City."

LEON WAGNER A PHOTOGRAPHIC SHARP.

Leon Wagner, of the Sterling Camera and Film Company, is a motion picture genius. His camera is of his own invention, and he is capable of selecting locations, staging scenes, placing, focusing and grinding the camera handle, then developing the negative, printing and toning the positive, and finally assembling it and projecting the picture complete. Mr. Wagner's control of light conditions under trying circumstances is his strong point. His latest Sterling product, "The Land of the Lost," is a photographic gem.

"TYPHOON" DID THE TRICK.

In the Moving Picture World's story of the Dayton convention it was noted that the ventilation of the basement exposition floor was not as good as it should have been, "even with the assistance of large ventilating fans," and for that President Glantzberg makes a protest. An explanation is due Mr. Glantzberg that the remark to which he takes exception was written before his fan in the cellar was working to full capacity. After the third day of the exposition the full battery of "Typhoon" wind jammers were working and the air in Memorial Hall was the best ever.

Scene from "The Envoy Extraordinary" (Sawyer, Inc.).

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"RESCUED BY WIRELESS" (101 Bison).

Down in the South Seas there are certain islands belonging to Uncle Sam where civilized law depends pretty much on individual taste for its enforcement where white men are, one might say, kings unto themselves. In one of these islands this drama, "Rescued by Wireless," is laid. Written by Henry McRae and actually produced by him in the Polynesian archipelago, the play is a powerful one of love and adventure. Aside from the stirring dramatic features of the story, it carries a big educational interest; in the background is shown all the wonders of that far distant land. The natives are shown making tapa cloth from the bark of wauke trees; water buffalos are seen in their native haunts; groves of papia trees and spreading fields of rice dot the landscape here and there.

Scene from "Rescued by Wireless" (101 Bison).

One of the spectacular and stirring incidents in the piece we find in the second reel: Marie Morgan, an American girl, has been captured and carried off to the mountains by a band of drunken natives under the leadership of Bainbridge, a wireless operator. A mysterious wireless message calls for help and this is received by Capt. Clifford, in charge of the transport and Marie's lover. There is a race to the island, pursuit into the mountains and a fierce battle, natives in great numbers matched against Uncle Sam's soldiers, numbering few, who fight modern arms. Not only is the battle thrilling, but it is unique and rare.

The principal parts have been enacted by such players as Wm. Clifford, Sherman Bainbridge and Marie Walcamp, players who were chosen for their ability and fearlessness, to accompany Mr. McRae on the tour through the South Seas.

As to how the heroine of the play is rescued by wireless—well, that is one of the exciting incidents of the play that you must see to enjoy properly.

The play is in two parts and will be released August 8th.

CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTION ROOM FOR WASHINGTON.

Harry Warner, of Warner's Features, Inc., has made an offer to share with the local exhibitors the cost of a projection room in Washington, D. C., where the local picture house managers could see in advance all releases. This would enable them to judge whether the subjects offered them suited the peculiar needs of their respective following.

"I believe that the exhibitor who does not study his clientele and select the film that it demands is trifling with his business," explained Mr. Warner. "It is needless to say that there is more money in pleasing your patrons than there is in being indifferent. This projection room is an idea which I have had in mind for some time past, and I, as an exchange man, have long since realized that co-operation between the exhibitor and exchange is not only desirable, but necessary, and this plan will be the instrument through which our desire will be accomplished."

The Washington picture men are said to be enthusiastic over the plan, and anticipate its early realization.

"WHEN WAR THREATENS" (Kleine).

A nation on the verge of war sees many exciting events take place, and a series of these furnishes the basis for George Kleine's remarkable photodrama "When War Threatens," a two-part feature subject described as delightfully sensational, with a thrill in every frame of film.

Scene from "When War Threatens" (Kleine).

The story is a gripping one and the situations are intense. Lieutenant Tom Shelley, a young naval officer, is in love with his admiral's daughter, but the young woman prefers Richard Hyde, apparently a substantial business man, but in reality a spy in the pay of the foreign power with which war is threatened. A series of dramatic scenes, which take us into the council chambers of nations, dens of spies and upon the decks of battleships, shows how the young lieutenant saves his country and wins his bride.

In producing "When War Threatens" the manufacturers have spared no pains, and the result of their efforts to create a motion picture of extraordinary appeal is a splendid testimonial to their ability. The subject is admirably planned, faultlessly produced and photographically excellent. It delivers its "punch" with telling force. The release date through the General Film Company is set for August 4.

MISS BRAY VISITS HER HOME.

Helen Bray, ingenue of the Biograph, spent two weeks at home in St. Louis with her sister, Mrs. J. N. Fining, at No. 6003 Gates Boulevard, in the beautiful Cabanne district. Though Miss Bray is widely known and popular in St. Louis, she declined invitations to social events and devoted the vacation to resting. On the way from Los Angeles she tarried a week in Kansas City, where she also has many friends. She has returned to New York, where she will resume work in the Biograph studio. Miss Bray has an influential following in this territory, yet she is an industrious artist and believes in achieving on merit alone. Managers of several of the large circuits in St. Louis and Kansas City are desirous of getting photoplays featuring Miss Bray, and in this event they will exploit the exhibitions. Hereafter the actress will appear in her own name. She has been practicing and training conscientiously, and is now equipped to take the most exacting roles. Miss Bray had the good fortune of being selected for a leading part after playing only a few weeks.

"WHEN A WOMAN LOVES" (Eclectic).

The subject of this feature is the conflict which must always ensue between the husband absorbed and engrossed in business on the one hand and the wife her soul athirst for love and yearning for reciprocity. In this situation, which is well portrayed in these films, the serpent usually appears in the guise of the "friend," who offers to supply the affection which the husband is too busy to spare. This theme, though surely not entirely new, is enlivened by some exciting and interesting incidents which give a great deal of zest to an otherwise hackneyed story.

Scene from "When a Woman Loves" (Eclectic).

The picture was made by the Pathe players on our side of the water. The acting was good, and the dressing up of the types showed some skill.

The outstanding merits of this production, however, are the fine settings and the perfect photography. In the matter of settings this feature will bear comparison with the very best and this applies to indoor settings as well as outdoor settings. Time was when more care was taken with outdoor than with indoor settings, greatly to the harm of artistic proportions. In this feature an equal degree of excellence marks both kinds of settings.

"THE MOTOR BUCCANEERS" (Essanay).

"The Motor Buccaneers," a thrilling story of intrigue and adventure, adapted from The Munsey Magazine, is one of the most interesting of the recent Essanay productions. It is in two acts. In it Francis X. Bushman is seen at his best and Ruth Stonehouse, as usual, is perfect. The story is woven around an eccentric millionaire, a young lawyer and a number of unique criminals. William Nash, the athletic young lawyer who is portrayed by Bushman, inherits the management of the Gilton estate. A mysterious package is given into the keeping of Nash, to be called for by Edith Elsden, who is played by Ruth Stonehouse. Then follows a series of thrilling adventures in which the girl is captured by the conspirators and rescued by Nash. There is an automobile race that is declared to be the most realistic of its kind. Needless to say, the young lawyer overcomes the conspirators, saves a railroad and wins the beautiful Edith for his own. The production is booked for release Friday, August 7th. Other members of the cast who do exceedingly clever work are Thomas Commerford, Wm. Robinson, M. C. Von Betz, John H. Cossar, Rapley Holmes and Arthur Steinguard.

MISS FULLER AND COMPANY GOES TO MOUNTAINS.

Miss Mary Fuller will enact the lead in "The Heart of the Night Wind," which will be her first picture with the Universal Film Company. Accompanied by her director, Walter Edwin, together with Charles Ogle, Ed. Mortimer and an enlarged company, Miss Fuller left New York July 17th, for Shohola, Pike County, Pa., where, amid some of the most beautiful settings in America, this play and several others, including "Hearts O' the Hills," by Hal Reid, will be produced.

"The Heart of the Night Wind" is from the book by Vingie I. E. Roe and was adapted to picture form by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, of the Universal scenario department. In three reels, the play allows Miss Fuller a splendid part, combining vigor, emotion and some highly spectacular feats. Miss Fuller, Mr. Edwin and Mr. Ogle, make up the nucleus of the cast in the new series. They will be absent for two months or more.

"THREE MEN AND A WOMAN" (Lubin).

The George Terwilliger "fans" will simply rave over this melodrama, which is the latest sensation written and produced from his fertile imagination. To get true atmosphere a big Lubin troupe was sent to St. Augustine, Fla., and evolved some of the most daring scenes ever put into a photoplay. The dramatic spectacle of a ship on fire is cleverly pictured, with the crew in panic and mutiny. The boats are lowered and the seamen fight for their lives. Anna Luther, the woman of the story, is left on the blazing ship, unconscious, with only one man to save her from the flames.

Scene from "Three Men and a Woman" (Lubin).

The man throws a hatch overboard and, taking the woman in his arms, leaps into the sea, swims to the hatch and succeeds in lifting her on to the raft, at the same time beating off the villain of the story as he madly tries to save himself. Still swimming, the man pushes the hatch to shore. The terrifying situation is truly acted without any camera tricks or dummies, and illustrates the daring of the three players who work out the scene. The cast included Herbert Fortier, Anna Luther, Kempton Greene and Earl Metcalfe, all of whom had to be expert swimmers.

"THE SENATOR FROM THE WEST" (American).

Tom Ricketts, in his production of "False Gods," is certainly exerting himself, and is ably supported by his whole company. Most of the settings represent scenes in Washington and New York's most swagger society, and call for elaborate gowns and fixtures. Into this ultra-fashionable society is introduced the little unsophisticated wife of a western cattle man, who has just been appointed senator. She wears simple, home-made gowns and does not try to conceal her simple but honest nature. In this part Miss Winifred Greenwood, if anything, surpasses herself. She is essentially an emotional actress, and whether swayed by emotion or stirred by pathos her versatility and histrionic ability assert themselves. It is a difficult part for any woman to play, but the production will add to Miss Greenwood's already enviable reputation.

Miss Josephine Ditt has been specially engaged to take the part of the lobbyist. Miss Ditt is of the adventuress type of actress and won a reputation in several notable plays, particularly "The Foreign Spy." In her present part it is her duty to pamper and cajole the unsophisticated senators and congressmen who come to Washington to represent their constituents. The part is ably taken by Miss Ditt, who by her wiles entices, ensnares and dishonors the very men she should protect.

DR. H. C. STAFFORD AUTHOR OF VILLON SERIES.

In our review of the new serial by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company giving scenes from the life of Francois Villon we misunderstood a reference to the author of the story which is running in the Century Magazine, viz.: George Bronson Howard, and credited the script for the offering to him, whereas it was done by Dr. H. C. Stafford, one of the Universal Company's regular scenario weavers. We are glad to make this correction the more as it is an unusually capable piece of graphic drama construction, and the man who did it is worthy of all his credit. Howard's deeply interesting story, so writes Calder Johnstone, of the company's Pacific Coast scenario office, proved very hard to translate into effective picture scenes.

"AT THE END OF A PERFECT DAY" (American).

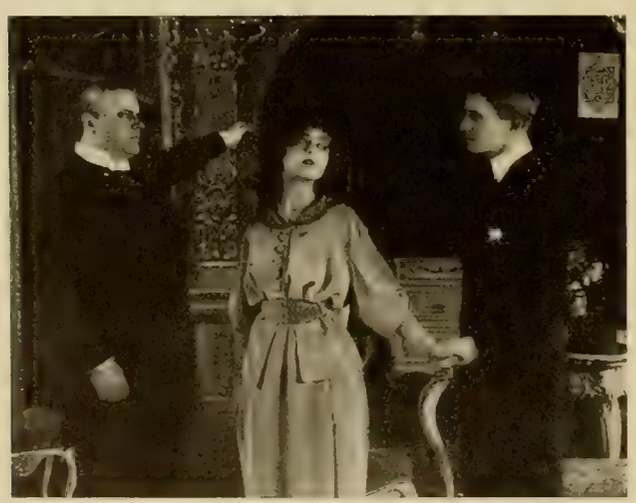
This is another of the popular two-part feature productions from the American "Flying A" studios. The story is a beautiful conception of patient love and intrigue in which Winnifred Greenwood as Dorothy Preston, actuated by her filial love, sacrifices her own interests to what she believes to be her mother's preference. Readily she could have retracted the words that sent her lover, Oren Evans (Ed Coxen), to distant parts had not a rival lover, Stid Butterfield (George Field), abused the confidence placed in him by the unsuspecting women. In later years a kind fate brings the two together and the climax is reached at the end of a perfect day, the incessant prayer of Dorothy for years.

Scene from "At the End of a Perfect Day."

The dramatization furnishes numerous opportunities for the select cast to exploit its histrionic abilities. The lightning and storm effects and tinting are presented with a rare realism, and the details are carried out in a manner that substantiates the marked ability of the producer, Thos. Ricketts. The subject not only merits, but will receive, unqualified approval. It will be released Monday, Aug. 3d.

"THE SACRIFICE OF PAULINE" (I. S. P. Co.).

The I. S. P. Co. has released a four-reel feature, called "The Sacrifice of Pauline," which deals with the ever new subject of a mother's devotion for her son. The son is a worthless scamp who blackmails his mother at her place of employment. The mother is employed as a housekeeper in the family of a well-to-do citizen, and the son, despite her protests, robs the safe in the home of the mother's employer. In his flight he is stopped by the wife of his mother's employer and he kills the woman to get away. Suspicion points to the mother as an accomplice in the foul deed and, as she refuses to give any information, the jury find her guilty and she is sentenced to prison. In the meantime her son has become rich and is on the point of marrying the daughter of his victim when the whole truth comes out and the murderer drowns himself. Acting and photography are good, and the settings are appropriate.



Scene from "The Sacrifice of Pauline" (I. S. P. Co.).

"MAN AND HIS BROTHER" (Victor).

"Am I my brother's keeper?" A world-old question, true, but pertinent always when it comes to answering the question in a practical and personal way. The selfish, indifferent, ignorant person says, "I am not my brother's keeper; I refuse to be held responsible in any way for what he does." But are we not all responsible, in some degree or other, for the downfall of the other fellow? Men and women make the world, and they make the conditions which superinduce moral and mental decay. Concrete effort of society with the individual is a potent factor which makes the world better or worse.

Scene from "Man and His Brother" (Victor).

In "Man and His Brother," played by the Universal's famous screen star, J. Warren Kerrigan, you have the case of two brothers, one good and the other bad. Technically, the good brother is in no way responsible for the wrongdoings of his brother, yet the rich, red blood of human sympathy runs through the big fellow's heart, and he sacrifices his own happiness that the repentent fellow might go free to start life anew. Did the man do right? That is for you to answer.

The role of the man affords Mr. Kerrigan a role aptly suited to him—that of a Westerner. Playing opposite is Miss Vera Sisson, clever and winsome. The settings are all of the West and in the open, showing picturesque backgrounds of rugged mountains, plains covered with cattle, and green cattle. The play is in three reels and will be released August 3rd.

PRETTY SCENE FROM "NANCY'S HUSBAND."

A particularly pretty scene from "Nancy's Husband" produced by Harry Pollard at the American studios under the "Beauty" brand. Harry Pollard is here shown spooning with Margarita Fisher, whilst Fred Gamble takes it all in. There are many such lovely spots in Santa Barbara, where the flowers bloom all the year round and occasional fog is the only thing which prevents the continuous taking of scenes in the open air. Mr. Pollard is a crank on getting the right scenery to fit his stories and he and Miss Fischer take long automobile rides to look up new locations.

Sawyer Has "Zone" Plan

Believes It Will Give Better Service to the Exhibitor—Now Offers Eighteen Subjects.

CARRYING out their original plans as announced in these columns several weeks ago Sawyer, Inc., have already started the establishing of branch offices. Mr. Sawyer announces that next week a list of the offices at present in operation will be published. This information will give the exhibitors in the different territories controlled by each branch office an opportunity to book the Sawyer Features direct.

Sawyer, Inc., have inaugurated a new and unique plan for the distribution of their films. Instead of following the former custom of dividing the country into States they have arranged the United States into "zones." This will enable the exhibitors in even the very smallest towns to secure the Sawyer pictures without loss of time in transportation. Mr. Sawyer informed the writer that it is the company's intention to have thirty of these zones in operation on or before September 14th. This will mean that this new and enterprising company will be able to handle thirty prints of every subject marketed through its organization. This company, at the present time, is offering eighteen subjects, ranging from three to six reels in length and the booking office which was established in connection with the New York office has been steadily booking from three to six prints of each subject in the New York territory.

Mr. Sawyer further states that the establishing of these zones is the result of his careful study of the marketing conditions and is the development of plans started by him over a year ago. The distributing office in each zone will furnish to the exhibitor a complete program.

Sawyer, Inc., have already made arrangements to market a series of one reel comedies produced by four different manufacturers. With the contracts already in hand and the productions now under way, the Sawyer Company will be in a position to release at least three feature subjects each week and also a minimum of three one reel comedies each week. After the first of October these releases will be increased to six of each every week.

At the present time Sawyer, Inc., are handling the productions of eight different manufacturers and with the addition of the Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company and three other western companies, whose releases will be shown during August, the company will represent over a dozen high class manufacturers.

John D. Williams Going Abroad

JOHN DIXON WILLIAMS, the well-known Australian film man, until recently connected with the Bosworth Film Company, has started on an important business tour, which will take him to pretty nearly every part of the world. He left on board the Aquitania on Tuesday, July 22, in the interest and as the special representative of Hugh McIntosh, the famous vaudeville promoter. Mr. Williams will leave England for India in the middle of August, and will then go to Africa and Australia.

John D. Williams.

In speaking to a representative of The Moving Picture World, Mr. Williams said that his associate, Mr. McIntosh, intended to enter the film field in a large way. Williams and McIntosh have formed an organization, which is to be known as "The International Film Circuit," which will specialize in monster productions of the "Cabiria" kind. By the way, the new combination has acquired the Australian rights for "Cabiria," and Mr. Williams will help to properly introduce and present the great play in the theaters of Australia.

"We propose," said Mr. Williams, "to go into the world's film market for films of the highest type of quality. We prefer to handle features on which we can obtain the rights for the entire world. I am thoroughly convinced of the fact that the era of big productions in the world of motion pictures has only just commenced. There is no limit to the dramatic and photographic possibilities of this new art. While, no doubt, big productions may be looked for in this country, I believe that the old country, especially Italy, enjoys advantages for making first-class films of high quality. We may some day go into Italy ourselves and bring away some memorable films. Yes; I mean that we may produce them in Italy ourselves, but nothing definite has been arranged as yet. I do not know just how long I will be gone, but I think I will return in the early part of next year. I expect to come back here and take full charge of Mr. McIntosh's interests in this country. In my absence Chris. O. Brown will have charge."

A party of friends accompanied Mr. Williams on his way to the dock of the Aquitania and bade him "bon voyage."

Great Southern Film Co.

That's the Name of a New Picture Producing Organization at Birmingham, Ala.—Capitalized for a Million.

A. A. WALL, prominent among the exhibitors of the South and manager of the Alcazar and Vaudette Theaters of Birmingham, Ala., has been named as president of a new million-dollar motion picture manufacturing corporation to be known as the Great Southern Film Manufacturing Company. The new company will have offices in the Brown-Marx building and hopes to begin operations within the next thirty days.

The company intends to do a general picture manufacturing work, and officials of the company state the company is planned to be the largest of its kind in the South. A site has been obtained on Shades Mountain, and here the films will be produced, Birmingham and industries being used as a background from time to time.

President A. Alex Wall will make a trip to New York to procure actors and actresses for the new company. It is planned to engage the services of six or seven well-known players for a beginning, and to increase the size of the company as needed. While in New York, Mr. Wall will also make arrangements for booking the films of the Great Southern Company through the larger New York agencies. It was stated one large company had already expressed a willingness to handle the films.

The officers of the company associated with President Wall are Dr. R. J. Strickland, Vice-President; C. H. Glasser, Secretary and Treasurer, and Judge Alvin M. Douglas, General Counsel; B. M. Wood is Fiscal Agent.

Picture Men in Town

Frank T. Montgomery, the well-known exhibitor from the South, was in New York City the past week. He was stopping at the Imperial.

Messrs Balshofer and Zimmer of Los Angeles are at the Hotel Astor.

A. J. Gilligham of Detroit has been spending a few days in the city.

H. Z. Levine, who for several months has been managing foreign publicity for the Universal Company, with offices in London, is in the city on a flying visit.

Notes of the Trade

Arrangements are being made by the World Film Corporation to open branch offices throughout Europe. Judging from the fact that 300 copies of "Protea II" have been sold throughout Europe, it is evident that the World Film Corporation will have another winner.

* * *

Harry Solter is directing Miss Florence Lawrence in a new play that is said to have a plot far away from the conventional. It is not only a mystery, but a mysterious mystery. In two reels, the action keeps one guessing every moment. It is rife with surprises and ends up in a whirl of action and excitement. Matt Moore is playing opposite Miss Lawrence.

* * *

"Quo Vadis," George Kleine's first great picture, played a four-day engagement, starting Monday of last week, at the National theater, Louisville, during one of the hottest spells of that hot region. The National management called the Kleine offices on the long distance telephone on Thursday, July 16, and arranged to show the picture the remainder of the week because of the splendid business.

* * *

The Empire City race track was invaded by the Blache players during Saturday's meet and a number of interesting scenes taken for a four-reel racing feature now in preparation. Little Vinnie Burns appeared on the track made up as a jockey and took part in a spirited dash down the home stretch, where she had an excellent chance to show her horsemanship and easily held the lead which the story called for.

* * *

When Mabel Trunnelle makes another trip to Palenville in the Catskills she will exercise great care that no riding coat of red material is placed in her trunk. The fair Edison equestrienne was pursued by an enraged bull but escaped being attacked by driving her horse at breakneck speed.

* * *

"The Secret of the Ring," a splendid three-reel release, is scheduled for the General Film Company, August 10, by George Kleine. This is one of the best "Three Reelers" yet made by Cines. The story was photographed in Seville, Spain.

John Haas, who was given a three months' leave of absence by Madame Alice Blache so that he could accompany James Slevin to Rome and take motion pictures of the Pope, has returned to the Blache studios. Although Johnnie has the unique distinction of being the man who not only actually took motion pictures of the Pope, but was welcomed and entertained in the Vatican, he never introduces the subject into his conversation and cannot be even coaxed into talking about his most interesting experience.

* * *

Due to the tremendous demand for "The Castaways," produced by the World Film Corporation, it has been necessary to send two copies to each of their twenty-two offices throughout the United States.

* * *

* * *

Sally Crute, the Edison leading woman, may be found on any Sunday or holiday in her fisherwoman's garb at Sound Beach on Long Island Sound. A mess of forty flounders in one day is no mean catch for a beginner.

* * *

Ned Burton, who for the past fourteen months has been a member of the Pathe Freres Stock Company, has been specially engaged to play "Horigan," the grafting politician, in "The Man of the Hour," now being filmed at Fort Lee, N. J., by the Peerless Features Film Company, the new organization of the Brady-Shubert-Eclair Companies.

* * *

The announcement of the wedding on June 24 of N. Paul Stoughton, auditor of exchanges for the Universal, and Viola Van Loan, formerly an assistant secretary to J. C. Graham, has been received by Mr. Stoughton's many friends at the West Coast studios. The marriage ceremony took place at Riverside, Ill. Mr. Stoughton made many friends on the occasion of his recent visit to California and all congratulate him and Mrs. Stoughton.

* * *

Walter L. Hill, formerly manager of the Jefferson theater, Fort Wayne, Ind., desires to say that he is not connected with that house, having remained as manager after the sale to the Quinby Amusement Company only until the property could be properly turned over to the new owners.

* * *

J. A. McKinney, secretary of Warner's Features, Inc., on last Sunday hauled up from the sea thirty-five weakfish. In company with a few friends with rod and reel he anchored his boat off of Oak Island beach. One after one he pulled in the struggling fish until his arms grew tired.

* * *

General Alvaro Obregon, commanding the western division of the Constitutional army, has contracted with Byron S. Butcher for the motion picture rights with his branch of the rebel army. Butcher has been with several Mexican armies during the past four years as war correspondent and will also continue in the newspaper game.

To join Obregon he must make a 1,500 mile trip down the west coast by rail, stage, pack train and handcar, as rebel and federal for months have demoralized railroad communictions from the border to the City of Guadalajara.

* * *

Recently while Director Otis Turner was taking some race scenes for the four-reel production of "Damon and Pythias" a farmer came in sight down the road and looked as if he might walk into the field of the camera and spoil the picture. Mr. Turner sent his assistant, Robert Rosos, to head him off. The farmer understood:

"Taking moving pictures, are you? Well, I've got my ideas about being photographed and you bet you're whoopin' I won't get in the picture."

* * *

Richard Neill of the Edison Company is a member of the Delaware State Society of the Cincinnati. He heard the postman blow his whistle one morning. To his surprise he found the postman busily engaged in reading a postal card from the society addressed to him. "Why, do you know Mr. Neill, I am a member of that society. Well, I am glad that the boys stick so well together." Whereupon the usual handshake took place. Richard is satisfied that future mail from the Cincinnati will suffer no delay in delivery.

* * *

One of the best parts allotted Howard Crampton, Imp character man, in years is the role he plays in "In All Things Moderation," a two-reel play just finished by Frank Crane and his Imp company. While it is a straight character part, it can be considered the lead. Mr. Crampton is playing the sea captain in the present Imp production being directed by Frank Crane, "On the High Seas."

* * *

L. A. Thompson and the L. A. Thompson Scenic Railway Company have retired from the Day and Night Screen, Inc., having sold their interests.

* * *

William W. Scott, manager, press agent and actor, has a forty-week contract which he has just signed by which his Lucille LaVerne company will make Richmond, Va., its home next winter. The idea is to play an occasional movie star for a week or two, supported by the LaVerne company. The first will be John Bunny, who will appear on its opening week, in August. There will be other movie stars later.

* * *

The Golgate Film Exchange, Inc., has bought the California, Oregon and Washington Pacific Coast rights to "The Toll of Mammon," a four-part Excelsior Feature Film Co., Inc., production. This picture has also sold to the Electric Theater Supply Company of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Southern Maryland. The picture was made in the Adirondack Mountains of New York.

* * *

The Shubert Film Corporation has moved its headquarters to the offices of the World Film Corporation, 130 West 46th street, New York.

* * *

The correspondence from fans addressed to May Abbey, the Edison comedienne, has grown so extensive that she contemplates engaging the services of an amanuensis.

* * *

Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, is on a business trip to Boston.

* * *

The latest "Universal Ike, Jr.," is entitled "Universal Ike, Jr., Gets City Broke" and the story is built around an excruciatingly funny trunk elopement.

* * *

Andy Clark of the Edison "Andy" series, has discarded his baseball uniform for a bathing suit. But the change is only temporary—until the picture "Andy Learns How to Swim" is finished.

* * *

George Kleine made a flying trip to New York last week in connection with important affairs of his New York office. Mr. Kleine is preparing to launch a surprise in the form of a multiple reel release which he claims will make former mighty subjects tame by comparison. The Kleine Optical Company has experienced a remarkable rush of orders during the past two weeks due to the sudden activity on the part of Middle West churches in installing projection apparatus. From the records it would appear that a larger number of churches than ever before will show regular programs of motion pictures this fall. Kleine Optical Company has had more than its share of this sort of business.

* * *

For the first time in her motion picture career Laura Oakley, chief of police of Universal City, has been cast to play the part of an Indian woman in Henry McRae's newest drama, "The Half-Breed." Miss Oakley is a versatile character woman and her portrayal of such a role will, in all probability, add something new to the subject.

* * *

Elmer E Redmond, of the Blache company, during the staging of a thrilling scene by James Johnson recently stopped a runaway. He was waiting to grasp the bridle and bring the animal to a sudden stop. But the spirited thoroughbred took the bit in his teeth and made a wild plunge just as Mr. Redmond leaped toward him. The actor was thrown violently before he was rescued. With the exception of severe bruises and a slightly wrenched knee, the plucky leading man was not badly injured, although by some freak of the accident the collar of his coat was removed as cleanly as if cut off by a tailor. When projected upon the screen the scene was found to be as realistic a feat of heroism as has ever been performed for the benefit of a camera.

* * *

Since Carlton King, of Edison, has declared his intention of purchasing an automobile he has received an abundance of literature and sample parts of a machine—from rubber tire to carburetor. As Carlton feels that some company might send him a sample automobile, he is in no particular hurry to purchase one at present.

* * *

In stating that Sol Lesser, president and general manager of the Golgate Feature Service had contracted for the first feature of the United Keanograph Film Company of Fairfax, Cal., an error was made. The policy for the handling of the company's product has not been announced but it is expected that the general plans will be made public within a short time.

* * *

Dusk was coming on and Herbert Brenon, in his car, was, a day or so ago, on the other side of Staten Island and desirous of getting back to New York without the necessity of lighting up. Once on the road, he opened out and overtook a big white machine. Howbeit, the white machine had some speed itself and was loath to be passed. A race resulted, with Bronson's car finishing in the lead at the ferry. It was there an arrest occurred and it was there that Brenon discovered that the driver of the rival white car was none other than Bob Burman, one of this country's foremost "speed kings." There was a glad hand shake between the two men and Brenon paid his fine satisfied that his imported car was some speedster.

* * *

H. J. Brown of the Empire theater, North Yakima, Wash., desires information as to the whereabouts of Simon Sulomonski, alias Simon Solomon, who has absconded with about $100 of collections on screen advertising. He will pay twenty dollars for information leading to his arrest and conviction. Sulomonski's home is Norfolk, Va., and he may be in Erie County where the sheriff has a warrant for his arrest. He is five feet six inches in height, is dark and has a bald spot on top of his head. Weight is about 120 pounds.

* * *

Stanley H. Twist left New York on Monday, July 6, for San Francisco, where he has important business to transact. He will spend one day there and one day in Los Angeles, returning to New York immediately. Mr. Thomas Nash, president of the newly formed Nasu Motion Picture Company, will return to New York with Mr. Twist and will bring with him the first two wild animal pictures produced by this company.

* * *

At the Strand theater the main feature picture production will be Channing Pollock's charming romance, "The Little Gray Lady," in which Jane Gray will be seen in the title role. The scenes of the play are laid in Washington and the plot deals with the official life at the capital as it is today.

SLIDES When you want them send to us 15c. and this advertisement for sample of Announcement, Player, or Feature Announcement slide. The best slides for the least money. Write to us today. NIAGARA SLIDE CO. Lockport, N. Y.

Exhibitors News

Interesting Information Concerning Moving Picture Men Gathered By Moving Picture World Correspondents Everywhere.

DETROIT.

THE Maxwell Motor Car Company of this city has completed arrangements for a nation-wide advertising campaign by the use of moving pictures showing the various stages of manufacture of Maxwell cars. The company has forty college boys—from Harvard, Yale, Princeton and others—who will handle the pictures in different cities. The pictures will be shown in moving picture theaters where it is possible to get them, otherwise halls or theaters will be leased outright. The college boys will go with the films and handle the necessary publicity campaign and look after all of the details. The campaign will be continued during August and September and possibly longer.

Police Commissioner Gillespie, Police Secretary Walters, Police Capt. Marquardt and Harbor Master Kline were the "stars" of the Ford-Detroit Weekly the week of July 13. Each time that they were on the screen was followed by applause from the moving picture fans.

The Detroit Local of the Motion Picture Operators' association recently held an election of officers with the following result: President, James Murtagh (Columbia); treasurer, Sam Johnson (Empire); Corresponding Secretary, Carl Beals (Empire); Treasurer and Member of Executive Committee (Family); John A. McDonald, Business Agent (Liberty); Recording Secretary, Frank Merriful (Palace).

A purse of gold was presented to M. V. Schoenherr, general supervisor of the Casino Amusement company and the Casino Feature Film Company, on the evening of July 15, it being the last day of his connection with those concerns. The purse was made up by employes of the various theaters controlled by the Casino company and was given to Mr. Schoenherr after the close of the theaters that evening as a token of respect and good wishes. The presentation speech was made by Eddie Murphy, assistant manager of the Columbia. As reported last week, Mr. Schoenherr will not take up any active work for the immediate future, but will rest and probably enter the business as a theater owner some time in the fall. Harry Goldberg has succeeded Mr. Schoenherr as general sales manager of the Casino Feature Film Company, with which concern he has been associated for some time. He has proven himself to be capable of handling all matters pertaining to the business, having had many years' experience in the moving picture industry. Plans are said to be under way by the Casino Feature Film Co. which, when announced, will be a great surprise to the local industry, due to the immensity of the deal.

The Empire theater has installed a question box in the space used for the main exit, and above the box hangs this sign: "Please drop your suggestions here." Manager Starr says he is averaging at least a dozen suggestions per day.

Mr. Anderson, who owns the Clay theater, has recently purchased the Acme Theater in Highland Park. The Acme was somewhat run down and neglected when he first took hold, but by making improvements and putting on better pictures he is gradually building up a new clientele of patrons as well as placing the house on a more profitable basis.

On Tuesday evening, July 14, the Annette Kellerman film "Neptune's Daughter" reached its 100th exhibition at the Detroit Opera House. To celebrate the occasion the management of the theater distributed fitting souvenirs.

SMITH.

ST. LOUIS.

JOHN H. GENTNER, manager of the Retina theater, 20th and Market streets, has an elegant booklet entitled "The History of Our Flag," which he distributes free to the patrons of his theater. The book is printed in colors, has a very comprehensive history of the flag which is traced back to the old country seat of the Washington family in Northamptonshire, England, who used the red and white bars and stars on their heraldic shields. Mr. Gentner had a special night at the Retina on July 2, the occasion being the showing of the last reel of the Selig feature, "The Adventures of Kathlyn." It was one of the biggest nights the theater has ever had, and 2,500 of the flag books were given away.

The St. Louis Star, an evening newspaper, has launched a local events film under the name of the The new Era Film Company. The first release was shown July 11 at the Paris Airdome, Morganford road and Juniata street. The first reel was interesting and well received. It contained scenes taken in the various parks where safe and sane Independence celebrations were held, pictures of the fireworks display at the Federal League Park, which are said to be the first films of fireworks ever made, scenes in the Montessori School, and bits of life near Tenth and Carr streets, a poor neighborhood which was taken to show that the children of this district have only the streets for a playground. Mr. Watts, circulation manager of the Star, has the managing of the new film in charge, and the camera work is done by Mr. Helmerich.

Ramona Park is showing Hiawatha, the Indian Passion Play, to the largest audiences of the season, and for this reason the run will be extended indefinitely.

The City Council of St. Louis has appropriated $2,000 to exhibit moving pictures in the parks and playgrounds of the downtown districts. The first performance will be given on July 19, the day that the bill becomes effective, and every night thereafter for a season of eight weeks. Educational, historical and scenic films will be given the preferences by the managers of the exhibitions.

H. R. Fisher, manager of the Fisher Theater and Garden, at Grand avenue and Natural Bridge Road, has installed a ticker, and is giving the patrons of his garden and theater the baseball scores by innings.

GIEBLER.

KENTUCKY.

WITH Government records showing up to 112 in the shade, street temperature on Fourth avenue, the Louisville exhibitors are not expecting a very large run of business. The airdomes are drawing to capacity in most cases, but afternoon business is better than evening patronage just now. This condition is brought about by the fact that there are a few shoppers on the street in the afternoons, but the streets are practically deserted at night.

H. B. Strube, proprietor of the Empire Theater, of Louisville, on the return trip from Dayton, O., stopped off for a few days with friends at Cincinnati, O.

M. Switow, president of the Switow Amusement Company, and the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, Louisville, has given up his offices in the Realty Building and has re-established them at the Crystal Theater, which is one of the Switow string. All business of the companies will hereafter be handled from this office.

Arthur Scheckler, of Louisville, has purchased a half interest in the Alice Theater, of Corydon, Ind., from his uncle, Manager Hampson, and will leave Louisville shortly to take over the active management of the theater.

Billy J. Reeder, of the Ohio Motion Picture Company, of Cincinnati, O., has been cancelling bookings on the Paul J. Rainey African Pictures with some of the Kentucky exhibitors on account of a fire at Bleich's Theater, Owensboro, Ky., during the past week. The fire was a small one and destroyed one reel of the series. The Clifton Theater of Louisville liked the picture so much that they refused to cancel, and will run the five reels, leaving the missing one, which is in the middle, out. A special matinee is to be given for the children.

The Majestic Theater, of Louisville, is now being redecorated inside and out. Manager Dittmar decided to take advantage of the present dull spell, and get the work done before the fall rush. One-third of the house is being scaffolded and worked upon at a time, which leaves plenty of room for the present crowds. Paint is an article which Mr. Dittmar firmly believes in, and he keeps the house up to a high standard at all times.

William Schoeffler, proprietor of the Palace Theater, of Louisville, is working over plans and estimates for building a new $15,000 theater on the back part of the lot now occupied by the theater. It is proposed to use the present theater as a lobby for the new one, if the deal goes through. In this way the old theater will be enabled to run until the new one is about completed.

The Crescent Air Dome, H. R. Whitehead's new playhouse in Crescent Hill, has found it advantageous to break its agreement with the residents of Crescent Hill, and was open for its first Sunday night performance this week. However the first picture shown was the six-reel production of "Sampson." As the picture is a Biblical play the residents failed to object strongly. A fairly good crowd was in attendance.

"From Hop Field to Table" is a bill which has been shown at a number of the Louisville and Kentucky theaters recently. This picture shows the Wiedemann Brewing Company's plant at Newport, Ky., and displays the complete process of beer making, from the growth of the hop to the cool, foaming article as poured from a bottle. It is needless to say that the picture is a cool one and is taking well with the Kentucky exhibitors. J. Howell, of Toledo, O., has been secured to make lectures along with the picture. Mr. Howell talks in a very interesting way, and does not overemphasize the advertising features of the picture.

"Quo Vadis," the great feature play, is being shown at the National Theater for ten cents. This is the first time the big play has ever been shown in Louisville for less than fifty cents. The original George Kleine production is the one being shown, and it is making an immense hit with the patrons of the theater.

Work on the new Cherokee Amusement Company in the Highlands is well under way and will probably be completed before October. This house was recently incorporated for $15,000, but had a good deal of trouble with the residents of the district, who started to get an injunction against the building of the theater. After it was shown that no vaudeville would be run the original plans were allowed to be put through.

The Broadway Amusement Company of Louisville has started a popularity contest, which looks as if it would be a great thing for the company's chain of theaters. Prizes amounting to a large sum will be awarded to the successful contestants. The prizes include a $500 Wurlitzer piano and a trip to the Panama Exposition. There are about fifty prizes in all. An arrangement has been made with some of the downtown department stores whereby the latter give so many votes in the contest with every dollar's worth of merchandise, and coupons are given with all tickets sold at the box offices of the seven theaters in the string.

The Switow Amusement Company, of Louisville, recently furnished some Biblical pictures and the necessary equipment for showing them at a big Chautauqua, held in Glenwood Park, near New Albany, Ind.

The Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, of Louisville, has started work on its new theater in the old John C. Lewis building, and is making rapid progress. A large force of workmen has been employed, and the steel work is going on rapidly. This job will be a big one and will take several months to complete.

The Louisville Evening Post is making arrangements to get out a special edition shortly, which will give a lot of space to the local exhibitors. Photographs of the playhouses, the managers, etc., will be shown along with a quantity of reading matter. This paper has been a strong booster of the local exhibitors in many ways. Daily descriptions of the plays at the various houses are given and also serial stories on all the big serial pictures.

Carpenter & Johnston, the well known camera men of Louisville, are spending a few days at Frankfort, Ky., where they are taking motion pictures of the big plant of the E. H. Taylor & Sons Company, which manufactures the celebrated "Old Taylor" whisky. This is one of the finest distillation plants in the country, and the pictures will be used for advertising purposes and shown probably at the next meeting of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association.

The Columbia Theater, of Louisville, which was recently purchased by William Beverly Wheeler, was closed a few days during the past week for renovating purposes. Paint has been used liberally inside and out, which adds considerably to the appearance of the theater, which is the oldest in the city. The box-office has been moved back against the wall of the theater so as to give more room in the lobby.

The Opera House at Hodgenville, Ky., which was owned jointly by Phil Simons, of Louisville, and a Chicago man, has been sold to C. L. Herron, of Hodgenville. The plant has been dark for several weeks, but is expected to do better business under the new management.

Judge W. A. Kinney, of the Princess Amusement Company, of Louisville, left recently for a two weeks' trip to New York. He expects to make a study of the Eastern show houses while away, and will seek good ideas to work out in his local houses.

The Star Theater, of Louisville, has made arrangements to run the Famous Players' service in the new house hereafter. Dustin Farnham, in "Soldiers of Fortune," will be the first of the new pictures to be shown. A large electric lighted star has been erected in front of the house.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE moving picture operators of this city are preparing to give a big ball at the Auditorium, Page and Fillmore streets, some time in August. The previous events of this character have been very successful and preparations are being made for a heavy attendance.

Work on the Globe Theater in the Mission district is progressing rapidly and preparations are being made by Turner & Dahnken to open this house during the first week of August. At one time the Globe Theater was the most popular amusement place in the Mission district and it is believed that under the new management, and with the improvements that are being made, it will immediately come into public favor again.

J. L. Warner, who recently left for New York after having had charge of the San Francisco office of Warner's Features for several months, is again in charge of the business here. Arthur S. Hyman, who succeeded Mr. Warner as manager of the local branch, is no longer connected with this concern.

The International Film Producers' Agency Company has been formed by Nat Magner, formerly manager for the Kolb & Dill Co., and Charles H. Cavanagh, formerly manager for the Ferris Hartman Musical Comedy Company, both well known in the Coast amusement field. This concern will handle feature attractions. Offices have been opened at room 407 Pacific Building and quarters are also being occupied at Davis Bros.' poster exchange, 158 Eddy street.

Arrangements have been made with the San Francisco Call for running Thanhouser's "The Million Dollar Mystery" story, the first installment to appear in the issue of July 20. Three installments a week will be published until all of the back numbers of the serial have been given to the public. The production is being shown with great success at a number of local theaters and is being enthusiastically received, even without the benefits of newspaper publicity. Ben S. Cohen, district manager for the Syndicate Film Corporation, spent a few days in the Los Angeles territory.

An invitational presentation of "Cabiria" took place July 10 at the Gaiety Theater, just previous to the commencement of a week's run of this great photo-spectacle, many of the leading exchange men and theater owners attending. This production is now being shown to capacity houses at 25 and 50 cents for the matinee performance, and 25, 50 and 75 cents in the evening. An orchestra of thirty pieces and a chorus of thirty voices render an appropriate setting to this masterpiece. From the size of the attendance and the favorable comments that have been expressed, it might be safe to assume that there will be no pressing demand for a return to musical comedy at the O'Farrell street playhouse as long as there are pictures of this calibre to be offered.

The Theograph Film Company has been incorporated here with a capital stock of $1,000,000, the directors being J. Wallace, F. H. Doyle and G. G. Fraser. The company proposes to make and handle films of an educational character. F. H. Doyle of this new concern was formerly a well known photographer here and at once time was connected with the Eastman Kodak Company.

Walter G. Preddey, who has been manufacturing specialties for motion picture projection machines since the inception of the moving picture business, is now located with Davis Bros.' Poster Exchange at 158 Eddy street, where a large line of supplies is being carried in addition to the devices of his own invention and manufacture.

Louis Loeb, formerly with the General Film Company here, is now connected with the Los Angeles office of the World Film Corporation.

The Irish Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 to operate a concession at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915. The interested parties are P. J. Kelleher, J. Mulcairn, M. Devers, S. O'Brien and J. J. Barry.

A tentative recommendation has been made by the Exposition and Welfare Committees of the Board of Supervisors to restrict fly-by-night shows and concessions during the Exposition year. Morris Meyerfeld, head of the Orpheum circuit, appeared before the committees and represented the theaters.

Rice & Einstein, Berkeley, Cal., who have up to the present time confined their operations largely to commercial work, are ready to release a six-reel Chinese production. A studio was erected on Grove street, near their laboratories.

The Edison Theater at Newman, Cal., has been sold by Ben Levy to Buell & Johnson, who have taken possession.

Mike Athens, a well known exhibitor at Fresno, Cal., was in San Francisco recently and announced that the Majestic Theater would be reopened at the close of the summer season. With James Rogis he conducts the Wigwam Theater.

The Happy Hour Theater has been opened at Grass Valley, Cal., by J. A. Bradbury.

The Hippodrome Airdome, opened recently at Fresno, Cal., is under the management of J. Curtis.

K. Kimura, who conducts the Fair Theater at Fresno, Cal., is also operating an airdome known as the Fair.

F. G. Hyde has purchased the Una Theater at Exeter, Cal., a thriving city in the citrus belt of Central California.

The Modesto Theater has been opened at Modesto, Cal., by A. A. Richards and is showing moving pictures, vaudeville and road attractions.

The Star Theater at Benicia, Cal., has been opened by W. S. Howell, after having been closed for some time.

Work is progressing very rapidly on the addition to the Varsity Theater of C. L. Mehrten at Berkeley, Cal., and this will be completed early in August. The entire stage and decorations have been moved back intact

A stock company is being formed to erect a theater at Santa Rosa, Cal., to cost in the neighborhood of $50,000. The building will be fireproof and will seat 1,200 persons. J. M. Whittingham and F. E. Barrett are interested in the project.

Cardinet Bros., Oakland, Cal., are preparing to erect a one-story moving picture theater at Twelfth and Kirkham streets to cost $14,000. Clay N. Burrell, Albany Building, is preparing the plans.

Moving pictures were taken recently of thirty-six Chinese gamblers in a den at San Diego, Cal. The attempt of the Chinese to rush the police officers from their feet, the heavy barricaded doors and the complete gambling outfit were filmed and the pictures used as evidence.

Claude C. Laval of Fresno, Cal., has been appointed official photographer for the San Joaquin Valley Counties Association of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and is now engaged in making moving pictures to be shown in 1915.

Paul R. Sprague, who conducts a moving picture business at Quincy, Cal., has purchased the Bartlett candy and ice-cream parlors in that city.

F. L. Clark, who recently disposed of the Dayton Theater at Los Angeles, Cal., was in San Francisco recently in the interest of the screen business he conducts.

The Linden Theater of Oakland, Cal., has been reopened after having been closed for several weeks.

The Vim Theater, Richmond, Cal., has been sold to R. Blake, who has taken possession.

Articles of incorporation of the American-Europa Film Co. of Los Angeles have been filed with the Secretary of State. The capital stock of the concern is placed at $75,000.

The Advance Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., by A. H. Hedderly, F. C. Hill and L. W. Blinn. The capital stock is placed at $300,000. These parties have also incorporated the Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Company with a like capital stock.

The Los Angeles Film Corporation has filed articles of incorporation at Los Angeles, Cal., with a capital stock of $100,000, the directors being: T. S. Nash, A. E. Rudell, J. Davis, S. B. Smith and R. F. C. Leithold.

The Sunset Film & Comedy Co. has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., by E. E. Smith, N. B. Taylor and A. P. Haynes. The capital is placed at $1,000,000.

The Star Theater, Fruitvale, Cal., has been completely renovated and rewired and has been reopened as the Pioneer Photoplay.

"The Million Dollar Mystery" is being shown at the Pastime Theater at Fresno, Cal., and the story is being published in the Fresno Republican. This production is being featured at the Isis Theater at Modesto, and at the Rex Theater at Berkeley.

C. H. Doyle is planning to erect a theater at Merced, Cal., to cost approximately $26,000.

A benefit for the Turlock baseball team was recently given at the Wonderland Theater, Turlock, Cal.

CHURCH.

CINCINNATI.

DURING the recent extremely torrid period in Cincinnati, during which heat records have been broken almost daily, with no rain until a few days ago to moderate the high temperatures, the business of most of the picture houses has naturally suffered, as people generally show a strong disinclination to get inside of four walls during real summer weather. This same weather, however, has been the cause of increasingly good business at the Orpheum, where the "Sky Theater" has good claim to be called the coolest place in the city. It is elevated far above the sidewalk, and is open to the sky, giving a chance to the breezes, if there are any, to circulate among the audience. Good programs have been the rule. Indications are that the summer is going to prove a fine one for the Orpheum management.

The Essanay production of "The Good-For-Nothing," featuring G. M. Anderson, drew well last week at the Grand, where Manager Lipson, of the Family, is making a strong bid for summer business by showing new features regularly.

The stringency with which the building commissioner's office of Cincinnati intends to enforce all the fire regulations applicable to motion picture theaters, in the interest of safety, is indicated by recent warnings given to a number of operators to the effect that they may have their licenses canceled if they continue to permit persons other than operators or assistants to occupy the machine booth with them. It is understood that a report has come to the building commissioner to the effect that some operators have fallen into the habit of letting some boy friend, or an usher, run off the last reel of the program, while they return to change into street clothes. This practice, according to Commissioner Rendigs, is in direct violation of the law, and will be punished by forfeiture of license if any operator is caught at it.

The fact that fire insurance companies generally decline to issue policies on the quarters occupied by film exchanges on account of the undoubtedly hazardous nature of the risk growing out of the inflammable quality of the films is of little moment to the Cincinnati office of the General Film Co., as its new quarters at Elm street and Opera place, into which the office and organization has finally been moved, are perfection itself when it comes to fire protection and fire prevention, as well as from other angles. The building is constructed throughout of non-inflammable materials, and is also as nearly fireproof as possible. Cement is the principal construction material used, while the films themselves, which constitute the fire risk, are stored, inclosed in their reels, in metal cases, arranged in tiers of shelves, like the books in a library. All scraps of films are scrupulously placed in metal waste baskets, or boxes, placed beside each worker. The offices of the exchange are on the ground floor, while the film departments are above. Manager Frank Smith will conduct the feature department, while B. M. Clinton, formerly manager of the feature department, leaves to take up new work. B. M. Clinton has become connected with the producing end of a leading film concern in New York, it is announced, handing in his resignation last week to Manager Frank Smith. Mr. Clinton has had a wide experience in dramatic work, on the legitimate stage as well as in motion pictures. Manager Smith an the entire General force gave Mr. Clinton a big send-off, loaded with their best wishes.

G. J. Trask, who was until recently Cincinnati manager of the World Film Corporation, has been made manager of the Mutual Film Company's Detroit office. W. D. Ward, formerly of Columbus and Cleveland, and a well known film man throughout Ohio, is the present manager of the Mutual office in Detroit. Mr. Trask will assume charge within a short time.

Clay E. Brohm, the new manager of the Cincinnati World Film Corporation's office, has already settled into the harness nicely, and has great hopes for big business on the several attractive releases announced by the company for the immediate future.

Indications are that Cincinnati is to have another branch film exchange, as the Box Office Attraction Company, of New York, has announced that it will establish a branch in Cincinnati, among other leading cities where this will be done. Several well known Cincinnati film men, on the strength of this announcement, are negotiating for the local management of the new company, but nothing has yet been made public as to the make-up of the staff.

